SIR,

AN attempt to set in a just light the writings of the most sublime and elegant of the Prophets of the Old Testament might merit the honour of your Majesty's gracious acceptance, were the execution in any degree answerable to the design. If it has at all succeeded, it is in a great measure to be ascribed to a particular attention to that most important, but too long neglected, part of sacred criticism, which, to the honour of this nation, and to the universal benefit of the Christian Church, hath been set forward, and is now greatly advanced, under your Majesty's distinguished patronage. Your Majesty's taste and judgment have induced you to encourage every part of science tending to the benefit of your people and the glory of your age; and your Majesty's piety hath prompted you to promote in the first place every thing that may contribute to the advancement of true religion, and to favour every well-meant design which has that great object in view.

This consideration encourages me to beg leave humbly to approach your Majesty with this small offering, accompanied with the truest sentiments of duty, affection, and gratitude; and with the most fervent prayers to Almighty God for Your Majesty's happiness, private and public, temporal and eternal.

Your Majesty's

Most dutiful Subject,

And most devoted Servant,

THE PRELIMINARY DISSERTATION.

THE design of the following Translation of Isaiah, is not only to give an exact and faithful representation of the words and of the sense of the Prophet, by adhering closely to the letter of the text, and treading as nearly as may be in his footsteps ; but, moreover, to imitate the air and manner of the author, to express the form and fashion of the composition, and to give the English reader some notion of the peculiar turn and cast of the original. The latter part of this design coincides perfectly well with the former : it is indeed impossible to give a just idea of the Prophet's manner of writing, otherwise than by a close literal version. And yet, though so many literal versions of this Prophet have been given, as well of old as in later times, a just representation of his manner, and of the form of his composition, has never been attempted, or even thought of, by any translator, in any language, whether ancient or modern. Whatever of that kind has appeared in former translations, (and much indeed must appear in every literal translation), has been rather the effect of chance than of design, of necessity than of study : for what room could there be for study or design in this case, or at least for success in it, when the translators themselves had but a very imperfect notion, an inadequate or even false idea, of the real character of the author as a writer ; of the general nature, and of the peculiar form, of the composition ?

It has, I think, been universally understood, that the Prophecies of Isaiah are written in prose. The style, the thoughts, the images, the expressions, have been allowed to be poetical, and that in the highest degree ; but that they are written in verse, in measure, or rhythm, or whatever it is that distinguishes, as poetry, the composition of those books of the Old Testament which are allowed to be poetical, such as Job, the Psalms, and the Proverbs, from the historical books, as mere prose ; this has never been supposed, at least has not been at any time the prevailing opinion. The opinions of the learned concerning Hebrew verse have been various ; their ideas of the nature of it vague, obscure, and imperfect; yet still there has been a general persuasion, that some books of the Old Testament are written in verse, but that the writings of the Prophets are not of that number.

The learned Vitrिंग says,* that Isaiah's composition has a sort of numbers, or measure; "esse orationem suis adstrictam numeris:" he means, that it has a kind of oratorical number, or measure, as he afterwards explains it; and he quotes Scaliger as being of the same opinion, and as adding, that "however upon this account it could not rightly be called poetry."† About the beginning of this century, Herman Von der Hardt,‡ the Hardouin of Germany, attempted to reduce Joel's Elegies, as he called them, to iambic verse; and, consistently with his hypothesis, he affirmed, that the Prophets wrote in verse. This is the only exception I meet with to the universality of the contrary opinion. It was looked upon as one of his paradoxes, and little attention was paid to it. But what was his success in making out Joel's iambics, and in helping his readers to form in consequence a more just idea of the character of the prophetic style, I cannot say, having never seen his treatise on that subject.

The Jews of early times were of the same opinion, that the books of the Prophets are written in prose, as far as we have any evidence of their judgment on this subject. Jerome§ certainly speaks the sense of his Jewish preceptors as to this matter. Having written his translation of Isaiah from the Hebrew Verity in stichi, or lines divided according to the cola and commata, after the manner of verse, which was|| often done in the prophetic writings for the sake of perspicuity, he cautions his reader "not to mistake it for metre, as if it were any thing like the Psalms, or the writings of Solomon; for it was nothing more than what was usual in the copies of the prose works of Demosthenes and Cicero." The later Jews have been uniformly of the same opinion; and the rest of the learned world seem to have taken it up on their authority, and have generally maintained it.

But if there should appear a manifest conformity between the prophetic style and that of the books supposed to be metrical—a conformity in every known part of the poetical character, which equally discriminates the prophetic and the metrical books from those acknowledged to be prose—it will be of use to trace out and to mark this conformity with all possible accuracy ; to observe how far the peculiar characteristics of each style coincide ; and to see whether the agreement between them be such as to induce us to conclude, that the poetical and the prophetic character of style and composition, though generally supposed to be different, yet are really one and the same.

This I purpose to do in the following Dissertation ; and I the more readily embrace the present opportunity of resuming this subject, as what I have formerly written* upon it seems to have met with the approbation of the learned. And here I shall endeavour to treat it more at large ; to pursue it further, and to a greater degree of minuteness ; and to present it to the English reader in the easiest and most intelligible form that I am able to give it. The examples with which I shall illustrate it shall be more numerous, and all (a very few excepted) different from those already given ; that they may serve by way of supplement to that part of the former work, as well as of themselves to place the subject in the fullest and clearest light.

Now, in order to make this comparison between the prophetic and the poetical books, it will be necessary, in the first place, to state the true character of the poetical or metrical style ; to trace out carefully whatever plain signs or indications yet remain of metre, or rhythm, or whatever else it was that constituted Hebrew verse ; to separate the true, or at least the probable, from the manifestly false ; and to give as clear and satisfactory an explanation of the matter as can now reasonably be expected in the present imperfect state of the Hebrew language, and on a subject which for near two thousand years has been involved in great obscurity, and only rendered still more obscure by the discordant opinions of the learned, and the various hypotheses which they have formed concerning it.

The first and most manifest indication of verse in the Hebrew poetical books, presents itself in the acrostic or alphabetical poems ;—of which there happily remain many examples, and those of various kinds—so that we could not have hoped, or even wished, for more light of this sort to lead us on in the very entrance of our inquiry. The nature, or rather the form, of these poems is this : The poem consists of twenty-two lines, or of twenty-two systems of lines, or periods, or stanzas, according to the number of the letters of the Hebrew alphabet ; and every line, or every stanza, begins with each letter in its order as it stands in the alphabet ; that is, the first line, or first stanza, begins with א, the second with ב, and so on. This was certainly intended for the assistance of the memory, and was chiefly employed in subjects of common use, as maxims of morality, and forms of devotion; which being expressed in detached sentences, or aphorisms, (the form in which the sages of the most ancient times delivered their instructions), the inconvenience arising from the subject, the want of connexion in the parts, and of a regular train of thought carried through the whole, was remedied by this artificial contrivance in the form. There are still extant, in the books of the Old Testament, twelve * of these poems; (for I reckon the four first chapters of the Lamentations of Jeremiah as so many distinct poems); three of them perfectly † alphabetical, in which every line is marked by its initial letter; the other nine less perfectly alphabetical, in which every stanza only is so distinguished. Of the three former it is to be remarked, that not only every single line is distinguished by its initial letter, but that the whole poem is laid out into stanzas; two ‡ of these poems each into ten stanzas, all of two lines, except the two last stanzas in each, which are of three lines: in these, the sense and the construction manifestly point out the division into stanzas, and mark the limit of every stanza. The third || of these perfectly alphabetical poems consists of twenty-two stanzas of three lines; but in this the initial letter of every stanza is also the initial letter of every line of that stanza; so that both the lines and the stanzas are infallibly limited: And, in all the three poems, the pauses of the sentences coincide with the pauses of the lines and stanzas.

It is also further to be observed of these three poems, that the lines so determined by the initial letters in the same poem, are remarkably equal to one another in length, in the number of words nearly, and probably in the number of syllables; and that the lines of the same stanza have a remarkable congruity one with another, in the matter and the form, in the sense and the construction.

Of the other nine poems less perfectly alphabetical, in which the stanzas only are marked with initial letters, six § consist of stanzas of two lines, two ¶ of stanzas of three lines, and one ** of stanzas of four lines; not taking into the account at present some irregularities, which in all probability are to be imputed to the mistakes of transcribers. And these stanzas likewise naturally divide themselves into their distinct lines, the sense and the construction plainly pointing out their limits; and the lines have the same congruity one with another in matter and form,

Another thing to be observed of the three poems perfectly alphabetical is, that in two * of them the lines are shorter than those of the third † by about one-third part, or almost half; and of the other nine poems, the stanzas only of which are alphabetical, that three ‡ consist of the longer lines, and the six others of the shorter.

Now, from these examples, which are not only curious, but of real use, and of great importance in the present inquiry, we may draw some conclusions, which plainly follow from the premises, and must be admitted in regard to the alphabetical poems themselves; which also may by analogy be applied with great probability to other poems, where the lines and stanzas are not so determined by initial letters, yet which appear in other respects to be of the same kind.

In the first place, we may safely conclude, that the poems perfectly alphabetical consist of verses properly so called; of verses regulated by some observation of harmony or cadence; of measure, numbers, or rhythm. For it is not at all probable in the nature of the thing, or from examples of the like kind in other languages, that a portion of mere prose, in which numbers and harmony are totally disregarded, should be laid out according to a scale of division, which carries with it such evident marks of study and labour, of art in the contrivance, and exactness in the execution. And I presume it will be easily granted in regard to the other poems which are divided into stanzas by the initial letters, which stanzas are subdivided by the pauses of the sentence into lines easily distinguished one from another, commonly the same number of lines to a stanza in the same poem, that these are of the same kind of composition with the former, and that they equally consist of verses: And, in general, in regard to the rest of the poems of the Hebrews, bearing evidently the same marks and characteristics of composition with the alphabetical poems in other respects, and falling into regular lines, often into regular stanzas, according to the pauses of the sentences; which stanzas and lines have a certain parity or proportion to one another; that these likewise consist of verse—of verse distinguished from prose, not only by the style, the figures, the diction, by a loftiness of thought and richness of imagery, but by being divided into lines, and sometimes into systems of lines; which lines, having an apparent equality, similitude, or proportion one to another, were in some sort measured by the ear, and regulated according to some general laws of metre, rhythm, harmony, or cadence.

† Lam. iii.

‡ Lam. i. ii. iv.

Further, we may conclude, from the example of the perfectly alphabetical poems, that whatever it might be that constituted Hebrew verse, it certainly did not consist in rhyme, or similar and correspondent sounds at the ends of the verses; for, as the ends of the verses in those poems are infallibly marked, and it plainly appears that the final syllables of the correspondent verses, whether in distichs or triplets, are not similar in sound to one another, it is manifest that rhymes, or similar endings, are not an essential part of Hebrew verse. The grammatical forms of the Hebrew language in the verbs, and pronouns, and the plurals of nouns, are so simple and uniform, and bear so great a share in the termination of words, that similar endings must sometimes happen, and cannot well be avoided; but, so far from constituting an essential or principal part of the art of Hebrew versification, they seem to have been no object of attention and study, nor to have been industriously sought after as a favourite accessory ornament.

That the verses had something regular in their form and composition, seems probable from their apparent parity and uniformity, and the relation which they manifestly bear to the distribution of the sentence into its members. But as to the harmony and cadence, the metre or rhythm, of what kind they were, and by what laws regulated, these examples give us no light, nor afford us sufficient principles on which to build any theory, or to form any hypothesis. For harmony arises from the proportion, relation, and correspondence of different combined sounds; and verse, from the arrangement of words, and the disposition of syllables, according to number, quantity, and accent;—therefore the harmony and true modulation of verse depends upon a perfect pronunciation of the language, and a knowledge of the principles and rules of versification; and metre supposes an exact knowledge of the number and quantity of syllables, and, in some languages, of the accent. But the true pronunciation of Hebrew is lost—lost to a degree far beyond what can ever be the case of any European language preserved only in writing; for the Hebrew language, like most of the other Oriental languages, expressing only the consonants, and being destitute of its vowels, has lain now for two thousand years in a manner mute and incapable of utterance: the number of syllables is in a great many words uncertain; the quantity and accent wholly unknown. We are ignorant of all these particulars, and incapable of acquiring any certain knowledge concerning them; how then is it possible for us to attain to the knowledge of Hebrew verse? That we know nothing of the quantity of the syllables in Hebrew, and of the number of them in many words, and of the accent, will hardly now be denied by any man; but if any should still maintain the authority of the Masoretical punctuation, (though discordant in many instances from the imperfect remains of a pronunciation of much earlier date, and of better authority, that of the Seventy, of Origen, and other writers), yet it must be allowed, that no one, according to that system, hath been able to reduce the Hebrew poems to any sort of harmony.* And indeed it is not to be wondered, that rules of pronunciation, formed, as it is now generally admitted, above a thousand years after the language ceased to be spoken, should fail of giving us the true sound of Hebrew verse. But if it was impossible for the Masoretes, assisted in some measure by a traditionary pronunciation delivered down from their ancestors, to attain to a true expression of the sounds of the language, how is it possible for us at this time, so much further removed from the only source of knowledge in this case, the audible voice, to improve or to amend their system, or to supply a more genuine system in its place, which may answer our purpose better, and lay open to us the laws of Hebrew versification? The pursuit is vain; the object of it lies beyond our reach; it is not within the compass of human reason or invention. The question concerning Hebrew metre is now pretty much upon the same footing with that concerning the Greek accents. That there were certain laws of ancient Hebrew metre is very probable; and that the living Greek language was modulated by certain rules of accent is beyond dispute: but a man born deaf may as reasonably pretend to acquire an idea of sound, as the critic of these days to attain to the true modulation of Greek by accent, and of Hebrew by metre.†

Thus much then, I think, we may be allowed to infer from the alphabetical poems; namely, that the Hebrew poems are written in verse, properly so called; that the harmony of the verses does not arise from rhyme, that is, from similar corresponding sounds terminating the verses, but from some sort of rhythm, probably from some sort of metre, the laws of which are now altogether unknown, and wholly undiscoverable;—yet that there are evident marks of a certain correspondence of the verses with one another, and of a certain relation between the composition of the verses and the composition of the sentences,—the formation of the former depending in some degree upon the distribution of the latter,—so that generally periods coincide with stanzas, members with verses, and pauses of the one with pauses of the other; which peculiar form of composition is so observable, as plainly to discriminate in general the parts of the Hebrew Scriptures which are written in verse, from those which are written in prose. This will require a larger and more minute explication, not only as a matter necessary to our present purpose, that is, to ascertain the character of the prophetic style in general, and of that of the Prophet Isaiah in particular, but as a principle of considerable use, and of no small importance, in the interpretation of the poetical parts of the Old Testament.

The correspondence of one verse or line with another, I call parallelism. When a proposition is delivered, and a second is subjoined to it, or drawn under it, equivalent, or contrasted with it in sense, or similar to it in the form of grammatical construction, these I call parallel lines; and the words or phrases, answering one to another in the corresponding lines, parallel terms.

Parallel lines may be reduced to three sorts,—parallels synonymous, parallels antithetic, and parallels synthetic. Of each of these I shall give a variety of examples, in order to shew the various forms under which they appear; first, from the books universally acknowledged to be poetical; then, correspondent examples from the Prophet Isaiah, and sometimes also from the other Prophets, to shew that the form and character of the composition is in all the same.

As some of the examples which follow are of many lines, the reader may perhaps note a single line or two intermixed, which do not properly belong to that class under which they are ranged. These are retained, to preserve the connexion and harmony of the whole passage; and it is to be observed, that the several sorts of parallels are perpetually mixed with one another, and this mixture gives a variety and beauty to the composition.

First, of parallel lines synonymous; that is, which correspond one to another, by expressing the same sense in different but equivalent terms; when a proposition is delivered, and is immediately repeated, in the whole or in part, the expression being varied, but the sense entirely or nearly the same: As in the following examples:—

“ O-Jehovah, in-thy-strength the-king shall-rejoice;
And-in-thy-salvation how greatly shall-he-exult!
The-desire of-his-heart thou-hast-granted unto-him;
And-the-request of-his-lips thou-hast-not denied.” Psal. xxi. 1, 2.

“ Because I-called, and-ye-refused;
I-stretched-out my-hand, and-no-one regarded;
But-ye-have-defeated all my-counsel;
And-would-not incline to-my-reproof:

I also will-laugh at-your-calamity ;
 I-will-mock, when-what-you-feared cometh ;
 When-what-you-feared cometh like-a-devastation ;
 And-your-calamity advanceth like-a-tempest ;
 When-distress and-anguish come upon-you :
 Then shall-they-call-upon-me, but-I-will-not answer ;
 They-shall-seek-mie-early, but-they-shall-not find-me :
 Because they-hated knowledge ;
 And-did-not choose the-fear of-Jehovah ;
 Did-not incline to-my-counsel ;
 Contemptuously-rejected all my-reproof :
 Therefore-shall-they-eat of-the-fruit of-their-ways ;
 And-shall-be-satiated with-their-own-devices.
 For the-defection of-the-simple shall-slay-them ;
 And-the-security of-fools shall-destroy them."

Prov. i. 24—32.

" Seek-ye Jehovah, while-he-may-be-found ;
 Call-ye-upon-him, while-he-is near :
 Let-the-wicked forsake his-way ;
 And-the-unrighteous man his-thoughts ;
 And-let-him-return to Jehovah, and-he-will-compassionate-him ;
 And-unto-our-God, for he-aboundeth in-forgiveness."

Isa. lv. 6, 7.

" Fear not, for thou-shalt-not be-ashamed ;
 And-blush not, for thou-shalt-not be-brought-to-reproach :
 For thou-shalt-forget the-shame of-thy-youth ;
 And-the-reproach of-thy-widowhood thou-shalt-remember no more."

Isa. liv. 4.

" Harken unto-me, ye-that-know righteousness ;
 The-people in-whose-heart is-my-law :
 Fear not the-reproach of-wretched-man ;
 Neither be-ye-borne-down by-their-revilings ;
 For the-moth shall-consume-them like-a-garment ;
 And-the-worm shall-eat-them like wool :
 But-my-righteousness shall-endure for-ever ;
 And-my-salvation to-the-age of-ages."

Isa. li. 7, 8.

" Like-mighty-men shall-they-rush-on ;
 Like-warriors shall-they-mount the-wall :
 And-every-one in-his-way shall-they-march ;
 And-they-shall-not turn-aside from-their paths."

Joel ii. 7.

" Blessed-is the-man, that-feareth Jehovah ;
 That-greatly delighteth in-his-commandments."

Psal. cxii. 1.

" Harken unto-me, O-house of-Jacob ;
 And-all the-remnant of-the-house of-Israel."

Isa. xlvi. 3.

" Honour Jehovah with-thy-riches ;
 And-with-the-first-fruits of-all thine-increase."

Prov. iii. 9.

" Incline your-ear, and-come unto-me ;
 Harken, and-your-soul shall-live."

Isa. lv. 3.

In the foregoing* examples may be observed the different degrees of synonymous parallelism. The parallel lines sometimes consist of three or more synonymous terms; sometimes of two, which is generally the case when the verb, or the nominative case of the first sentence, is to be carried on to the second, or understood there; sometimes of one only, as in the four last examples. There are also among the foregoing a few instances, in which the lines consist each of double members, or two propositions. I shall add one or two more of these, very perfect in their kind:—

“Bow thy heavens, O Jehovah, and descend;
Touch the mountains, and they shall smoke;
Dart forth lightning, and scatter them;
Shoot out thine arrows, and destroy them.” Psal. cxliv. 5, 6.

“And they shall build houses, and shall inhabit them;
And they shall plant vineyards, and shall eat the fruit thereof:
They shall not build, and another inhabit;
They shall not plant, and another eat:
For as the days of a tree, shall be the days of my people;
And they shall wear out the works of their own hands.” Isa. lxxv. 21, 22.

Parallels are also sometimes formed by a repetition of part of the first sentence:—

“My voice is unto God, and I cry aloud;
My voice unto God, and he will hearken unto me.”
“I will remember the works of Jehovah;
Yea, I will remember thy wonders of old.”
“The waters saw thee, O God!
The waters saw thee; they were seized with anguish.” Psal. lxxvii. 1. 11. 16.

“For he hath humbled those that dwell on high;
The lofty city, he hath brought her down:
He hath brought her down to the ground,
He hath levelled her with the dust.
The foot shall trample upon her;
The feet of the poor, the steps of the needy.” Isa. xxvi. 5, 6.

“What shall I do unto thee, O Ephraim!
What shall I do unto thee, O Judah!
For your goodness is as the morning cloud,
And as the early dew it passeth away.” Hosea vi. 4.

* The terms in English, consisting of several words, are hitherto distinguished with marks of connexion—to shew, that they answer to single words in Hebrew.

Sometimes in the latter line a part is to be supplied from the former to complete the sentence:—

“And those that persecute me thou wilt make to turn their backs to me;
Those that hate me,* and I will cut them off.” 2 Sam. xxii. 41.

“The mighty dead tremble from beneath;
The waters, and they that dwell therein.” Job xxvi. 5.

“And I looked, and there was no man;
Even among the idols,† and there was no one that gave advice;
“And I inquired of them, and [there was no one] that returned an answer.” Isa. xli. 28.

Further, there are parallel triplets—when three lines correspond together, and form a kind of stanza, of which, however, only two commonly are synonymous:—

“The wicked shall see it, and it shall grieve him;
He shall gnash his teeth, and pine away;
The desire of the wicked shall perish.” Psal. cxii. 10.

“That day, let it become darkness;
Let not God from above inquire after it;
Nor let the flowing light radiate upon it.
That night, let utter darkness seize it;
Let it not be united with the days of the year;
Let it not come into the number of the months.
Let the stars of its twilight be darkened:
Let it look for light, and may there be none;
And let it not behold the eyelids of the morning.” Job iii. 4. 6. 9.

“And he shall snatch on the right, and yet be hungry;
And he shall devour on the left, and not be satisfied;
Every man shall devour the flesh of his neighbour.”† Isa. ix. 20.

“Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe;
Come away, get you down, for the wine-press is full;
The vats overflow; for great is their wickedness.” Joel iii. 13.

There are likewise parallels consisting of four lines; two distichs being so connected together, by the sense and the construction, as to make one stanza. Such is the form of the 37th Psalm, which is evidently laid out by the initial letters in stanzas of four lines; though in regard to that disposition some irregularities are found in the present copies. From this Psalm, which gives a sufficient warrant for considering the union of two distichs as making a stanza of four lines, I shall take the first example :—

* In the parallel place, Psal. xviii. the poetical form of the sentence is much hurt, by the removing of the conjunction from the second to the first word in this line; but a MS. in that place reads as here.

† See the Note on the place.

“ Be not moved with indignation against the evil-doers ;
Nor with zeal against the workers of iniquity :
For like the grass they shall soon be cut off ;
And like the green herb they shall wither.” Psal. xxxvii. 1, 2.

“ The ox knoweth his possessor ;
And the ass the crib of his lord ;
But Israel doth not know Me ; *
Neither doth my people consider.” Isa. i. 3.

“ And I said, I have laboured in vain ;
For nought and for vanity I have spent my strength :
Nevertheless my cause is with Jehovah ;
And the reward of my work with my God.” Isa. xlix. 4.

“ Jehovah shall roar from Sion ;
And shall utter his voice from Jerusalem :
And the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn ;
And the head of Carmel shall wither.” Amos i. 2.

In like manner, some periods may be considered as making stanzas of five lines, in which the odd line or member either comes in between two distichs, or after two distichs makes a full close :—

“ If thou wouldst seek early unto God ;
And make thy supplication to the Almighty ;
If thou wert pure and upright :
Verily now would he rise up in thy defence ;
And make peaceable the dwelling of thy righteousness.” Job viii. 5, 6.

“ They bear him on the shoulder ; they carry him about ;
They set him down in his place, and he standeth ;
From his place he shall not remove :
To him, that crieth unto him, he will not answer ;
Neither will he deliver him from his distress.” Isa. xlvi. 7.

“ Who is wise, and will understand these things ?
Prudent, and will know them ?
For right are the ways of Jehovah ;
And the just shall walk in them ;
But the disobedient shall fall therein.” Hos. xiv. 9.

“ And Jehovah shall roar out of Sion ;
And from Jerusalem shall utter his voice ;
And the heavens and the earth shall tremble :
But Jehovah will be the refuge of his people ;
And a strong defence to the sons of Israel.” Joel iii. 16.

* See the Note on the place.

“ Who establisheth the word of his servant ;
 And accomplisheth the counsel of his messengers :
 Who sayeth to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited ;
 And to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built ;
 And her desolate places I will restore.” Isa. xliv. 26.

In stanzas of four lines, sometimes the parallel lines answer to one another alternately ; the first to the third, and the second to the fourth :—

“ As the heavens are high above the earth ;
 So high* is his goodness over them that fear him :
 As remote as the east is from the west ;
 So far hath he removed from us our transgressions.” Psal. ciii. 11, 12.

“ And ye said, Nay, but on horses will we flee ;
 Therefore shall ye be put to flight :
 And on swift coursers will we ride ;
 Therefore shall they be swift, that pursue you.” Isa. xxx. 16.

And a stanza of five lines admits of the same elegance :—

“ Who is there among you that feareth Jehovah ?
 Let him hearken unto the voice of his servant :
 That walketh in darkness, and hath no light ?
 Let him trust in the name of Jehovah ;
 And rest himself on the support of his God.” Isa. l. 10.

The second sort of parallels are the antithetic—when two lines correspond with one another by an opposition of terms and sentiments ; when the second is contrasted with the first, sometimes in expressions, sometimes in sense only. Accordingly the degrees of antithesis are various ; from an exact contraposition of word to word through the whole sentence, down to a general disparity, with something of a contrariety, in the two propositions.

Thus, in the following examples :—

“ A wise son rejoiceth his father ;
 But a foolish son is the grief of his mother.” Prov. x. 1.

—where every word hath its opposite ; for the terms father and mother are, as the logicians say, relatively opposite.

“ The memory of the just is a blessing ;
 But the name of the wicked shall rot.” Prov. x. 7.

Here there are only two antithetic terms ; for memory and name are synonymous.

* גבוה ; compare the next verse ; and see Isa. lv. 9. and the note there.

“There is that scattereth, and still increaseth ;
And that is unreasonably sparing, yet groweth poor.” Prov. xi. 24.

Here there is a kind of double antithesis ; one between the two lines themselves, and likewise a subordinate opposition between the two parts of each.

“Many seek the face of the prince ;
But the determination concerning a man is from Jehovah.”
Prov. xxix. 26.

—where the opposition is chiefly between the single terms, the Prince and Jehovah : but there is an opposition likewise in the general sentiment ; which expresses, or intimates, the vanity of depending on the former, without seeking the favour of the latter. In the following, there is much the same opposition of sentiment, without any contraposition of terms at all :—

“The lot is cast into the lap ;
But the whole determination of it is from Jehovah.” Prov. xvi. 33.

That is, the event seems to be the work of chance, but is really the direction of Providence.

The foregoing examples are all taken from the Proverbs of Solomon, where they abound : for this form is peculiarly adapted to that kind of writing—to adages, aphorisms, and detached sentences. Indeed, the elegance, acuteness, and force of a great number of Solomon’s wise sayings, arise in a great measure from the antithetic form, the opposition of diction and sentiment. We are not therefore to expect frequent instances of it in the other poems of the Old Testament ; especially those that are elevated in the style, and more connected in the parts. However, I shall add a few examples of the like kind from the higher poetry.

“These in chariots, and those in horses ;
But we in the name of Jehovah our God will be strong.*
They are bowed down, and fallen ;
But we are risen, and maintain ourselves firm.” Psal. xx. 7, 8.

“For his wrath is but for a moment, his favour for life ;
Sorrow may lodge for the evening, but in the morning gladness.”
Psal. xxx. 5.

“Yet a little while, and the wicked shall be no more ;
Thou shalt look at his place, and he shall not be found ;
But the meek shall inherit the land ;
And delight themselves in abundant prosperity.” Psal. xxxvii. 10, 11.

In the last example, the opposition lies between the two parts * נגביר, so LXX, Syr. Æthiop.

of a stanza of four lines, the latter distich being opposed to the former. So likewise the following:—

“ For the mountains shall be removed ;
And the hills shall be overthrown :
But my kindness from thee shall not be removed ;
And the covenant of my peace shall not be overthrown.” Isa. liv. 10.

“ The bricks are fallen, but we will build with hewn stone ;
The scyambres are cut down, but we will replace them with cedars.”
Isa. ix. 10.

Here the lines themselves are synthetically parallel ; and the opposition lies between the two members of each.

The third sort of parallels I call synthetic or constructive—where the parallelism consists only in the similar form of construction ; in which word does not answer to word, and sentence to sentence, as equivalent or opposite ; but there is a correspondence and equality between different propositions, in respect of the shape and turn of the whole sentence, and of the constructive parts—such as noun answering to noun, verb to verb, member to member, negative to negative, interrogative to interrogative.

“ Praise ye Jehovah, ye of the earth ;
Ye sea-monsters, and all deeps :
Fire and hail, snow and vapour ;
Stormy wind, executing his command :
Mountains, and all hills ;
Fruit-trees, and all cedars :
Wild beasts, and all cattle ;
Reptiles, and birds of wing :
Kings of the earth, and all peoples ;
Princes, and all judges of the earth :
Youths, and also virgins ;
Old men, together with the children :
Let them praise the name of Jehovah ;
For his name alone is exalted ;
His majesty, above earth and heaven.” Psal. cxlviii. 7—13.

“ With him is wisdom and might ;
To him belong counsel and understanding.
Lo ! he pulleth down, and it shall not be built ;
He incloseth a man, and he shall not be set loose.
Lo ! he withholdeth the waters, and they are dried up ;
And he sendeth them forth, and they overturn the earth.
With him is strength, and perfect existence ;
The deceived, and the deceiver, are his.” Job xii. 13—16.

“ Is such, then, the fast which I choose ?
That a man should afflict his soul for a day ?

Is it, that he should bow down his head like a bulrush ;
 And spread sackcloth and ashes for his couch ?
 Shall this be called a fast ;
 And a day acceptable to Jehovah ?
 Is not this the fast that I choose—
 To dissolve the bands of wickedness ;
 To loosen the oppressive burthens ;
 To deliver those that are crushed by violence ;
 And that ye should break asunder every yoke ?
 Is it not to distribute thy bread to the hungry ;
 And to bring the wandering poor into thy house ?
 When thou seest the naked, that thou clothe him ;
 And that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh ?
 Then shall thy light break forth like the morning ;
 And thy wounds shall speedily be healed over ;
 And thy righteousness shall go before thee ;
 And the glory of Jehovah shall bring up thy rear.” Isa. lviii. 5—8.

Of the constructive kind is most commonly the parallelism of stanzas of three lines ; though they are sometimes synonymous throughout, and often have two lines synonymous ; examples of both which are above given. The following are constructively parallel :—

- “ Whatsoever Jehovah pleaseth,
 That doeth he in the heavens, and in the earth ;
 In the sea, and in all the deeps :
 Causing the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth ;
 Making the lightnings with the rain ;
 Bringing forth the wind out of his treasures.” Psal. cxxxv. 6, 7.
- “ The Lord Jehovah hath opened mine ear,
 And I was not rebellious ;
 Neither did I withdraw myself backward :
 I gave my back to the smiters,
 And my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair ;
 My face I hid not from shame and spitting.” Isa. l. 5, 6.
- “ Thou shalt sow, but shalt not reap ;
 Thou shalt tread the olive, but shalt not anoint thee with oil ;
 And the grape, but shalt not drink wine.” Micah vi. 15.

Of the same sort of parallelism are those passages, frequent in the poetic books, where a definite number is twice put for an indefinite : this being followed by an enumeration of particulars, naturally throws the sentences into a parallelism, which cannot be of any other than the synthetic kind. This seems to have been a favourite ornament. There are many elegant examples of it in the 30th chapter of Proverbs, to which I refer the reader ; and shall here give one or two from other places.

“ These six things Jehovah hateth ;
 And seven are the abomination of his soul :—
 Lofty eyes, and a lying tongue ;
 And hands shedding innocent blood ;
 A heart fabricating wicked thoughts ;
 Feet hastily running to mischief :
 A false witness breathing out lies ;
 And the sower of strife between brethren.” Prov. vi. 16—19.

“ Give a portion to seven, and also to eight ;
 For thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth.” Eccl. xi. 2.

“ These two things have befallen thee ; who shall bemoan thee ?
 Desolation and destruction, the famine and the sword ; who shall comfort thee ?” Isa. li. 19.

that is, taken alternately, desolation by famine, and destruction by the sword. Of which alternate construction I shall add a remarkable example or two, where the parallelism arises from the alternation of the members of the sentences :—

“ I am black, but yet beautiful, O daughters of Jerusalem :
 Like the tents of Kedar ; like the pavilions of Solomon.” Cant. i. 5.

that is, black as the tents of Kedar, (made of dark-coloured goats' hair) ; beautiful as the pavilions of Solomon.

“ On her house-tops, and to her open streets, Every one howleth, descendeth with weeping.” Isa. xv. 3.

that is, every one howleth on her house-tops, and descendeth with weeping to her open streets.

The reader will observe in the foregoing examples, that though there are perhaps no two lines corresponding one with another as equivalent or opposite in terms ; yet there is a parallelism equally apparent, and almost as striking, which arises from the similar form and equality of the lines, from the correspondence of the members and the construction ; the consequence of which is a harmony and rhythm little inferior in effect to that of the two kinds preceding.

The degrees of the correspondence of the lines in this last sort of parallels must, from the nature of it, be various. Sometimes the parallelism is more, sometimes less exact ; sometimes hardly at all apparent. It requires indeed particular attention, much study of the genius of the language, much habitude in the analysis of the construction, to be able in all cases to see and to distinguish the nice rests and pauses which ought to be made, in order to give the period or the sentence its intended turn and cadence, and to each part its due time and proportion. The Jewish critics, called the Masoretes, were exceedingly attentive to their language in this part, even to a scrupulous exactness and subtile refinement ; as it appears from that extremely complicated system of grammatical punctuation, more embarrassing than useful, which they have invented. It is therefore not improbable, that they might have had some insight into this matter; and, in distinguishing the parts of the sentence by accents, might have had regard to the harmony of the period and the proportion of the members, as well as to the strict grammatical disposition of the constructive parts. Of this, I think, I perceive evident tokens; for they sometimes seem to have more regard in distributing the sentence to the poetical or rhetorical harmony of the period, and the proportion of the members, than to the grammatical construction. To explain what I mean, I shall here give some examples, in which the Masoretes, in distinguishing the sentence into its parts, have given marks of pauses perfectly agreeable to the poetical rhythm, but such as the grammatical construction does not require, and scarcely admits. Though it is a difficult matter to know the precise quantity of time which they allot to every distinctive point; for it depends on the relation and proportion which it bears to the whole arrangement of points throughout the sentence; and though it is impossible to express the great variety of them by our scanty system of punctuation—yet I shall endeavour to mark them out to the English reader, in a rude manner, so as to give him some notion of what I imagine it to have been their design to express. Thus then they distinguish the following sentences:—

Are mine adversaries, because I follow what is good.”

Psal. xxxviii. 20.

“ Upon Jehovah, in my distress; *
I called, and he heard me.”
“ Long hath my soul had her dwelling; *
With him that hateth peace.”

Psal. cxx. 1. 6.

“ I love Jehovah, for he hath heard; *
The voice of my supplication.
I will walk, before Jehovah; *
In the land of the living.
What shall I return unto Jehovah; *
For all the benefits which he hath bestowed on me?
My vows I will pay to Jehovah; *
Now in the presence of all his people.
Precious in the eyes of Jehovah; *
Is the death of his saints.”

Psal. cxvi. 1, 9. 12. 14, 15.

* Athnac—in the three metrical books, as the Jews account them, is but the third in order of power among the distinctive points; but, however, always takes place when the period is of two members only; in all the other books he is second: in the latter, therefore, Rebiah and Zakeph-katon, which come next to Athnac, have nearly the same distinctive power as Athnac has in the former. They will scarce be thought over-rated at a comma.

- “ Yea the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof,* Shall not send forth their light.” Isa. xiii. 10.
- “ In that day, shall his strongly fenced cities become,† Like the desertion of the Hivites and the Amorites.” Isa. xvii. 9.
- “ For the glorious name of Jehovah shall be unto us,*
A place of confluent streams, of broad rivers.” Isa. xxxiii. 21.
- “ That she hath received at the hand of Jehovah,* Double of the punishment of all her sins.” Isa. xl. 2.

Of the three different sorts of parallels, as above explained, every one hath its peculiar character and proper effect; and therefore they are differently employed on different occasions; and that sort of parallelism is chiefly made use of which is best adapted to the nature of the subject and of the poem. Synonymous parallels have the appearance of art and concinnity, and a studied elegance: they prevail chiefly in shorter poems; in many of the Psalms; in Balaam's prophecies; frequently in those of Isaiah, which are most of them distinct poems of no great length. The antithetic parallelism gives an acuteness and force to adages and moral sentences; and therefore, as I observed before, abounds in Solomon's Proverbs, and elsewhere is not often to be met with. The poem of Job being on a large plan, and in a high tragic style, though very exact in the division of the lines, and in the parallelism, and affording many fine examples of the synonymous kind, yet consists chiefly of the constructive. A happy mixture of the several sorts gives an agreeable variety; and they serve mutually to recommend and set off one another.

I mentioned above, that there appeared to be two sorts of Hebrew verses, differing from one another in regard to their length: the examples hitherto given are all, except one, of the shorter kind of verse. The longer, though they admit of every sort of parallelism, yet belonging for the most part to the last class, that of constructive parallels, I shall treat of them in this place, and endeavour to explain the nature, and to point out the marks of them, as fully and exactly as I can.

This distinction of Hebrew verses into longer and shorter, is founded on the authority of the alphabetical poems; one-third of the whole number of which are manifestly of the longer sort of verse, the rest of the shorter. I do not presume exactly to define by the number of syllables, supposing we could with some probability determine it, the limit that separates one sort of verse from the other, so that every verse exceeding or falling short of that number should be always accounted a long or a short verse; all that I affirm is this,—that one of the three poems perfectly alphabetical, and therefore infallibly divided into its verses; and three of the nine other alphabetical poems, divided into their verses, after the manner of the perfectly alphabetical, with the greatest degree of probability; that these four poems, being the four first Lamentations of Jeremiah, fall into verses about one-third longer, taking them one with another, than those of the other eight alphabetical poems. I shall first give an example of these long verses from a poem perfectly alphabetical, in which therefore the limits of the verses are unerringly defined :—

† Rebiah.

“ I am the man that hath seen affliction, by the rod of his anger :
 He hath led me, and made me walk, in darkness, not in light :
 Even again turneth he his hand against me, all the day long.
 He hath made old my flesh and my skin, he hath broken my bones :
 He hath built against me, and hath compassed me, with gall and travail :
 He hath made me dwell in dark places, as the dead of old.”

Lam. iii. 1—6.

The following is from the first Lamentation, in which the stanzas are defined by initial letters, and are, like the former, of three lines :—

“ How doth the city solitary sit, she that was full of people !
 How is she become a widow, that was great among the nations !
 Princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary !
 She weepeth sore in the night, and her tear is upon her cheek :
 She hath none to comfort her, among all her lovers :
 All her friends have betrayed her, they became her enemies.”

Lam. i. 1, 2.

I shall now give examples of the same sort of verse, where the limits of the verses are to be collected only from the poetical construction of the sentences : and first from the books acknowledged on all hands to be poetical ; and of these we must have recourse to the Psalms only, for I believe there is not a single instance of this sort of verse to be found in the poem of Job, and scarce any in the Proverbs of Solomon.

“ The law of Jehovah is perfect, restoring the soul ;
 The testimony of Jehovah is sure, making wise the simple ;
 The precepts of Jehovah are right, rejoicing the heart ;
 The commandment of Jehovah is clear, enlightening the eyes :
 The fear of Jehovah is pure, enduring for ever ;
 The judgments of Jehovah are truth ; they are altogether righteous ;
 More desirable than gold, and than much fine gold ;
 And sweeter than honey, and the dropping of honey-combs.”

Psal. xix. 7—10.

“ That our sons may be like plants, growing up in their youth ;
 Our daughters like the corner-pillars, carved for the structure of a palace :
 Our store-houses full, producing all kinds of provision :
 Our flocks bringing forth thousands, ten thousands in our fields :
 Our oxen strong to labour ; no irruption, no captivity ;
 And no outcry in our streets.” Psal. cxliv. 12—14.

“ Oh ! how great is thy goodness which thou hast treasured up, for them that fear thee ;
 Which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee, before the sons of men !
 Thou wilt hide them in the secret place of thy presence, from the vexations of man ;
 Thou wilt keep them safe in the tabernacle, from the strife of tongues.”
 Psal. xxxi. 19, 20,

“ A sound of a multitude in the mountains, as of many people ;
 A sound of the tumult of kingdoms, of nations gathered together ;
 Jehovah God of Hosts mustereth the host for the battle.
 They come from a distant land, from the end of heaven ;
 Jehovah and the instruments of his wrath, to destroy the whole land.”
 Isa. xiii. 4, 5.

“ They are turned backward, they are utterly confounded, who trust in the graven image ;
 Who say unto the molten image, ye are our gods !” Isa. xlii. 17.

“ They are ashamed, they are even confounded, his adversaries,* all of them ;
 Together they retire in confusion, the fabricators of images :
 But Israel shall be saved in Jehovah, with eternal salvation ;
 Ye shall not be ashamed, neither shall ye be confounded, to the ages of eternity.” Isa. xlv. 16, 17.

These examples, all except the two first, are of long verses thrown in irregularly, but with design, between verses of another sort ; among which they stand out, as it were, somewhat distinguished in regard to their matter as well as their form.

I think I perceive some peculiarities in the cast and structure of these verses, which mark them, and distinguish them from those of the other sort. The closing pause of each line is generally very full and strong ; and in each line commonly, towards the end, at least beyond the middle of it, there is a small rest or interval, depending on the sense and grammatical construction, which I would call a half-pause.

The conjunction ו, the common particle of connexion, which abounds in the Hebrew language, and is very often used without any necessity at all, seems to be frequently and studiously omitted at the half-pause ; the remaining clause being added,

to use a grammatical term, by apposition to some word preceding; or coming in as an adjunct, or circumstance depending on the former part, and completing the sentence. This gives a certain air to these verses, which may be esteemed in some sort as characteristic of the kind.

The first four Lamentations are four distinct poems, consisting uniformly and entirely of * the long verse, which may therefore be properly called the elegiac verse—from those elegies which give the plainest and the most undoubted examples of it. There may perhaps be found many other very probable examples in the same kind; but this is what I cannot pretend to determine with any certainty. Such, I think, are the 42d and 43d Psalms; which I imagine make one entire poem,† and ought not to have been divided into two Psalms: the lines are all of the longer kind, except the third line of the intercalary stanza three times inserted; which third line, like that at the close of an example given above from the 144th Psalm, is of the shorter kind of verse, somewhat like the Paræmiac verse of the Greeks, which commonly makes the close of a set of Anapaestic verses. Such likewise may perhaps be the 101st Psalm, which seems to consist of fourteen long verses, or seven distichs, thus divided:—

“ Mercy and judgment will I celebrate; to thee, O Jehovah, will I sing.
 I will act circumspectly in the perfect way; when wilt thou come unto me?
 I will walk with a perfect heart, in the midst of my house;
 I will not set before mine eyes, a wicked thing:
 Him that dealeth unfaithfully, I hate; he shall not cleave unto me:
 A perverse heart shall remove from me; the wicked I will not know.
 Whoso slandereth in secret his friend, him will I destroy.
 The lofty of eyes, and the proud of heart, him I will not endure.
 Mine eyes shall be on the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me:
 Whoso walketh in the perfect way, he shall minister unto me.
 He shall not dwell within my house, who practiseth deceit.
 He that speaketh falsehood, shall not be established in my sight.

* In the second Lamentation, the second line of the fourth period is deficient in length; and so likewise is the 31st verse of the third Lamentation. In the former, two words are lost out of the text; in the latter, one. This will plainly appear by supplying those words from the Chaldee paraphrase, which has happily preserved them. They prove their own genuineness by making the lines of a just length, and by completely restoring the sense; which in the former is otherwise not unexceptionable, in the latter manifestly imperfect. I will add the lines, with the words supplied included in crotchets.

“ And he slew [every youth], all that were desirable to the eye.”

כי לא יזנח לעולם [עבדיו] אדני

“ For the Lord will not cast off [his servants] for ever.

† This conjecture, offered some years ago, has since been confirmed by twenty-two MSS, which join them together.

Every morning will I destroy all the wicked of the land ;
To cut off, from the city of Jehovah, all the workers of iniquity."

The sublime ode of Isaiah in the 14th chapter is all of this kind of verse, except, perhaps, a verse or two towards the end ; and the prophecy against Senacherib in the 37th chapter, as far as it is addressed to Senacherib himself.

I venture to submit to the judgment of the candid reader the preceding observations upon a subject, which hardly admits of proof and certainty ; which is rather a matter of opinion and of taste, than of science ; especially in the latter part, which endeavours to establish, and to point out, the difference of two sorts of verse, the longer and the shorter. For though the third Lamentation of Jeremiah gives a clear and indubitable example of the elegiac or long verse, and the two Psalms perfectly alphabetical of the shorter ; yet the whole art of Hebrew versification, except only what appears in the construction of the sentences, being totally lost, it is not easy to try by them other passages of verse, so as to draw any certain conclusion in all cases, whether they are of the same kind or not : And that, for this among other reasons ; because what I call the half-pause, which I think prevails for the most part in the longer verses, is sometimes so strong and so full in the middle of the line, that it seems naturally to resolve it into a distich of two short verses. I readily therefore acknowledge, that in settling the distribution of the lines or verses, in the following Translation, I have had frequent doubts, and particularly in determining the long and short verses. I am still uncertain in regard to many places, whether two lines ought not to be joined to make one, or one line divided into two. But whatever doubts may remain concerning particulars, yet upon the whole I should hope, that the method of distribution here proposed, of sentences into stanzas and verses in the poetical books of Scripture, will appear to have some foundation, and even to carry with it a considerable degree of probability. Though no complete system of rules concerning this matter can perhaps be formed, which will hold good in every particular ; yet this way of considering the subject may have its use, in furnishing a principle of interpretation of some consequence, in giving a general idea of the style and character of the Hebrew poetry, and in shewing the close conformity of style and character between great part of the prophetic writings, and the other books of the Old Testament universally acknowledged to be poetical.

And that the reader may not think his pains wholly lost, in labouring through this long disquisition concerning sentences and members of sentences, in weighing words and balancing periods, I shall endeavour to shew him something of the use and application of the preceding observations; and to convince him, that this branch of criticism, minute as it may appear, yet merits the attention of the translator and of the interpreter of the Holy Scriptures—so large a part of which is entirely poetical, and where occasional pieces of poetry are interspersed through the whole.

It is incumbent on every translator to study the manner of his author; to mark the peculiarities of his style, to imitate his features, his air, his gesture, and, as far as the difference of language will permit, even his voice; in a word, to give a just and expressive resemblance of the original. If he does not carefully attend to this, he will sometimes fail of entering into his meaning; he will always exhibit him unlike himself—in a dress that will appear strange and unbecoming to all that are in any degree acquainted with him. Sebastian Castellio stands in the first rank for critical abilities and theological learning among the modern translators of Scripture; but by endeavouring to give the whole composition of his translation a new cast, to throw it out of the Hebrew idiom, and to make it adopt the Latin phrase and structure in its stead, he has given us something that is neither Hebrew nor Latin: the Hebrew manner is destroyed, and the Latin manner is not perfectly acquired; we regret the loss of the Hebrew simplicity, and we are disgusted with the perpetual affectation of Latin elegance. This is in general the case, but chiefly in the poetical parts. Take the following for a specimen.

barbaro,
Judæi Israelitæ Deo fuere sanctitati atque potestati.
Quo viso, mare fugit, et Jordanis retrocessit.
Montes arietum, colles ove natorum ritu exiliverunt.”

Surely to this even the barbarism of the Vulgate is preferable; for though it has no elegance of its own, yet it still retains the form, and gives us some idea of the force and spirit of the Hebrew. I will subjoin it here, for it needs not fear the comparison.

“ In exitu Israel de Ægypto, domûs Jacob de populo barbaro, Facta est Judæa sanctificatio ejus, Israel potestas ejus.
Mare vidit, et fugit: Jordanis conversus est retrorsum.
Montes exultaverunt ut arietes: et colles sicut agni ovium.”

Flatness and insipidity will generally be the consequence of a deviation from the native manner of an original which has a real merit and a peculiar force of its own; for it will be very difficult to compensate the loss of this by any adventitious ornaments. To express fully and exactly the sense of the author is indeed the principal, but not the whole duty of the translator. In a work of elegance and genius, he is not only to inform, he must endeavour to please; and to please by the same means, if possible, by which his author pleases. If this pleasure arises in a great measure from the shape of the composition and the form of the construction, as it does in the Hebrew poetry perhaps beyond any other example whatsoever, the translator's eye ought to be always intent upon this: to neglect this, is to give up all chance of success, and all pretension to it. The importance of the subject, and the consequent necessity of keeping closely to the letter of the original, has confined the translators of Scripture within such narrow limits, that they have been forced, whether they designed it or not, and even sometimes contrary to their design, as in the case of Castello, to retain much of the Hebrew manner. This is remarkably the case in our vulgar translation, the constant use of which has rendered this manner familiar and agreeable to us. We have adopted the Hebrew taste; and what is with judgment, and upon proper occasion, well expressed in that taste, hardly ever fails to suggest the ideas of beauty, solemnity, and elevation. To shew the difference in this respect, I shall here give an example or two of a free and loose translation, yet sufficiently well expressing the sense, contrasted with another translation of the same, as strictly literal as possible.

1. "The merciful and gracious Lord hath so done his marvellous works, that they ought to be had in remembrance." Psal. cxi. 4. Old Version.

2. "Lo! children and the fruit of the womb are an heritage and gift, that cometh from the Lord." Psal. cxxvii. 4. O. V.

3. "O put not your trust in princes, nor in any child of man; for there is no help in them.

"For when the breath of man goeth forth, he shall turn again to his earth; and then all his thoughts perish.

4. "The Lord thy God, O Sion, shall be king for evermore, and throughout all generations." Psal. cxlvi. 2, 3. 10. O. V.

1. "He hath made a memorial of his wonders: gracious and of tender mercy is Jehovah."

2. "Behold, an heritage from Jehovah are children; a reward, the fruit of the womb."

3. "Trust ye not in princes; in the son of man, in whom is no salvation.

"His breath goeth forth; he returneth to his earth; in that day his thoughts perish."

4. "Jehovah shall reign for ever; thy God, O Sion, from age to age."

The former examples are mere prose; the latter retain the outlines and the features of the original Hebrew, and from that cause alone are still poetry.

But this strict attention to the form and fashion of the composition of the sacred writings of the Old Testament is not only useful, and even necessary, in the translator who is ambitious of preserving in his copy the force, and spirit, and elegance of the original; it will be of great use to him likewise merely as an interpreter, and will often lead him into the meaning of obscure words and phrases: sometimes it will suggest the true reading, where the text in our present copies is faulty; and will verify and confirm a correction offered on the authority of MSS, or of the ancient versions. I shall add a few examples, as evidences of what is here advanced. One short passage of Isaiah will furnish a number sufficient for our purpose; and the observant reader will find several more in the version and notes subjoined.

“Wherefore hear ye the word of Jehovah, ye scoffers;
Ye who to this people in Jerusalem utter sententious speeches:
Who say, We have entered into a covenant with death;
And with the grave we have made a treaty.—
But your covenant with death shall be broken;
And your treaty with the grave shall not stand.”

Isa. xxviii. 14, 15. 18.

משלי, ye that rule this people, says our version; and so the generality of interpreters ancient and modern. But this prophecy is not addressed to the rulers of the people, nor is it at all concerned with them in particular; but is directed to the Ephraimites in general; and this part to the scoffers among them, who ridiculed the denunciations of the prophets, by giving out parabolical sentences, and solemn speeches, somewhat in the prophetic style, in opposition to their prophecies; of which speeches he gives specimens in the next verse, as he had done before in the 9th and 10th verses. משלי therefore is parallel and synonymous to אנשי לציון, scoffers; and is not to be translated rulers, but to be taken in the other sense of the word, and rendered, “those that speak parables.” And Iarchi in this place very properly explains it, “qui dicunt verba irrisionis parabolicæ.”

The next verse gives us an instance still more remarkable of the influence which the parallelism has in determining the sense of words;

“We have entered into a covenant with death;
And with the grave we have made——” what? Every one must answer immediately, an agreement, a bargain, a treaty, or something to the same sense; and so in effect say all the versions, ancient and modern. But the word דוד means no such thing in any part of the Bible; (except in the 18th verse of this chapter, here quoted, where it is repeated in the same sense, and nearly in the same form); nor can the lexicographers give any satisfactory account of the word in this sense; which however they are forced to admit from the necessity of the case. “Rectè verto vocem חוזה, perinde ac חזות, v. 18. transactionem, licet neutra hac significatione alibi occurrat: circumstantia enim orationis eam necessariò exigit;” says the learned Vitringa upon the place. It could not otherwise have been known that the word had this meaning; it is the parallelism alone that determines it to this meaning; and that so clearly, that no doubt at all remains concerning the sense of the passage.

Again:—

“And your covenant with death shall be broken.”

But כפר means to cover, to cover sin, and so to expiate, &c. and is never used in the sense of breaking or dissolving a covenant, though that notion so often occurs in the Scriptures; nor can it be forced into this sense, but by a great deal of far-fetched reasoning. Besides, it ought to be כפרה, or תכפר, in the feminine form, to agree with ברית. So that the word, as it stands, makes neither grammar nor sense. There is great reason therefore to suspect some mistake in our present copy. The true reading is probably תפר, differing by one letter. So conjectured Houbigant; and so Archbishop Secker: and I find their conjecture confirmed by the Chaldee paraphrast, who renders it by בטל, the word which he generally uses in rendering this common phrase הפיר ברית. And this reading is still further confirmed by the parallelism; for תפר, shall be broken, in the first line, is parallel and synonymous to לא תקום, shall not stand, in the second.

The very same phrases are parallel and synonymous, Isa. viii. 10.

“Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought, ותפר;
Speak the word, and it shall not stand, ולא יקום.”

I shall add one example more; and that of a reading suggested by the parallelism, and destitute of all authority of MSS or ancient versions.

“But mine enemies living are numerous;
And they that hate me wrongfully are multiplied.”

Psal. xxxviii. 19.

The word חיים, living, seems not to belong to this place; besides that the construction of it in the Hebrew is very unusual and inelegant. The true reading in all probability is חנם, without cause; parallel and synonymous to שקר, wrongfully, in the next line, (as in Psal. xxxv. 19.); which completes the parallelism through both lines. Let the reader compare Psal. lxi. 5. where the very same three terms in each line are set parallel to one another, just in the same manner as I suppose they must have been originally here. Which place likewise furnishes another example in the same kind: for a fourth term being there introduced in each line, the fourth term in the last line has been corrupted by the small mistake of inserting a ך in the middle of it. It has been well restored by a conjecture of the learned and ingenious Bishop Hare.

“They that hate me without cause are multiplied beyond the hairs of my head;

They that are mine enemies wrongfully are more numerous than the hairs of my locks.”

For מַצְמִיתִי, who destroy me, read מִצְמִיתִי, more than my locks, parallel to מִשְׁעֵרוֹת רֹאשִׁי, more than the hairs of my head, in the first line. The Bishop's conjecture is since confirmed by seven MSS.

Thus two inveterate mistakes, which have disgraced the text above two thousand years, (for they are prior to the version of the Seventy), are happily corrected, and that, I think, beyond a doubt, by the parallelism supported by the example of similar passages.

RABBI AZARIAS,* a learned Jew of the 16th century, has treated of the ancient Hebrew versification upon principles similar to those above proposed, and partly coincident with them: he makes the form of the verse to depend on the structure of the sentence, and the measures in every verse to be determined by the several parts of the proposition. As he is the only one of the Jewish writers, who appears to have had any just idea at all of this matter; as his system seems to be well founded; and as his observations may be of use on the present occasion, both by giving some degree of authority to the hypothesis above explained, and by setting the subject in a light somewhat different,—I shall here give the reader at large his opinion upon it.

This author, in a large work entitled Meor Enajim, (that is, The light of the Eyes), containing a great variety of matter, historical, critical, and philosophical, takes occasion to treat of the Hebrew poetry in a separate chapter; of which the younger Buxtorf has given a Latin translation.†

* R. Azarias Min Haadumim, i. e. de Rubeis, or Rossi, of Ferrara, finished his treatise entitled Meor Enajim, A. D. 1573, and published it at Mantua, the place of his birth, 1574. Wolfii Biblioth. Hebraea, vol. i. p. 944.

† Mantissa Dissertationum, p. 415. at the end of his edition of Cosiri. Suspecting, from some obscurities, that Buxtorf's translation was not very accurate, I procured the original edition; and, having carefully examined it, I have corrected from it this account of the author's sentiments.

“Azarias finding little satisfaction in what former writers had said upon the subject; whether those who make the Hebrew verse consist of a certain number of syllables and certain feet, like that of the Greeks and Latins; or those who exclude all metre, and make the harmony of their verse to arise from accents, tones, and musical modulations; which latter opinion he thinks agreeable to truth;—and having consulted the most learned of his nation without being able to obtain any solution of his difficulties; for they allowed that there was a sensible difference between the songs and the other parts of the Hebrew Scriptures when they were read; a kind of metrical sweetness in the former, which the latter had not; but whence that difference arose no one could explain;—in this state of uncertainty, he long considered the matter, endeavouring to obtain some satisfaction in his inquiries. He at last came to the following determination upon it:—That the sacred songs have undoubtedly certain measures and proportions; which, however, do not consist in the number of syllables, perfect or imperfect, according to the form of the modern verse which the Jews make use of, and which is borrowed from the Arabians; (though the Arabic prosody, he observes, is too complicated to be applied to the Hebrew language); but in the number of things, and of the parts of things—that is, the subject, and the predicate, and their adjuncts, in every sentence and proposition. Thus a phrase, containing two parts of a proposition, consists of two measures; add another containing two more, and they become four measures: another again, containing three parts of a proposition, consists of three measures; add to it another of the like, and you have six measures.

“For example; in the song of Moses, “Thy-right-hand, O-Jehovah,” is a phrase consisting of two terms, or parts of a proposition; to which is connected, “is-glorious in-power,” consisting likewise of two terms: these joined together make four measures, or a tetrameter: “Thy-right-hand, O-Jehovah,” repeated, makes two more; “hath-crushed the-enemy,” two more; which together make four measures, or a second tetrameter. So likewise,

“The-enemy said; I-will-pursue, I-will-overtake;
I-will-divide the-spoil; my-lust shall-be-satisfied-upon-them;
I-will-draw my-sword; my-hand shall-destroy-them;
Thou-didst-blow with-thy-wind; the-sea covered-them.”

“The Song of Deuteronomy consists of propositions of three parts, or three measures; which, doubled in the same manner, make six, or hexameters: thus,

“Hearken, O-heavens, and-I-will-speak ; and-let-the-earth hear the-words-of-my-mouth :*

My-doctrine shall-drop, as-the-rain ; my-word shall-distil, as-the-dew.”

“ Sometimes in the same period, much more in the same song, these two kinds meet together, according to the divine impulse moving the prophet, and as the variety suited his design, and the nature of the subject. For example,—

“ And-by-the-blast of-thy-nostrils, the-waters were-compressed :”

These are each two measures, which together make a tetrameter : it follows,—

“ The-floods stood-upright, as-in-a-heap :

The-deeps were-congealed in-the-heart-of-the-sea :”†

These are two trimeters, which make an hexameter. So the Song of the Well begins with trimeters ; to which are afterwards subjoined dimeters.‡ So in the prayer of Habakkuk the verses are trimeters :—

“ God came from-Teman ;

And-the-Holy-One from-the-mount-of-Paran § Selah.

His-glory covered the-heavens ;

And-his-splendour filled the-earth.”

“ The author proceeds to observe, that in some verses certain words occur which make no part of the measures, or are not taken into the account of the verse ; as in the Song of Deuteronomy :—

“ And-he-said,

I-will-hide my-face from-them :”

* Two words joined together by maccaph are considered as a single word, according to the laws of punctuation ; so אמרי-פי is one word.

‡ The Song of the Well, Numb. xxi. 17, 18. according to our way of fixing the conclusion of it, and if we measure it by Azarias's rules, consists of three trimeters and one dimeter only. But the Targum of Onkelos continues the song to the end of the 20th verse, taking in the catalogue of stations, (as we understand it), which immediately follows, as part of the song ; and interpreting it as such. Azarias follows his authority : so Aben Tybbon, (see Cosri, p. 431.), and Iarchi upon the place. At this rate we shall have half a dozen dimeters more.

§ מדהר-פארן, (from-the-mount-of-Paran), being joined by maccaph, and so making but one word, the author is obliged to take in Selah as part of the verse, to make out his third term or measure. The authority of the Masoretic maccaph has led him into an error. The verse without Selah is a trimeter ; as it ought to be in conformity with the rest.

The word, "And-he-said," stands by itself,*—and the remaining words make a trimeter :—

"I-will-see, what-is their-latter-end," is the trimeter answering to it. So in the prayer of Habakkuk :—

"O-Jehovah,
I-have-heard thy-speech ; I-was-afraid ;
O-Jehovah,
Revive thy-work in-the-midst-of-the years : " †

The word, "O-Jehovah," is twice to be read separate ; and the words added to it make a trimeter. But this verse,

"Though the-fig-tree shall-not blossom," is of a different sort, consisting of the subject and predicate : "Though the fig-tree," being the subject ; "shall not blossom," the predicate. So in a verse containing twelve terms, those terms may be reduced to six measures. For you are not to reckon either the syllables or the words, but only the things. And for this reason a particle is often joined to the word next to it. The verses of the Psalms observe the same order :—

"Have-mercy-upon-me, O-God, according-to-thy-goodness ;
According-to-the-multitude-of-thy-mercies, ‡ blot-out my-transgressions."

* So far the observation seems to be just ; and perhaps there may be two more examples of it in the same poem, ver. 26. and 37. ; where, according to Azarias's doctrine, the words, I said, And he shall say, may conveniently enough be considered as making no part of the verse. So in Isaiah, the common forms, Thus saith Jehovah, And it shall come to pass in that day, and the like, probably are not always to be reckoned as making part of the measure. The period ס in the 4th Lamentation cannot well be divided into two lines, as it ought to be ; but if the words קראו למו, they cried unto them, and אמרו בגוים, they said among the heathen, are excluded from the measure, the remainder will make two lines of just length :—

Yea, they are fled, they are removed ; they shall dwell here no more."

Or perhaps they may be two marginal interpretations, which by mistake have got into the text ; which, I think, is better without them. So likewise, Lam. ii. 15. the word שיאמרו, of-which-they-said, either does not reckon in the verse, which with it is too long ; or, as I rather think, should be omitted as an interpolation.

† In order to make out the trimeter, it is necessary to suppose that Azarias reads בקרב־שנים as one word.

‡ Azarias takes the liberty of joining the two words כרב רחמין together by a maccaph, which is not to be found in our editions, in order to bring the verse within his rules. The reader will observe, that this distich, which in the Hebrew contains but seven words, cannot be rendered in English in less than one-and-twenty words. By this he will judge under what great disadvantage

These are trimeters. So likewise,

“ In-God I-will-praise his-word ;
In-Jehovah I-will-praise his-word.”

So likewise the Proverbs of Solomon, “ Wisdom crieth without ;

In-the-streets she-uttereth her-voice.”

“ I am aware, adds he, that some verses are to be found, which I cannot accommodate to these rules and forms ; and perhaps a great number. But by observing these things, the intelligent may perhaps receive new light, and discover what has escaped me. However, they may be assured, that all the verses that are found in the Sacred Writings ; such as the Song at the Red Sea, of the Well, of Moses, of Deborah, of David, of the Book of Job, the Psalms, and the Proverbs ; all of them have an established order and measure, different in different places, or even sometimes different in one and the same poem ;—as we may perceive in reading them an admirable propriety and fitness, though we cannot arrive at the true method of measuring or scanning them.

“ It is not to be wondered, that the same song should consist of different measures ; for the case is the same in the poetry of the Greeks and Romans : they suited their measures to the nature of the subject and the argument ; and the variations which they admitted, were accommodated to the motions of the body, and the affections of the soul. Every kind of measure is not proper for every subject ; and an ode, a panegyric, or a prayer, should not be composed in the same measure with an elegy. Do not you observe, says he, in the Book of Lamentations of Jeremiah, that the periods of the first and second chapters each of them consist of three propositions ; and every one of these of a subject, and a predicate, and of the adjuncts belonging to them ? The third chapter follows the same method ; and for this reason is placed next to them in order : but of this chapter every period is distributed into three initial letters. But the fourth chapter does not perfect the senses in every verse ;* but all the foregoing examples, whether of the parallelism, or of the metre of things, must appear in an English version, in which many words are almost always necessary to render what is expressed by one word in Hebrew.

* He said above, that in the 1st and 2d chapters each separate verse, or line, was a single proposition : he now says, that this is not the case in the 4th chapter ; for it does not perfect the sense in every verse ; that is, each verse does not consist of one single proposition. As, for example, the first line or verse—

“ How is obscured the gold ! changed the fine gold !”

“ How is obscured | the gold !” makes one proposition, and two measures ;
“ changed | the fine gold !” another proposition, and two other measures ;

consists of two and two, which make four. But the fifth chapter, which contains a prayer, you will find to be built on another plan; that is, one and one, which make two,* or a dimeter; like the verses of the Books of Job, Psalms, and Proverbs. So the Song of Moses, and the Song of Deborah, have a different form; consisting of three and three, which make six; that is, hexameters; like the heroic measure, which is the noblest of all measures.

“Upon the whole, the author concludes, that the poetical parts of the Hebrew Scriptures are not composed according to the rules and measures of certain feet, dissyllables, trisyllables, or the like, as the poems of the modern Jews are; but nevertheless have undoubtedly other measures which depend on things,† as above explained. For which reason, they are more excellent than those which consist of certain feet, according to the number and quantity of syllables. Of this, says he, you may judge yourself in the Songs of the Prophets. For do you not see, if you translate some of them into another language, that they still keep and retain their measure, if not wholly, at least in part? which cannot be the case in those verses, the measures of which arise from a certain quantity and number of syllables.”

Such is R. Azarias's hypothesis of the rhythmus of things; that is, of terms and of senses; of the grammatical parts of speech and of the logical parts of propositions. The principle seems to be right; but, I think, he has not made the best use of which it was capable in the application. He acknowledges, that it will not hold in all cases. I believe, there is no such thing to be found in the Hebrew Bible, as a whole poem consisting of trimeters, tetrameters, or hexameters only, measured which, according to him, make a tetrameter. This, he says, makes the difference between the three first and the fourth chapter. But there seems to be no such difference; many single lines in the three first containing two propositions, and many in the fourth containing only one.

* According to the author's own definition of his terms, one and one which make two, should mean, one term and one term making two measures, or a dimeter; but the fifth chapter does not at all seem to answer that description. Besides, he says, the verses of it are like those of Job, Psalms, and Proverbs, of two of which books he said before, that the verses were trimeters. I know not what he means, unless it be that one and one sentences make two, that is a distich; and that this chapter consists of distichs, of two short lines, as the Books of Job, Psalms, and Proverbs, for the most part do; which is true.

† Perhaps the harmony might depend in some degree on both; for it may be often observed, that where the words of an hemistich happen to be longer, and consequently to consist of more syllables than the words of the adjoining hemistich, there the things expressed are fewer; (see, for example, Psal. cviii. 4. 5.) which seems to prove, that the measures of the verses did not depend on the things expressed only, but on the syllables also.

and scanned according to his rules. The Song of Moses, Deut. xxxii. is a very apt example for his purpose; but will not in all parts fall in with his measures. Besides, there is no sort of reason for his making it to consist of hexameters, rather than trimeter distichs; such, as he says, the Psalms and Proverbs consist of. Examine the 111th and 112th Psalms by his rules; and though they will fall into his trimeters for the most part pretty well, yet we are sure that these were not to be coupled together to make hexameters, for they are necessarily divided into twenty-two distinct short lines by the initial letters. The Hebrew poetry, consisting for the most part of short sentences, must in general naturally fall into such measures as Azarias establishes; or with some management may be easily reduced to his rules. Every proposition must consist of a subject and a predicate, joined together by a copula; and the predicate including the copula will generally consist of two terms, expressing the action, and the thing acted upon. In Hebrew, sometimes the subject is combined with the copula in one word, and sometimes the predicate; sometimes all three make but one term. In these cases, the addition of a simple adjunct (for the shortness of the style will not admit of much more) to the subject, or the predicate, or both, furnishes a second, a third, and sometimes a fourth term; that is, makes the verse a dimeter, trimeter, or tetrameter. For instance, in dimeters,—

“ They-made-him-jealous, with-strange-Gods ;
 They-provoked-him, with-abominations.” Deut. xxxii. 16.

In trimeters,—

“ I-will-bless Jehovah, at-all-time ;
 His-praise [shall be] in-my-mouth, continually.
 My-soul shall-make-her-boast, in-Jehovah ;
 The-meek shall-hear-it, and-rejoice.
 O-magnify-ye Jehovah, with-me ;
 And-let-us-praise his-name, together.” Psal. xxxiv. 1—3.

In these examples, the first part of every line makes an entire proposition, and the last is an adjunct making the second, or the third term. In the following, the subject, and the predicate, with their adjuncts, consist of two terms, each of them: that is, of two measures; and, being joined together, make a tetrameter:—

The next line is in the same form, except that the verb is understood, and the latter adjunct divided into two terms; and makes a second tetrameter to pair with the first:—

Something of this kind must necessarily be the result of this sententious way of writing: it is what comes of course, without much study. But whatever attention the Hebrew poets might give to the scanning of their verses by the number of terms, it does not appear to have been their design to confine all the verses of the same poem to any set number of terms; whereas they do plainly appear to have studied to throw the corresponding lines of the same distich into the same number of terms, into the same form of construction, and still more into an identity, or opposition, or a general conformity of sense. I agree therefore with Azarias in his general principle of a rhythmus of things: but instead of considering terms, or phrases, or senses, in single lines, as measures; determining the nature and denomination of the verse, as dimeter, trimeter, or tetrameter; I consider only that relation and proportion of one verse to another, which arises from the correspondence of terms, and from the form of construction; from whence results a rhythmus of propositions, and a harmony of sentences.

This peculiar conformation of sentences; short, concise, with frequent pauses, and regular intervals, divided into pairs, for the most part, of corresponding lines; is the most evident characteristic now remaining of poetry among the Hebrews, as distinguished from prose; and this, I suppose, is what is implied in the name, Mizmor;* which I understand to be the proper name for verse; that is, for numerous, rhythmical, or metrical language. This form made their verse peculiarly fit for music and dance; which with them were the usual concomitants of poetry, on occasions of public joy, and in the most solemn offices of religion.† Both their dance and song were on such occasions performed by two choirs ‡ taking their parts alternately in each. The regular form of the stanzas, chiefly distichal, and the parallelism of the lines, were excellently well suited to this purpose, and fell in naturally with the movements of the body, of the voice, and of the instruments, and with the division of the parts between the two sets of performers.

But, beside the poetical structure of the sentences, there are other indications of verse in the poetical and prophetic parts of the Hebrew Scriptures: such are, peculiarities of language; unusual and foreign words; phrases, and forms of words, uncommon in prose; bold elliptical expression; frequent and abrupt change of persons, and an use of the tenses out of the common order; and lastly, the poetical dialect, consisting chiefly in certain anomalies peculiar to poetry; in letters and syllables added to the ends of words; a kind of license commonly permitted to poetry in every language. But as these cannot be explained by a few examples, nor perfectly understood without some knowledge of Hebrew; I must beg leave to refer the learned reader, who would inquire further into this subject, to what I have said upon it in another place;* or rather, to recommend it to his own observation, in reading the sacred poets in their own language.

* מִזְמוֹר mizmor signifies to cut, to prune, to sing, to play on a musical instrument. Cesura is the common idea, which prevails in all.

THUS far of the genuine form and character of the Prophet's composition; which it has been the translator's endeavour closely to follow, and as exactly to express as the difference of the languages would permit: in which indeed he has had great advantage in the habit, which our language has acquired, of expressing with ease, and not without elegance, Hebrew ideas and Hebrew forms of speaking, from our constant use of a close verbal translation of both the Old and New Testament; which has by degrees moulded our language into such a conformity with that of the original Scriptures, that it can upon occasion assume the Hebrew character without appearing altogether forced and unnatural. It remains to say something of the Translation in regard to its fidelity; and of the principles of interpretation by which the translator has been guided in the prosecution of it.

THE first and principal business of a translator, is to give the plain literal and grammatical sense of his author; the obvious meaning of his words, phrases, and sentences; and to express them in the language into which he translates, as far as may be, in equivalent words, phrases, and sentences. Whatever indulgence may be allowed him in other respects; however excusable he may be, if he fail of attaining the elegance, the spirit, the sublimity of his author—which will generally be in some degree the case, if his author excels at all in those qualities; want of fidelity admits of no excuse, and is entitled to no indulgence. This is peculiarly so in subjects of high importance, such as the Holy Scriptures, in which so much depends on the phrase and expression; and particularly in the prophetic books of Scripture; where from the letter are often deduced deep and recondite senses, which must owe all their weight and solidity to the just and accurate interpretation of the words of the prophecy. For whatever senses are supposed to be included in the Prophet's words, spiritual, mystical, allegorical, analogical, or the like, they must all entirely depend on the literal sense. This is the only foundation upon which such interpretations can be securely raised; and if this is not firmly and well established, all that is built upon it will fall to the ground.

For example; if כְּחַיָּא מִכְמָר, Isa. li. 20. does not signify ὡς σευτλιον ἡμιεφθον, like parboiled bete, as the LXX render it, but like an oryx (a large fierce wild beast) in the toils; what becomes of Theodoret's explication of this image? Καθευδοιτες ὡς σευτλιον ἡμιεφθον] Εδείξεν αὐτῶν δια μὲν τὰ ὕπνια τὸ βραθυμον, δια δὲ τὰ λαχάνε το ἀνχιθρον. According to this interpretation, the Prophet would express the drowsiness and flaccidity, the slothfulness and want of spirit, of his countrymen: whereas his idea was impotent rage, and obstinate violence, subdued by a superior power; the Jews taken in the snares of their own wickedness, struggling in vain, till, overspent and exhausted, they sink under the weight of God's judgments. And Procopius's explication of the same passage, according to the rendering of the words by Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, which is probably the true one, is almost as foreign to the purpose: "He compares, saith he, the people of Jerusalem to the oryx, that is, to a bird; because they are taken in the snares of the devil, and therefore are delivered over to wrath." Such strange and absurd deductions of notions and ideas, foreign to the author's drift and design, will often arise from the invention of commentators who have nothing but an inaccurate translation to work upon. This was the case of the generality of the Fathers of the Christian Church who wrote comments on the Old Testament: and it is no wonder, that we find them of little service in leading us into the true meaning and the deep sense of the prophetic writings.

It being then a translator's indispensable duty faithfully and religiously to express the sense of his author, he ought to take great care that he proceed upon just principles of criticism, in a rational method of interpretation; and that the copy from which he translates be accurate and perfect in itself, or corrected as carefully as possible by the best authorities, and on the clearest result of critical inquiry.

The method of studying the Scriptures of the Old Testament has been very defective hitherto in both these respects. Beside the difficulties attending it, arising from the nature of the thing itself, from the language in which it is written, and the condition in which it is come down to us through so many ages; what we have of it being the scanty relics of a language formerly copious, and consequently the true meaning of many words and phrases being obscure and dubious, and perhaps incapable of being clearly ascertained; beside these impediments, necessarily inherent in the subject, others have been thrown in the way of our progress in the study of these writings, from prejudice, and an ill-founded opinion of the authority of the Jews, both as interpreters and conservators of them.

The Masoretic punctuation, by which the pronunciation of the language is given, the forms of the several parts of speech, the construction of the words, the distribution and limits of the sentences, and the connexion of the several members are fixed, is in effect an interpretation of the Hebrew text made by the Jews of late ages, probably not earlier than the eighth century; and may be considered as their translation of the Old Testament. Where the words unpointed are capable of various meanings, according as they may be variously pronounced and constructed, the Jews by their pointing have determined them to one meaning and construction; and the sense which they thus give, is their sense of the passage: just as the rendering of a translator into another language is his sense; that is, the sense in which in his opinion the original words are to be taken; and it has no other authority than what arises from its being agreeable to the rules of just interpretation. But because in the languages of Europe the vowels are essential parts of written words, a notion was too hastily taken up by the learned, at the revival of letters, when the original Scriptures began to be more carefully examined, that the vowel points were necessary appendages of the Hebrew letters, and therefore coeval with them; at least, that they became absolutely necessary when the Hebrew was become a dead language, and must have been added by Ezra, who collected and formed the canon of the Old Testament, in regard to all the books of it in his time extant. On this supposition, the points have been considered as part of the Hebrew text, and as giving the meaning of it on no less than divine authority. Accordingly our public translations in the modern tongues for the use of the church among Protestants, and so likewise the modern Latin translations, are for the most part close copies of the Hebrew pointed text, and are in reality only versions at second hand, translations of the Jews' interpretation of the Old Testament. We do not deny the usefulness of this interpretation, nor would we be thought to detract from its merit by setting it in this light: it is perhaps, upon the whole, preferable to any one of the ancient versions; it has probably the great advantage of having been formed upon a traditionary explanation of the text, and of being generally agreeable to that sense of Scripture which passed current, and was commonly received by the Jewish nation in ancient times; and it has certainly been of great service to the moderns, in leading them into the knowledge of the Hebrew tongue. But they would have made a much better use of it, and a greater progress in the explication of the Scriptures of the Old Testament, had they consulted it, without absolutely submitting to its authority; had they considered it as an assistant, not as an infallible guide.

To what a length an opinion lightly taken up, and embraced with a full assent, without due examination, may be carried we may see in another example of much the same kind. The learned of the Church of Rome, who have taken the liberty of giving translations of Scripture in the modern languages, have for the most part subjected and devoted themselves to a prejudice equally groundless and absurd. The Council of Trent declared the Latin translation of the Scriptures called the Vulgate, which had been for many ages in use in their church, to be authentic—a very ambiguous term, which ought to have been more precisely defined than the Fathers of this Council chose to define it. Upon this ground many contended, that the Vulgate version was dictated by the Holy Spirit; at least was providentially guarded against all error; was consequently of divine authority, and more to be regarded than even the original Hebrew and Greek texts. And in effect the decree of the Council, however limited and moderated by the explanation of some of their more judicious divines, has given to the Vulgate such a high degree of authority, that, in this instance at least, the translation has taken place of the original: for these translators, instead of the Hebrew and Greek texts, profess to translate the Vulgate. Indeed, when they find the Vulgate very notoriously deficient in expressing the sense, they do the original Scriptures the honour of consulting them, and take the liberty, by following them, of departing from their authentic guide; but in general the Vulgate is their original text, and they give us a translation of a translation; by which second transfusion of the Holy Scriptures into another tongue, still more of the original sense must be lost, and more of the genuine spirit must evaporate.

The other prejudice, which has stood in the way, and obstructed our progress in the true understanding of the Old Testament—a prejudice even more unreasonable than the former, is the notion that has prevailed of the great care and skill of the Jews in preserving the text, and transmitting it down to the present times pure, and entirely free from all mistakes, as it came from the hands of the authors. In opposition to which opinion it has been often observed, that such a perfect degree of integrity no human skill or care could warrant: it must imply no less than a constant miraculous superintendence of divine Providence, to guide the hand of the copyist, and to guard him from error, in respect to every transcript that has been made through so long a succession of ages. And it is universally acknowledged, that Almighty God has not thought such a miraculous interposition necessary in regard to the Scriptures of the New Testament, at least of equal authority and importance with those of the Old: we plainly see, that he has not exempted them from the common lot of other books; the copies of these, as well as of other ancient writings, differing in some degree from one another, so that no one of them has any just pretension to be a perfect and entire copy, truly and precisely representing in every word and letter the originals, as they came from the hands of the several authors. All writings transmitted to us, like these, from early times, the original copies of which have long ago perished, have suffered in their passage to us by the mistakes of many transcribers through whose hands we have received them; errors continually accumulating in proportion to the number of transcripts, and the stream generally becoming more impure, the more distant it is from the source. Now, the Hebrew writings of the Old Testament being for much the greater part the most ancient of any; instead of finding them absolutely perfect, we may reasonably expect to find, that they have suffered in this respect more than others of less antiquity generally have done.

But beside this common source of errors, there is a circumstance very unfavourable in this respect to these writings in particular, which makes them peculiarly liable to mistakes in transcribing; that is, the great similitude which some letters bear to others in the Hebrew alphabet; such as ב to כ, ד to ה, ו to ז, and י, to one another; more perhaps than are to be found in any other alphabet whatsoever; and in so great a degree of likeness, that they are hardly distinguishable even in some printed copies; and not only these letters, but others likewise beside these, are not easily distinguished from one another in many manuscripts. This must have been a perpetual cause of frequent mistakes; of which, in regard to the two first pairs of letters above noted, there are many undeniable examples; insomuch that a change of one of the similar letters for the other, when it remarkably clears up the sense, may be fairly allowed to criticism, even without any other authority than that of the context to support it.

But to these natural sources of error, as we may call them, the Jewish copyists have added others, by some absurd practices which they have adopted in transcribing:—such as their consulting more the fair appearance of their copy than the correctness of it; by wilfully leaving mistakes uncorrected, lest by erasing they should diminish the beauty and the value of the transcript; (for instance, when they had written a word, or part of a word, wrongly, and immediately saw their mistake, they left the mistake uncorrected, and wrote the word anew after it): their scrupulous regard to the evenness and fulness of their lines; which induced them to cut off from the ends of lines a letter or letters, for which there was not sufficient room, (for they never divided a word so that the parts of it should belong to two lines), and to add to the ends of lines letters wholly insignificant, by way of expletives, to fill up a vacant space: their custom of writing part of a word at the end of a line, where there was not room for the whole, and then giving the whole word at the beginning of the next line. These, and some other like practices, manifestly tended to multiply mistakes: they were so many traps and snares laid in the way of future transcribers, and must have given occasion to frequent errors.

These circumstances considered, it would be the most astonishing of all miracles, if, notwithstanding the acknowledged fallibility of transcribers, and their proneness to error from the nature of the subject itself on which they were employed, the Hebrew writings of the Old Testament had come down to us through their hands absolutely pure, and free from all mistakes whatsoever.

If it be asked, what then is the real condition of the present Hebrew text; and of what sort, and in what number, are the mistakes which we must acknowledge to be found in it? it is answered, That the condition of the Hebrew text is such as, from the nature of the thing, the antiquity of the writings themselves, the want of due care, or critical skill, (in which latter at least the Jews have been exceedingly deficient), might in all reason have been expected; that the mistakes are frequent, and of various kinds; of letters, words, and sentences; by variation, omission, transposition; such as often injure the beauty and elegance, embarrass the construction, alter or obscure the sense, and sometimes render it quite unintelligible. If it be objected, that a concession so large as this is, tends to invalidate the authority of Scripture; that it gives up in effect the certainty and authenticity of the doctrines contained in it, and exposes our religion naked and defenceless to the assaults of its enemies;—this, I think, is a vain and groundless apprehension. Casual errors may blemish parts, but do not destroy, or much alter, the whole. If the Iliad or the Æneid had come down to us with more errors in all the copies than are to be found in the worst manuscript now extant of either, without doubt many particular passages would have lost much of their beauty; in many the sense would have been greatly injured; in some rendered wholly unintelligible; but the plan of the poem in the whole and in its parts, the fable, the mythology, the machinery, the characters, the great constituent parts, would still have been visible and apparent, without having suffered any essential diminution of their greatness. Of all the precious remains of antiquity, perhaps Aristotle's Treatise on Poetry is come down to us as much injured by time as any: As it has been greatly mutilated in the whole, some considerable members of it being lost; so the parts remaining have suffered in proportion, and many passages are rendered very obscure, probably by the imperfection and frequent mistakes of the copies now extant. Yet, notwithstanding these disadvantages, this treatise, so much injured by time and so mutilated, still continues to be the great code of criticism; the fundamental principles of which are plainly deducible from it: we still have recourse to it for the rules and laws of epic and dramatic poetry, and the imperfection of the copy does not at all impeach the authority of the legislator. Important and fundamental doctrines do not wholly depend on single passages; an universal harmony runs through the Holy Scriptures; the parts mutually support each other, and supply one another's deficiencies and obscurities. Superficial damages and partial defects may greatly diminish the beauty of the edifice, without injuring its strength, and bringing on utter ruin and destruction.*

* "Librarium discordiam ostendunt varia exemplaria, in quibus idem locus aliter atque aliter legitur. Sed ea discordia offendere nos non debet; primum, quia autorum non est, sed librarium, quorum culpam prestare autores nec possunt nec debent. Deinde, quia plerumque ejusmodi discordia unius aut alterius verbi est, in quo nihil læditur sententia; aut si quid forte læditur, aliunde corrigi potest; quandoquidem autorum sententiæ non semper ex singulis verbis superstitiosius observandis, sed plerumque ex orationis tenore, aut similibus locorum observatione, aut mentis ratiocinatione sunt investigandæ. Ac tales librarium discordiæ etiam in profanis autoribus inveniuntur; ut in Platone, in Aristotele, in Homero, in Cicerone, in Virgilio, et cæteris. Quamvis enim summo in pretio semper fuerint apud gentiles hi autores, summaque cum diligentia describi soliti, tamen caveri non potuit, quin multa Scripturæ menda et discrepantiæ annorum longitudine obrepserint; nec tamen ea res studiosos deterret; nec facit, ut qui libri Ciceronis habentur, ii aut non boni, aut non Ciceronis esse ducantur: sicut enim detorti aut etiam decussi ramuli agricolam non offendunt, nec arborem vitiant, quippe quæ ramorum infinita multitudine sic abundet, ut tantulam jacturam alibi sine ullo detrimento resarciat; ita si in autore pauculis in locis simile quidpiam usu venit, id nec bonum lectorem offendit, nec autorem vitiat. Manet enim ipsa stirps, et, ut ita loquar, corpus auctoris, ex cujus perpetuo tenore dictorumque ubertate percipi possunt sine ullo detrimento fructus pleni.

Ad scrupulum eorum, qui metuunt, ne, si hoc concessum fuerit, labascatur sacrarum literarum autoritas, hoc respondeo; non esse scriptorum autoritatem in paucis quibusdam verbis, quæ vitari detrahive potuerunt, sed in perpetuo orationis tenore, qui mansit incorruptus, positam. Itaque quemadmodum Cicero apud sui studiosos nihilo minoris est autoritatis propter paucula quædam mutilata aut depravata, quam esset, si id non accidisset; ita debet et sacrarum literarum autoritati nihil detrahi, si quid in eis tale, quale ostendimus, contigit." Sebast. Castellio, quoted by Wetstein, Nov. Test. tom. ii. p. 856.

The copies of the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament being then subject, like all other ancient writings, to mistakes arising from the unskilfulness or inattention of transcribers—a plain matter of fact, which cannot be denied, and needs not be palliated; it is to be considered, what remedy can be applied in this case; how such mistakes can be corrected upon certain or highly probable grounds? Now the case being the same, the method which has been used with good effect in correcting the ancient Greek and Latin authors, ought in all reason to be applied to the Hebrew writings. At the revival of literature, critics and editors, finding the Greek and Latin authors full of mistakes, set about correcting them, by procuring different copies, and the best that they could meet with: these they compared together, and the mistakes not being the same in all, one copy corrected another; and thus they easily got rid of such errors as had not obtained possession in all the copies: and generally the more copies they had to compare, the more errors were corrected, and the more perfect the text was rendered. This, which common sense dictated in the first place as necessary to be done, in order to the removing of difficulties in reading ancient Greek and Latin authors, we have had recourse to in the last place in regard to the ancient Hebrew writers. Hebrew manuscripts have at length been consulted and collated, notwithstanding the unaccountable opinion which prevailed, that they all exactly agreed with one another, and formed precisely one uniform text. An infinite number of variations have been collected, from above six hundred manuscripts, and some ancient printed editions, collated or consulted in most parts of Europe; and have been in part published, and the publication of the whole will I hope soon be completed, by the learned Dr Kennicott, in his edition of the Hebrew Bible with various readings—a work the greatest and most important that has been undertaken and accomplished since the revival of letters.

But the Hebrew text of the Old Testament, compared with the text of ancient Greek and Latin authors, has in one respect greatly the disadvantage. There are manuscripts of the latter, which are much nearer in time to the age of the authors; and have suffered much less in proportion to the shorter space of time intervening. For example, the Medicean manuscript of Virgil was written probably within four or five hundred years after the time of the poet; whereas the oldest of the Hebrew manuscripts now known to be extant, do not come within many centuries of the times of the several authors—not nearer than about fourteen centuries to the age of Ezra, one of the latest of them, who is supposed to have revised the books of the Old Testament then extant, and to have reduced them to a perfect and correct standard : so that we can hardly expect much more from this vast collection of variations, taken in themselves as correctors of the text, exclusively of other consequences, than to be able by their means to discharge and eliminate the errors that have been gathering and accumulating in the copies for about a thousand years past ; and to give us now as good and correct a text as was commonly current among the Jews, or might easily have been obtained, so long ago. Indeed, some of the oldest manuscripts, from which these variations have been collected, may possibly be faithful transcripts of select manuscripts at that time very ancient, and so may really carry us nearer to the age of Ezra ; but this is an advantage which we cannot be assured of, and upon which we must not presume. But to get so far nearer to the source, as we plainly do by the assistance of manuscripts, though of comparatively late date, is an advantage by no means inconsiderable, or lightly to be regarded.

On the other hand, we have a great advantage in regard to the Hebrew text, which the Greek and Latin authors generally want, and which in some degree makes up for the defect of age in the present Hebrew manuscripts ; that is, from the several ancient versions of the Old Testament in different languages, made in much earlier times, and from manuscripts in all probability much more correct and perfect than any now extant. These versions, for the most part, being evidently intended for exact literal renderings of the Hebrew text, may be considered in some respect as representatives of the manuscripts from which they were taken : and when the version gives a sense better in itself, and more agreeable to the context than the Hebrew text offers, and at the same time answerable to a word or words similar to those of the Hebrew text, and only differing from it by the change of one or more similar letters, or by the different position of the same letters, or by some other inconsiderable variation ; we have good reason to believe, that the similar Hebrew words answering to the version, were indeed the very reading that stood in the manuscript from which the translation was made. To add strength to this way of reasoning, it is to be observed, that the manuscripts now extant frequently confirm such supposed reading of those manuscripts from which the ancient versions were taken, in opposition to the authority of the present printed Hebrew text ; and make the collection of variations, now preparing for the public, of the highest importance ; as they give a new evidence of the fidelity of the ancient versions, and set them upon a footing of authority which they never could obtain before. They were looked upon as the work of wild and licentious interpreters, who often departed from the text, which they undertook to render, without any good reason, and only followed their own fancy and caprice. The present Hebrew manuscripts so often justify the versions in such passages, that we cannot but conclude, that in many others likewise the difference of the version from the present original is not to be imputed to the licentiousness of the translator, but to the carelessness of the Hebrew copyist ; and this affords a just and reasonable ground for correcting the Hebrew text on the authority of the ancient versions.

But the assistance of manuscripts and ancient versions united will be found very insufficient perfectly to correct the Hebrew text. Passages will sometimes occur, in which neither the one nor the other give any satisfactory sense ; which has been occasioned probably by very ancient mistakes of the copy, antecedent to the date of the oldest of them. On these occasions, translators are put to great difficulties, through which they force their way as well as they can : they invent new meanings for words and phrases, and put us off either with what makes no sense at all, or with a sense that apparently does not arise out of the words of the text. The renderings of such desperate places, when they carry any sense with them, are manifestly conjectural ; and full as much so, as the conjectures of the critic who hazards an alteration of the text itself. The fairest way of proceeding in these cases seems to be, to confess the difficulty, and to lay it before the reader ; and to leave it to his judgment to decide, whether the conjectural rendering, or the conjectural emendation, be more agreeable to the context, to the exigence of the place, to parallel and similar passages, to the rules and genius of the language, and to the laws of sound and temperate criticism.

The condition of the present text of Isaiah in particular is answerable to the representation above given of the Hebrew text in general. It is, I presume, considerably injured, and stands in need of frequent emendation. Nothing is more apt to affect, and sometimes utterly to destroy, the meaning of a sentence, than the omission of a word ; than which no sort of mistake is more frequent. I reckon, that in the book of Isaiah, the words omitted in different places amount to the number of fifty. I mean whole words, not including particles, prepositions, and pronouns affixed : and I speak of such as I am well persuaded are real omissions ; much the greater part of which, I flatter myself, the reader will find supplied in the Translation and Notes, with a good degree of probability, from manuscripts and ancient versions. Beside these, there are some other places in which I suspect some omission, though there may be no evidence to prove it. If there be any truth in this account of words omitted, the reader will easily suppose, that mistakes of other kinds must be frequent in proportion, and amount all together to a considerable number.

The manuscripts and ancient versions afford the proper means of remedying these and other defects of the present copy. It is manifest, that the ancient interpreters had before them copies of the Hebrew text different in many places from that which passes current at present; and the manuscripts even now extant frequently vary from that, and from one another. Neither is there any one manuscript or edition whatever that has the least pretension to a superior authority, so as to claim to be a standard to which the rest ought to be reduced. A true text, as far as it is possible to recover it, is to be gathered from the manuscripts now extant, and from the evidence furnished by the ancient versions of the readings of manuscripts of much earlier times. This being the case, the first care of the translator should be, especially in places obscure and difficult, to consider whether the words which he is to render be indeed the genuine words of the Prophet, and to ascertain, as far as may be, the true reading of the text.

The ancient versions above mentioned as the principal sources of emendation, and highly useful in rectifying as well as in explaining the Hebrew text, are contained in the London Polyglott.

The Greek version, commonly called the Septuagint, or of the seventy interpreters, probably made by different hands, (the number of them uncertain), and at different times, as the exigence of the Jewish church at Alexandria and in other parts of Egypt required, is of the first authority, and of the greatest use in correcting the Hebrew text; as being the most ancient of all—and as the copy, from which it was translated, appears to have been free from many errors, which afterwards by degrees got into the text. But the version of Isaiah is not so old as that of the Pentateuch by a hundred years and more; having been made, in all probability, after the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the reading of the Prophets in the Jewish synagogues began to be practised; and even after the building of Onias's temple, to favour which there seems to have been some artifice employed in a certain passage of Isaiah* in this version. And it unfortunately happens, that Isaiah has had the hard fate to meet with a translator very unworthy of him, there being hardly any book of the Old Testament so ill rendered in that version as this of Isaiah. Add to this, that the version of * Chap. xix. 18. See the Note there.

Isaiah, as well as other parts of the Greek version, is come down to us in a bad condition, incorrect, and with frequent omissions and interpolations. Yet, with all these disadvantages, with all its faults and imperfections, this version is of more use in correcting the Hebrew text than any other whatsoever.

The Arabic version is sometimes referred to as verifying the reading of the LXX, being, for the most part at least, taken from that version.

The learned Mr Woide, to whom we are indebted for the publication of a Coptic lexicon and grammar, very useful and necessary for the promotion of that part of literature, has very kindly communicated to me his extracts from the fragments of a manuscript of a Coptic version of Isaiah, made from the LXX, with which he has collated them. They are preserved in the Library of St Germain de Prez at Paris. He judges this Coptic version to be of the second century. The manuscript was written in the beginning of the fourteenth century. The same gentleman has had the goodness, at my request, to collate with Bos's edition of the LXX, through the book of Isaiah, two manuscripts of the King's Library, now in the British Museum, the one marked I. B. II. the other I. D. II. The former manuscript, containing the Prophets of the version of the LXX, was written in the eleventh or twelfth century, according to Grabe; (in the tenth or eleventh century, in Mr Woide's opinion); and by a note on the back of the first leaf appears to have belonged to Pachomius, patriarch of Constantinople in the beginning of the sixteenth century. Grabe highly valued this manuscript; and intended to write a dissertation on the superiority of this and of the Alexandrian manuscript to that of the Vatican; but did not live to execute his design. See Prolegom. ad tom. 3tium, LXX Interp. edit. Grabe, sect. iii. and v., and Grabe de Vitiis LXX Interp. p. 118. I quote this manuscript by the title of MS Pachom. for the reason above given.

The latter manuscript I. D. II. above mentioned, contains many of the historical books, beginning with Ruth, and ending with Ezra, according to the order of the books in our English Bible; and also the prophet Isaiah, of the version of the LXX. This manuscript in the book of Isaiah consists of two different parts: the first from the beginning to the word τυφλων, chap. xxxv. 5. written in a more ancient and better character, and upon better vellum; which Mr Woide judges to be of the eleventh or twelfth century: the remaining part he refers to the beginning of the fourteenth century; which Grabe supposes to be the age of the whole: See Grabe de Vitiis LXX Interp. p. 104. This manuscript seems to have been taken from a good copy, as it frequently agrees with the best and most ancient manuscripts, and in particular with the manuscript of Pachomius.

The Coptic fragments above mentioned, and these manuscripts, are useful for the same purpose of authenticating the reading of the LXX; and, in consequence, of ascertaining or correcting the Hebrew text in some places.

My examination of Mr<sup>o</sup>Woide's collation of the two Greek manuscripts of Isaiah, has been confined to this single view in respect of the Hebrew text. Were these manuscripts to be applied more extensively, and to their proper use, that of correcting the text of the LXX, through all the parts of it which they contain, I am persuaded they would be found to be of very great importance, and would contribute largely to the revision and emendation of that ancient and very valuable version;—a work, which may be now considered as one of the principal desiderata of sacred criticism; and which ought to follow that arduous undertaking, which has so happily succeeded, the collation of Hebrew manuscripts; to which it stands next in order of importance and usefulness towards our attaining a more perfect knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

The Chaldee paraphrase of Jonathan Ben Uziel, made about or before the time of our Saviour, though it often wanders from the text in a wordy allegorical explanation, yet very frequently adheres to it closely, and gives a verbal rendering of it; and accordingly is sometimes of great use in ascertaining the true reading of the Hebrew text.

The Syriac version stands next in order of time, but is superior to the Chaldee in usefulness and authority, as well in ascertaining as in explaining the Hebrew text. It is a close translation of the Hebrew into a language of near affinity to it. It is supposed to have been made as early as the first century.

The fragments of the three Greek versions of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, all made in the second century, which are collected in the Hexapla of Montfaucon, are of considerable use for the same purpose.

The Vulgate, being for the most part the translation of Jerome, made in the fourth century, is of service in the same way, in proportion to its antiquity.

I am greatly obliged to several learned friends for their observations on particular passages;—to one great person more especially, whom I had the honour to call my friend, the late excellent Archbishop Secker; whose marginal notes on the Bible, deposited by his order in the library at Lambeth, I had permission to consult by the favour of his most worthy successor. There are two Bibles with his notes: one a folio English Bible interleaved, containing chiefly corrections of the English translation ; the other a Hebrew Bible of the edition of Michaelis, Halle 1720, in 4to. ; the large margins of which are filled with critical remarks on the Hebrew text, collations of the ancient versions, and other short annotations ; which stand an illustrious monument of the learning, judgment, and indefatigable industry of that excellent person : I add also, of his candour and modesty ; for there is hardly a proposed emendation, however ingenious and probable, to which he has not added the objections which occurred to him against it. These valuable remains of that great and good man will be of infinite service, whenever that necessary work, a new translation, or a revision of the present translation, of the Holy Scriptures, for the use of our church, shall be undertaken. To his observations I have set his name ; and to the remarks of others of my learned friends, I have likewise subjoined in the Notes their names respectively. Among these I must here particularly mention the late learned Dr Durell, Principal of Hertford College in Oxford, who some years ago communicated to me his manuscript remarks on the Prophets. With his leave I took short memorandums of some of his corrections of the text ; and had his permission to make what use I pleased of them.

I am in a more particular manner obliged to my learned friend Dr Kennicott, for his singular favour in frequently communicating to me his collations while they were collecting, and the printed copy of the book of Isaiah itself as soon as it was finished at the press, for my private use, while the remainder of the volume is in hand and preparing for the public. These I have examined with some attention ; and I hope the reader, whose expectations do not exceed the bounds of reason and moderation, will be satisfied with the assistance and benefit which he will find they have afforded me. But I must beg to have it well understood, that I do by no means pretend to have exhausted these valuable stores : many things may have escaped me, which may strike the eye of another observer ; many a variation, which appears at first sight very minute and trifling, and manifestly false and absurd, may by some side-light tend to useful discoveries. To apply these materials to all the uses which can possibly be made of them, will require much labour and consideration, much judgment and sagacity, and repeated trials by a variety of examiners, to whose different views they may shew themselves in every possible light. Some critics may be very forward and hasty in pronouncing their judgments ; but it must be left to time and experience to establish their real and full value.

In regard to the character and authority of the several manuscripts which have been collated, and which in the Notes are referred to, we must wait for the information which Dr Kennicott will give us in his General Dissertation. The knowledge of Hebrew manuscripts is almost a new subject in literature: little progress has been made in it hitherto; and no wonder, when they were esteemed uniformly consonant one with another, and with the printed text; consequently useless, and not worth the trouble of examining. Dr Kennicott, and his worthy and very able assistant Mr Bruns, who have been more conversant with Hebrew manuscripts, and have had more experience, and more insight, into the subject, than any, or than all, of the learned of the present age, will give us the best information concerning it that can yet be obtained. It must be left to the attentive observation and mature experience of the learned of succeeding times, to perfect a part of knowledge which, like others, must in its nature wait the result of diligent inquiry, and be carried on by gradual improvements.

In referring to Dr Kennicott's Variations, I have given the whole number of manuscripts or editions which concur in any particular reading: what proportion that number bears to the whole number of collated copies which contain the book of Isaiah, may, I hope, soon be seen by comparing it with the catalogue of copies collated, which will be given at the end of that book. But that the reader in the meantime, till he can have more full information concerning the value and authority of the several manuscripts, may at least have some mark to direct his judgment in estimating the credit due to the manuscripts quoted, I have, from the kind communication of Dr Kennicott concerning the dates of the manuscripts, whether certain or probable, given some general intimation of their value in this respect: for though antiquity is no certain mark of the goodness of a manuscript, yet it is one circumstance that gives it no small weight and authority, especially in this case; the Hebrew manuscripts being in general more pure and valuable in proportion to their antiquity; those of later date having been more studiously rendered conformable to the Masoretic standard.* Among the manuscripts which have been collated, I consider those of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth centuries, as ancient, comparatively and in respect of the rest. Therefore, in quoting a number of manuscripts, where the variation is of some importance, I have added, that so many of that number are ancient, that is, are of the centuries above mentioned.

I have ventured to call this a New Translation, though much of our vulgar translation is retained in it. As the style of that translation is not only excellent in itself, but has taken possession of our ear, and of our taste, to have endeavoured to vary from it with no other design than that of giving something new instead of it, would have been to disgust the reader, and to represent the sense of the Prophet in a more unfavourable manner ; besides that it is impossible for a verbal translator to follow an approved verbal translation which has gone before him, without frequently treading in the very footsteps of it. The most obvious, the properest, and perhaps the only terms which the language affords, are already occupied ; and without going out of his way to find worse, he cannot avoid them. Every translator has taken this liberty with his predecessors : it is no more than the laws of translation admit, nor indeed than the necessity of the case requires. And as to the turn and modification of the sentences, the translator, in this particular province of translation, is, I think, as much confined to the author's manner as to his words : so that too great liberties taken in varying either the expression or the composition, in order to give a new air to the whole, will be apt to have a very bad effect. For these reasons, whenever it shall be thought proper to set forth the Holy Scriptures, for the public use of our church, to better advantage than as they appear in the present English translation, the expediency of which grows every day more and more evident, a revision or correction of that translation may perhaps be more advisable, than to attempt an entirely new one : For as to the style and language, it admits but of little improvement ; but in respect of the sense and the accuracy of interpretation, the improvements of which it is capable are great and numberless.

The Translation here offered will perhaps be found to be in general as close to the text, and as literal, as our English version. When it departs at all from the Hebrew text on account of some correction which I suppose to be requisite, I give notice to the reader of such correction, and offer my reasons for it : if those reasons should sometimes appear insufficient, and the translation to be merely conjectural, I desire the reader to consider the exigence of the case, and to judge, whether it is not better, in a very obscure and doubtful passage, to give something probable by way of supplement to the author's sense, apparently defective, than either to leave a blank in the translation, or to give a merely verbal rendering, which would be altogether unintelligible. I believe that every translator whatever of any part of the Old Testament, has taken sometimes the liberty, or rather has found himself under the necessity, of offering such renderings as, if examined, will be found to be merely conjectural. But I desire to be understood as offering this apology in behalf only of translations designed for the private use of the reader ; not as extended, without proper limitations, to those that are made for the public service of the church.

The design of the Notes is to give the reasons and authorities on which the Translation is founded ; to rectify or to explain the words of the text ; to illustrate the ideas, the images, and the allusions of the Prophet, by referring to objects, notions, and customs, which peculiarly belong to his age and his country ; and to point out the beauties of particular passages. I sometimes indeed endeavour to open the design of the prophecy, to shew the connexion between its parts, and to point out the event which it foretells ; but in general I must entreat the reader to be satisfied with my endeavours faithfully to express the literal sense, which is all that I undertake. If he would go deeper into the mystical sense, into theological, historical, and chronological disquisitions, there are many learned expositors to whom he may have recourse, who have written full commentaries on this Prophet ; to which title the present work has no pretensions. The sublime and spiritual uses to be made of this peculiarly evangelical Prophet, must, as I have observed, be all founded on a faithful representation of the literal sense which his words contain. This is what I have endeavoured closely and exactly to express. And within the limits of this humble, but necessary province, my endeavours must be confined. To proceed further, or even to execute this in the manner I could wish, were it within my abilities, yet would hardly be consistent with my present engagements ; which oblige me to offer rather prematurely to the public, what further time, with more leisure, might perhaps enable me to render more worthy of their attention.

CHAP. 1     THE VISION OF ISAIAH THE SON OF AMOTS, WHICH
1.     HE SAW CONCERNING JUDAH AND JERUSALEM; IN THE DAYS OF UZZIAH, JOTHAM, AHAZ, HEZEKIAH, KINGS OF JUDAH.

- 2     HEAR, O ye heavens; and give ear, O earth !
For it is JEHOVAH that speaketh.
I have nourished children, and brought them up ;
And even they have revolted from me.
- 3 The ox knoweth his possessor ;
And the ass the crib of his lord :
But Israel knoweth not Me ;
Neither doth my people consider.
- 4 Ab, sinful nation ! a people laden with iniquity !
A race of evil doers ! children degenerate !
They have forsaken JEHOVAH ;
They have rejected with disdain the Holy One of Israel ;
They are estranged from him ; they have turned their back upon him.
- 5 On what part will ye smite again, will ye add correction ?
The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint :
- 6 From the sole of the foot even to the head, there is no soundness therein ;
It is wound, and bruise, and putrefying sore :

- It hath not been pressed, neither hath it been bound ;
Neither hath it been softened with ointment.
- 7 Your country is desolate, your cities are burnt with fire ;
Your land, before your eyes strangers devour it ;
And it is become desolate, as if destroyed by an inundation.
- 8 And the daughter of Sion is left, as a shed in a vineyard ;
As a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a city taken by siege.
- 9 Had not JEHOVAH God of Hosts left us a remnant,
We had soon become as Sodom ; we had been like unto Gomorrah.
- 10 Hear ye the word of JEHOVAH, O ye princes of Sodom !
Give ear to the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah !
- 11 What have I to do with the multitude of your sacrifices ?
saith JEHOVAH :
I am cloyed with the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts ;
And in the blood of bullocks, and of lambs, and of goats,
I have no delight.
- 12 When ye come to appear before me,
Who hath required this at your hands ?
- 13 Tread my courts no more ; bring no more a vain oblation :
Incense ! it is an abomination unto me.
The new moon, and the sabbath, and the assembly proclaimed,
I cannot endure ; the fast, and the day of restraint.
- 14 Your months, and your solemnities, my soul hateth :
They are a burden upon me ; I am weary of bearing them.
- 15 When ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you ;
Even when ye multiply prayer, I will not hear ;
For your hands are full of blood.
- 16 Wash ye, make ye clean ; remove ye far away
The evil of your doings from before mine eyes :
- 17 Cease to do evil ; learn to do well ;
Seek judgment ; amend that which is corrupted ;
Do justice to the fatherless ; defend the cause of the widow.

18 Come on now, and let us plead together, saith JEHOVAH :

Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow ;

Though they be red as crimson, they shall be like wool.

19 If ye shall be willing and obedient,
Ye shall feed on the good of the land ;

20 But if ye refuse, and be rebellious,
Ye shall be food for the sword of the enemy :
For the mouth of JEHOVAH hath pronounced it.

21 How is the faithful city become a harlot !
She that was full of judgment, righteousness dwelled in her ;

But now murderers !

22 Thy silver is become dross ; thy wine is mixed with water.

23 Thy princes are rebellious, associates of robbers ;
Every one of them loveth a gift, and seeketh rewards :
To the fatherless they administer not justice ;
And the cause of the widow cometh not before them.

24 Wherefore saith the Lord JEHOVAH God of Hosts, the mighty One of Israel :

Aha ! I will be eased of mine adversaries :

I will be avenged of mine enemies.

25 And I will bring again mine hand over thee ;
And I will purge in the furnace thy dross ;
And I will remove all thine alloy :

26 And I will restore thy judges, as at the first ;
And thy counsellors, as at the beginning :
And after this thy name shall be called,
The city of righteousness, the faithful metropolis.

27 Sion shall be redeemed in judgment,
And her captives in righteousness :

28 But destruction shall fall at once on the revolvers and the sinners ;

And they that forsake JEHOVAH shall be consumed.

29 For ye shall be ashamed of the ilexes, which ye have desired ;

And ye shall blush for the gardens, which ye have chosen :

- 30 When ye shall be as an ilex, whose leaves are blasted ;
And as a garden, wherein is no water.
31 And the strong shall become tow, and his work a spark of fire ;
And they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them.

CHAP. I. THE WORD WHICH WAS REVEALED TO ISAIAH, THE
II. SON OF AMOTS, CONCERNING JUDAH AND JERUSALEM.

- 2 IT shall come to pass in the latter days ;
The mountain of the house of JEHOVAH shall be established on the top of the mountains ;
And it shall be exalted above the hills :
And all nations shall flow unto it.
3 And many peoples shall go, and shall say,
Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of JEHO-VAH ;
To the house of the God of Jacob :
And he will teach us of his ways ;
And we will walk in his paths :
For from Sion shall go forth the law ;
4 And the word of JEHOVAH from Jerusalem.
And he shall judge among the nations ;
And shall work conviction in many peoples :
And they shall beat their swords into ploughshares,
And their spears into pruning-hooks :
Nation shall not lift up sword against nation ;
Neither shall they learn war any more.
5 O house of Jacob, come ye,
And let us walk in the light of JEHOVAH !
6 Verily thou hast abandoned thy people, the house of Jacob :
Because they are filled with diviners from the east ;
And with soothsayers like the Philistines ;
And they multiply a spurious brood of strange children.
7 And his land is filled with silver and gold ;
And there is no end to his treasures :
And his land is filled with horses ;
Neither is there any end to his chariots.

- 8 And his land is filled with idols ;
He boweth himself down to the work of his hands ;
To that which his fingers have made :
- 9 Therefore shall the mean man be bowed down, and the mighty man shall be humbled ;
And thou wilt not forgive them.
- 10 Go into the rock, and hide thyself in the dust ;
From the fear of JEHOVAH, and from the glory of his majesty,
When he ariseth to strike the earth with terror.
- 11 The lofty eyes of men shall be humbled ;
The highth of mortals shall bow down ;
And JEHOVAH alone shall be exalted in that day.
- 12 For the day of JEHOVAH God of Hosts is against every thing great and lofty ;
And against every thing that is exalted, and it shall be humbled :
- 13 Even against all the cedars of Lebanon, the high and the exalted ;
And against all the oaks of Basan :
- 14 And against all the mountains, the high ones ;
And against all the hills, the exalted ones ;
- 15 And against every tower, high-raised ;
And against every mound, strongly fortified :
- 16 And against all the ships of Tarshish ;
And against every lovely work of art.
- 17 And the pride of man shall bow down ;
And the highth of mortals shall be humbled ;
And JEHOVAH alone shall be exalted in that day :
- 18 And the idols shall totally disappear :
- 19 And they shall go into caverns of rocks, and into holes of the dust ;
From the fear of JEHOVAH, and from the glory of his majesty,
When he ariseth to strike the earth with terror.
- 20 In that day shall a man cast away his idols of silver,
And his idols of gold, which they have made to worship,
To the moles and to the bats ;
- 21 To go into caves of the rocks, and into clefts of the craggy rocks :

From the fear of JEHOVAH, and from the glory of his majesty,
When he ariseth to strike the earth with terror.

22 Trust ye no more in man, whose breath is in his nostrils;

For of what account is he to be made?

CHAP. 1 For behold the Lord JEHOVAH God of Hosts
III. Removeth from Jerusalem, and from Judah,

Every stay and support :

The whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water ;

2 The mighty man, and the warrior ;

The judge, and the prophet, and the diviner, and the sage :

3 The ruler of fifty, and the honourable person ;

And the counsellor, and the skilful artist, and the powerful in persuasion.

4 And I will make boys their princes ;

And infants shall rule over them.

5 And the people shall be oppressed, one man by another :

And every man shall behave insolently towards his neighbour ;

The boy towards the old man, and the base towards the honourable.

6 Therefore shall a man take his brother, of his father's house, by the garment ;

Saying, Come, and be thou ruler over us ;

And let thine hand support our ruinous state.

7 Then shall he openly declare, saying,

I will not be the healer of your breaches ;

For in my house is neither bread, nor raiment :

Appoint not me ruler of the people.

8 For Jerusalem tottereth, and Judah falleth ;

Because their tongues, and their hands, are against JE-HOVAH ;

To provoke by their disobedience the cloud of his glory.

9 The stedfastness of their countenance witnesseth against them ;

For their sin, like Sodom, they publish, they hide it not :

Wo to their souls ! for upon themselves have they brought down evil.

- 10 Pronounce ye a blessing on the just: verily, good [shall be to him];
For the fruit of his deeds shall he eat.
- 11 Wo to the wicked: evil [shall be his portion];
For the work of his hands shall be repaid unto him.
- 12 As for my people, children are their oppressors;
And women bear rule over them.
O my people, thy leaders cause thee to err;
And pervert the way of thy paths.
- 13 JEHOVAH ariseth to plead his cause;
He standeth up to contend with his people.
- 14 JEHOVAH will meet in judgment
The elders of his people, and their princes:
As for you, ye have consumed my vineyard;
The plunder of the poor is in your houses.
- 15 What mean ye, that ye crush my people;
And grind the faces of the poor?
Saith JEHOVAH, the Lord of Hosts.
- 16 Moreover JEHOVAH hath said:
Because the daughters of Sion are haughty;
And walk displaying the neck,
And falsely setting off their eyes with paint;
Mincing their steps as they go,
And with their feet lightly tripping along:
- 17 Therefore will the Lord humble the head of the daughters of Sion;
And JEHOVAH will expose their nakedness.
- 18 In that day will the Lord take from them the ornaments
Of the feet-rings, and the net-works, and the crescents;
- 19 The pendants, and the bracelets, and the thin veils;
- 20 The tires, and the fetters, and the zones,
And the perfume-boxes, and the amulets;
- 21 The rings, and the jewels of the nostril;
- 22 The embroidered robes, and the tunics;
And the cloaks, and the little purses;
- 23 The transparent garments, and the fine linen vests;
And the turbans, and the mantles:
- 24 And there shall be, instead of perfume, a putrid ulcer;
And, instead of well-girt raiment, rags;
And, instead of high-dressed hair, baldness:

And, instead of a zone, a girdle of sackcloth :
A sun-burnt skin, instead of beauty.

25 Thy people shall fall by the sword ;
And thy mighty men in the battle.

26 And her doors shall lament and mourn ;
And desolate shall she sit on the ground.

CHAP. IV. 1 And seven women shall lay hold on one man in that day, saying :

Our own bread will we eat,
And with our own garments will we be clothed ;
Only let us be called by thy name ;
Take away our reproach.

2 In that day shall the branch of JEHOVAH
Become glorious and honourable ;
And the produce of the land excellent and beautiful,
For the escaped of the house of Israel.
3 And it shall come to pass, whosoever is left in Sion,
And remaineth in Jerusalem,
Holy shall he be called ;
Every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem.

4 When the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Sion ;
And the blood of Jerusalem shall have removed from the midst of her,

By a spirit of judgment, and by a spirit of burning :

5 Then shall JEHOVAH create upon the station of Mount
Sion,

And upon all her holy assemblies,

A cloud by day, and smoke ;

And the brightness of a flaming fire by night :

Yea, over all shall the Glory be a covering.

6 And a tabernacle it shall be, for shade by day from the heat ;

And for a covert, and a refuge, from storm and rain.

CHAP. V. 1 LET me sing now a song to my Beloved ;

A song of loves concerning his vineyard.

My Beloved had a vineyard,

On a high and fruitful hill :

2 And he fenced it round, and he cleared it from the stones,

- And he planted it with the vine of Sorek ;
And he built a tower in the midst of it,
And he hewed out also a lake therein :
And he expected, that it should bring forth grapes,
But it brought forth poisonous berries.
- 3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and ye men of Judah,
Judge, I pray you, between me and my vineyard :
4 What could have been done more to my vineyard,
Than I have done unto it ?
Why, when I expected that it should bring forth grapes,
Brought it forth poisonous berries ?
- 5 But come now, and I will make known unto you,
What I purpose to do to my vineyard :
To remove its hedge, and it shall be devoured ;
To destroy its fence, and it shall be trodden down.
- 6 And I will make it a desolation ;
It shall not be pruned, neither shall it be digged ;
But the brier and the thorn shall spring up in it ;
And I will command the clouds,
That they shed no rain upon it.
- 7 Verily, the vineyard of JEHOVAH God of Hosts is the house of Israel ;
And the men of Judah the plant of his delight :
And he looked for judgment, but behold tyranny ;
And for righteousness, but behold the cry of the oppressed.
- 8 Wo unto you, who join house to house ;
Who lay field unto field together ;
Until there be no place, and ye have your dwelling Alone to yourselves, in the midst of the land.
- 9 To mine ear hath JEHOVAH God of Hosts revealed it :
Surely many houses shall become a desolation ;
The great and the fair ones, without an inhabitant.
- 10 Yea, ten acres of vineyard shall yield a single bath of wine,
And a chomer of seed shall produce an ephah.
- 11 Wo unto them who rise early in the morning, to follow strong drink ;
Who sit late in the evening, that wine may inflame them :

- 12 And the lyre, and the harp, the tabor, and the pipe,
And wine, are their entertainments :
But the work of JEHOVAH they regard not ;
And the operation of his hands they do not perceive.
- 13 Therefore my people goeth into captivity for want of knowledge ;
And their nobles have died with hunger ;
And their plebeians are parched up with thirst.
- 14 Therefore Hades hath enlarged his appetite ;
And hath stretched open his mouth without measure :
And down go her nobility, and her populace ;
And her busy throng, and all that exult in her.
- 15 And the mean man shall be bowed down, and the great man shall be brought low ;
And the eyes of the haughty shall be humbled :
- 16 And JEHOVAH God of Hosts shall be exalted in judgment ;
And God the Holy One shall be sanctified by displaying his righteousness.
- 17 Then shall the sheep feed without restraint ;
And the kids shall depasture the desolate fields of the luxurious.
- 18 Wo unto them who draw out iniquity as a long cable ;
And sin, as the thick traces of a wain :
- 19 Who say, Let him make speed then, let him hasten
His work, that we may see it ;
And let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel
Draw near, and come to pass, that we may know it.
- 20 Wo unto them who call evil good, and good evil ;
Who put darkness for light, and light for darkness ;
Who put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter.
- 21 Wo unto them, who are wise in their own eyes,
And prudent in their own conceit.
- 22 Wo unto them, who are powerful to drink wine ;
And men of might to mingle strong drink :
- 23 Who justify the guilty for reward,
And take away the righteousness of the righteous from him.
- 24 Therefore, as the tongue of fire licketh up the stubble,
And as the flame dissolveth the chaff ;
So shall their root become like touchwood,
And their blossom shall go up like the dust :

- Because they have despised the law of JEHOVAH God of Hosts;
And scornfully rejected the word of the Holy One of Israel.
- 25 Wherefore the anger of JEHOVAH is kindled against his people;
And he hath stretched out his hand against them:
And he smote them; and the mountains trembled;
And their carcasses became as the dung in the midst of the streets.
For all this his anger is not turned away;
But still is his hand stretched out.
- 26 And he will erect a standard for the nations afar off;
And he will hie every one of them from the ends of the earth;
And behold, with speed swiftly shall they come.
- 27 None among them is faint, and none stumbleth:
None shall slumber, nor sleep:
Nor shall the girdle of their loins be loosed;
Nor shall the latchet of their shoes be unbound.
- 28 Whose arrows are sharpened;
And all their bows are bent:
The hoofs of their horses shall be counted as adamant;
And their wheels as a whirlwind.
- 29 Their growling is like the growling of the lioness;
Like the young lions shall they growl:
They shall roar, and shall seize the prey;
And they shall bear it away, and none shall rescue it.
- 30 In that day shall they roar against them, like the roaring of the sea;
And these shall look to the heaven upward, and down to the earth;
And lo! darkness, distress!
And the light is obscured by the gloomy vapour.

- CHAP. VI. 1 IN the year in which Uzziah the king died, I saw JEHOVAH sitting on a throne high and lofty; and the 2 train of his robe filled the temple. Above him stood seraphim: each one of them had six wings: with two of them he covereth his face, with two of them he covereth 3 his feet, and two of them he useth in flying. And they cried alternately, and said:

Holy, holy, holy, JEHOVAH God of Hosts !

The whole earth is filled with his glory.

- 4 And the pillars of the vestibule were shaken with the voice of their cry ; and the temple was filled with smoke.
 5 And I said, Alas for me ! I am struck dumb : for I am a man of polluted lips ; and in the midst of a people of polluted lips do I dwell : for mine eyes have seen the 6 King, JEHOVAH God of Hosts. And one of the seraphim came flying unto me ; and in his hand was a burning coal, which he had taken with the tongs from off the 7 altar. And he touched my mouth, and said :—

Lo ! this hath touched thy lips :

Thine iniquity is removed, and thy sin is expiated.

- 8 And I heard the voice of JEHOVAH, saying : Whom shall I send ; and who will go for us ? And I said : Behold, 9 here am I ; send me. And he said :—

Go, and say thou to this people :

Hear ye indeed, but understand not ;

See ye indeed, but perceive not :

- 10 Make gross the heart of this people ;
 Make their ears dull, and close up their eyes ;
 Lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears,
 And understand with their hearts, and be converted ;
 and I should heal them.

- 11 And I said : How long, O JEHOVAH ? And he said :—
 Until cities be laid waste, so that there be no inhabitant ;

And houses, so that there be no man :

And the land be left utterly desolate.

- 12 Until JEHOVAH remove man far away ;
 And there be many a deserted woman in the midst of the land.

- 13 And though there be a tenth part remaining in it,
 Even this shall undergo repeated destruction ;
 Yet, as the ilex, and the oak, though cut down, hath its stock remaining,
 A holy seed shall be the stock of the nation.

CHAP. VII. 1 In the days of Ahaz, the son of Jotham, the son of Uzziah king of Judah, Retzin king of Syria, and Pekah, the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, came up against Jerusalem, to besiege it ; but they could not overcome

- 2 it.—And when it was told to the house of David, that Syria was supported by Ephraim; the heart of the king, and the heart of his people, was moved; as the trees of the forest are moved before the wind.
- 3 And JEHOVAH said to Isaiah: Go out now to meet Ahaz; thou and Shearjashub thy son; at the end of the aqueduct of the upper pool, at the causeway of the fuller's field. And thou shalt say unto him:—
- 4 Take heed, and be still; fear not, neither let thy heart be faint,
Because of the two tails of these smoking firebrands;
For the fierce wrath of Retsin, and of the son of Remaliah:
- 5 Because Syria hath devised evil against thee;
Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, saying:
- 6 Let us go up against Judah, and harass it;
And let us rend off a part of it for ourselves;
And let us set a king to reign in the midst of it,
Even the son of Tabeal.
- 7 Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH:
It shall not stand, neither shall it be;
- 8 Though the head of Syria be Damascus,
And the head of Damascus, Retsin:
Yet within threescore and five years
Ephraim shall be broken, that he be no more a people;
- 9 Though the head of Ephraim be Samaria,
And the head of Samaria, Remaliah's son.
If ye believe not in me, ye shall not be established.
- 10 And JEHOVAH spake yet again to Ahaz, saying:
- 11 Ask thee a sign from JEHOVAH thy God;
Go deep to the grave, or high to the heaven above.
- 12 And Ahaz said: I will not ask; neither will I tempt
- 13 JEHOVAH. And he said:
Hear ye now, O house of David!
Is it a small thing for you to weary men,
That you should weary my God also?
- 14 Therefore JEHOVAH himself shall give you a sign:
Behold, the Virgin conceiveth, and beareth a son;
And she shall call his name Immanuel.
- 15 Butter and honey shall he eat,
When he shall know to refuse what is evil, and to choose what is good:

- 16 For before this child shall know
To refuse the evil, and to choose the good ;
The land shall become desolate,
By whose two kings thou art distressed.
- 17 But JEHOVAH shall bring upon thee,
And upon thy people, and upon thy father's house,
Days, such as have not come,
From the day that Ephraim departed from Judah.
- 18 And it shall come to pass in that day ;
JEHOVAH shall hie the fly,
That is in the utmost part of the rivers of Egypt ;
And the bee, that is in the land of Assyria :
- 19 And they shall come, and they shall light all of them
On the desolate vallies, and on the craggy rocks,
And on the thickets, and on all the caverns.
- 20 In that day, JEHOVAH shall shave by the hired razor,
By the people beyond the river, by the king of Assyria,
The head and the hair of the feet ;
And even the beard itself shall be destroyed.
- 21 And it shall come to pass in that day,
That if a man shall feed a young cow, and two sheep :
- 22 From the plenty of milk, which they shall produce,
he shall eat butter :
Even butter and honey shall he eat,
Whosoever is left in the midst of the land.
- 23 And every vineyard, that hath a thousand vines,
Valued at a thousand pieces of silver,
Shall become in that day briers and thorns.
- 24 With arrows and with the bow shall they come thither ;
For the whole land shall become briers and thorns.
- 25 And all the hills, which were dressed with the mattock,
Where the fear of briers and thorns never came,
Shall be for the range of the ox, and for the treading of sheep.

CHAP.
VIII.

AND JEHOVAH said unto me : Take unto thee a large mirror, and write on it with a workman's graving tool, To hasten the spoil, to take quickly the prey. And I called unto me for a testimony faithful witnesses ; Uriah the priest, and Zachariah the son of Jeberechiah.

- 3 And I approached unto the prophetess; and she conceived, and bare a son. And JEHOVAH said unto me: Call his name Maher-shalal hash-baz:
- 4 For before the child shall know
To pronounce My father and My mother,
The riches of Damascus shall be borne away,
And the spoil of Samaria, before the king of Assyria.
- 5 Yet again JEHOVAH spake unto me, saying:
- 6 Because this people hath rejected
The waters of Siloah, which flow gently;
And rejoiceth in Retsin, and the son of Remaliah:
- 7 Therefore behold the Lord bringeth up upon them
The waters of the river, the strong and the mighty:
Even the king of Assyria, and all his force.
And he shall rise above all their channels,
And shall go over all their banks,
- 8 And he shall pass through Judah, overflowing and spreading,
Even to the neck shall he reach:
And the extension of his wings shall be
Over the full breadth of thy land, O Immanuel!
- 9 Know ye this, O ye peoples, and be struck with consternation;
And give ear to it, all ye of distant lands:
Gird yourselves, and be dismayed; gird yourselves,
and be dismayed.
- 10 Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought;
Speak the word, and it shall not stand:
For God is with us.
- 11 For thus said JEHOVAH unto me;
As taking me by the hand he instructed me,
That I should not walk in the way of this people,
saying:
- 12 Say ye not, It is holy,
Of every thing of which this people shall say, It is holy:
And fear ye not the object of their fear, neither be ye terrified.
- 13 JEHOVAH, God of Hosts, sanctify ye him;
And let him be your fear, and let him be your dread:
- 14 And he shall be unto you a sanctuary;
But a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence,
To the two houses of Israel;

A trap, and a snare, to the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

- 15 And many among them shall stumble,
And shall fall, and be broken; and shall be ensnared, and caught.

- 16 Bind up the testimony, seal the command, among my disciples.

- 17 I will therefore wait for JEHOVAH, who hideth his face

From the house of Jacob; yet will I look for him.

- 18 Behold, I, and the children
Whom JEHOVAH hath given unto me;
For signs and for wonders in Israel,
From JEHOVAH God of Hosts,
Who dwelleth in the mountain of Sion.

- 19 And when they shall say unto you:
Seek unto the necromancers and the wizards;
To them that speak inwardly, and that mutter:
Should not a people seek unto their God?
Should they seek, instead of the living, unto the dead?

- 20 Unto the command, and unto the testimony, let them seek:

If they will not speak according to this word,
In which there is no obscurity;

- 21 Every one of them shall pass through the land distressed and famished:

And when he shall be famished, and angry with himself,
He shall curse his king and his God,

- 22 And he shall cast his eyes upwards, and look down to the earth:

And lo! distress and darkness!

Gloom, tribulation, and accumulated darkness!

- 23 But there shall not hereafter be darkness in the land which was distressed:

In the former time he debased

The land of Zebulon, and the land of Naphthali;

But in the latter time he hath made it glorious:

Even the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the nations.

- CHAP. IX. 1 The people, that walked in darkness,

Have seen a great light;

They that dwelled in the land of the shadow of death,

Unto them hath the light shined.

- 2 Thou hast multiplied the nation, thou hast increased their joy :
They rejoice before thee, as with the joy of harvest ;
As they rejoice, who divide the spoil.
- 3 For the yoke of his burden, the staff laid on his shoulder,
The rod of his oppressor, hast thou broken, as in the day of Midian.
- 4 For the greaves of the armed warrior in the conflict,
And the garment rolled in much blood,
Shall be for a burning, even fuel for the fire.
- 5 For unto us a Child is born ; unto us a Son is given ;
And the government shall be upon his shoulder :
And his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor,
The mighty God, the Father of the everlasting age, the Prince of peace.
- 6 Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end ;
Upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom ;
To fix it, and to establish it
With judgment and with justice, henceforth and for ever :
The zeal of JEHOVAH God of Hosts will do this.
- 7 JEHOVAH hath sent a word against Jacob ;
And it hath lighted upon Israel.
- 8 Because the people all of them carry themselves
haughtily ;
Ephraim, and the inhabitant of Samaria ;
In pride and arrogance of heart, saying :
- 9 The bricks are fallen, but we will build with hewn stone ;
The sycamores are cut down, but we will replace them with cedars :
- 10 Therefore will JEHOVAH excite the princes of Retsin against him ;
And raise up his enemies together :
- 11 The Syrians from the east, and the Philistines from the west ;
And they shall devour Israel on every side.
For all this his anger is not turned away ;
But his hand is still stretched out.

- 12 Yet this people have not turned unto him that smote them ;
And JEHOVAH God of Hosts they have not sought.
- 13 Therefore shall JEHOVAH cut off from Israel the head and the tail ;
The branch and the rush, in one day :
- 14 The aged and the honourable person, he is the head ;
And the prophet that teacheth falsehood, he is the tail.
- 15 For the leaders of this people lead them astray ;
And they that are led by them shall be devoured.
- 16 Wherefore JEHOVAH shall not rejoice over their young men ;
And on their orphans, and their widows, he shall have no compassion.
For every one of them is a hypocrite and an evil-doer ;
And every mouth speaketh folly.
For all this his anger is not turned away ;
But his hand is still stretched out.
- 17 For wickedness burneth like a fire ;
The brier and the bramble it shall consume :
And it shall kindle the thicket of the wood ;
And they shall mount up in volumes of rising smoke.
- 18 Through the wrath of JEHOVAH God of Hosts is the land darkened ;
And the people shall be as fuel for the fire :
A man shall not spare his brother.
- 19 But he shall snatch on the right, and yet be hungry ;
And he shall devour on the left, and not be satisfied :
Every man shall devour the flesh of his neighbour.
- 20 Manasseh shall devour Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasseh ;
And both of them shall be united against Judah.
For all this his anger is not turned away ;
But his hand is still stretched out.

- CHAP. X. 1 Wo unto them, that decree unrighteous decrees ;
Unto the scribes, that prescribe oppression :
2 To turn aside the needy from judgment ;
To rob of their right the poor of my people :
That the widows may become their prey ;
And that they may plunder the orphans.

- 3 And what will ye do in the day of visitation ?
And in the desolation, which shall come from afar ?
To whom will ye flee for succour ?
And where will ye deposit your wealth ?
- 4 Without me, they shall bow down under the bounden,
And under the slain shall they fall.
For all this his anger is not turned away ;
But his hand is still stretched out.
- 5 Ho ! to the Assyrian, the rod of mine anger,
The staff in whose hand is the instrument of mine indignation !
- 6 Against a dissembling nation will I send him ;
And against a people the object of my wrath will I give him a charge :
To gather the spoil, and to bear away the prey ;
And to trample them under foot like the mire of the streets.
- 7 But he doth not so purpose ;
And his heart doth not so intend :
But to destroy is in his heart ;
And to cut off nations not a few.
- 8 For he saith, Are not my princes altogether kings ?
- 9 Is not Calno as Carchemish ?
Is not Hamath as Arphad ?
Is not Samaria as Damascus ?
- 10 As my hand hath seized the kingdoms of the idols,
Whose graven images were superior to those of Samaria and Jerusalem ;
- 11 As I have done unto Samaria and her idols, Shall I not likewise do unto Jerusalem, and her images ?
- 12 But it shall be, when JEHOVAH hath accomplished his whole work Upon Mount Sion, and upon Jerusalem ;
I will punish the effect of the proud heart of the king of Assyria ;
And the triumphant look of his haughty eyes.
- 13 For he hath said, By the strength of my hand have I done it ;
And by my wisdom ; for I am endowed with prudence.
I have removed the bounds of the peoples ;

And I have plundered their hoarded treasures ;
And I have brought down those, that were strongly seated.

- 14 And my hand hath found, as a nest, the riches of the peoples ;

And as one gathereth eggs deserted,
So have I made a general gathering of the earth :
And there was no one that moved the wing ;
That opened the beak, or that chirped.

- 15 Shall the axe boast itself against him, that heweth therewith ?

Shall the saw magnify itself against him, that moveth it ?
As if the rod should wield him, that lifteth it ;
As if the staff should lift up its master.

- 16 Wherefore JEHOVAH the Lord of Hosts shall send Upon his fat ones leanness ;

And under his glory shall he kindle
A burning as of a conflagration :

- 17 And the light of Israel shall become a fire,
And his Holy One a flame ;
And he shall burn, and consume his thorn
And his brier in one day.

- 18 Even the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field,
From the soul even to the flesh, shall he consume ;
And it shall be, as when one fleeth out of the fire.

- 19 And the remainder of the trees of his forest shall be a small number,
So that a child may write them down.

- 20 And it shall come to pass in that day,
No more shall the remnant of Israel,
And the escaped of the house of Jacob,
Lean upon him that smote them ;
But shall lean upon JEHOVAH,
The Holy One of Israel, in truth.

- 21 A remnant shall return, a remnant of Jacob, Unto God the Mighty.

- 22 For though thy people, O Israel, shall be as the sand of the sea,
A remnant of them only shall return.
The consummation decided, overfloweth with strict justice ;

- 23 For a full and decisive decree Shall JEHOVAH the Lord of Hosts accomplish in the midst of the land.
- 24 Wherefore thus saith JEHOVAH the Lord of Hosts :
Fear not, O my people, that dwellest in Sion, because of the Assyrian ;
With his staff indeed shall he smite thee,
And his rod shall he lift up against thee, in the way of Egypt.
- 25 But yet a very little time, and mine indignation shall cease ;
And mine anger in their destruction :
- 26 And JEHOVAH God of Hosts shall raise up against him
a scourge,
Like the stroke upon Midian at the rock of Oreb,
And like the rod which he lifted up over the sea ;
Yea he will lift it up, after the manner of Egypt.
- 27 And it shall come to pass in that day,
His burden shall be removed from off thy shoulder,
And his yoke from off thy neck :
Yea the yoke shall perish from off your shoulders.
- 28 He is come to Aiath ; he hath passed to Migron ;
At Michmas he will deposit his baggage.
- 29 They have passed the strait ; Geba is their lodging for the night :
Ramah is frightened ; Gibeah of Saul fleeth.
- 30 Cry aloud with thy voice, O daughter of Gallim ; Hearken unto her, O Laish ; answer her, O Anathoth.
- 31 Madmena is gone away ; the inhabitants of Gebim flee amain.
- 32 Yet this day shall he abide in Nob :
He shall shake his hand against the mount of the daughter of Sion ;
Against the hill of Jerusalem.
- 33 Behold JEHOVAH, the Lord of Hosts,
Shall lop the flourishing branch with a dreadful crash ;
And the high of stature shall be cut down,
And the lofty shall be brought low :
- 34 And he shall hew the thickets of the forest with iron,
And Lebanon shall fall by a mighty hand.

CHAP. 1     But there shall spring forth a rod from the trunk of
XI.           Jesse;

And a scion from his roots shall become fruitful:

2 And the spirit of JEHOVAH shall rest upon him;

The spirit of wisdom, and understanding;

The spirit of counsel, and strength;

The spirit of the knowledge, and the fear of JEHOVAH.

3 And he shall be of quick discernment in the fear of JEHOVAH:

So that not according to the sight of his eyes shall he judge;

Nor according to the hearing of his ears shall he reprove:

4 But with righteousness shall he judge the poor,

And with equity shall he work conviction in the meek of the earth.

And he shall smite the earth with the blast of his mouth,
And with the breath of his lips he shall slay the wicked one.

5 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins;

And faithfulness the cincture of his reins.

6 Then shall the wolf take up his abode with the lamb;

And the leopard shall lie down with the kid;

And the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling shall come together;

And a little child shall lead them.

7 And the heifer and the she-bear shall feed together;

Together shall their young ones lie down;

And the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the suckling shall play upon the hole of the aspic;

And upon the den of the basilisk shall the new-weaned child lay his hand.

9 They shall not hurt, nor destroy, in all my holy mountain;

For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of JEHOVAH,
As the waters that cover the depths of the sea.

10 And it shall come to pass in that day,

The root of Jesse, which standeth for an ensign to the peoples,

Unto him shall the nations repair,

And his resting-place shall be glorious.

- 11 And it shall come to pass in that day,
 JEHOVAH shall again the second time put forth his hand,
 To recover the remnant of his people
 That remaineth, from Assyria, and from Egypt;
 And from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam;
 And from Shinear, and from Hamath, and from the western regions.
- 12 And he shall lift up a signal to the nations;
 And he shall gather the outcasts of Israel,
 And the dispersed of Judah shall he collect,
 From the four extremities of the earth.
- 13 And the jealousy of Ephraim shall cease;
 And the enmity of Judah shall be no more:
 Ephraim shall not be jealous of Judah;
 And Judah shall not be at enmity with Ephraim.
- 14 But they shall invade the borders of the Philistines westward;
 Together shall they spoil the children of the east:
 On Edom and Moab they shall lay their hand;
 And the sons of Ammon shall obey them.
- 15 And JEHOVAH shall smite with a drought the tongue of the Egyptian sea;
 And he shall shake his hand over the river with his vehement wind;
 And he shall strike it into seven streams,
 And make them pass over it dry-shod.
- 16 And there shall be a high-way for the remnant of his people,
 Which shall remain from Assyria:
 As it was unto Israel,
 In the day when he came up from the land of Egypt.

CHAP. 1
 XII.

- AND in that day thou shalt say:
 I will give thanks unto thee, O JEHOVAH; for though thou hast been angry with me,
 Thine anger is turned away, and thou hast comforted me.
- 2 Behold, God is my salvation;
 I will trust, and will not be afraid:
 For my strength, and my song, is JEHOVAH;
 And he is become unto me salvation.
- 3 And when ye shall draw waters with joy from the foun-
 4 tains of salvation; in that day ye shall say:
 Give ye thanks to JEHOVAH; call upon his name;

Make known among the peoples his mighty deeds:
Record ye, how highly his name is exalted.

5 Sing ye JEHOVAH; for he hath wrought a stupendous work:

This is made manifest in all the earth.

6 Cry aloud, and shout for joy, O inhabitress of Sion;
For great in the midst of thee is the Holy One of Israel.

CHAP. I THE ORACLE CONCERNING BABYLON, WHICH WAS XIII. REVEALED TO ISAIAH, THE SON OF AMOTS.

2 UPON a lofty mountain erect the standard;
Exalt the voice; beckon with the hand;
That they may enter the gates of princes.

3 I have given a charge to mine enrolled warriors;
I have even called my strong ones to execute my wrath;
Those that exult in my greatness.

4 A sound of a multitude in the mountains, as of a great people;
A sound of the tumult of kingdoms, of nations gathered together!
JEHOVAH, God of Hosts, mustereth the host for the battle.

5 They come from a distant land, from the end of the heavens;
JEHOVAH, and the instruments of his wrath, to destroy the whole land.

6 Howl ye, for the day of JEHOVAH is at hand;
As a destruction from the Almighty shall it come.

7 Therefore shall all hands be slackened;
And every heart of mortal shall melt; and they shall be terrified:

8 Torments and pangs shall seize them;
As a woman in travail, they shall be pained:
They shall look one upon another with astonishment;
Their countenances shall be like flames of fire.

9 Behold, the day of JEHOVAH cometh, inexorable;
Even indignation, and burning wrath:
To make the land a desolation;
And her sinners he shall destroy from out of her.

- 10 Yea the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof,
Shall not send forth their light :
The sun is darkened at his going forth,
And the moon shall not cause her light to shine.
- 11 And I will visit the world for its evil,
And the wicked for their iniquity :
And I will put an end to the arrogance of the proud ;
And I will bring down the haughtiness of the terrible.
- 12 I will make a mortal more precious than fine gold ;
Yea a man, than the rich ore of Ophir.
- 13 Wherefore I will make the heavens tremble ;
And the earth shall be shaken out of her place :
In the indignation of JEHOVAH God of Hosts ;
And in the day of his burning anger.
- 14 And the remnant shall be, as a roe chased ;
And as sheep, when there is none to gather them together :
They shall look, every one towards his own people ;
And they shall flee, every one to his own land.
- 15 Every one, that is overtaken, shall be thrust through ;
And all that are collected in a body shall fall by the sword.
- 16 And their infants shall be dashed before their eyes ;
Their houses shall be plundered, and their wives ravished.
- 17 Behold, I raise up against them the Medes ;
Who shall hold silver of no account ;
And as for gold, they shall not delight in it.
- 18 Their bows shall dash the young men ;
And on the fruit of the womb they shall have no mercy :
Their eye shall have no pity even on the children.
- 19 And Babylon shall become, she that was the beauty of kingdoms,
The glory of the pride of the Chaldeans,
As the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah by the hand of God.
- 20 It shall not be inhabited for ever ;
Nor shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation :
Neither shall the Arabian pitch his tent there ;
Neither shall the shepherds make their folds there.
- 21 But there shall the wild beasts of the deserts lodge ;
And howling monsters shall fill their houses :
And there shall the daughters of the ostrich dwell ;
And there shall the satyrs hold their revels :

- 22 And wolves shall howl to one another in their palaces;
And dragons in their voluptuous pavilions.
And her time is near to come;
And her days shall not be prolonged.

CHAP. 1
XIV.

- FOR JEHOVAH will have compassion on Jacob,
And will yet choose Israel.
And he shall give them rest upon their own land:
And the stranger shall be joined unto them,
And shall cleave unto the house of Jacob.
2 And the nations shall take them, and bring them into their own place;
And the house of Israel shall possess them in the land
of JEHOVAH,
As servants, and as handmaids:
And they shall take them captive, whose captives they were;
And they shall rule over their oppressors.
3 And it shall come to pass in that day, that JEHOVAH shall give thee rest from thine affliction, and from thy disquiet, and from the hard servitude which was laid 4 upon thee; and thou shalt pronounce this parable upon the king of Babylon; and shalt say:

How hath the oppressor ceased! the exactress of gold ceased!

- 5 JEHOVAH hath broken the staff of the wicked, the sceptre of the rulers.
6 He that smote the peoples in wrath, with a stroke unre-mitted;
He that ruled the nations in anger is persecuted, and none hindereth.
7 The whole earth is at rest, is quiet; they burst forth into a joyful shout:
8 Even the fir-trees rejoice over thee, the cedars of Li-banus:
Since thou art fallen, no feller hath come up against us.
9 Hades from beneath is moved because of thee, to meet thee at thy coming:
He rouseth for thee the mighty dead, all the great chiefs
of the earth;
He maketh to rise up from their thrones, all the kings of the nations.

- 10 All of them shall accost thee, and shall say unto thee :
Art thou, even thou too, become weak as we ? art thou made like unto us ?
- 11 Is then thy pride brought down to the grave ; the sound of thy sprightly instruments ?
Is the vermin become thy couch, and the earth-worm thy covering ?
- 12 How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning !
Art cut down to the earth, thou that didst subdue the nations !
- 13 Yet thou didst say in thy heart : I will ascend the heavens ;
Above the stars of God I will exalt my throne ;
And I will sit upon the mount of the divine presence, on the sides of the north :
- 14 I will ascend above the highths of the clouds ; I will be like the Most High.
- 15 But thou shalt be brought down to the grave, to the sides of the pit.
- 16 Those that see thee shall look attentively at thee ; they shall well consider thee :
Is this the man that made the earth to tremble ; that shook the kingdoms ?
- 17 That made the world like a desert ; that destroyed the cities ?
That never dismissed his captives to their own home ?
- 18 All the kings of the nations, all of them,
Lie down in glory, each in his own sepulchre :
- 19 But thou art cast out of the grave, as the tree abominated ;
Clothed with the slain, with the pierced by the sword,
With them that go down to the stones of the pit ; as a trodden carcass.
- 20 Thou shalt not be joined unto them in burial ;
Because thou hast destroyed thy country, thou hast slain thy people ;
The seed of evil doers shall never be renowned.
- 21 Prepare ye slaughter for his children, for the iniquity of their fathers ;
Lest they rise, and possess the earth ; and fill the face of the world with cities.

- 22 For I will arise against them, saith JEHOVAH God of Hosts :
And I will cut off from Babylon the name, and the remnant ;
And the son, and the son's son, saith JEHOVAH.
- 23 And I will make it an inheritance for the porcupine, and pools of water ;
And I will plunge it in the miry gulph of destruction, saith JEHOVAH God of Hosts.
- 24 JEHOVAH God of Hosts hath sworn, saying :
Surely as I have devised, so shall it be ;
And as I have purposed, that thing shall stand :
- 25 To crush the Assyrian in my land, and to trample him on my mountains.
Then shall his yoke depart from off them ;
And his burden shall be removed from off their shoulder.
- 26 This is the decree, which is determined on the whole earth ;
And this the hand, which is stretched out over all the nations :
- 27 For JEHOVAH God of Hosts hath decreed ; and who shall disannul it ?
And it is his hand that is stretched out ; and who shall turn it back ?

28 IN THE YEAR IN WHICH AHAZ THE KING DIED, THIS ORACLE WAS DELIVERED.

- 29 REJOICE not, O Philistia, with one consent,
Because the rod, that smote thee, is broken :
For from the root of the serpent shall come forth a basilisk ;
And his fruit shall be a flying fiery serpent.
- 30 For the poor shall feed on my choice first-fruits ;
And the needy shall lie down in security :
But he will kill thy root with drought ;
And thy remnant he will slay.
- 31 Howl, O gate ! cry out, O city !
O Philistia, thou art altogether sunk in consternation !
For from the north cometh a smoke ;
And there shall not be a straggler among his levies.

32 And what answer shall be given to the ambassadors of the nations?

That JEHOVAH hath laid the foundation of Sion;
And the poor of his people shall take refuge in her.

CHAP. I      THE ORACLE CONCERNING MOAB.
XV.

BECAUSE in the night Ar is destroyed, Moab is undone!

Because in the night Kir is destroyed, Moab is undone!

2 He goeth up to Beth-Dibon, to the high places to weep:
Over Nebo, and over Medeba, shall Moab howl:

On every head there is baldness; every beard is shorn.

3 In her streets they gird themselves with sackcloth:

On her house-tops, and to her open places,
Every one howleth, descendeth with weeping.

4 And Heshbon and Elealeh cry out aloud;

Unto Jahats is their voice heard:

Yea the very loins of Moab cry out;

Her life is grievous unto her.

5 The heart of Moab crieth within her;

To Tsoar [she crieth out] like the lowing of a young heifer:

Yea the ascent of Luhith with weeping shall they ascend;

Yea in the way of Horonaim they raise a cry of destruction.

6 For the waters of Nimrim shall become desolate;

For the pasture is withered, the tender plant faileth, the green herb is no more.

7 Wherefore the riches, which they have gained, shall perish;

And what they have deposited, to the valley of willows shall be carried away.

8 For the cry encompasseth the border of Moab:

To Eglaim reacheth her moan; and to Beer-Elim her howling.

9 Yea the waters of Dimon are full of blood:

Yet will I bring more evils upon Dimon;

Upon the escaped of Moab and Ariel, and the remnant of Admah.

- CHAP. XVI. 1 I will send forth the son of the ruler of the land, XVI. From Selah of the desert to the mount of the daughter of Sion :
- 2 And as wandering birds, driven from the nest,
So shall be the daughters of Moab at the fords of Ar-non.
- 3 Impart counsel ; interpose with equity ;
Make thy shadow as the night in the midst of noon-day.
Hide the outcasts ; discover not the fugitive.
- 4 Let the outcasts of Moab sojourn with thee, [O Sion] ;
Be thou to them a covert from the destroyer.
For the oppressor is no more, the destroyer ceaseth ;
He that trampled you under foot is perished from the land.
- 5 And the throne shall be established in mercy,
And in truth shall One sit thereon ;
In the tabernacle of David a judge,
Carefully searching out the right, and despatching justice.
- 6 We have heard the pride of Moab : he is very proud ;
His haughtiness, and his pride, and his anger : vain are his lies.
- 7 Therefore shall Moab lament aloud :
For the whole people of Moab shall he lament ;
For the men of Kirhares shall ye make a moan.
- 8 For the fields of Heshbon are put to shame ;
The vine of Sibmah languisheth,
Whose generous shoots overpowered the mighty lords
of the nations ;
They reached unto Jazer ; they strayed to the desert ;
Her branches extended themselves, they passed over the sea.
- 9 Wherefore I will weep, as with the weeping of Jazer, for the vine of Sibmah ;
I will water thee with my tears, O Heshbon and Elealeh !
For upon thy summer fruits, and upon thy vintage,
the destroyer hath fallen ;
- 10 And joy and gladness is taken away from the fruitful
field ;
And in the vineyards they shall not sing, they shall not shout :
In the vats the treader shall not tread out the wine ;
An end is put to the shouting.

- 11 Wherefore my bowels for Moab like a harp shall sound;
And mine entrails for Kirharses.
- 12 And it shall be, when Moab shall see
That he hath wearied himself out on the high place,
That he shall enter his sanctuary,
To intercede; but he shall not prevail.
- 13 This is the word, which JEHOVAH spake concerning 14 Moab long ago; but now JEHOVAH hath spoken, saying:
After three years, as the years of an hireling,
The glory of Moab shall be debased, in all his great multitude;
And the remnant shall be few, small, and without strength.

CHAP. 1 THE ORACLE CONCERNING DAMASCUS.
XVII.

- BEHOLD Damascus is removed, so as to be no more
a city;
It shall even become a ruinous heap.
- 2 The cities are deserted for ever;
They shall be given up to the flocks,
And they shall lie down, and none shall scare them away.
- 3 And the fortress shall cease from Ephraim,
And the kingdom from Damascus;
And the pride of Syria shall be as the glory of the sons
of Israel;
Saith JEHOVAH the God of Hosts.
- 4 And it shall come to pass in that day,
The glory of Jacob shall be diminished,
And the fatness of his flesh shall become lean:
- 5 And it shall be, as when one gathereth the standing harvest,
And his arm reapeth the ears of corn;
Or as when one gleaneth ears in the valley of Rephaim.
- 6 A gleaning shall be left in it, as in the shaking of the olive tree;
Two or three berries on the top of the uppermost bough;
Four or five on the straggling fruitful branches:
Saith JEHOVAH the God of Israel.

- 7 In that day shall a man regard his Maker,
And toward the Holy One of Israel shall his eyes look :
8 And he shall not regard the altars dedicated to the work of his hands ;
And what his fingers have made, he shall not respect ;
Nor the groves, nor the solar statues.
9 In that day shall his strongly fenced cities become
Like the desertion of the Hivites and the Amorites,
When they deserted the land before the face of the sons
of Israel ;
And the land shall become a desolation.
10 Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation,
And hast not remembered the rock of thy strength ;
Therefore, when thou shalt have planted pleasant plants,
And shalt have set shoots from a foreign soil ;
11 In the day when thou shalt have made thy plants to grow,
And in the morning, when thou shalt have made thy shoots to spring forth ;
Even in the day of possession shall the harvest be taken away,
And there shall be sorrow without hope.
- 12 Wo to the multitude of the numerous peoples,
Who make a sound like the sound of the seas ;
And to the roaring of the nations,
Who make a roaring like the roaring of mighty waters.
13 Like the roaring of mighty waters do the nations roar ;
But he shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far away ;
And they shall be driven like the chaff of the hills before the wind,
And like the gossamer before the whirlwind.
14 At the season of evening, behold terror !
Before the morning, and he is no more !
This is the portion of those that spoil us ;
And the lot of those that plunder us.

- CHAP. XVIII. 1 Ho ! to the land of the winged cymbal,
Which borders on the rivers of Cush ;
2 Which sendeth ambassadors on the sea,
And in vessels of papyrus on the face of the waters.

Go, ye swift messengers,
 To a nation stretched out in length, and smoothed;
 To a people terrible from the first, and hitherto;
 A nation meted out by line, and trodden down;
 Whose land the rivers have nourished.

- 3 Yea, all ye that inhabit the world, and that dwell on the earth,
 When the standard is lifted up on the mountains, behold!

And when the trumpet is sounded, hear!

- 4 For thus hath JEHOVAH said unto me:
 I will sit still, and regard my fixed habitation;
 Like the clear heat after rain,
 Like the dewy cloud in the day of harvest.
- 5 Surely before the vintage, when the bud is perfect,
 And the blossom is become a swelling grape;
 He shall cut off the shoots with pruning-hooks,
 And the branches he shall take away, he shall cut down.

- 6 They shall be left together to the rapacious bird of the mountains;

And to the wild beasts of the earth:

And the rapacious bird shall summer upon it;

And every wild beast of the earth shall winter upon it.

- 7 At that time shall a gift be brought to JEHOVAH the God of Hosts,

From a people stretched out in length, and smoothed;
 And from a people terrible from the first, and hitherto;
 A nation meted out by line, and trodden down,
 Whose land the rivers have nourished;
 To the place of the name of JEHOVAH God of Hosts, to Mount Sion.

CHAP. I THE ORACLE CONCERNING EGYPT. XIX.

BEHOLD, JEHOVAH rideth

On a swift cloud, and cometh to Egypt!

And the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence;
 And the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of her.

- 2 And I will excite Egyptians against Egyptians,
 And they shall fight, every man against his brother, and every man against his neighbour;

- City against city, kingdom against kingdom.
- 3 And the spirit of Egypt shall fail in the midst of her ;
And I will swallow up her counsel :
And they shall seek to the idols, and to the sorcerers,
And to the necromancers, and to the wizards :
- 4 And I will give up Egypt bound into the hands of cruel lords,
And a fierce king shall rule over them ;
Saith the Lord JEHOVAH God of Hosts.
- 5 Then shall the waters fail from the sea,
And the river shall be wasted and dried up.
- 6 And the streams shall become putrid ;
The canals of Egypt shall be emptied and dried up.
The reed and the lotus shall wither :
- 7 The meadow by the canal, even at the mouth of the canal,
And all that is sown by the canal,
Shall wither, be blasted, and be no more.
- 8 And the fishers shall mourn, and lament ;
All those that cast the hook in the river,
And those that spread nets on the face of the waters, shall languish.
- 9 And they that work the fine flax shall be confounded,
And they that weave net-work.
- 10 And her stores shall be broken up ;
Even of all that make a gain of pools for fish.
- 11 Surely, the princes of Zoan are fools ;
The wise counsellors of Pharaoh have counselled a brutish counsel.
How will ye boast unto Pharaoh :
I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings ?
- 12 Where are they ; where, thy wise men ? let them come ;
And let them tell thee now, and let them declare,
What JEHOVAH God of Hosts hath determined against Egypt.
- 13 The princes of Zoan are become fools, the princes of Noph are deceived ;
They have caused Egypt to err, even the chief pillars of her tribes.
- 14 JEHOVAH hath mingled in the midst of them a spirit of giddiness ;
And they have caused Egypt to err in all her works,
As a drunkard staggereth in his vomit :

- 15 Nor shall there be any work in Egypt,
Which the head or tail, the branch or rush, may perform.
- 16 In that day the Egyptians shall be as women;
And they shall tremble and fear
At the shaking of the hand of JEHOVAH God of Hosts,
Which he shall shake over them.
- 17 And the land of Judah shall become a terror to the Egyptians;
If any one mention it unto them, they shall fear;
Because of the counsel of JEHOVAH God of Hosts,
Which he hath counselled against them.
- 18 In that day, there shall be five cities in the land of Egypt,
Speaking the language of Canaan,
And swearing unto JEHOVAH God of Hosts:
One of them shall be called the City of the Sun.
- 19 In that day, there shall be an altar to JEHOVAH
In the midst of the land of Egypt;
And a pillar by the border thereof to JEHOVAH:
- 20 And it shall be for a sign, and for a witness,
To JEHOVAH God of Hosts in the land of Egypt;
That, when they cried unto JEHOVAH because of oppressors,
He sent unto them a saviour and a vindicator, and he delivered them.
- 21 And JEHOVAH shall be known to Egypt,
And the Egyptians shall know JEHOVAH in that day;
And they shall serve him with sacrifice and oblation,
And they shall vow a vow unto JEHOVAH, and shall perform it.
- 22 And JEHOVAH shall smite Egypt, smiting and healing her;
And they shall turn unto JEHOVAH, and he will be entreated by them, and will heal them.
- 23 In that day, there shall be a high-way from Egypt to Assyria;
And the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria:
And the Egyptian shall worship with the Assyrian.
- 24 In that day, Israel shall be reckoned a third,
Together with Egypt and Assyria;
A blessing in the midst of the earth:

- 25 Whom JEHOVAH God of Hosts hath blessed, saying :
 Blessed be my people, Egypt ;
 And Assyria, the work of my hands ;
 And Israel, mine inheritance.

- CHAP. 1 IN the year that Tharthan marched to Ashdod ; XX. whither he was sent by Sargon king of Assyria ; (and he
 2 fought against Ashdod, and took it) ; at that time JEHOVAH spake by Isaiah, the son of Amots, saying :
 Go, loose the sackcloth from off thy loins ;
 And put off thy shoes from thy feet.
 3 And he did so, walking naked and barefoot. And JEHOVAH said :
 As my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot ;
 A sign and a prodigy of three years,
 Upon Egypt and upon Cush :
 4 So shall the king of Assyria lead
 The captives of Egypt, and the exiles of Cush,
 The young and the old, naked and barefoot ;
 With their hind-parts discovered, to the shame of the Egyptians.
 5 And they [of Ashdod] shall be terrified, and ashamed of Cush in whom they trusted,
 And of Egypt, in whom they gloried.
 6 And the inhabitant of this country shall say, in that day :
 Behold, such is the object of our trust,
 To whom we fled for succour,
 That we might be delivered from the king of Assyria !
 How then shall we escape ?

CHAP. 1 THE ORACLE CONCERNING THE DESERT OF THE SEA.
 XXI.

- LIKE the southern tempests violently rushing along,
 From the desert he cometh, from the terrible country.
 2 A dreadful vision ! it is revealed unto me :
 The plunderer is plundered, and the destroyer is destroyed !

- Go up, O Elam ; form the siege, O Media !
I have put an end to all her vexations :
3 Therefore are my loins filled with pain ;
Anguish hath seized me, as the anguish of a woman in travail.
I am convulsed, so that I cannot hear ; I am astonished,
so that I cannot see :
4 My heart is bewildered ; terrors have scared me :
The evening, for which I longed, hath he turned into horror.
5 The table is prepared, the watch is set ; they eat, they drink :
Rise, O ye princes ; anoint the shield ;
6 For thus hath the Lord said unto me :
Go, set a watchman on his station ;
Whatever he shall see, let him report unto thee.
7 And he saw a chariot with two riders ;
A rider on an ass, a rider on a camel :
And he observed diligently with extreme diligence.
8 And he that looked out on the watch cried aloud :
O my Lord, I keep my station all the day long ;
And on my ward have I continued every night.
9 And behold, here cometh a man, one of the two riders :
And he answereth, and sayeth, Babylon is fallen, is fallen ;
And all the graven idols of her gods are broken to the ground.
10 O my threshing, and the corn of my floor !
What I have heard from JEHOVAH God of Hosts, the God of Israel,
That I have declared unto you.

11 THE ORACLE CONCERNING DUMAH.

- A voice crieth unto me from Seir :
Watchman, what from the night ?
Watchman, what from the night ?
12 The watchman replieth :
The morning cometh, and also the night.
If ye will inquire, inquire ye : come again.

13 THE ORACLE CONCERNING ARABIA.

- IN the forest, at even, shall ye lodge,
O ye caravans of Dedan !
14 To meet the thirsty bring ye forth water,
O inhabitants of the southern country ;
With bread prevent the fugitive.
15 For from the face of the sword they shall flee :
From the face of the drawn sword ;
And from the face of the bended bow ;
And from the face of the grievous war.
16 For thus hath the Lord said unto me :
Within yet a year, as the years of an hireling,
Shall all the glory of Kedar be consumed ;
17 And the remainder of the number of the mighty bow-
men,
Of the sons of Kedar, shall be diminished :
For JEHOVAH the God of Israel hath spoken it.

CHAP. I THE ORACLE CONCERNING THE VALLEY OF VISION.
XXII.

- WHAT aileth thee now, that all thine inhabitants are gone up to the house-tops ?
2 O thou, that wast full of noise,
A tumultuous city, a joyous city !
Thy slain were not slain by the sword,
Neither did they die in battle.
3 All thy leaders are gone off together ; they are fled from the bow ;
All that were found in thee are fled together, they are gone far away.
4 Wherefore I said : Turn away from me ; I will weep bitterly :
Strive not to comfort me for the desolation of the daughter of my people :
5 For it is a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity ;
The day of the Lord JEHOVAH God of Hosts in the valley of vision :

- Breaking down the wall, and crying to the mountain.
6 And Elam beareth the quiver ;
With chariots cometh the Syrian, and with horsemen ;
And Kir uncovereth the shield.
7 And thy choicest valleys shall be filled with chariots ;
And the horsemen shall set themselves in array against the gate ;
8 And the barrier of Judah shall be laid open :
Then thou shalt look towards the arsenal of the house of the forest.
9 And the breaches of the city of David, ye shall see that they are many ;
And ye shall collect the waters of the lower pool ;
10 And the houses of Jerusalem ye shall number ;
And ye shall break down the houses to fortify the rampart :
11 And ye shall make a lake between the two walls,
To receive the waters of the old pool.
But ye look not to him, that hath disposed this ;
And him, that formed it of old, ye regard not.
12 And the Lord JEHOVAH God of Hosts called in that day
To weeping, and to lamentation ;
And to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth :
13 But, behold, joy and gladness,
Slaying of oxen, and killing of sheep ;
Eating of flesh, and drinking of wine :
Let us eat, and drink ; for to-morrow we die.
14 And the voice of JEHOVAH God of Hosts was revealed to mine ears :
Surely this your iniquity shall not be expiated, till ye die,
Saith the Lord JEHOVAH God of Hosts.
- 15 Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH God of Hosts : Go, get thee to this treasurer, unto Shebna, who is over the household ; and say unto him :
16 What hast thou here ? and whom hast thou here ?
That thou hast hewn out here a sepulchre for thyself ?
O thou that hewest out thy sepulchre on high,
That gravest in the rock an habitation for thyself !

- 17 Behold JEHOVAH will cast thee out,
Casting thee violently out, and will surely cover thee :
18 He will whirl thee round and round, and cast thee away,
Like a ball [from a sling] into a wide country :
There shalt thou die ; and there shall thy glorious chariots
    Become the shame of the house of thy lord.
19 And I will drive thee from thy station,
    And from thy state will I overthrow thee.
20 And in that day I will call my servant,
    Even Eliakim the son of Hilkiah :
21 And I will clothe him with thy robe,
    And with thy baldric will I strengthen him :
    And thy government will I commit to his hand ;
    And he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem,
    And to the house of Judah :
22 And I will lay the key of the house of David upon his shoulder ;
    And he shall open, and none shall shut ;
    And he shall shut, and none shall open.
23 And I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place ;
    And he shall become a glorious seat for his father's house :
24 And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house,
    The offspring of high and of low degree ;
    Every small vessel ; from every sort of goblets,
    To every sort of meaner vessels.
25 In that day, saith JEHOVAH God of Hosts,
    The nail once fastened in a sure place shall be moved ;
    And it shall be hewn down, and it shall fall ;
    And the burden which was upon it, shall be cut off ;
    For JEHOVAH hath spoken it.

CHAP. I      THE ORACLE CONCERNING TYRE.
XXIII.

Howl, O ye ships of Tarshish !
For she is utterly destroyed both within and without :
From the land of Chittim the tidings are brought unto
    them.

- 2 Be silent, O ye inhabitants of the sea-coast :
The merchants of Sidon, they that pass over the sea, crowded thee.
- 3 And the seed of the Nile, growing from abundant waters,
The harvest of the river, was her revenue :
And she became the mart of the nations.
- 4 Be thou ashamed, O Sidon ; for the sea hath spoken,
Even the mighty fortress of the sea, saying :
I am, as if I had not travailed, nor brought forth children ;
As if I had not nourished youths, nor educated virgins.
- 5 When the tidings shall reach Egypt,
They shall be seized with anguish at the tidings of Tyre.
- 6 Pass ye over to Tarshish ; howl, O ye inhabitants of the sea-coast !
- 7 Is this your triumphant city ; whose antiquity is of the earliest date ?
Her own feet bear her far away to sojourn.
- 8 Who hath purposed this against Tyre, who dispensed crowns ;
Whose merchants were princes ; whose traders were nobles of the land ?
- 9 JEHOVAH God of Hosts hath counselled it ;
To stain the pride of all beauty ;
To make contemptible all the nobles of the earth.
- 10 Overflow thy land, like a river,
O daughter of Tarshish ; the mound [that kept in thy waters] is no more.
- 11 He hath stretched his hand over the sea ; he hath shaken the kingdoms :
JEHOVAH hath issued a command concerning Canaan, that they should destroy her strong places.
- 12 And he hath said : Thou shalt triumph no more,
O thou defloured virgin, the daughter of Sidon !
To Chittim arise, pass over ; even there thou shalt have no rest.
- 13 Behold the land of the Chaldeans :
This people was of no account ;
(The Assyrian founded it for the inhabitants of the desert ;

- They raised the watch-towers, they set up the palaces thereof);
This people hath reduced her to a ruin.
- 14 Howl, O ye ships of Tarshish; for your stronghold is destroyed.
- 15 And it shall come to pass in that day,
That Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years,
According to the days of one king:
At the end of seventy years
Tyre shall sing, as the harlot singeth.
- 16 Take thy lyre, go about the city, O harlot long forgotten;
Strike the lyre artfully; multiply the song; that thou mayest again be remembered.
- 17 And at the end of seventy years
JEHOVAH will take account of Tyre:
And she shall return to her gainful practice;
And she shall play the harlot with all the kingdoms of
the world,
That are upon the face of the earth.
- 18 But her traffic, and her gain, shall be holy to JEHOVAH:
It shall not be treasured, nor shall it be kept in store;
For her traffic shall be for them that dwell before JEHOVAH,
For food sufficient, and for durable clothing.

CHAP. 1 BEHOLD, JEHOVAH emptieth the land and maketh it
XXIV. waste;

He even turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad
the inhabitants.

- 2 And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priest;
As with the servant, so with his master;
As with the handmaid, so with her mistress;
As with the buyer, so with the seller;
As with the borrower, so with the lender;
As with the usurer, so with the giver of usury:
- 3 The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled;
For JEHOVAH hath spoken this word.
- 4 The land mourneth, it withereth;
The world languisheth, it withereth;
The lofty people of the land do languish.

- 5 The land is even polluted under her inhabitants;
For they have transgressed the law, they have changed
the decree;
They have broken the everlasting covenant.
- 6 Therefore hath a curse devoured the land;
Because they are guilty, that dwell in her.
Therefore are the inhabitants of the land destroyed;
And few are the mortals that are left in her.
- 7 The new wine mourneth; the vine languisheth;
All, that were glad of heart, sigh.
- 8 The joyful sound of the tabour ceaseth;
The noise of exultation is no more;
The joyful sound of the harp ceaseth:
- 9 With songs they shall no more drink wine;
The palm-wine shall be bitter to them that drink it.
- 10 The city is broken down; it is desolate:
Every house is obstructed, so that no one can enter.
- 11 There is a cry in the streets for wine;
All gladness is passed away;
The joy of the whole land is banished.
- 12 Desolation is left in the city;
And with a great tumult the gate is battered down.
- 13 Yea thus shall it be in the very centre of the land, in the midst of the people;
As the shaking of the olive; as the gleaning when the vintage is finished.
- 14 But these shall lift up their voice, they shall sing;
The waters shall resound with the exaltation of JEHO-VAH.
- 15 Wherefore in the distant coasts, glorify ye JEHOVAH;
In the distant coasts of the sea, the name of JEHOVAH,
the God of Israel.
- 16 From the uttermost part of the land, we have heard songs, Glory to the righteous!
But I said, Alas, my wretchedness, my wretchedness!
Wo is me! the plunderers plunder;
Yea the plunderers still continue their cruel depredations.
- 17 The terror, the pit, and the snare,
Are upon thee, O inhabitant of the land:
- 18 And it shall be, that whoso fleeth from the terror,
He shall fall into the pit;
And whoso escapeth from the pit,

- He shall be taken in the snare :
For the flood-gates from on high are opened ;
And the foundations of the earth tremble.
- 19 The land is grievously shaken ;
The land is utterly shattered to pieces ;
The land is violently moved out of her place ;
- 20 The land reeleth to and fro like a drunkard ;
And moveth this way and that, like a lodge for a night :
For her iniquity lieth heavy upon her ;
And she shall fall, and rise no more.
- 21 And it shall come to pass in that day,
JEHOVAH shall summon on high the host that is on high ;
And on earth the kings of the earth :
- 22 And they shall be gathered together, as in a bundle for the pit ;
And shall be closely imprisoned in the prison :
And, after many days, account shall be taken of them.
- 23 And the moon shall be confounded, and the sun shall be ashamed ;
For JEHOVAH God of Hosts shall reign
On Mount Sion, and in Jerusalem ;
And before his ancients shall he be glorified.

- CHAP. 1 O JEHOVAH, thou art my God :
XXV. I will exalt thee ; I will praise thy name :
For thou hast effected wonderful things ;
Counsels of old time, promises immutably true.
- 2 For thou hast made the city an heap ;
The strongly fortified citadel a ruin :
The palace of the proud ones, that it should be no more
a city ;
That it never should be built up again.
- 3 Therefore shall the fierce people glorify thee ;
The city of the formidable nations shall fear thee :
- 4 For thou hast been a defence to the poor ;
A defence to the needy in his distress :
A refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat ;
When the blast of the formidable rages like a winter storm.
- 5 As the heat in a parched land, the tumult of the proud shalt thou bring low ;

As the heat by a thick cloud, the triumph of the formidable shall be humbled.

- 6 And JEHOVAH God of Hosts shall make,
For all the peoples, in this mountain,
A feast of delicacies, a feast of old wines ;
Of delicacies exquisitely rich, of old wines perfectly refined.
- 7 And on this mountain shall he destroy
The covering, that covered the face of all the peoples ;
And the vail, that was spread over all the nations.
- 8 He shall utterly destroy death for ever ;
And the Lord JEHOVAH shall wipe away the tear from off all faces ;
And the reproach of his people shall he remove from off the whole earth :
For JEHOVAH hath spoken it.
- 9 In that day shall they say :
Behold, this is our God ;
We have trusted in him, and he hath saved us :
This is JEHOVAH ; we have trusted in him ;
We will rejoice, and triumph, in his salvation.
- 10 For the hand of JEHOVAH shall give rest upon this mountain ;
And Moab shall be threshed in his place,
As the straw is threshed under the wheels of the car.
- 11 And he shall stretch out his hands in the midst thereof,
As he, that sinketh, stretcheth out his hands to swim :
But God shall bring down his pride with the sudden gripe of his hands.
- 12 And the bulwark of thy high walls shall he lay low :
He shall bring them down to the ground ; he shall lay them in the dust.

- CHAP. 1 In that day shall this song be sung :
XXVI. In the land of Judah we have a strong city ;
Salvation shall he establish for walls and bulwarks.
- 2 Open ye the gates, and let the righteous nation enter ;
- 3 Constant in the truth, stayed in mind :
Thou shalt preserve them in perpetual peace,
Because they have trusted in thee.

- 4 Trust ye in JEHOVAH for ever ;
For in JEHOVAH is never-failing protection.
- 5 For he hath humbled those, that dwell on high ;
The lofty city, he hath brought her down :
He hath brought her down to the ground ;
He hath levelled her with the dust.
- 6 The foot shall trample upon her ;
The feet of the poor, the steps of the needy.
- 7 The way of the righteous is perfectly straight ;
Thou most exactly levellest the path of the righteous.
- 8 Even in the way of thy laws, O JEHOVAH,
We have placed our confidence in thy name ;
And in the remembrance of thee is the desire of our soul.
- 9 With my soul have I desired thee in the night ;
Yea with my inmost spirit in the morn have I sought thee.
For when thy judgments are in the earth,
The inhabitants of the world learn righteousness.
- 10 Though mercy be shewn to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness :
In the very land of rectitude he will deal perversely ;
And will not regard the majesty of JEHOVAH.
- 11 JEHOVAH, thy hand is lifted up, yet will they not see :
But they shall see, with confusion, thy zeal for thy people ;
Yea the fire shall burn up thine adversaries.
- 12 JEHOVAH, thou wilt ordain for us peace :
For even all our mighty deeds thou hast performed for us.
- 13 O JEHOVAH, our God !
Other lords, exclusive of thee, have had dominion over us :
Thee only, and thy name, henceforth will we celebrate.
- 14 They are dead, they shall not live ;
They are deceased tyrants, they shall not rise :
Therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them ;
And all memorial of them thou hast abolished.
- 15 Thou hast added to the nation, O JEHOVAH ;
Thou hast added to the nation ; thou art glorified :
Thou hast extended far all the borders of the land.
- 16 O JEHOVAH, in affliction have we sought thee ;

- We have poured out humble supplication, when thy chastisement was upon us.
- 17 As a woman that hath conceived, when her delivery approacheth,
Is in anguish, crieth out aloud, in her travail;
Thus have we been before thee, O JEHOVAH.
- 18 We have conceived; we have been in anguish; we have,
as it were, brought forth wind:
Salvation is not wrought in the land;
Neither are the inhabitants of the world fallen.
- 19 Thy dead shall live; my deceased, they shall rise:
Awake, and sing, ye that dwell in the dust!
For thy dew is as the dew of the dawn;
But the earth shall cast forth, as an abortion, the deceased tyrants.
- 20 Come, O my people; retire into thy secret apartments;
And shut thy door after thee:
Hide thyself for a little while, for a moment;
Until the indignation shall have passed away.
- 21 For behold, JEHOVAH issueth forth from his place,
To punish for his iniquity the inhabitant of the earth:
And the earth shall disclose the blood that is upon her;
And shall no longer cover her slain.

CHAP. XXVII. 1 In that day shall JEHOVAH punish with his sword;
His well-tempered, and great, and strong sword;
Leviathan the rigid serpent,
And Leviathan the winding serpent:
And shall slay the monster that is in the sea.

- 2 In that day,
To the beloved Vineyard, sing ye a responsive song.
- 3 J. It is I, JEHOVAH, that preserve her:
I will water her every moment;
I will take care of her by night;
And by day I will keep guard over her.
- 4 V. I have no wall for my defence:
O that I had a fence of the thorn and brier!
J. Against them should I march in battle,
I should burn them up together.

- 5 Ah ! let her rather take hold of my protection.
V. Let him make peace with me !
Peace let him make with me !
- 6 J. They that come from the root of Jacob shall flourish,
Israel shall bud forth ;
And they shall fill the face of the world with fruit.
- 7 Hath he smitten him, as he smiteth those that smote him?
And like the slaughter of those that slew him, is he slain ?
- 8 In just measure, when thou inflictest the stroke, wilt thou debate with her ;
With due deliberation, even in the rough tempest, in the day of the east wind.
- 9 Wherefore on this condition shall the iniquity of Jacob be expiated ;
And so shall he reap the whole benefit of the removal of his sin ;
If he shall render all the stones of the altar,
Like the limestones scattered abroad ;
And if the groves and the images rise no more.
- 10 But the strongly fortified city shall be desolate ;
An habitation forsaken, and deserted as a wilderness.
There shall the bullock feed, and there shall he lie down ;
And he shall browse on the tender shoots thereof.
- 11 When her boughs are withered, they shall be broken ;
Women shall come, and set them on a blaze.
Surely it is a people void of understanding ;
Wherefore he, that made him, shall not have pity on him ;
And he, that formed him, shall shew him no favour.
- 12 And it shall come to pass in that day,
JEHOVAH shall make a gathering of his fruit, from the flood of the river,
To the stream of Egypt ;
And ye shall be gleaned up,
One by one, O ye sons of Israel !
- 13 And it shall come to pass in that day,
The great trumpet shall be sounded ;
And those shall come, who were perishing in the land of Assyria ;
And who were dispersed in the land of Egypt :

And they shall bow themselves down before JEHOVAH,
In the holy mountain, in Jerusalem.

- CHAP. XXVIII. 1 Wo to the prond crown of the drunkards of Ephraim,
And to the fading flower of their glorious beauty !
To those, that are at the head of the rich valley, that are stupified with wine !
- 2 Behold the mighty one, the exceedingly strong one !
Like a storm of hail, like a destructive tempest ;
Like a rapid flood of mighty waters pouring down ;
He shall dash them to the ground with his hand.
- 3 They shall be trodden under foot,
The proud crowns of the drunkards of Ephraim :
- 4 And the fading flower of their glorious beauty,
Which is at the head of the rich valley,
Shall be as the early fruit before the summer ;
Which whoso seeth, he plucketh it immediately ;
And it is no sooner in his hand, than he swalloweth it.
- 5 In that day shall JEHOVAH God of Hosts become a beauteous crown,
And a glorious diadem, to the remnant of his people :
- 6 And a spirit of judgment to them that sit in judgment ;
And strength to them that repel the war to the gate [of the enemy].
- 7 But even these have erred through wine, and through strong drink they have reeled ;
The priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink ;
They are overwhelmed with wine ; they have reeled
through strong drink ;
They have erred in vision, they have stumbled in judgment :
- 8 For all their tables are full of vomit,
Of filthiness, so that no place is free.
- 9 “ Whom [say they] would he teach knowledge ; and to “ whom would he impart instruction ?
“ To such as are weaned from the milk, as are kept back “ from the breast ?
- 10 “ For it is command upon command ; command upon “ command ;

- “ Line upon line ; line upon line :
“ A little here, and a little there.”
- 11 Yea verily, with a stammering lip, and a strange tongue,
He shall speak unto this people.
- 12 For when he said unto them :
This is the true rest ; give ye rest unto the weary ;
And this is the refreshment ; they would not hear.
- 13 Therefore shall the word of JEHOVAH be indeed unto
them,
Command upon command, command upon command ;
Line upon line, line upon line ;
A little here, and a little there :
That they may go on, and fall backward ;
And be broken, and snared, and caught.
- 14 Wherefore hear ye the word of JEHOVAH, ye scoffers ;
Ye of this people in Jerusalem, who utter sententious speeches :
- 15 Who say, we have entered into a covenant with death ;
And with the grave we have made a treaty :
The overflowing plague, when it passeth through, shall not reach us ;
For we have made falsehood our refuge ;
And under deceit we have hidden ourselves.
- 16 Wherefore thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH :
Behold, I lay in Sion for a foundation a stone, an approved stone ;
A corner stone, precious, immoveably fixed :
He, that trusteth in him, shall not be confounded.
- 17 And I will mete out judgment by the rule ;
And strict justice by the plummet :
And the hail shall sweep away the refuge of falsehood ;
And the hiding-place the waters shall overwhelm.
- 18 And your covenant with death shall be broken ;
And your treaty with the grave shall not stand.
When the overflowing plague passeth through,
By it shall ye be beaten down :
- 19 As soon as it passeth through, shall it seize you ;
Yea morning after morning shall it pass through, by day and by night ;
And even the report alone shall cause terror.
- 20 For the bed is too short, for one to stretch himself out at length ;

- And the covering is too narrow, for one to gather himself up under it.
- 21 For as in Mount Peratsim, JEHOVAH will arise ;
As in the valley of Gibeon, shall he be moved with anger ;
That he may execute his work, his strange work ;
And effect his operation, his unusual operation.
- 22 And now, give yourselves up to scoffing no more,
Lest your chastisements become more severe :
For a full and decisive decree have I heard,
From the Lord JEHOVAH God of Hosts, on the whole land.
- 23 Listen ye, and hear my voice ;
Attend, and hearken unto my words.
- 24 Doth the husbandman plough every day that he may sow,
Opening, and breaking the clods of his field ?
- 25 When he hath made even the face thereof,
Doth not he then scatter the dill, and cast abroad the cummin ;
And sow the wheat in due measure ;
And the barley, and the rye, hath its appointed limit ?
- 26 For his God rightly instructeth him ; he furnisheth him with knowledge.
- 27 The dill is not beaten out with the corn-drag ;
Nor is the wheel of the wain made to turn upon the cummin :
But the dill is beaten out with the staff ;
- 28 And the cummin with the flail : but the bread-corn with the threshing-wain.
But not for ever will he continue thus to thresh it ;
Nor to vex it with the wheel of his wain ;
Nor to bruise it with the hoofs of his cattle.
- 29 This also proceedeth from JEHOVAH God of Hosts :
He sheweth himself wonderful in counsel, great in operation.

- CHAP. 1     Wo to Ariel, to Ariel, the city which David be-XXIX.        sieged !
              Add year to year ; let the feasts go round in their course.
- 2   Yet will I bring distress upon Ariel ;
              And there shall be continual mourning and sorrow :
              And it shall be unto me as the hearth of the great altar.
- 3   And I will encamp against thee, like David ;
              And I will lay siege against thee with a mound ;
              And I will erect towers against thee.
- 4   And thou shalt be brought low ; thou shalt speak as from beneath the earth :
              And from out of the dust thou shalt utter a feeble speech ;
              And thy voice shall come out of the ground, like that of a necromancer :
              And thy words from out of the dust shall give a small shrill sound.
- 5   But the multitude of the proud shall be like the small dust ;
              And like the flitting chaff the multitude of the terrible :
              Yea, the effect shall be momentary, in an instant.
- 6   From JEHOVAH God of Hosts there shall be a sudden visitation,
              With thunder, and earthquake, and a mighty voice ;
              With storm, and tempest, and flame of devouring fire.
- 7   And like as a dream, a vision of the night,
              So shall it be with the multitude of all the nations, that fight against Ariel ;
              And all their armies, and their towers, and those that distress her.
- 8   As when a hungry man dreameth ; and lo ! he seemeth to eat ;
              But he awaketh, and his appetite is still unsatisfied :
              And as a thirsty man dreameth ; and lo ! he seemeth to drink ;
              But he awaketh, and he is still faint, and his appetite
              still craving :
              So shall it be with the multitude of all the nations,
              Which have set themselves in array against Mount
              Sion.

- 9 They are struck with amazement, they stand astonished;
They stare with a look of stupid surprise;
They are drunken, but not with wine;
They stagger, but not with strong drink.
- 10 For JEHOVAH hath poured upon you a spirit of profound sleep;
And he hath closed up your eyes:
The prophets, and the rulers; the seers hath he blindfolded.
- 11 So that all the vision is to you, as the words of a book sealed up;
Which if one delivers to a man, that knoweth letters,
Saying, Read this, I pray thee;
He answereth, I cannot read it; for it is sealed up:
- 12 Or should the book be given to one, that knoweth not letters,
Saying, Read this, I pray thee;
He answereth, I know not letters.
- 13 Wherefore JEHOVAH hath said:
Forasmuch as this people draweth near with their mouth,
And honoureth me with their lips,
While their heart is far from me;
And vain is their fear of me,
Teaching the commandments of men:
- 14 Therefore, behold, I will again deal with this people,
In a manner so wonderful and astonishing;
That the wisdom of the wise shall perish,
And the prudence of the prudent shall disappear.
- 15 Wo unto them, that are too deep for JEHOVAH in forming secret designs;
Whose deeds are in the dark; and who say,
Who is there that seeth us; and who shall know us?
- 16 Perverse as ye are! Shall the potter be esteemed as the clay?
Shall the work say of the workman, He hath not made me?
And shall the thing formed say of the former of it, He hath no understanding?
- 17 Shall it not be but a very short space,
Ere Lebanon become like Carmel,
And Carmel appear like a desert?

- 18 Then shall the deaf hear the words of the book;
And the eyes of the blind, covered before with clouds and darkness, shall see.
- 19 The meek shall increase their joy in JEHOVAH;
And the needy shall exult in the Holy One of Israel.
- 20 For the terrible one faileth, the scoffer is no more;
And all that were vigilant in iniquity are utterly cut off:
- 21 Who bewildered the poor man in speaking;
And laid snares for him that pleaded in the gate;
And with falsehood subverted the righteous.
- 22 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH the God of the house of Jacob,
He who redeemed Abraham:
Jacob shall no more be ashamed;
His face shall no more be covered with confusion:
- 23 For when his children shall see the work of my hands,
Among themselves shall they sanctify my name:
They shall sanctify the Holy One of Jacob,
And tremble before the God of Israel.
- 24 Those, that were led away with the spirit of error, shall gain knowledge;
And the malignant shall attend to instruction.

- CHAP. 1      Wo unto the rebellious children, saith JEHOVAH;
XXX.      Who form counsels, but not from me;
            Who ratify covenants, but not by my spirit:
            That they may add sin to sin.
- 2      Who set forward to go down to Egypt;
            But have not inquired at my mouth:
            To strengthen themselves with the strength of Pharaoh;
            And to trust in the shadow of Egypt.
- 3      But the strength of Pharaoh shall be your shame;
            And your trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion.
- 4      Their princes were at Tsoan;
            And their ambassadors arrived at Hanes:
- 5      They were all ashamed of a people, that profited them not;
            Who were of no help, and of no profit;
            But proved even a shame and a reproach unto them.
- 6      The burthen of the beasts travelling southward,
            Through a land of distress and difficulty:
            Whence come forth the lioness, and the fierce lion;
            The viper, and the flying fiery serpent:

- They carry on the shoulder of the young cattle their wealth;
And on the bunch of the camel their treasures;
To a people, that will not profit them.
- 7 For Egypt is a mere vapour; in vain shall they help:
Wherefore have I called her, Rahab the inactive.
- 8 Go now, write it before them on a tablet;
And record it in letters upon a book:
That it may be for future times;
For a testimony for ever.
- 9 For this is a rebellious people, lying children;
Children who choose not to hear the law of JEHOVAH:
- 10 Who say to the seers, See not;
And to the prophets, Prophecy not right things:
Speak unto us smooth things, prophecy deceits.
- 11 Turn aside from the way; decline from the straight path;
Remove from our sight the Holy One of Israel.
- 12 Wherefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel:
Because ye have rejected this word;
And have trusted in obliquity, and perversion;
And have leaned entirely upon it:
- 13 Therefore shall this offence be unto you,
Like a breach threatening ruin; a swelling in a high wall;
Whose destruction cometh suddenly, in an instant.
- 14 It shall be broken, as when one breaketh a potter's vessel:
He dasheth it to pieces, and spareth it not;
So that there shall not be found a sherd among its fragments,
To take up fire from the hearth,
Or to dip up water from the cistern.
- 15 Verily thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH, the Holy One of Israel:
By turning from your ways, and by abiding quiet, ye shall be saved;
In silence, and in pious confidence, shall be your strength:
But ye would not hearken.
- 16 And ye said: Nay, but on horses will we flee;
Therefore shall ye be put to flight:
And on swift coursers will we ride;
Therefore shall they be swift, that pursue you.

- 17 One thousand, at the rebuke of one;
At the rebuke of five, ten thousand of you shall flee:
Till ye be left as a standard on the summit of a mountain;
And as a beacon on a high hill.
- 18 Yet for this shall JEHOVAH wait to shew favour unto you;
Even for this shall he expect in silence, that he may have mercy upon you:
(For JEHOVAH is a God of judgment; Blessed are all they that trust in him):
- 19 When a holy people shall dwell in Sion;
When in Jerusalem thou shalt implore him with weeping:
At the voice of thy cry he shall be abundantly gracious
unto thee;
No sooner shall he hear, than he shall answer thee.
- 20 Though JEHOVAH hath given you bread of distress, and water of affliction;
Yet the timely rain shall no more be restrained;
But thine eyes shall behold the timely rain.
- 21 And thine ears shall hear the word prompting thee behind:
Saying, This is the way; walk ye in it;
Turn not aside, to the right, or to the left.
- 22 And ye shall treat as defiled the covering of your idols of silver;
And the clothing of your molten images of gold:
Thou shalt cast them away like a polluted garment;
Thou shalt say unto them, Be gone from me.
- 23 And he shall give rain for thy seed,
With which thou shalt sow the ground;
And bread of the produce of the ground:
And it shall be abundant and plenteous.
Then shall thy cattle feed in large pasture;
- 24 And the oxen, and the young asses, that till the ground,
Shall eat well-fermented maslin,
Winnowed with the van and the sieve.
- 25 And on every lofty mountain,
And on every high hill,
Shall be disparting rills, and streams of water,
In the day of the great slaughter, when the mighty fall.
- 26 And the light of the moon shall be as the light of the meridian sun;

And the light of the meridian sun shall be seven-fold ;
In the day when JEHOVAH shall bind up the breach of his people ;
And shall heal the wound, which his stroke hath inflicted.

- 27 Lo ! the name of JEHOVAH cometh from afar ;
His wrath burneth, and the flame rageth violently ;
His lips are filled with indignation ;
And his tongue is as a consuming fire.
- 28 His spirit is like a torrent overflowing ;
It shall reach to the middle of the neck :
He cometh to toss the nations with the van of perdition ;
And there shall be a bridle, to lead them astray, in the jaws of the people.
- 29 Ye shall utter a song, as in the night when the feast is solemnly proclaimed ;
With joy of heart, as when one marcheth to the sound of the pipe ;
To go to the mountain of JEHOVAH, to the rock of Israel.
- 30 And JEHOVAH shall cause his glorious voice to be heard,
And the lighting down of his arm to be seen ;
With wrath indignant, and a flame of consuming fire ;
With a violent storm, and rushing showers, and hailstones.
- 31 By the voice of JEHOVAH the Assyrian shall be beaten
down ;
He, that was ready to smite with his staff.
- 32 And it shall be, that wherever shall pass the rod of correction,
Which JEHOVAH shall lay heavily upon him ;
It shall be accompanied with tabrets and harps ;
And with fierce battles shall he fight against them.
- 33 For Tophet is ordained of old ;
Even the same for the king is prepared :
He hath made it deep ; he hath made it large ;
A fiery pyre, and abundance of fuel ;
And the breath of JEHOVAH, like a stream of sulphur, shall kindle it.

- CHAP. 1      Wo unto them, that go down to Egypt for help;
XXXI.      Who trust in horses for their support :
            Who confide in chariots, because they are many ;
            And in horsemen, because they are very strong :
            But look not unto the Holy One of Israel ;
            And of JEHOVAH they ask not counsel.
- 2      But he in his wisdom will bring evil upon them ;
            And he will not set aside his word :
            But will rise against the house of the wicked ;
            And against the helpers of those that work iniquity.
- 3      For the Egyptians are man, and not God ;
            And their horses are flesh, and not spirit :
            And JEHOVAH shall stretch forth his hand ;
            And the helper shall fall, and the holpen shall be overthrown ;
            And together shall all of them be destroyed.
- 4      For thus hath JEHOVAH said unto me :
            Like as the lion growleth,
            Even the young lion, over his prey ;
            Though the whole company of shepherds be called together against him ;
            At their voice he will not be terrified,
            Nor at their tumult will he be humbled :
            So shall JEHOVAH God of Hosts descend to fight
            For Mount Sion, and for his own hill.
- 5      As the mother birds, hovering over their young,
            So shall JEHOVAH God of Hosts protect Jerusalem ;
            Protecting and delivering ; leaping forward, and rescuing her.
- 6      Return unto him, from whom ye have so deeply engaged in revolt,
            O ye sons of Israel !
- 7      Verily in that day shall they cast away with contempt,
            Every man his idols of silver, and his idols of gold ;
            The sin, which their own hands have made.
- 8      And the Assyrian shall fall by a sword not of man ;
            Yea a sword not of mortal shall devour him.
            And he shall betake himself to flight from the face of the sword ;
            And the courage of his chosen men shall fail.

- 9 And through terror he shall pass beyond his stronghold ;
And his princes shall be struck with consternation at his flight.
Thus saith JEHOVAH, who hath his fire in Sion,
And his furnace in Jerusalem.

CHAP.
XXXII.

- 1 BEHOLD, a king shall reign in righteousness ;
And princes shall rule with equity :
2 And the man shall be as a covert from the storm, as a refuge from the flood ;
As canals of waters in a dry place ;
As the shadow of a great rock in a land fainting with
heat :
3 And him the eyes of those, that see, shall regard ;
And the ears of those, that hear, shall hearken.
4 Even the heart of the rash shall consider, and acquire knowledge ;
And the stammering tongue shall speak readily and plainly.
5 The fool shall no longer be called honourable ;
And the niggard shall no more be called liberal :
6 For the fool will still utter folly ;
And his heart will devise iniquity :
Practising hypocrisy, and speaking wrongfully against
JEHOVAH ;
To exhaust the soul of the hungry,
And to deprive the thirsty of drink.
7 As for the niggard, his instruments are evil :
He plotteth mischievous devices ;
To entangle the humble with lying words ;
And to defeat the assertions of the poor in judgment.
8 But the generous will devise generous things ;
And he by his generous purposes shall be established.
9 O YE women, that sit at ease, arise, hear my voice !
O ye daughters, that dwell in security, give ear unto my speech !
10 Years upon years shall ye be disquieted, O ye careless women ;
For the vintage hath failed, the gathering of the fruits shall not come.

- 11 Tremble, O ye that are at ease ; be ye disquieted, O ye careless ones !
Strip ye, make ye bare ; and gird ye sackcloth
- 12 Upon your loins, upon your breasts :
Mourn ye for the pleasant field, for the fruitful vine.
- 13 Over the land of my people the thorn and the brier shall come up ;
Yea, over all the joyous houses, over the exulting city.
- 14 For the palace is deserted, the populous city is left desolate ;
Ophel and the watch-tower shall for a long time be a den,
A joy of wild asses, a pasture for the flocks :
- 15 Till the spirit from on high be poured out upon us ;
And the wilderness become a fruitful field ;
And the fruitful field be esteemed a forest :
- 16 And judgment shall dwell in the wilderness ;
And in the fruitful field shall reside righteousness.
- 17 And the work of righteousness shall be peace ;
And the effect of righteousness perpetual quiet and security :
- 18 And my people shall dwell in a peaceful mansion,
And in habitations secure,
And in resting-places undisturbed.
- 19 But the hail shall fall, and the forest be brought down ;
And the city shall be laid level with the plain.
- 20 Blessed are ye, who sow your seed in every well-watered place ;
Who send forth the foot of the ox and the ass.

CHAP.
XXXIII.

- 1 WO unto thee, thou spoiler, who hast not been spoiled thyself ;
And thou plunderer, who hast not been plundered :
When thou hast ceased to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled ;
When thou art weary of plundering, they shall plunder thee.
- 2 O JEHOVAH, have mercy on us ; we have trusted in thee ;
Be thou our strength every morning ;
Even our salvation in the time of distress.

- 3 From thy terrible voice the peoples fled ;
When thou didst raise thyself up, the nations were dispersed.
- 4 But your spoil shall be gathered, as the locust gathereth ;
As the caterpillar runneth to and fro, so shall they run,
and seize it.
- 5 JEHOVAH is exalted ; yea, he dwelleth on high :
He hath filled Sion with judgment and justice.
- 6 And wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times,
The possession of continued salvation ;
The fear of JEHOVAH, this shall be thy treasure.
- 7 Behold the mighty men raise a grievous cry ;
The messengers of peace weep bitterly.
- 8 The highways are desolate ; the traveller ceaseth :
He hath broken the covenant ; he hath rejected the offered cities ;
Of men he maketh no account.
- 9 The land mourneth, it languisheth ;
Libanus is put to shame, it withereth ;
Sharon is become like a desert ;
And Bashan and Carmel are stripped of their beauty.
- 10 Now will I arise, saith JEHOVAH ;
Now will I lift myself up on high ; now will I be exalted.
- 11 Ye shall conceive chaff ; ye shall bring forth stubble ;
And my spirit like fire shall consume you.
- 12 And the peoples shall be burned, as the lime is burned ;
As the thorns are cut up, and consumed in the fire.
- 13 Hear, O ye that are afar off, my doings ;
And acknowledge, O ye that are near, my power.
- 14 The sinners in Sion are struck with dread ;
Terror hath seized the hypocrites :
Who among us can abide this consuming fire ?
Who among us can abide these continued burnings ?
- 15 He who walketh in perfect righteousness, and speaketh right things ;
Who detesteth the lucre of oppression ;
Who shaketh his hands from bribery ;
Who stoppeth his ears to the proposal of bloodshed ;

- Who shutteth his eyes against the appearance of evil :
- 16 His dwelling shall be in the high places ;
The strongholds of the rocks shall be his lofty fortress :
His bread shall be duly furnished ; his waters shall not fail.
- 17 Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty ;
They shall see thine own land far extended.
- 18 Thine heart shall reflect on the past terror :
Where is now the accomptant ? where the weigher of tribute ?
Where is he, that numbered the towers ?
- 19 Thou shalt see no more that barbarous people ;
The people of a deep speech, which thou couldst not hear ;
And of a stammering tongue, which thou couldst not understand.
- 20 Thou shalt see Sion, the city of our solemn feasts ;
Thine eyes shall behold Jerusalem,
The quiet habitation, the tabernacle unshaken :
Whose stakes shall not be plucked up for ever,
And of whose cords none shall be broken.
- 21 But the glorious name of JEHOVAH shall be unto us,
A place of confluent streams, of broad rivers ;
Which no oared ship shall pass,
Neither shall any mighty vessel go through.
- 22 For JEHOVAH is our judge ; JEHOVAH is our lawgiver ;
JEHOVAH is our king : he shall save us.
- 23 Thy sails are loose ; they cannot make them fast :
Thy mast is not firm ; they cannot spread the ensign.
Then shall a copious spoil be divided ;
Even the lame shall seize the prey.
- 24 Neither shall the inhabitant say, I am disabled with sickness :
The people, that dwelleth therein, is freed from the punishment of their iniquity.

CHAP. 1     DRAW near, O ye nations, and hearken ;
XXXIV.     And attend unto me, O ye peoples !
Let the earth hear, and the fulness thereof ;
The world, and all that spring from it.

- 2 For the wrath of JEHOVAH is kindled against all the nations;
And his anger against all the orders thereof:
He hath devoted them; he hath given them up to slaughter.
- 3 And their slain shall be cast out;
And from their carcasses their stink shall ascend;
And the mountains shall melt down with their blood.
- 4 And all the host of heaven shall waste away;
And the heavens shall be rolled up like a scroll:
And all their host shall wither;
As the withered leaf falleth from the vine,
And as the blighted fruit from the fig-tree.
- 5 For my sword is made bare in the heavens:
Behold, on Edom it shall descend;
And on the people justly by me devoted to destruction.
- 6 The sword of JEHOVAH is glutted with blood;
It is pampered with fat:
With the blood of lambs, and of goats;
With the fat of the reins of rams:
For JEHOVAH celebrateth a sacrifice in Botsrah,
And a great slaughter in the land of Edom.
- 7 And the wild goats shall fall down with them;
And the bullocks, together with the bulls:
And their own land shall be drunken with their blood,
And their dust shall be enriched with fat.
- 8 For it is the day of vengeance to JEHOVAH;
The year of recompense to the defender of the cause of Sion.
- 9 And her torrents shall be turned into pitch,
And her dust into sulphur;
And her whole land shall become burning pitch:
- 10 By night or by day it shall not be extinguished;
For ever shall her smoke ascend:
From generation to generation she shall lie desert;
To everlasting ages no one shall pass through her;
- 11 But the pelican and the porcupine shall inherit her;
And the owl and the raven shall inhabit there:
And he shall stretch over her the line of devastation,
And the plummet of emptiness over her scorched plains.
- 12 No more shall they boast the renown of the kingdom;
And all her princes shall utterly fail.

- 13 And in her palaces shall spring up thorns;
The nettle and the bramble, in her fortresses;
And she shall become an habitation for dragons,
A court for the daughters of the ostrich.
- 14 And the jackals and the mountain-cats shall meet one another;
And the satyr shall call to his fellow:
There also the screech-owl shall pitch;
And shall find for herself a place of rest.
- 15 There shall the night-raven make her nest, and lay her eggs;
And she shall hatch them, and gather her young under her shadow:
There also shall the vultures be gathered together;
Every one of them shall join her mate.
- 16 Consult ye the book of JEHOVAH, and read:
Not one of these shall be missed;
Not a female shall lack her mate:
For the mouth of JEHOVAH hath given the command;
And his spirit itself hath gathered them.
- 17 And he hath cast the lot for them;
And his hand hath meted out their portion by the line:
They shall possess the land for a perpetual inheritance;
From generation to generation shall they dwell therein.

- CHAP. XXXV. 1 THE desert, and the waste, shall be glad;
And the wilderness shall rejoice, and flourish:
- 2 Like the rose shall it beautifully flourish;
And the well-watered plain of Jordan shall also rejoice:
The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it,
The beauty of Carmel and of Sharon:
These shall behold the glory of JEHOVAH,
The majesty of our God.
- 3 Strengthen ye the feeble hands,
And confirm ye the tottering knees.
- 4 Say ye to the faint-hearted: Be ye strong;
Fear ye not; behold your God!
Vengeance will come; the retribution of God:
He himself will come, and will deliver you.
- 5 Then shall be unclosed the eyes of the blind;
And the ears of the deaf shall be opened:
- 6 Then shall the lame bound like the hart,
And the tongue of the dumb shall sing:

- For in the wilderness shall burst forth waters,
 And torrents in the desert :
 7 And the glowing sand shall become a pool,
 And the thirsty soil bubbling springs :
 And in the haunt of dragons shall spring forth
 The grass, with the reed, and the bulrush.
 8 And a highway shall be there ;
 And it shall be called the way of holiness :
 No unclean person shall pass through it :
 But He himself shall be with them, walking in the way,
 And the foolish shall not err therein.
 9 No lion shall be there ;
 Nor shall the tyrant of the beasts come up thither :
 Neither shall he be found there ;
 But the redeemed shall walk in it.
 10 Yea the ransomed of JEHOVAH shall return :
 They shall come to Sion with triumph ;
 And perpetual gladness shall crown their heads :
 Joy and gladness shall they obtain ;
 And sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

- CHAP. XXXVI. 1 IN the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, Senacherib king of Assyria came up against all the fenced cities of 2 Judah, and took them. And the king of Assyria sent Rabshakeh, from Lachish to Jerusalem, to the king Hezekiah, with a great body of forces : and he presented himself at the conduit of the upper pool, in the highway
 3 that leads to the fuller's field. Then came out unto him Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph,
 4 the recorder. And Rabshakeh said unto them : Say ye to Hezekiah ; Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What is this ground of confidence, in which
 5 thou confidest ? Thou hast said, (but they are vain words), I have counsel and strength sufficient for the war. Now in whom dost thou confide, that thou re-
 6 bellest against me ? Thou certainly confidest in the support of this broken reed, in Egypt ; on which if a man lean, it will pierce his hand, and go through it : such is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that confide in 7 him. But if ye say to me, We confide in JEHOVAH our God ; is it not He, whose high places and whose altars

- Hezekiah hath removed ; and hath commanded Judah
8 and Jerusalem to worship only before this altar ? Enter now, I pray thee, into an engagement with my lord the king of Assyria ; and I will give thee two thousand horses, on condition that thou canst on thy part provide 9 riders for them. How then wilt thou turn back any one commander, among the least of my lord's servants, advancing against thee ? And trustest thou, that Egypt 10 will supply thee with chariots and with horsemen ? And am I now come up without JEHOVAH against this land to destroy it ? JEHOVAH hath said unto me, Go thou up against this land, and destroy it.
- 11 Then said Eliakim, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rabshakeh : Speak, we beseech thee, to thy servants in the Syrian language, for we understand it ; and speak not to us in the Jewish language, in the hearing of the 12 people who are upon the wall. And Rabshakeh said, Hath my lord sent me to thy lord and to thee, to speak these words ? and not to the men that sit on the wall, destined to eat their own dung, and drink their own 13 urine, together with you ? Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jewish language, and said : Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of 14 Assyria. Thus saith the king : Let not Hezekiah de-15 ceive you ; for he will not be able to deliver you. And let not Hezekiah persuade you to trust in JEHOVAH ; saying, JEHOVAH will certainly deliver us ; this city shall not be given up into the hand of the king of 16 Assyria. Harken not unto Hezekiah ; for thus saith the king of Assyria : Make peace with me, and come out unto me. And eat ye every one of his own vine, and every one of his own fig-tree ; and drink ye every 17 one the waters of his own cistern : until I come and take you to a land like your own land ; a land of corn and of wine, a land of bread and of vineyards. Nor let 18 Hezekiah seduce you, saying, JEHOVAH will deliver us.
Have the gods of the nations delivered each his own 19 land from the hand of the king of Assyria ? Where are the gods of Hamath, and of Arphad ? where are the gods of Sepharvaim ? Have they delivered Samaria out 20 of my hand ? Who are there among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their own lands out of my hand, that JEHOVAH should deliver out of my hand 21 Jerusalem? But the people held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's command was, Answer him not.

22 Then came Eliakim, the son of Hilkiash, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah, with their clothes rent; and reported unto him the words of Rabshakeh.

CHAP.
 XXXVII.

1 And when king Hezekiah heard it, he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the
 2 house of JEHOVAH. And he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, to Isaiah,
 3 the son of Amots, the prophet. And they said unto him: Thus saith Hezekiah; This day is a day of distress, and of rebuke, and of contumely: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring
 4 forth. O that JEHOVAH thy God would hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom his lord the king of Assyria hath sent to reproach the living God! and that he would refute the words, which JEHOVAH thy God hath heard! And do thou offer up thy prayer for the poor remains
 5 of the people. And the servants of king Hezekiah came
 6 to Isaiah. And Isaiah said unto them: Thus shall ye say to your lord; Thus saith JEHOVAH, Be not afraid, because of the words which thou hast heard, with which the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.
 7 Behold, I will infuse a spirit into him; and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 But Rabshakeh returned; and found the king of Assyria besieging Libnah: for he had heard, that he
 9 had decamped from Lachish. And when Senacherib had received advice concerning Tirhakah king of Cush, that he was advancing to give him battle; he sent messengers again to Hezekiah, saying: Thus shall ye say to Hezekiah king of Judah; Let not thy God, in whom thou confidest, deceive thee; by assuring thee that Jerusalem shall not be given up into the hand of the king
 11 of Assyria. Thou hast certainly heard, what the kings

- of Assyria have done to all lands, which they have utterly destroyed: and shalt thou be delivered? Have the gods of the nations delivered those, which my fathers have destroyed? Gozan, and Haran, and Retseph; and the sons of Eden, which were in Thelassar? Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Henah, and of Ivah?
- 14 And Hezekiah received the letters from the hand of the messengers, and read them; and he went up to the house of JEHOVAH: and Hezekiah spread them before the presence of JEHOVAH. And Hezekiah prayed before JEHOVAH, saying: O JEHOVAH, God of Hosts, thou God of Israel, who art seated on the cherubim! Thou art the God, thou alone, to all the kingdoms of the earth! Thou hast made the heavens, and the earth!
- 17 Incline, O JEHOVAH, thine ear, and hear; open, O JEHOVAH, thine eyes, and see: yea, hear all the words of Senacherib, which he hath sent to reproach the living God. In truth, O JEHOVAH, the kings of Assyria have destroyed all the nations, and their lands; and have cast their gods into the fire: for they were not gods, but the work of the hands of man, wood and stone; therefore they have destroyed them. And now, O JEHOVAH, our God, save us, we beseech thee, from his hand; that all the kingdoms of the earth may know, that thou JEHOVAH art the only God.
- 21 Then Isaiah the son of Amots sent unto Hezekiah, saying: Thus saith JEHOVAH the God of Israel; Thy prayer unto me, concerning Senacherib king of Assyria, I have heard. This is the word which JEHOVAH hath spoken concerning him:

- THE virgin daughter of Sion hath despised thee,
she hath laughed thee to scorn;
The daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head behind thee.
- 23 Whom hast thou reproached, and reviled; and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice?
And hast lifted up thine eyes on high? Even against the Holy One of Israel.

- 24 By thy messengers hast thou reproached JEHOVAH, and said :
By the multitude of my chariots have I ascended
The highth of the mountains, the sides of Lebanon ;
And I will cut down his tallest cedars, his choicest fir-trees ;
And I will penetrate into his extreme retreats, his richest forests.
- 25 I have digged, and I have drunk strange waters ;
And I have dried up with the sole of my feet all the canals of fenced places.
- 26 Hast thou not heard, of old, that I have disposed it ?
And, of ancient times, that I have formed it ?
Now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldst be to lay waste
Warlike nations, strong-fenced cities.
- 27 Therefore were their inhabitants of small strength ;
they were dismayed and confounded :
They were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb ;
The grass of the house-top ; and as the corn blasted before it groweth up.
- 28 But thy sitting down, and thy going out, and thy coming in,
And thy rage against me, I have known :
- 29 Because thy rage against me, and thy insolence, is come up into mine ears ;
Therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy jaws ;
And I will turn thee back by the way in which thou camest.
- 30 And this shall be a sign unto thee :
Eat this year that which groweth of itself ;
And the second year, that which springeth up of the same ;
And in the third year sow ye, and reap ;
And plant vineyards, and eat the fruit thereof.
- 31 And again shall the escaped, the remnant of the house of Judah,
Strike root downward, and bear fruit upward.
For from Jerusalem shall go forth the remnant ;
And the part escaped from Mount Sion :
The zeal of JEHOVAH God of Hosts shall effect this.

32 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH concerning the king of Assyria :

He shall not enter into this city ;
Nor shall he shoot an arrow there ;
Nor shall he present a shield before it ;
Nor shall he cast up a mound against it.

33 By the way, in which he came, by the same shall he return ;

And into this city shall he not come ; saith JEHOVAH.

34 And I will protect this city to deliver it ;

For mine own sake, and for the sake of David my servant.

35 And the angel of JEHOVAH went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred and fourscore and five thousand men : and when the people arose early in

36 the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses. Then Senacherib king of Assyria decamped, and departed, and 37 returned ; and dwelt at Nineveh. And as he was worshipping in the temple of Nisroc his god, Adramelec and Sharetser, his sons, smote him with the sword : and they escaped into the land of Armenia ; and Esarhaddon his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP.
XXXVIII.

1 AT that time Hezekiah was seized with a mortal sickness : and Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amots, came unto him ; and said unto him : Thus saith JEHOVAH ; Give orders concerning the affairs of thy family ; for
2 thou must die ; thou shalt no longer live. Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall ; and made his supplication to JEHOVAH. And he said : I beseech thee, O
3 JEHOVAH, remember now how I have endeavoured to walk before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart ; and have done that which is good in thine eyes. And He-
4 zekiah wept, and lamented grievously. Now, [before Isaiah was gone out into the middle court], the word of JEHOVAH came unto him, saying : Go [back], and say
5 unto Hezekiah : Thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of David thy father : I have heard thy supplication ; I have seen thy tears. Behold [I will heal thee ; and on the third day thou shalt go up into the house of JEHOVAH. And]
6 I will add unto thy days fifteen years. And I will deliver thee, and this city, from the hand of the king of 22 Assyria; and I will protect this city. And [Hezekiah said: By what sign shall I know that I shall go up into 7 the house of JEHOVAH? And Isaiah said:] This shall be the sign unto thee from JEHOVAH, that JEHOVAH will 8 bring to effect this word which he hath spoken. Behold, I will bring back the shadow of the degrees, by which the sun is gone down on the degrees of Ahaz, ten degrees backward. And the sun returned backward ten degrees, on the degrees by which it had gone down.

 21 And Isaiah said: Let them take a lump of figs: and they bruised them, and applied them to the boil; and he recovered.

9 THE WRITING OF HEZEKIAH KING OF JUDAH, WHEN HE HAD BEEN SICK, AND WAS RECOVERED FROM HIS SICKNESS.

10 I said, when my days were just going to be cut off,
 I shall pass through the gates of the grave;
 I am deprived of the residue of my years!
 11 I said, I shall no more see JEHOVAH in the land of the living!
 I shall no longer behold man, with the inhabitants of the world!
 12 My habitation is taken away, and is removed from me, like a shepherd's tent:
 My life is cut off, as by the weaver; he will sever me
 from the loom;
 In the course of the day thou wilt finish my web.
 13 I roared until the morning, like the lion;
 So did he break to pieces all my bones.
 14 Like the swallow, like the crane, did I twitter;
 I made a moaning like the dove.
 Mine eyes fail with looking upward:
 O Lord, contend thou for me; be thou my surety.—
 15 What shall I say? he hath given me a promise, and he hath performed it.
 Through the rest of my years will I reflect on this bitterness of my soul.
 16 For this cause shall it be declared, O JEHOVAH, concerning thee,
 That thou hast revived my spirit;

- That thou hast restored my health, and prolonged my life.
- 17 Behold, my anguish is changed into ease !
Thou hast rescued my soul from perdition ;
Yea thou hast cast behind thy back all my sins.
- 18 Verily the grave shall not give thanks unto thee ;
death shall not praise thee ;
They that go down into the pit shall not await thy truth :
- 19 The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day ;
The father to the children shall make known thy faithfulness.
- 20 JEHOVAH was present to save me : therefore will we sing our songs to the harp,
All the days of our life, in the house of JEHOVAH.

CHAP.
XXXIX.

- 1 AT that time Merodach Baladan, the son of Baladan king of Babylon, sent letters, and ambassadors, and a present to Hezekiah ; for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered. And Hezekiah was rejoiced at their arrival : and he shewed them his magazines, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and his whole arsenal, and all that was contained in his treasures : there was not any thing in his house, and in all his dominion, that Hezekiah did not shew them.
- 3 And Isaiah the prophet came unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him : What say these men ? and from whence came they unto thee ? And Hezekiah said : They are come to me from a distant country ; from Babylon.
- 4 And he said : What have they seen in thy house ? And Hezekiah said : They have seen every thing in my house : there is nothing in my treasures, which I have
- 5 not shewn them. And Isaiah said unto Hezekiah : Hear thou the word of JEHOVAH God of Hosts.
- 6 Behold, the day shall come, when all that is in thy house, and that thy fathers have treasured up unto this day, shall be carried away to Babylon : there shall not
- 7 any thing be left, saith JEHOVAH. And of thy sons, which shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take : and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of 8 the king of Babylon. And Hezekiah said unto Isaiah :

Gracious is the word of JEHOVAH, which thou hast delivered ! For, added he, there shall be peace, according to his faithful promise, in my days.

CHAP. 1 COMFORT ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God :

XL. 2 Speak ye animating words to Jerusalem, and declare unto her,

That her warfare is fulfilled ; that the expiation of her iniquity is accepted ;

That she shall receive at the hand of JEHOVAH

[Blessings] double to the punishment of all her sins.

3 A voice crieth : In the wilderness prepare ye the way of JEHOVAH !

Make straight in the desert a highway for our God !

4 Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill be brought low ;

And the crooked shall become straight, and the rough places a smooth plain :

5 And the glory of JEHOVAH shall be revealed ;

And all flesh shall see together the salvation of our God :

For the mouth of JEHOVAH hath spoken it.

6 A voice sayeth : Proclaim ! And I said, What shall I proclaim ?

All flesh is grass, and all its glory like the flower of the field :

7 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth ;

When the wind of JEHOVAH bloweth upon it.

Verily this people is grass :

8 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth ;

But the word of our God shall stand for ever.

9 Get thee up upon a high mountain, O daughter that bringest glad tidings to Sion :

Exalt thy voice with strength, O daughter that bringest glad tidings to Jerusalem.

Exalt it ; be not afraid :

Say to the cities of Judah, Behold your God !

10 Behold, the Lord JEHOVAH shall come against the strong one,

And his arm shall prevail over him :

- Behold, his reward is with him, and the recompense of his work before him.
- 11 Like a shepherd shall he feed his flock ;
In his arm shall he gather up the lambs,
And shall bear them in his bosom ; the nursing ewes shall he gently lead.
- 12 Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand ;
And hath meted out the heavens by his span ;
And hath comprehended the dust of the earth in a tierce ;
And hath weighed in scales the mountains, and the hills in a balance ?
- 13 Who hath directed the spirit of JEHOVAH ;
And, as one of his council, hath informed him ?
- 14 Whom hath he consulted, that he should instruct him,
And teach him the path of judgment ;
That he should impart to him science,
And inform him in the way of understanding ?
- 15 Behold, the nations are as a drop from the bucket ;
As the small dust of the balance shall they be accounted :
Behold, the islands he taketh up as an atom ;
- 16 And Lebanon is not sufficient for the fire ;
Nor his beasts sufficient for the burnt-offering.
- 17 All the nations are as nothing before him ;
They are esteemed by him as less than nought, and vanity.
- 18 To whom therefore will ye liken God ?
And what is the model of resemblance, that ye will prepare for him ?
- 19 The workman casteth an image ;
And the smith overlayeth it with plates of gold ;
And forgeth for it chains of silver.
- 20 He that cannot afford a costly oblation, chooseth a piece of wood that will not rot ;
He procureth a skilful artist
To erect an image, which shall not be moved.
- 21 Will ye not know ? will ye not hear ?
Hath it not been declared to you from the beginning ?
Have ye not understood it from the foundations of the earth ?
- 22 It is He, that sitteth on the circle of the earth ;

- And the inhabitants are to him as grasshoppers :
That extendeth the heavens, as a thin veil ;
And spreadeth them out, as a tent to dwell in :
- 23 That reduceth princes to nothing ;
That maketh the judges of the earth a mere inanity.
- 24 Yea they shall not leave a plant behind them, they shall not be sown,
Their trunk shall not spread its root in the ground :
If he but blow upon them, they instantly wither ;
And the whirlwind shall bear them away like the stubble.
- 25 To whom then will ye liken me ?
And to whom shall I be equalled ? saith the Holy One.
- 26 Lift up your eyes on high ;
And see, who hath created these.
He draweth forth their armies by number ;
He calleth them all by name :
Through the greatness of his strength, and the mightiness of his power,
Not one of them faileth to appear.
- 27 Wherefore sayest thou then, O Jacob,
And why speakest thou thus, O Israel ;
My way is hidden from JEHOVAH,
And my cause passeth unregarded by my God ?
- 28 Hast thou not known, hast thou not heard,
That JEHOVAH is the everlasting God,
The Creator of the bounds of the earth ?
That he neither fainteth, nor is wearied ;
And that his understanding is unsearchable ?
- 29 He giveth strength to the faint,
And to the infirm he multiplieth force.
- 30 The young men shall faint and be wearied ;
And the chosen youths shall stumble and fall :
- 31 But they that trust in JEHOVAH shall gather new
strength ;
They shall put forth fresh feathers like the moulting
eagle :
They shall run, and not be wearied ;
They shall march onward, and shall not faint.
- CHAP. I     LET the distant nations repair to me with new force
XLI.             of mind ;
And let the peoples recover their strength.

Let them draw near ; then let them speak ;
Let us enter into solemn debate together.

- 2 Who hath raised up the righteous man from the east ;

Hath called him to attend his steps ?
Hath subdued nations at his presence ;
And given him dominion over kings ?
Hath made them like the dust before his sword ;
And like the driven stubble before his bow ?

- 3 He pursueth them ; he passeth in safety ;
By a way never trodden before with his feet.

- 4 Who hath performed, and made these things,
Calling the several generations from the beginning ?
I JEHOVAH, the first ;
And with the last, I am the same.

- 5 The distant nations saw, and they were afraid ;
The remotest parts of the earth, and they were terrified.
They drew near, they came together ;

- 6 Every one assisted his neighbour,
And said to his brother, Be of good courage.

- 7 The carver encourageth the smith ;
He that smootheneth with the hammer, him that smiteth on the anvil ;
Saying of the solder, It is good ;
And he fixeth the idol with nails, that it shall not move.

- 8 But thou, Israel, my servant ;
Thou, Jacob, whom I have chosen ;
The seed of Abraham, my friend :

- 9 Thou, whom I have led by the hand from the ends of
the earth ;
And called from the extremities thereof ;
And I said unto thee, Thou art my servant ;
I have chosen thee, and will not reject thee :

- 10 Fear not, for I am with thee ;
Be not dismayed, for I am thy God.
I have strengthened thee, I have assisted thee ;
I have even supported thee with my faithful right hand.
11 Behold, they, that were enraged against thee, shall be ashamed and confounded ;

- They, that contended with thee, shall become as nothing, and shall utterly perish.
- 12 Thou shalt seek them, and shalt not find them, even the men that strove with thee :
They shall become as nothing, and as mere nought, even the men that opposed thee in battle.
- 13 For I am JEHOVAH thy God, that hold thee fast by thy right hand ;
That say unto thee, Fear not ; I am thy helper.
- 14 Fear not, thou worm Jacob ; ye mortals of Israel :
I am thy helper, saith JEHOVAH ;
And thine avenger is the Holy One of Israel.
- 15 Behold, I have made thee a thrashing wain ;
A new corn-drag armed with pointed teeth :
Thou shalt thrash the mountains, and beat them small :
And reduce the hills to chaff :
- 16 Thou shalt winnow them, and the wind shall bear them
away ;
And the tempest shall scatter them abroad :
But thou shalt rejoice in JEHOVAH ;
In the Holy One of Israel shalt thou triumph.
- 17 The poor and the needy seek for water, and there is none ;
Their tongue is parched with thirst :
I JEHOVAH will answer them ;
The God of Israel, I will not forsake them.
- 18 I will open in the high places rivers ;
And in the midst of the vallies, fountains :
I will make the desert a standing pool ;
And the dry ground streams of waters.
- 19 In the wilderness I will give the cedar ;
The acacia, the myrtle, and the tree producing oil :
I will plant the fir-tree in the desert ;
The pine, and the box together :
- 20 That they may see, and that they may know ;
And may consider, and understand at once ;
That the hand of JEHOVAH hath done this,
And that the Holy One of Israel hath created it.
- 21 Draw near, produce your cause, saith JEHOVAH :
Produce these your mighty powers, saith the king of Jacob.

- 22 Let them approach, and tell us the things that shall happen :
The things that shall first happen, what they are, let them tell us ;
And we will consider them ; and we shall know the event.
Or declare to us things to come hereafter ;
- 23 Tell us the things that will come to pass in latter times :
Then shall we know that ye are Gods.
Yea, do good, or do evil ;
Then shall we be struck at once with admiration and terror.
- 24 But, behold, ye are less than nothing ;
And your operation is less than nought :
Abhorred be the man that chooseth you !
- 25 I have raised up one from the north, and he shall come ;
From the rising of the sun he shall invoke my name :
And he shall trample on princes, like the mortar ;
Even as the potter treadeth down the clay.
- 26 Who hath declared this from the beginning, that we should know it ?
And beforehand, that we might say, The prediction is true ?
There was not one, that foretold it ; not one, that declared it ;
There was not one, that heard your words.
- 27 I first to Sion [give the word], Behold they are here ;
And to Jerusalem I give the messenger of glad tidings.
- 28 But I looked, and there was no man ;
And among the idols, and there was no one that gave warning ;
- 29 And I inquired of them, and [there was no one] that could return an answer.
Behold, they are all of them vanity ; their works are nought :
Mere wind and emptiness are their molten images.

CHAP. I      BEHOLD my servant, whom I will uphold ;
XLII.      My chosen, in whom my soul delighteth :
I will make my spirit rest upon him ;
And he shall publish judgment to the nations.

- 2 He shall not cry aloud, nor raise a clamour,
Nor cause his voice to be heard in the public places :
- 3 The bruised reed he shall not break ;
And the dimly burning flax he shall not quench :
He shall publish judgment, so as to establish it perfectly.
- 4 His force shall not be abated, nor broken ;
Until he hath firmly seated judgment in the earth :
And the distant nations shall earnestly wait for his law.
- 5 Thus saith the God, even JEHOVAH,
Who created the heavens, and stretched them out ;
Who spread abroad the earth, and the produce thereof ;
Who giveth breath to the people upon it,
And spirit to them that tread thereon :
- 6 I JEHOVAH have called thee for a righteous purpose ;
And I will take hold of thy hand, and will preserve thee ;
And I will give thee for a covenant to the people, for a light to the nations :
- 7 To open the eyes of the blind ;
To bring the captive out of confinement ;
And from the dungeon those that dwell in darkness.
- 8 I am JEHOVAH, that is my name ;
And my glory will I not give to another,
Nor my praise to the graven images.
- 9 The former predictions, lo ! they are come to pass ;
And new events I now declare :
Before they spring forth, I make them known unto you.
- 10 Sing unto JEHOVAH a new song ;
His praise, from the ends of the earth :
Ye that go down upon the sea, and all that fill it ;
Ye distant sea-coasts, and ye that dwell therein :
- 11 Let the desert cry aloud, and the cities thereof ;
The villages, and they that dwell in Kedar :
Let the inhabitants of the rocky country utter a joyful sound ;
Let them shout aloud from the top of the mountains :
- 12 Let them ascribe glory to JEHOVAH ;
And among the distant nations make known his praise.
- 13 JEHOVAH shall march forth like a hero ;
Like a mighty warrior shall he rouse his vengeance :

- He shall cry aloud; he shall shout amain;
He shall exert his strength against his enemies.
- 14 I have long holden my peace; shall I keep silence for ever?
Shall I still contain myself? I will cry out like a woman in travail;
Breathing short, and drawing in my breath with violence.
- 15 I will make barren the mountains and hills;
And burn up all the grass that is upon them;
I will make the rivers dry deserts;
And scorch up the pools of water.
- 16 I will lead the blind in a way, which they have not known;
And through paths, which they have not known, will I make them go:
I will turn darkness into light before them;
And the rugged ways into a smooth plain.
These things will I do for them, and will not forsake them.
- 17 They are turned backward, they are utterly confounded, who trust in the graven image;
Who say unto the molten image, Ye are our gods!
- 18 Hear, O ye deaf;
And, ye blind, look attentively, that ye may see!
- 19 Who is blind, but my servant;
And deaf, as he to whom I have sent my messengers?
Who is blind, as he who is perfectly instructed;
And deaf, as the servant of JEHOVAH?
- 20 Thou hast seen indeed, yet thou dost not regard;
Thine ears are open, yet thou wilt not hear.
- 21 Yet JEHOVAH was gracious unto him, for his truth's sake;
He hath exalted his own praise, and made it glorious.
- 22 But this is a people spoiled and plundered;
All their chosen youths are taken in the toils,
And are plunged in the dark dungeons:
They are become a spoil, and there was none to rescue them;
A plunder, and no one said, Restore.

- 23 Who is there among you, that will listen to this;
That will hearken, and attend to it, for the future?
- 24 Who hath given Jacob for a spoil;
And Israel to the plunderers?
Was it not JEHOVAH; He, against whom they have sinned;
In whose ways they would not walk;
And whose law they would not obey?
- 25 Therefore poured he out upon them the heat of his wrath, and the violence of war:
And it kindled a flame round about him, yet he did not regard it;
And it set him on fire, yet he did not consider it.

- CHAP. 1 Yet now, thus saith JEHOVAH;
XLIII. Who created thee, O Jacob; and who formed thee, O
Israel:
Fear thou not, for I have redeemed thee;
I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine.
- 2 When thou passest through waters, I am with thee;
And through rivers, they shall not overwhelm thee:
When thou walkest in the fire, thou shalt not be scorched;
And the flame shall not take hold of thee.
- 3 For I am JEHOVAH, thy God;
The Holy One of Israel, thy redeemer:
I have given Egypt for thy ransom;
Cush, and Saba, in thy stead.
- 4 Because thou hast been precious in my sight,
Thou hast been honoured, and I have loved thee:
Therefore will I give men instead of thee:
And peoples instead of thy soul.
- 5 Fear thou not, for I am with thee:
From the east I will bring thy children,
And from the west I will gather thee together:
- 6 I will say to the north, Give up;
And to the south, Withhold not:
Bring my sons from afar;
And my daughters from the ends of the earth:
- 7 Every one that is called by my name,
Whom for my glory I have created;
Whom I have formed, yea whom I have made.

- 8 Bring forth the people, blind, although they have eyes;
And deaf, although they have ears.
- 9 Let all the nations be gathered together,
And let the peoples be collected.
Who among them will declare this;
And will tell us, what first shall come to pass?
Let them produce their witnesses, that they may be justified;
Or let them hear in their turn, and say, This is true.
- 10 Ye are my witnesses, saith JEHOVAH;
Even my servant, whom I have chosen:
That ye may know, and believe me;
And understand, that I am He.
Before me no god was formed;
And after me none shall exist.
- 11 I, even I, am JEHOVAH;
And beside me there is no saviour.
- 12 I declared my purpose, and I have saved:
I made it known; nor was it any strange god among you:
And ye are my witnesses, saith JEHOVAH, that I am God.
- 13 Even before time was, I am He;
And there is none that can rescue out of my hand:
I work; and who shall undo what I have done?
- 14 Thus saith JEHOVAH,
Your redeemer, the Holy One of Israel:
For your sake have I sent unto Babylon;
And I will bring down all her strong bars;
And the Chaldeans, exulting in their ships:
- 15 I am JEHOVAH, your Holy One;
The creator of Israel, your king.
- 16 Thus saith JEHOVAH;
Who made a way in the sea,
And a path in the mighty waters;
- 17 Who brought forth the rider and the horse, the army and the warrior;
Together they lay down, they rose no more;
They were extinguished, they were quenched like tow:

- 18 Remember not the former things ;
And the things of ancient times regard not ;
- 19 Behold, I make a new thing ;
Even now shall it spring forth : will ye not regard it ?
Yea I will make in the wilderness a way ;
In the desert, streams of water.
- 20 The wild beast of the field shall glorify me ;
The dragons, and the daughters of the ostrich :
Because I have given waters in the wilderness ;
And flowing streams in the desert ;
To give drink to my people, my chosen :
- 21 This people, whom I have formed for myself ;
Who shall recount my praise.
- 22 But thou hast not invoked me, O Jacob ;
Neither on my account hast thou laboured, O Israel !
- 23 Thou hast not brought to me the lamb of thy burnt-offering ;
Neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifices.
I have not burthened thee with exacting oblations ;
Nor wearied thee with demands of frankincense :
- 24 Thou hast not purchased for me with silver the aromatic reed ;
Neither hast thou satiated me with the fat of thy sacrifices.
On the contrary, thou hast burthened me with thy sins ;
Thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.
- 25 I, even I, am He ;
I blot out thy transgressions for mine own sake ;
And thy sins I will not remember.
- 26 Remind me of thy plea ; let us be judged on equal terms :
Set forth thine own cause, that thou mayest clear thyself.
- 27 Thy chief leader hath sinned ;
And thy public teachers have revolted from me ;
- 28 And thy princes have profaned my sanctuary :
Therefore will I give up Jacob for a devoted thing,
And Israel to reproach.

CHAP. XLIV. 1 BUT hear now, O Jacob, my servant ;
And Israel, whom I have chosen :
2 Thus saith JEHOVAH, thy maker ;

And he that formed thee from the womb, and will help thee :

Fear thou not, O my servant Jacob ;

And, O Jeshurun, whom I have chosen :

3 For I will pour out waters on the thirsty ;

And flowing streams on the dry ground :

I will pour out my spirit on thy seed ;

And my blessing on thine offspring.

4 And they shall spring up as the grass among the waters ;

As the willows beside the aqueducts.

5 One shall say, I belong to JEHOVAH ;

And another shall be called by the name of Jacob :

And this shall inscribe his hand to JEHOVAH ;

And shall be surnamed by the name of Israel.

6 Thus saith JEHOVAH, the king of Israel ;

And his redeemer, JEHOVAH God of Hosts :

I am the first, and I am the last ;

And beside me there is no God.

7 And who is like me, that he should call forth this event,

And make it known beforehand, and dispose it for me,

From the time that I appointed the people of the destined age ?

The things that are now coming, and are to come hereafter, let them declare unto us.

8 Fear ye not, neither be ye afraid :

Have I not declared it unto you from the first ?

Yea, I have foreshewn it ; and ye are my witnesses.

Is there a God beside me ?

Yea, there is no other sure protector ; I know not any.

9 They that form the graven image are all of them vanity ;

And their most curious works shall not profit.

Yea, their works themselves bear witness to them,

That they see not, and that they understand not :

10 That every one may be ashamed that he hath formed a god,

And cast a graven image, that profiteth not.

11 Behold, all his associates shall be ashamed ;

Even the workmen themselves shall blush :

They shall assemble all of them ; they shall present themselves ;

They shall fear, and be ashamed together.

- 12 The smith cutteth off a portion of iron ;
He worketh it in the coals, and with hammers he formeth it ;
And he exerteth upon it the force of his arm.
Yea, he is hungry, and his strength faileth him ;
He drinketh no water, and he is faint.
- 13 The carpenter stretcheth his line ;
He marketh out the form of it with red ochre :
He worketh it with the sharp tool ;
He figureth it with the compass :
He maketh it according to the fashion of a man ;
According to the beauty of the human form, that it may abide in the house.
- 14 He heweth down cedars for his use :
And he taketh the pine, and the oak ;
And layeth in good store of the trees of the forest.
He planteth the ash, and the rain nourisheth it ;
- 15 That it may be for the use of man, for fuel :
And he taketh thereof, and warmeth himself ;
Yea he heateth the oven with it, and baketh bread :
He also formeth a god, and worshippeth it ;
He maketh of it a graven image, and boweth down unto it.
- 16 Part of it he burneth in the fire ;
And with part of it he dresseth flesh, and eateth :
He roasteth meat, and his hunger is satisfied ;
He also warmeth himself, and sayeth,
Aha ! I am warmed, I have enjoyed the fire :
- 17 And the remainder thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image ;
He boweth down to it, and worshippeth it ;
And he prayeth unto it, and sayeth ;
Deliver me, for thou art my God !
- 18 They know not, neither do they understand :
Verily their eyes are closed up, that they cannot see ;
And their heart, that they cannot rightly discern :
- 19 Neither doth he consider in his heart ;
Neither hath he knowledge, nor understanding, to say :
Part of it I have burned in the fire ;
I have also baked bread on the coals thereof :
I have roasted flesh, and I have eaten :
And shall I make the remnant an abomination ?

- Shall I bow myself down to the stock of a tree ?
- 20 He feedeth on ashes ; a deluded heart leadeth him aside ;
So that he cannot deliver his own soul, nor say,
Is there not a lie in my right hand ?
- 21 Remember these things, O Jacob ;
And, Israel ; for thou art my servant :
I have formed thee ; thou art a servant unto me ;
O Israel, by me thou shalt not be forgotten.
- 22 I have made thy transgressions vanish away like a cloud ;
And thy sins like a vapour :
Return unto me ; for I have redeemed thee.
- 23 Sing, O ye heavens, for JEHOVAH hath effected it ;
Utter a joyful sound, O ye depths of the earth :
Burst forth into song, O ye mountains ;
Thou forest, and every tree therein !
For JEHOVAH hath redeemed Jacob ;
And will be glorified in Israel.
- 24 Thus saith JEHOVAH, thy redeemer ;
Even he, that formed thee from the womb :
I am JEHOVAH, who make all things ;
Who stretch out the heavens alone ;
Who spread the firm earth by myself :
- 25 I am he, who frustrateth the prognostics of the impostors ;
And maketh the diviners mad :
Who reverseth the devices of the sages,
And infatuateth their knowledge :
- 26 Who establisheth the word of his servant ;
And accomplisheth the counsel of his messengers :
Who sayeth to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited ;
And to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built ;
And her desolated places I will restore :
- 27 Who sayeth to the deep, Be thou wasted ;
And I will make dry thy rivers :
- 28 Who sayeth to Cyrus, Thou art my shepherd !
And he shall fulfil all my pleasure :
Who sayeth to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built ;
And to the temple, Thy foundations shall be laid !

- CHAP. 1     Thus saith JEHOVAH to his anointed ;
XLV.     To Cyrus, whom I hold fast by the right hand :
            That I may subdue nations before him ;
            And ungird the loins of kings :
            That I may open before him the valves ;
            And the gates shall not be shut :—
- 2 I will go before thee ;
    And make the mountains level :
    The valves of brass will I break in sunder ;
    And the bars of iron will I hew down.
- 3 And I will give unto thee the treasures of darkness,
    And the stores deep hidden in secret places :
    That thou mayest know that I am JEHOVAH ;
    He that calleth thee by thy name, the God of Israel.
- 4 For the sake of my servant Jacob ;
    And of Israel, my chosen ;
    I have even called thee by thy name ;
    I have surnamed thee, though thou knowest me not.
- 5 I am JEHOVAH, and none else ;
    Beside me there is no God.
    I will gird thee, though thou hast not known me :
- 6 That they may know, from the rising of the sun,
    And from the west, that there is none beside me :
    I am JEHOVAH, and none else ;
- 7 Forming light, and creating darkness ;
    Making peace, and creating evil :
    I JEHOVAH am the author of all these things.
- 8     Drop down, O ye heavens, the dew from above :
    And let the clouds shower down righteousness :
    Let the earth open her bosom, and let salvation produce her fruit ;
    And let justice push forth her bud together :
    I JEHOVAH have created it.
- 9     Wo unto him, that contendeth with the power that formed him ;
    The potsherd with the moulder of the clay !
    Shall the clay say to the potter, What makest thou ?
    And to the workman, Thou hast no hands ?
- 10 Wo unto him that sayeth to his father, What begetteth thou ?
    And to his mother, What dost thou bring forth ?

- 11 Thus saith JEHOVAH, the Holy One of Israel ;
And he that formeth the things which are to come :
Do ye question me concerning my children ?
And do ye give me directions concerning the works of my hands ?
- 12 I have made the earth ;
And man upon it I have created :
My hands have stretched out the heavens ;
And to all the host of them I have given command :
- 13 I have raised him up in righteousness ;
And I will make level all his ways.
He shall build my city, and release my captives ;
Not for price, nor for reward :
Saith JEHOVAH, God of Hosts.
- 14 Thus saith JEHOVAH :
The wealth of Egypt, and the merchandise of Cush,
And the Sabeans tall of stature,
Shall come over to thee, and shall be thine :
They shall follow thee ; in chains shall they pass along ;
They shall bow down to thee, and in suppliant guise address thee :
In thee alone is God ;
And there is no God besides whatever.
- 15 Verily, thou art a God that hidest thy counsels,
O God of Israel, the saviour !
- 16 They are ashamed, they are even confounded, his adversaries, all of them ;
Together they retire in confusion, the fabricators of images.
- 17 But Israel shall be saved in JEHOVAH with eternal salvation :
Ye shall not be ashamed, neither shall ye be confounded,
to the ages of eternity.
- 18 For thus saith JEHOVAH,
Who created the heavens ; he is God :
Who formed the earth and made it ; he hath established
it :
He created it not in vain ; for he formed it to be inhabited :

I am JEHOVAH, and none besides :

- 19 I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth ;
I have not said to the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain :
I am JEHOVAH, who speak truth ; who give direct answers.

- 20 Assemble yourselves together, and come ;
Gather yourselves together, ye that are escaped from among the nations.

They know nothing, that carry about the wood which they have carved ;

That address themselves in prayer to a god which cannot save.

- 21 Publish it abroad, and bring them near ; and let them consult together :

Who hath made this known long before, hath declared it from the first ?

Is it not I JEHOVAH, than whom there is no other God ?
A God that uttereth truth, and granteth salvation ; there is none beside me !

- 22 Look unto me, and be saved, O all ye remote people of
the earth ;

For I am God, and there is none else.

- 23 By myself have I sworn ; truth is gone forth from my mouth ;

The word, and it shall not be revoked :

Surely to me shall every knee bow, shall every tongue swear ;

- 24 Saying, Only to JEHOVAH belongeth salvation and power !
To him they shall come ; they shall be ashamed, all that are incensed against him :

- 25 In JEHOVAH shall be justified, and make their boast, all the seed of Israel.

CHAP. 1
XLVI.

BEL boweth down, Nebo croucheth ;

Their idols are laid on the beasts and the cattle ;

Their burthens are heavy, a grievous weight to the weary beast.

- 2 They crouched, they bowed down together ;
They could not deliver their own charge :
Even they themselves are gone into captivity.

- 3 Harken unto me, O house of Jacob ;
And all ye the remnant of the house of Israel :

- Ye that have been borne by me from the birth;
That have been carried from the womb :
- 4 And even to your old age, I am the same;
And even to your grey hairs, I will carry you.
I have made, and I will bear;
I will carry, and will deliver you.
- 5 To whom will ye liken me, and equal me?
And to whom will ye compare me, that we may be like?
- 6 Ye that lavish gold out of the bag;
And that weigh silver in the balance?
They hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god:
They worship him; yea they prostrate themselves before him.
- 7 They bear him on the shoulder; they carry him about;
They set him down in his place, and he standeth:
From his place he shall not remove;
To him that crieth unto him, he will not answer;
Neither will he deliver him from his distress.
- 8 Remember this, and shew yourselves men:
Reflect on it deeply, O ye apostates!
- 9 Remember the former things, of old time:
Verily I am God, and none else;
I am God, nor is there any thing like me:
- 10 From the beginning making known the end;
And from early times, the things that are not yet done:
Saying, My counsel shall stand;
And whatever I have willed, I will effect.
- 11 Calling from the east the eagle;
And from a land far distant, the man of my counsel:
As I have spoken, so will I bring it to pass;
I have formed the design, and I will execute it.
- 12 Hearken unto me, O ye stubborn of heart;
Ye that are far distant from deliverance:
- 13 I bring my promised deliverance near, it shall not be far distant;
And my salvation shall not be delayed.
And I will give in Sion salvation;
To Israel I will give my glory.

- CHAP. XLVII. 1 DESCEND, and sit on the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon ;
Sit on the bare ground without a throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans :
For thou shalt no longer be called the tender, and the delicate.
- 2 Take the mill, and grind the corn :
Uncover thy locks, disclose thy flowing hair ;
Make bare thy leg ; wade through the rivers.
- 3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered ; even thy shame shall be seen :
I will take full vengeance ; neither will I suffer man to intercede with me.
- 4 Our avenger, JEHOVAH God of Hosts,
The Holy One of Israel, is his name !
- 5 Sit thou in silence, go into darkness, O daughter of
the Chaldeans ;
For thou shalt no longer be called the lady of the kingdoms.
- 6 I was angry with my people ; I profaned my heritage ;
And I gave them up into thy hand :
Thou didst not shew mercy unto them ;
Even upon the aged didst thou greatly aggravate the weight of thy yoke.
- 7 And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever :
Because thou didst not attentively consider these things ;
Thou didst not think on what was in the end to befall thee.
- 8 But hear now this, O thou voluptuous, that sittest in security ;
Thou that sayest in thy heart, I am, and there is none else ;
I shall not sit a widow ; I shall not know the loss of children.
- 9 Yet shall these two things come upon thee in a moment ;
In one day, loss of children and widowhood :
On a sudden shall they come upon thee ;
Notwithstanding the multitude of thy sorceries, and the great strength of thine enchantments.

- 10 But thou didst trust in thy wickedness, and saidst, None seeth me :
Thy wisdom and thy knowledge have perverted thy mind ;
So that thou hast said in thy heart, I am, and there is none besides.
- 11 Therefore evil shall come upon thee, which thou shalt not know how to deprecate ;
And mischief shall fall upon thee, which thou shalt not be able to expiate ;
And destruction shall come upon thee suddenly, of which thou shalt have no apprehension.
- 12 Persist now in thine enchantments ;
And in the multitude of thy sorceries, in which thou hast laboured from thy youth ;
If peradventure thou mayest be profited, if thou mayest be strengthened by them.
- 13 Thou art wearied in the multiplicity of thy counsels :
Let them stand up now, and save thee ;
The observers of the heavens, the gazers on the stars ;
They that prognosticate, at every new moon,
What are the events that shall happen unto thee.
- 14 Behold they shall be like stubble ; the fire shall burn them up :
They shall not deliver their own souls from the power of the flame ;
Not a coal to warm one, not a fire to sit by, shall be left of them.
- 15 Such shall these be unto thee, with whom thou hast laboured ;
Thy negociators, with whom thou hast dealt from thy youth :
Every one shall turn aside to his own business ; none shall deliver thee.

CHAP.
XLVIII.

- 1 HEAR this, O house of Jacob ;
Ye that are called by the name of Israel :
Ye that flow from the fountain of Judah ;
Ye that swear by the name of JEHOVAH,
And publicly acknowledge the God of Israel ;
But not in sincerity, nor in truth :
2 Who take their name from the Holy City.

And make the God of Israel their support ;
JEHOVAH God of Hosts is his name :

- 3 The former things I shewed unto you from the first ;
And from my mouth they proceeded, and I declared
them :

On a sudden I effected them, and they came to pass.

- 4 Because I knew that thou wast obstinate,
And that thy neck was a sinew of iron,
And that thy front was brass ;

- 5 Therefore I shewed them unto thee from the first ;
Before they should come to pass, I made thee hear them :
Lest thou shouldst say, Mine idol hath caused them ;
And my graven and my molten image hath directed them.

- 6 Thou didst hear it beforehand ; behold, the whole is accomplished :

And will ye not openly acknowledge this ?
From this time I make thee hear new things,
Kept secret hitherto, and of which thou hast no knowledge :

- 7 They are produced now, and not of old ;
And before this day thou hast not heard them :
Lest thou shouldst say, Lo ! I knew them.

- 8 Yea, thou hast not heard, thou hast not known,
Yea, from the first thine ear was not opened to receive
them :

For I knew, that thou wouldst certainly deal falsely,
And that Apostate was thy name from thy birth.

- 9 For the sake of my name I will defer mine anger ;
And for the sake of my praise I will restrain it from thee,
That I may not utterly cut thee off.

- 10 Behold, I have purified thee in the fire, but not as silver ;
I have tried thee in the furnace of affliction.

- 11 For mine own sake will I do it ; for how would my name be blasphemed ?

And my glory I will not give to another.

- 12 Hearken unto me, O Jacob my servant ;
And Israel, whom I have called.

I am He ; I am the first, and I am the last :

- 13 Yea my hand hath founded the earth ;
And my right hand hath spanned the heavens :
I summon them ; they present themselves together.

- 14 Gather yourselves together all of you, and hear :
Who among you hath predicted these things ?
He, whom JEHOVAH hath loved, will execute
His will on Babylon, and his power on the Chaldeans.
- 15 I, even I, have spoken ; yea I have called him :
I have brought him, and his way shall prosper.
- 16 Draw near unto me, and hear ye this :
From the beginning I have not spoken in secret ;
Before the time when it began to exist, I had decreed it.
And now the Lord JEHOVAH hath sent me, and his Spirit.
- 17 Thus saith JEHOVAH,
Thy redeemer, the Holy One of Israel :
I am JEHOVAH, thy God ;
Who teacheth thee what will tend to thy profit ;
Who directeth thee in the way wherein thou shouldst go.
- 18 O that thou hadst attended to my commands !
Then had thy prosperity been like the river ;
And thy blessedness, as the floods of the sea :
- 19 And thy seed had been as the sand ;
And the issue of thy bowels, like that of the bowels
thereof :
Thy name should not be cut off, nor destroyed from before me.
- 20 Come ye forth from Babylon ; flee ye from the land of the Chaldeans with the voice of joy :
Publish ye this, and make it heard ; utter it forth even to the end of the earth :
Say ye, JEHOVAH hath redeemed his servant Jacob ;
- 21 They thirsted not in the deserts, through which he made them go ;
Waters from the rock he caused to flow for them ;
Yea he clave the rock, and forth gushed the waters.
- 22 There is no peace, saith JEHOVAH, to the wicked.

CHAP. 1 HEARKEN unto me, O ye distant lands ;
XLIX. And ye peoples, attend from afar.
JEHOVAH from the womb hath called me ;

- From the bowels of my mother hath he mentioned my name.
- 2 And he hath made my mouth a sharp sword ;
In the shadow of his hand he hath concealed me :
Yea he hath made me a polished shaft ;
He hath laid me up in store in his quiver :
- 3 And he hath said unto me, Thou art my servant ;
Israel, in whom I will be glorified.
- 4 And I said : I have laboured in vain ;
For nought, and for vanity, I have spent my strength :
Nevertheless my cause is with JEHOVAH ;
And the reward of my work with my God.
- 5 And now thus saith JEHOVAH,
(Who formed me from the womb to be his servant,
To bring back again Jacob unto him,
And that Israel unto him may be gathered :
Therefore am I glorious in the eyes of JEHOVAH,
And my God is my strength) :
- 6 It is a small thing for thee, that thou shouldst be my servant,
To raise up the cions of Jacob,
And to restore the branches of Israel :
I will even give thee for a light to the nations,
To be my salvation to the end of the earth.
- 7 Thus saith JEHOVAH,
The redeemer of Israel, his Holy One ;
To him, whose person is despised, whom the nation holds in abhorrence ;
To the subject of rulers :
Kings shall see him, and rise up ;
Princes, and they shall worship him :
For the sake of JEHOVAH, who is faithful ;
Of the Holy One of Israel, for he hath chosen thee.
- 8 Thus saith JEHOVAH :
In the season of acceptance have I heard thee,
And in the day of salvation have I helped thee ;
And I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people ;
To restore the land, to give possession of the desolate heritages.
- 9 Saying to the bounden, Go forth ;
And to those that are in darkness, Appear :

- They shall feed beside the ways,
And on all the eminences shall be their pasture.
- 10 They shall not hunger, neither shall they thirst ;
Neither shall the glowing heat, or the sun, smite them :
For he, that hath compassion on them, shall lead them ;
And shall guide them to the bursting springs of water.
- 11 And I will make all my mountains an even way ;
And my causeways shall be raised on high.
- 12 Lo ! these shall come from afar ;
And lo ! these from the north and the west ;
And these from the land of Sinim.
- 13 Sing aloud, O ye heavens ; and rejoice, O earth ;
Ye mountains, burst forth into song :
For JEHOVAH hath comforted his people,
And will have compassion on his afflicted.
- 14 But Sion sayeth : JEHOVAH hath forsaken me ;
And my Lord hath forgotten me.
- 15 Can a woman forget her sucking infant ;
That she should have no tenderness for the son of her womb ?
Even these may forget ;
But I will not forget thee.
- 16 Behold, on the palms of my hands have I delineated
thee :
Thy walls are for ever in my sight.
- 17 They, that destroyed thee, shall soon become thy builders ;
And they, that laid thee waste, shall become thine offspring.
- 18 Lift up thine eyes around, and see ;
All these are gathered together, they come to thee.
As I live, saith JEHOVAH,
Surely thou shalt clothe thyself with them all, as with a rich dress ;
And bind them about thee, as a bride her jewels.
- 19 For thy waste, and thy desolate places,
And thy land laid in ruins ;
Even now it shall be straitened with inhabitants ;
And they, that devoured thee, shall be removed far away.
- 20 The sons, of whom thou wast bereaved, shall yet say in thine ears,

This place is too strait for me ; make room for me, that I may dwell.

- 21 And thou shalt say in thine heart : Who hath begotten me these ?

I was bereaved of my children, and solitary ;
An exile, and an outcast ; who then hath nursed these up ?

Lo ! I was abandoned, and alone ; these then, where were they ?

- 22 Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH :

Behold, I will lift up my hand to the nations ;
And to the peoples will I exalt my signal ;
And they shall bring thy sons in their bosom,
And thy daughters shall be borne on their shoulder :

- 23 And kings shall be thy foster-fathers,
And their queens thy nursing mothers :
With their faces to the earth they shall bow down unto
thee,
And shall lick the dust of thy feet.
And thou shalt know that I am JEHOVAH ;
And that they, who trust in him, shall not be ashamed.

- 24 Shall the spoil be taken away from the mighty ?
Or shall the prey seized by the terrible be rescued ?

- 25 Yea, thus saith JEHOVAH :

Even the prey of the mighty shall be retaken ;
And the spoil seized by the terrible shall be rescued :
For with those that contend with thee, I will contend ;
And thy children I will deliver.

- 26 And I will gorge thine oppressors with their own flesh ;
And with their own blood, as with new wine, will I drench them :
And all flesh shall know,
That I JEHOVAH am thy saviour ;
And that thy redeemer is the Mighty One of Jacob.

CHAP. I      Thus saith JEHOVAH :

- L. Where is this bill of your mother's divorcement,
By which I dismissed her ?
Or who is he among my creditors,
To whom I have sold you ?
Behold, for your iniquities are ye sold ;
And for your transgressions is your mother dismissed.

- 2 Wherefore came I, and there was no man?
Called I, and none answered?
Is then my hand so greatly shortened, that I cannot redeem?
And have I no power to deliver?
Behold, at my rebuke I make dry the sea;
I make the rivers a desert:
Their fish is dried up, because there is no water;
And dieth away for thirst.
- 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness;
And sackcloth I make their covering.
- 4 THE Lord JEHOVAH hath given me the tongue of the learned;
That I might know how to speak a seasonable word to the weary.
He wakeneth, morning by morning,
He wakeneth mine ear, to hearken with the attention of a learner.
- 5 The Lord JEHOVAH hath opened mine ear;
And I was not rebellious;
Neither did I withdraw myself backward.
- 6 I gave my back to the smiters,
And my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair:
My face I hid not from shame and spitting.
- 7 For the Lord JEHOVAH is my helper;
Therefore I am not ashamed.
Therefore have I set my face as a flint;
And I know that I shall not be confounded.
- 8 He that justifieth me is near at hand:
Who is he that will contend with me? let us stand forth
together:
Who is mine adversary? let him come on to the contest.
- 9 Behold, the Lord JEHOVAH is my advocate:
Who is he that shall condemn me?
Lo! all of them shall wax old as a garment;
The moth shall consume them.
- 10 Who is there among you that feareth JEHOVAH?
Let him hearken unto the voice of his servant:
That walketh in darkness, and hath no light?
Let him trust in the name of JEHOVAH;

And rest himself on the support of his God.

- 11 Behold, all ye who kindle a fire ;
Who heap the fuel round about :
Walk ye in the light of your fire,
And of the fuel which ye have kindled.
This ye shall have at my hand ;
Ye shall lie down in sorrow.

CHAP. 1 HEARKEN unto me, ye that pursue righteousness,
LI. Ye that seek JEHOVAH.

- Look unto the rock, from whence ye were hewn ;
And to the hollow of the cave, whence ye were digged.
- 2 Look unto Abraham your father ;
And unto Sarah, who bore you :
For I called him, being a single person,
And I blessed him, and I multiplied him.
- 3 Thus therefore shall JEHOVAH console Sion ;
He shall console all her desolations :
And he shall make her wilderness like Eden ;
And her desert like the garden of JEHOVAH :
Joy and gladness shall be found in her ;
Thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.
- 4 Attend unto me, O ye peoples ;
And give ear unto me, O ye nations :
For the law from me shall proceed ;
And my judgment will I cause to break forth for a light to the peoples.
- 5 My righteousness is at hand ; my salvation goeth forth ;
And mine arm shall dispense judgment to the peoples :
Me the distant lands shall expect ;
And to mine arm shall they look with confidence.
- 6 Lift up unto the heavens your eyes ;
And look down unto the earth beneath :
Verily the heavens shall dissolve, like smoke ;
And the earth shall wax old, like a garment ;
And its inhabitants shall perish, like the vilest insect :
But my salvation shall endure for ever ;
And my righteousness shall not decay.
- 7 Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness ;
The people, in whose heart is my law :
Fear not the reproach of wretched man ;

Neither be ye borne down by their revilings.

- 8 For the moth shall consume them, like a garment ;
And the worm shall eat them, like wool :
But my righteousness shall endure for ever ;
And my salvation to the age of ages.

- 9 Awake, awake, clothe thyself with strength, O arm
of JEHOVAH !

Awake, as in the days of old, the ancient generations.
Art thou not the same that smote Rahab, that wounded the dragon ?

- 10 Art thou not the same that dried up the sea, the waters of the great deep ?
That made the depths of the sea a path for the redeemed to pass through ?

- 11 Thus shall the ransomed of JEHOVAH return,
And come to Sion with loud acclamation :
And everlasting gladness shall crown their heads ;
Joy and gladness shall they obtain,
And sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

- 12 I, even I, am he that comforteth you :
Who art thou, that thou shouldst fear wretched man,
that dieth ;
And the son of man, that shall become as the grass ?

- 13 And shouldst forget JEHOVAH thy maker,
Who stretched out the heavens, and founded the earth ;
And shouldst every day be in continued fear
Because of the fury of the oppressor,
As if he were just ready to destroy ?
And where now is the fury of the oppressor ?

- 14 He marcheth on with speed, who cometh to set free the captive ;
That he may not die in the dungeon,
And that his bread may not fail.

- 15 For I am JEHOVAH thy God ;
He, who stilleth at once the sea, though the waves thereof roar ;
JEHOVAH God of Hosts is his name.

- 16 I have put my words in thy mouth ;
And with the shadow of my hand have I covered thee :
To stretch out the heavens, and to lay the foundations
of the earth ;
And to say unto Sion, Thou art my people.

- 17 Rouse thyself, rouse thyself up; arise, O Jerusalem !
Who hast drunken from the hand of JEHOVAH the cup of his fury :
The dregs of the cup of trembling thou hast drunken,
thou hast wrung them out.
- 18 There is not one to lead her, of all the sons which she hath brought forth ;
Neither is there one to support her by the hand, of all the sons which she hath educated.
- 19 These two things have befallen thee ; who shall bemoan thee ?
Desolation, and destruction ; the famine, and the sword ;
who shall comfort thee ?
- 20 Thy sons lie astounded ; they are cast down,
At the head of all the streets, like the oryx taken in the toils ;
Drenched to the full with the fury of JEHOVAH, with the rebuke of thy God.
- 21 Wherefore hear now this, O thou afflicted daughter ;
And thou drunken, but not with wine.
- 22 Thus saith thy Lord JEHOVAH ;
And thy God, who avengeth his people :
Behold, I take from thy hand the cup of trembling ;
The dregs of the cup of my fury ;
Thou shalt drink of it again no more.
- 23 But I will put it into the hand of them who oppress
thee ;
Who say to thee, Bow down thy body, that we may go over :
And thou layedst down thy back, as the ground ;
And as the street, to them that pass along.

- CHAP. I
LII. AWAKE, awake ; be clothed with thy strength, O Sion :
Clothe thyself with thy glorious garments, O Jerusalem,
thou holy city !
For no more shall enter into thee the uncircumcised and the polluted.
- 2 Shake thyself from the dust, ascend thy lofty seat, O
Jerusalem :
Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Sion !

- 3 For thus saith JEHOVAH :
For nought were ye sold ;
And not with money shall ye be ransomed.
- 4 For thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH :
My people went down to Egypt,
At the first, to sojourn there ;
And the Assyrian, at the last, hath oppressed them.
- 5 And now, what have I more to do, saith JEHOVAH,
Seeing that my people is taken away for nought ;
And they, that are lords over them, make their boast of it, saith JEHOVAH ;
And continually every day is my name exposed to contempt ?
- 6 Therefore shall my people know my name in that day :
For I am he, JEHOVAH, that promised ; and lo ! here I am !
- 7 How beautiful appear on the mountains
The feet of the joyful messenger ; of him, that announceth peace !
Of the joyful messenger of good tidings ; of him, that announceth salvation !
Of him, that sayeth unto Sion, Thy God reigneth !
- 8 All thy watchmen lift up their voice ; they shout together :
For face to face shall they see, when JEHOVAH returneth to Sion.
- 9 Burst forth into joy, shout together, ye ruins of Jerusalem !
For JEHOVAH hath comforted his people ; he hath redeemed
Israel.
- 10 JEHOVAH hath made bare his holy arm, in the sight of all the nations ;
And all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God.
- 11 Depart, depart ye, go ye out from thence ; touch no polluted thing :
Go ye out from the midst of her ; be ye clean, ye that bear the vessels of JEHOVAH !
- 12 Verily not in haste shall ye go forth ;
And not by flight shall ye march along :
For JEHOVAH shall march in your front ;
And the God of Israel shall bring up your rear.

- 13 BEHOLD, my servant shall prosper ;
He shall be raised aloft, and magnified, and very highly exalted.
- 14 As many were astonished at him ;
(To such a degree was his countenance disfigured, more than that of man ;
And his form, more than the sons of men) ;
- 15 So shall he sprinkle many nations :
Before him shall kings shut their mouths ;
For what was not before declared to them, they shall see,
And what they had not heard, they shall attentively consider.

- CHAP. LIII. 1 WHO hath believed our report ;
And to whom hath the arm of JEHOVAH been manifested ?
- 2 For he groweth up in their sight like a tender sucker ;
And like a root from a thirsty soil :
He hath no form, nor any beauty, that we should regard
him ;
Nor is his countenance such, that we should desire him.
- 3 Despised, nor accounted in the number of men ;
A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief ;
As one that hideth his face from us :
He was despised, and we esteemed him not.
- 4 Surely our infirmities he hath borne ;
And our sorrows, he hath carried them :
Yet we thought him judicially stricken ;
Smitten of God, and afflicted.
- 5 But he was wounded for our transgressions ;
Was smitten for our iniquities :
The chastisement, by which our peace is effected, was laid upon him ;
And by his bruises we are healed.
- 6 We all of us like sheep have strayed ;
We have turned aside, every one to his own way ;
And JEHOVAH hath made to light upon him the iniquity of us all.
- 7 It was exacted, and he was made answerable ; and he opened not his mouth :
As a lamb that is led to the slaughter,

- And as a sheep before her shearers
Is dumb; so he opened not his mouth.
- 8 By an oppressive judgment he was taken off;
And his manner of life who would declare?
For he was cut off from the land of the living;
For the transgression of my people he was smitten to death.
- 9 And his grave was appointed with the wicked;
But with the rich man was his tomb.
Although he had done no wrong,
Neither was there any guile in his mouth;
- 10 Yet it pleased JEHOVAH to crush him with affliction.
If his soul shall make a propitiatory sacrifice,
He shall see a seed, which shall prolong their days,
And the gracious purpose of JEHOVAH shall prosper in his hands.
- 11 Of the travail of his soul he shall see [the fruit], and be satisfied:
By the knowledge of him shall my servant justify many;
For the punishment of their iniquities he shall bear.
- 12 Therefore will I distribute to him the many for his portion;
And the mighty people shall he share for his spoil:
Because he poured out his soul unto death;
And was numbered with the transgressors:
And he bare the sin of many;
And made intercession for the transgressors.

- CHAP. LIV. 1 SHOUT for joy, O thou barren, that didst not bear;
LIV. Break forth into joyful shouting, and exult, thou that didst not travail:
For more are the children of the desolate,
Than of the married woman, saith JEHOVAH.
- 2 Enlarge the place of thy tent;
And let the canopy of thy habitation be extended:
Spare not; lengthen thy cords,
And firmly fix thy stakes:
- 3 For on the right hand, and on the left, thou shalt burst forth with increase;
And thy seed shall inherit the nations;
And they shall inhabit the desolate cities.
- 4 Fear not, for thou shalt not be confounded;
And blush not, for thou shalt not be brought to reproach:

- For thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth ;
And the reproach of thy widowhood thou shalt remember no more.
- 5 For thy husband is thy maker ;
JEHOVAH God of Hosts is his name :
And thy redeemer is the Holy One of Israel ;
The God of the whole earth shall he be called.
- 6 For as a woman forsaken, and deeply afflicted, hath JEHOVAH recalled thee ;
And as a wife, wedded in youth, but afterwards rejected, saith thy God.
- 7 In a little anger have I forsaken thee ;
But with great mercies will I receive thee again :
- 8 In a short wrath I hid my face for a moment from thee ;
But with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee ;
Saith thy redeemer JEHOVAH.
- 9 The same will I do now, as in the days of Noah, when I swear,
That the waters of Noah should no more pass over the earth :
So have I sworn, that I will not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.
- 10 For the mountains shall be removed ;
And the hills shall be overthrown :
But my kindness from thee shall not be removed ;
And the covenant of my peace shall not be overthrown ;
Saith JEHOVAH, who beareth towards thee the most tender affection.
- 11 O thou afflicted, beaten with the storm, destitute of consolation !
Behold I lay thy stones in cement of vermilion,
And thy foundations with sapphires :
- 12 And I will make of rubies thy battlements ;
And thy gates of carbuncles ;
And the whole circuit of thy walls shall be of precious stones :
- 13 And all thy children shall be taught by JEHOVAH ;
And great shall be the prosperity of thy children.
- 14 In righteousness shalt thou be established :
Be thou far from oppression ; yea thou shalt not fear it ;
And from terror ; for it shall not approach thee.
- 15 Behold, they shall be leagued together, but not by my command ;

Whosoever is leagued against thee, shall come over to thy side.

- 16 Behold, I have created the smith,
Who bloweth up the coals into a fire,
And produceth instruments according to his work ;
And I have created the destroyer to lay waste.
- 17 Whatever weapon is formed against thee, it shall not prosper ;
And against every tongue, that contendeth with thee,
thou shalt obtain thy cause.
This is the heritage of JEHOVAH's servants,
And their justification from me, saith JEHOVAH.

- CHAP. 1    Ho ! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters !
LV.        And that hath no silver, come ye, buy, and eat !
              Yea, come, buy ye without silver ;
              And without price, wine and milk.
- 2 Wherefore do ye weigh out your silver for that which is no bread ?
And your riches, for that which will not satisfy ?
Attend, and hearken unto me ; and eat that which is truly good ;
And your soul shall feast itself with the richest delicacies.
- 3 Incline your ear, and come unto me ;
Attend, and your soul shall live :
And I will make with you an everlasting covenant ;
I will give you the gracious promises made to David,
which never shall fail.
- 4 Behold, for a witness to the peoples I have given him ;
A leader, and a lawgiver to the nations.
- 5 Behold, the nation, whom thou knewest not, thou shalt call ;
And the nation, who knew not thee, shall run unto thee,
For the sake of JEHOVAH thy God ;
And for the Holy One of Israel, for he hath glorified
thee.
- 6        Seek ye JEHOVAH, while he may be found ;
          Call ye upon him, while he is near at hand :
- 7 Let the wicked forsake his way,
And the unrighteous man his thoughts ;

- And let him return unto JEHOVAH, for he will receive him with compassion ;
And unto our God, for he aboundeth in forgiveness.
- 8 For my thoughts are not your thoughts ;
Neither are your ways my ways, saith JEHOVAH.
- 9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth ;
So are my ways higher than your ways,
And my thoughts than your thoughts.
- 10 Verily, like as the rain descendeth,
And the snow, from the heavens ;
And thither it doth not return ;
But moisteneth the earth,
And maketh it generate, and put forth its increase ;
That it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater :
- 11 So shall be the word which goeth forth from my mouth ;
It shall not return unto me fruitless ;
But it shall effect what I have willed ;
And make the purpose succeed, for which I have sent it.
- 12 Surely with joy shall ye go forth,
And with peace shall ye be led onward :
The mountains and the hills shall burst forth before you into song ;
And all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.
- 13 Instead of the thorny bushes shall grow up the fir-tree ;
And instead of the bramble shall grow up the myrtle :
And it shall be unto JEHOVAH for a memorial ;
For a perpetual sign, which shall not be abolished.

CHAP. 1      THUS saith JEHOVAH :

LVI.      Keep ye judgment, and practise righteousness ;
For my salvation is near, just ready to come ;
And my righteousness, to be revealed.

- 2 Blessed is the mortal that doeth this ;
And the son of man that holdeth it fast :
That keepeth the sabbath, and profaneth it not ;
And restraineth his hand from doing evil.

- 3 And let not the son of the stranger speak,
That cleaveth unto JEHOVAH, saying :
JEHOVAH hath utterly separated me from his people.

- Neither let the eunuch say :
Behold, I am a dry tree.
- 4 For thus saith JEHOVAH to the eunuchs :
Whoever of them shall have kept my sabbaths,
And shall have chosen that in which I delight,
And shall have stedfastly maintained my covenant ;
- 5 To them I will give in my house,
And within my walls, a memorial and a name,
Better than that of sons and daughters :
An everlasting name will I give them,
Which shall never be cut off.
- 6 And the sons of the stranger, who cleave unto JEHOVAH ;
To minister unto him, and to love the name of JEHOVAH,
And to become his servants :
Every one that keepeth the sabbath, and profaneth it not ;
And that stedfastly maintaineth my covenant ;
- 7 Them will I bring unto my holy mountain ;
And I will make them rejoice in my house of prayer :
Their burnt-offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted on mine altar ;
For my house shall be called, The house of prayer for all the peoples.
- 8 Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH,
Who gathereth together the outcasts of Israel :
Yet will I gather others unto him, beside those that are already gathered.
- 9 O ALL ye beasts of the field, come away ;
Come to devour, O all ye beasts of the forest !
- 10 His watchmen are blind, all of them ; they are ignorant ;
They are all of them dumb dogs, they cannot bark :
Dreamers, sluggards, loving to slumber.
- 11 Yea these dogs are of untamed appetite ;
They know not to be satisfied.
And the shepherds themselves cannot understand :
They all of them turn aside to their own way ;
Each to his own lucre, from the highest to the lowest.
- 12 Come on, let us provide wine ;
And let us swill strong drink :
And as to-day, so shall be the cheer of to-morrow ;
Great, even far more abundant.

- CHAP. LVII. 1 THE righteous man perisheth, and no one considereth ;
And pious men are taken away, and no one understandeth,
That the righteous man is taken away because of the evil.
- 2 He shall go in peace : he shall rest in his bed ;
Even the perfect man ; he that walketh in the strait path.
- 3 But ye, draw ye near hither, O ye sons of the sorceress ;
Ye seed of the adulterer, and of the harlot !
- 4 Of whom do ye make your sport ?
At whom do ye widen the mouth, and loll the tongue ?
Are ye not apostate children, a false seed ?
- 5 Burning with the lust of idols under every green tree ;
Slaying the children in the vallies, under the clefts of the rocks ?
- 6 Among the smooth stones of the valley is thy portion ;
These, these are thy lot :
Even to these hast thou poured out thy libation,
Hast thou presented thine offering.
Can I see these things with acquiescence ?
- 7 Upon a high and lofty mountain hast thou set thy bed ;
Even thither hast thou gone up to offer sacrifice.
- 8 Behind the door and the door-posts hast thou set thy memorial :
Thou hast departed from me, and art gone up ; thou hast enlarged thy bed ;
And thou hast made a covenant with them :
Thou hast loved their bed ; thou hast provided a place for it.
- 9 And thou hast visited the king with a present of oil :
And hast multiplied thy precious ointments :
And thou hast sent thine ambassadors afar ;
And hast debased thyself even to Hades.
- 10 In the length of thy journeys thou hast wearied thyself ;
Thou hast said, There is no hope :
Thou hast found the support of thy life by thy labour ;
Therefore thou hast not utterly fainted.
- 11 And of whom hast thou been so anxiously afraid, that thou shouldst thus deal falsely ?
And hast not remembered me, nor revolved it in thy mind ?

- Is it not because I was silent, and winked ; and thou fearest me not ?
- 12 But I will declare my righteousness ;
And thy deeds shall not avail thee.
- 13 When thou criest, let thine associates deliver thee :
But the wind shall bear them away ; a breath shall take them off.
But he that trusteth in me shall inherit the land,
And shall possess my holy mountain.
- 14 Then will I say, Cast up, cast up the causeway ; make clear the way ;
Remove every obstruction from the road of my people.
- 15 For thus saith JEHOVAH, the high, and the lofty ;
Inhabiting eternity ; and whose name is the Holy One :
The high and the holy place will I inhabit ;
And with the contrite, and humble of spirit :
To revive the spirit of the humble ;
And to give life to the heart of the contrite.
- 16 For I will not alway contend ;
Neither for ever will I be wroth :
For the spirit from before me would be overwhelmed ;
And the living souls which I have made.
- 17 Because of his iniquity for a short time I was wroth ;
And I smote him ; hiding my face in mine anger.
And he departed, turning back in the way of his own heart.
- 18 I have seen his ways ; and I will heal him, and will be his guide ;
And I will restore comforts to him, and to his mourners.
- 19 I create the fruit of the lips :
Peace, peace, to him that is near,
And to him that is afar off, saith JEHOVAH ; and I will heal him.
- 20 But the wicked are like the troubled sea ;
For it never can be at rest ;
But its waters work up filth and mire.
- 21 There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

CHAP. I LVIII. Cry aloud ; spare not :
Like a trumpet lift up thy voice :
And declare unto my people their transgression ;
And to the house of Jacob their sin.

- 2 Yet me day after day they seek ;
And to know my ways they take delight :
As a nation that doeth righteousness,
And hath not forsaken the ordinance of their God.
They continually inquire of me concerning the ordinances of righteousness ;
They take delight to draw nigh unto God.
- 3 Wherefore have we fasted, and thou seest not ?
Have we afflicted our souls, and thou dost not regard ?
Behold, in the day of your fasting, ye enjoy your pleasure ;
And all your demands of labour ye rigorously exact.
- 4 Behold, ye fast for strife and contention ;
And to smite with the fist the poor.
Wherefore fast ye unto me in this manner ;
To make your voice to be heard on high ?
- 5 Is such then the fast which I choose ;
That a man should afflict his soul for a day ?
Is it, that he should bow down his head like a bulrush :
And spread sackcloth and ashes for his couch ?
Shall this be called a fast,
And a day acceptable to JEHOVAH ?
- 6 Is not this the fast which I choose—
To dissolve the bands of wickedness ;
To loosen the oppressive burthens ;
To deliver those that are crushed by violence ;
And that ye should break asunder every yoke ?
- 7 Is it not to distribute thy bread to the hungry ;
And to bring the wandering poor into thy house ?
When thou seest the naked, that thou clothe him ;
And that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh ?
- 8 Then shall thy light break forth like the morning ;
And thy wounds shall speedily be healed over :
And thy righteousness shall go before thee ;
And the glory of JEHOVAH shall bring up thy rear.
- 9 Then shalt thou call, and JEHOVAH shall answer :
Thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Lo I am here !
If thou remove from the midst of thee the yoke ;
The pointing of the finger, and the injurious speech.
- 10 If thou bring forth thy bread to the hungry,
And satisfy the afflicted soul ;
Then shall thy light rise in obscurity,
And thy darkness shall be as the noon-day.

- 11 And JEHOVAH shall lead thee continually,
 And satisfy thy soul in the severest drought :
 And he shall renew thy strength ;
 And thou shalt be like a well-watered garden, and like a flowing spring,
 Whose waters shall never fail.
- 12 And they that spring from thee shall build the ancient ruins ;
 The foundations of old times shall they raise up :
 And thou shalt be called the repairer of the broken mound ;
 The restorer of paths to be frequented by inhabitants.
- 13 If thou restrain thy foot from the sabbath ;
 From doing thy pleasure on my holy day :
 And shalt call the sabbath, a delight ;
 And the holy feast of JEHOVAH, honourable :
 And shalt honour it, by refraining from thy purpose,
 From pursuing thy pleasure, and from speaking vain words ;
- 14 Then shalt thou delight thyself in JEHOVAH ;
 And I will make thee ride on the high places of the earth ;
 And I will feed thee on the inheritance of Jacob thy father :
 For the mouth of JEHOVAH hath spoken it.

CHAP. 1     BEHOLD, the hand of JEHOVAH is not contracted, so
 LIX.                that he cannot save ;

Neither is his ear grown dull, so that he cannot hear.

- 2 But your iniquities have made a separation

Between you and your God ;

And your sins have hidden

His face from you, that he doth not hear.

- 3 For your hands are polluted with blood,

And your fingers with iniquity ;

Your lips speak falsehood,

And your tongue muttereth wickedness.

- 4 No one preferreth his suit in justice,

And no one pleadeth in truth :

Trusting in vanity, and speaking lies ;

Conceiving mischief, and bringing forth iniquity.

- 5 They hatch the eggs of the basilisk,
And weave the web of the spider :
He that eateth of their eggs dieth ;
And when it is crushed, a viper breaketh forth.
- 6 Of their webs no garment shall be made ;
Neither shall they cover themselves with their works :
Their works are works of iniquity,
And the deed of violence is in their hands.
- 7 Their feet run swiftly to evil,
And they hasten to shed innocent blood :
Their devices are devices of iniquity ;
Destruction and calamity is in their paths.
- 8 The way of peace they know not ;
Neither is there any judgment in their tracks :
They have made to themselves crooked paths ;
Whoever goeth in them, knoweth not peace.
- 9 Therefore is judgment far distant from us ;
Neither doth justice overtake us :
We look for light, but behold darkness ;
For brightness, but we walk in obscurity.
- 10 We grope for the wall, like the blind ;
And we wander, as those that are deprived of sight :
We stumble at mid-day, as in the twilight ;
In the midst of delicacies, as among the dead.
- 11 We groan all of us, like the bears ;
And like the doves, we make a continued moan.
We look for judgment, and there is none ;
For salvation, and it is far distant from us.
- 12 For our transgressions are multiplied before thee ;
And our sins bring an accusation against us :
For our transgressions cleave fast unto us ;
And our iniquities we acknowledge.
- 13 By rebelling, and lying, against JEHOVAH ;
And by turning backward from following our God :
By speaking injury, and conceiving revolt ;
And by meditating from the heart lying words.
- 14 And judgment is turned away backwards ;
And justice standeth aloof :
For truth hath stumbled in the open street ;
And rectitude hath not been able to enter.
- 15 And truth is utterly lost ;
And he that shunneth evil, exposeth himself to be plundered :

- And JEHOVAH saw it,
And it displeased him, that there was no judgment :
16 And he saw, that there was no man ;
And he wondered, that there was no one to interpose :
Then his own arm wrought salvation for him ;
And his righteousness, it supported him.
17 And he put on righteousness as a breast-plate ;
And the helmet of salvation was on his head :
And he put on the garments of vengeance for his clothing ;
And he clad himself with zeal as with a mantle.
18 He is mighty to recompense ;
He that is mighty to recompense will requite :
Wrath to his adversaries, recompense to his enemies ;
To the distant coasts a recompense will he requite.
19 And they from the west shall revere the name of JEHOVAH ;
And they from the rising of the sun, his glory ;
When he shall come, like a river straitened in his course,
Which a strong wind driveth along.
20 And the Redeemer shall come to Sion ;
And shall turn away iniquity from Jacob ; saith JEHOVAH.
21 And this is the covenant which I make with them,
saith JEHOVAH :
My spirit, which is upon thee,
And my words, which I have put in thy mouth ;
They shall not depart from thy mouth,
Nor from the mouth of thy seed,
Nor from the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith JEHOVAH ;
From this time forth for ever.

- CHAP. 1     ARISE, be thou enlightened ; for thy light is come ;
LX.     And the glory of JEHOVAH is risen upon thee.
2 For behold, darkness shall cover the earth ;
And a thick vapour the nations :
But upon thee shall JEHOVAH arise ;
And his glory upon thee shall be conspicuous.
3 And the nations shall walk in thy light ;
And kings in the brightness of thy sun-rising.
4 Lift up thine eyes round about, and see ;
All of them are gathered together, they come unto thee :

- Thy sons shall come from afar ;
And thy daughters shall be carried at the side.
- 5 Then shalt thou fear, and overflow with joy ;
And thy heart shall be ruffled, and dilated ;
When the riches of the sea shall be poured in upon thee ;
When the wealth of the nations shall come unto thee.
- 6 An inundation of camels shall cover thee ;
The dromedaries of Midian and Ephra ;
All of them from Saba shall come :
Gold and frankincense shall they bear ;
And the praise of JEHOVAH shall they joyfully proclaim.
- 7 All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered unto thee ;
Unto thee shall the rams of Nebaioth minister :
They shall ascend with acceptance on mine altar ;
And my beauteous house I will yet beautify.
- 8 Who are these, that fly like a cloud ?
And like doves upon the wing ?
- 9 Verily the distant coasts shall await me ;
And the ships of Tarshish among the first :
To bring thy sons from afar ;
Their silver and their gold with them :
Because of the name of JEHOVAH thy God ;
And of the Holy One of Israel ; for he hath glorified thee.
- 10 And the sons of the stranger shall build up thy walls ;
And their kings shall minister unto thee :
For in my wrath I smote thee ;
But in my favour I will embrace thee with the most tender affection.
- 11 And thy gates shall be open continually ;
By day, or by night, they shall not be shut :
To bring unto thee the wealth of the nations ;
And that their kings may come pompously attended.
- 12 For that nation, and that kingdom,
Which will not serve thee, shall perish ;
Yea, those nations shall be utterly desolated.
- 13 The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee ;
The fir-tree, the pine, and the box together ;
To adorn the place of my sanctuary ;
And that I may glorify the place whereon I rest my feet.
- 14 And the sons of thine oppressors shall come bending before thee ;

- And all, that scornfully rejected thee, shall do obeisance to the soles of thy feet :
And they shall call thee, The City of JEHOVAH ;
The Sion of the Holy One of Israel.
- 15 Instead of thy being forsaken,
And hated, so that no one passed through thee ;
I will make thee an everlasting boast ;
A subject of joy for perpetual generations.
- 16 And thou shalt suck the milk of nations ;
Even at the breast of kings shalt thou be fostered :
And thou shalt know, that I JEHOVAH am thy saviour ;
And that thy redeemer is the Mighty One of Jacob.
- 17 Instead of brass, I will bring gold ;
And instead of iron, I will bring silver :
And instead of wood, brass ;
And instead of stones, iron.
And I will make thine inspectors, peace ;
And thine exactors, righteousness.
- 18 Violence shall no more be heard in thy land ;
Destruction and calamity, in thy borders :
But thou shalt call thy walls, Salvation ;
And thy gates, Praise.
- 19 No longer shalt thou have the sun for a light by day ;
Nor by night shall the brightness of the moon enlighten
thee :
For JEHOVAH shall be to thee an everlasting light,
And thy God shall be thy glory.
- 20 Thy sun shall no more go down ;
Neither shall thy moon wane :
For JEHOVAH shall be thine everlasting light ;
And the days of thy mourning shall be ended.
- 21 And thy people shall be all righteous ;
For ever shall they possess the land :
The cion of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified.
- 22 The little one shall become a thousand ;
And the small one a strong nation :
I JEHOVAH in due time will hasten it.

- CHAP. 1 THE spirit of JEHOVAH is upon me,
LXI. Because JEHOVAH hath anointed me :
To publish glad tidings to the meek hath he sent me ;
To bind up the broken-hearted ;
To proclaim to the captives freedom ;
And to the bounden, perfect liberty :
- 2 To proclaim the year of acceptance with JEHOVAH ;
And the day of vengeance of our God.
To comfort all those that mourn ;
- 3 To impart [gladness] to the mourners of Sion :
To give them a beautiful crown, instead of ashes ;
The oil of gladness, instead of sorrow ;
The clothing of praise, instead of the spirit of heaviness :
That they may be called trees approved ;
The plantation of JEHOVAH for his glory.
- 4 And they that spring from thee shall build up the ruins of old times :
They shall restore the ancient desolations ;
They shall repair the cities laid waste ;
The desolations of continued ages.
- 5 And strangers shall stand up and feed your flocks ;
And the sons of the alien shall be your husbandmen and vine-dressers.
- 6 But ye shall be called the priests of JEHOVAH ;
The ministers of our God, shall be your title.
The riches of the nations shall ye eat ;
And in their glory shall ye make your boast.
- 7 Instead of your shame, ye shall receive a double inheritance ;
And of your ignominy, ye shall rejoice in their portion :
For in their land a double share shall ye inherit ;
And everlasting gladness shall ye possess.
- 8 For I am JEHOVAH, who love judgment ;
Who hate rapine and iniquity :
And I will give them the reward of their work with faithfulness ;
And an everlasting covenant I will make with them ;
- 9 And their seed shall be illustrious among the nations ;
And their offspring, in the midst of the peoples.
All they that see them shall acknowledge them,
That they are a seed which JEHOVAH hath blessed.

- 10 I will greatly rejoice in JEHOVAH ;
My soul shall exult in my God.
For he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation ;
He hath covered me with the mantle of righteousness :
As the bridegroom decketh himself with a priestly crown ;
And as the bride adorneth herself with her costly jewels.
- 11 Surely, as the earth pusheth forth her tender shoots ;
And as a garden maketh her seed to germinate :
So shall the Lord JEHOVAH cause righteousness to spring forth ;
And praise, in the presence of all the nations.

- CHAP. 1 FOR Sion's sake I will not keep silence ;
LXII. And for the sake of Jerusalem I will not rest :
Until her righteousness break forth as a strong light ;
And her salvation, like a blazing torch.
- 2 And the nations shall see thy righteousness ;
And all the kings, thy glory :
And thou shalt be called by a new name,
Which the mouth of JEHOVAH shall fix upon thee.
- 3 And thou shalt be a beautiful crown in the hand of JEHOVAH ;
And a royal diadem in the grasp of thy God.
- 4 No more shall it be said unto thee, Thou forsaken !
Neither to thy land shall it be said any more, Thou desolate !
But thou shalt be called, The object of my delight ;
And thy land, The wedded matron :
For JEHOVAH shall delight in thee ;
And thy land shall be joined in marriage.
- 5 For as a young man weddeth a virgin,
So shall thy restorer wed thee :
And as the bridegroom rejoiceth in his bride,
So shall thy God rejoice in thee.
- 6 Upon thy walls, O Jerusalem,
Have I set watchmen all the day ;
And all the night long they shall not keep silence.
O ye, that proclaim the name of JEHOVAH !
- 7 Keep not silence yourselves, nor let him rest in silence ;

Until he establish, and until he render,
Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

8 JEHOVAH hath sworn by his right hand, and by his powerful arm :

I will no more give thy corn for food to thine enemies ;
Nor shall the sons of the stranger drink thy must, for which thou hast laboured :

9 But they that reap the harvest, shall eat it, and praise
JEHOVAH ;

And they that gather the vintage, shall drink it in my sacred courts.

10 Pass ye, pass through the gates ; prepare the way for the people !

Cast ye up, cast up the causeway ; clear it from the stones !

Lift up on high a standard to the nations !

11 Behold, JEHOVAH hath thus proclaimed to the end of
the earth :

Say ye to the daughter of Sion, Lo thy saviour cometh !
Lo ! his reward is with him, and the recompense of his work before him.

And they shall be called, The holy people, the redeemed
of JEHOVAH ;

12 And thou shalt be called, The much desired, The city unforsaken.

CHAP. LXIII. 1 CHO. WHO is this, that cometh from Edom ?

LXIII. With garments deeply dyed from Botsra ?

This, that is magnificent in his apparel ;

Marching on in the greatness of his strength ?

MES. I, who publish righteousness, and am mighty to save.

2 CHO. Wherefore is thine apparel red ?

And thy garments, as of one that treadeth the wine-vat ?

3 MES. I have trodden the vat alone ;

And of the peoples there was not a man with me.

And I trod them in mine anger ;

And I trampled them in mine indignation :

And their life-blood was sprinkled upon my garments ;

- And I have stained all mine apparel.
4 For the day of vengeance was in my heart;
And the year of my redeemed was come.
5 And I looked, and there was no one to help;
And I was astonished, that there was no one to uphold:
Therefore mine own arm wrought salvation for me,
And mine indignation itself sustained me.
6 And I trod down the peoples in mine anger;
And I crushed them in mine indignation;
And I spilled their life-blood on the ground.
- 7 THE mercies of JEHOVAH will I record, the praise of
JEHOVAH;
According to all that JEHOVAH hath bestowed upon us;
And the greatness of his goodness to the house of Israel;
Which he hath bestowed upon them, through his tenderness and great kindness.
8 For he said: Surely they are my people, children that will not prove false:
And he became their saviour in all their distress.
9 It was not an envoy, nor an angel of his presence, that saved them:
Through his love, and his indulgence, he himself redeemed them;
And he took them up, and he bare them, all the days of old.
10 But they rebelled, and grieved his holy spirit;
So that he became their enemy; and he fought against them.
11 And he remembered the days of old, Moses his servant;
How he brought them up from the sea, with the shepherd of his flock;
How he placed in his breast his holy spirit:
12 Making his glorious arm to attend Moses on his right hand in his march;
Cleaving the waters before them, to make himself a name everlasting;
13 Leading them through the abyss, like a courser in the plain without obstacle.
14 As the herd descendeth to the valley, the spirit of JEHOVAH conducted them:

So didst thou lead thy people, to make thyself a name illustrious.

15 Look down from heaven, and see, from thy holy and glorious dwelling :

Where is thy zeal, and thy mighty power ;

The yearning of thy bowels, and thy tender affections ?
are they restrained from us ?

16 Verily, Thou art our father ; for Abraham knoweth us not,

And Israel doth not acknowledge us.

Thou, O JEHOVAH, art our father ;

O deliver us for the sake of thy name !

17 Wherefore, O JEHOVAH, dost thou suffer us to err from thy ways ?

To harden our hearts from the fear of thee ?

Return, for the sake of thy servants ;

For the sake of the tribes of thine inheritance.

18 It is little, that they have taken possession of thy holy mountain ;

That our enemies have trodden down thy sanctuary :

19 We have long been as those, whom thou hast not ruled ;
Who have not been called by thy name.

CHAP. 1 O ! that thou wouldst rend the heavens, that thou LXIV. wouldst descend ;

That the mountains might flow down at thy presence !

2 As the fire kindleth the dry fuel ;

As the fire causeth the waters to boil :

To make known thy name to thine enemies ;

That the nations might tremble at thy presence.

3 When thou didst wonderful things, which we expected not ;

Thou didst descend ; at thy presence the mountains flowed down.

4 For never have men heard, nor perceived by the ear,

Nor hath eye seen, a God beside thee,

Who doeth such things for those that trust in him.

5 Thou meetest with joy those who work righteousness ;

Who in thy ways remember thee.

Lo ! Thou art angry ; for we have sinned :

Because of our deeds ; for we have been rebellious.

6 And we are all of us as a polluted thing ;

And like a rejected garment are all our righteous deeds :

- And we are withered away, like a leaf, all of us ;
 And our sins, like the wind, have borne us away.
- 7 There is no one that invoceth thy name ;
 That rouseth himself up to lay hold on thee :
 Therefore thou hast hidden thy face from us ;
 And hast delivered us up into the hand of our iniquities.
- 8 But thou, O JEHOVAH, thou art our father ;
 We are the clay, and thou hast formed us :
 We are all of us the work of thy hands.
- 9 Be not wroth, O JEHOVAH, to the uttermost ;
 Nor for ever remember iniquity.
 Behold, look upon us, we beseech thee ; we are all thy people.
- 10 Thy holy cities are become a wilderness ;
 Sion is become a wilderness ; Jerusalem is desolate.
- 11 Our holy and glorious temple,
 Wherein our fathers praised thee,
 Is utterly burnt up with fire ;
 And all the objects of our desire are become a devastation.
- 12 Wilt thou contain thyself at these things, O JEHOVAH ?
 Wilt thou keep silence, and still grievously afflict us ?

CHAP. 1
 LXV.

- I AM made known to those, that asked not for me ;
 I am found of those, that sought me not :
 I have said : Behold me, here I am,
 To the nation which never invoked my name :
- 2 I have stretched out my hands all the day to a rebellious people,
 Who walk in an evil way, after their own devices :
- 3 A people, who provoke me to my face continually ;
 Sacrificing in the gardens, and burning incense on the tiles :
- 4 Who dwell in the sepulchres, and lodge in the caverns ;
 Who eat the flesh of the swine ;
 And the broth of abominable meats is in their vessels :
- 5 Who say : Keep to thyself ; come not near me ; for I am holier than thou.
 These kindle a smoke in my nostrils, a fire burning all the day long.
- 6 Behold, this is recorded in writing before me :
 I will not keep silence, but will certainly requite ;

- 7 I will requite into their bosom their iniquities ;
And the iniquities of their fathers together, saith JEHO-VAH ;
Who burnt incense on the mountains, and dishonoured
me upon the hills :
Yea I will pour into their bosom the full measure of their former deeds.
- 8 Thus saith JEHOVAH :
As when one findeth a good grape in the cluster ;
And sayeth, Destroy it not ; for a blessing is in it :
So will I do for the sake of my servants ; I will not destroy the whole.
- 9 So will I bring forth from Jacob a seed ;
And from Judah an inheritor of my mountain :
And my chosen shall inherit the land ;
And my servants shall dwell there.
- 10 And Sharon shall be a fold for the flock,
And the valley of Achor a resting for the herd ;
For my people, who have sought after me.
- 11 But ye, who have deserted JEHOVAH ;
And have forgotten my holy mountain :
Who set in order a table for Gad ;
And fill out a libation to Meni :
- 12 You will I number out to the sword ;
And all of you shall bow down to the slaughter.
Because I called, and ye answered not ;
I spake, and ye would not hear :
But ye did that, which is evil in my sight ;
And that, in which I delighted not, ye chose.
- 13 Wherefore thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH :
Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be famished ;
Behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty ;
Behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be confounded :
- 14 Behold, my servants shall sing aloud, for gladness of heart ;
But ye shall cry aloud, for grief of heart ;
And in the anguish of a broken spirit shall ye howl.
- 15 And ye shall leave your name for a curse to my chosen :
And the Lord JEHOVAH shall slay you ;
And his servants shall he call by another name.

- 16 Whoso blesseth himself upon the earth,
Shall bless himself in the God of truth;
And whoso sweareth upon the earth,
Shall swear by the God of truth.
Because the former provocations are forgotten;
And because they are hidden from mine eyes.
- 17 For behold, I create new heavens, and a new earth;
And the former ones shall not be remembered,
Neither shall they be brought to mind any more.
- 18 But ye shall rejoice and exult in the age to come, which I create:
For lo! I create Jerusalem a subject of joy, and her people of gladness;
- 19 And I will exult in Jerusalem, and rejoice in my people.
And there shall not be heard any more therein,
The voice of weeping, and the voice of a distressful cry:
- 20 No more shall be there an infant short-lived;
Nor an old man who hath not fulfilled his days:
For he, that dieth at an hundred years, shall die a boy;
And the sinner that dieth at an hundred years, shall be deemed accursed.
- 21 And they shall build houses, and shall inhabit them;
And they shall plant vineyards, and shall eat the fruit
thereof.
- 22 They shall not build, and another inhabit;
They shall not plant, and another eat:
For as the days of a tree shall be the days of my people;
And they shall wear out the works of their own hands.
- 23 My chosen shall not labour in vain;
Neither shall they generate a short-lived race:
For they shall be a seed blessed of JEHOVAH;
They, and their offspring with them.
- 24 And it shall be, that before they call, I will answer;
They shall be yet speaking, and I shall have heard.
- 25 The wolf and the lamb shall feed together;
And the lion shall eat straw like the ox:
But as for the serpent, dust shall be his food.
They shall not hurt, neither shall they destroy,
In all my holy mountain, saith JEHOVAH.

- CHAP. 1     THUS saith JEHOVAH :
LXVI.    The heavens are my throne; and the earth is my foot-stool :
          Where is this house, which ye build for me?
          And where is this place of my rest ?
- 2   For all these things my hand hath made ;
     And all these things are mine, saith JEHOVAH.
     But such a one will I regard, even him that is humble,
     And of a contrite spirit, and that revereth my word.
- 3   He that slayeth an ox, killeth a man ;
     That sacrificeth a lamb, beheadeth a dog ;
     That maketh an oblation, [offereth] swine's blood ;
     That burneth incense, blesseth an idol :
     Yea, they themselves have chosen their own ways ;
     And in their abominations their soul delighteth.
- 4   I will also choose their calamities ;
     And what they dread, I will bring upon them ;
     Because I called, and no one answered ;
     I spake, and they would not hear :
     And they have done what is evil in my sight ;
     And that, in which I delighted not, they have chosen.
- 5   Hear ye the word of JEHOVAH, ye that revere his word :
     Say ye to your brethren, that hate you ;
     And that thrust you out, for my name's sake :
     JEHOVAH will be glorified, and he will appear ;
     To your joy [will he appear], and they shall be confounded.
- 6   A voice of tumult from the city ! a voice from the temple !
     The voice of JEHOVAH ! rendering recompense to his enemies.
- 7   Before she was in travail, she brought forth ;
     Before her pangs came, she was delivered of a male.
- 8   Who hath heard such a thing ? and who hath seen the like of these things ?
     Is a country brought forth in one day ?
     Is a nation born in an instant ?

- For no sooner was Sion in travail, than she brought forth her children.
- 9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith JEHOVAH:
Shall I, who beget, restrain the birth? saith thy God.
- 10 Rejoice with Jerusalem, and exult on her account, all ye that love her;
Be exceedingly joyful with her, all ye that mourn over her:
- 11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied, from the breast of her consolations;
That ye may draw forth the delicious nourishment from her abundant stores.
- 12 For thus saith JEHOVAH:
Behold, I spread over her prosperity, like the great river;
And like the overflowing stream the wealth of the nations:
And ye shall suck at the breast;
Ye shall be carried at the side;
And on the knees shall ye be dandled.
- 13 As one, whom his mother comforteth,
So will I comfort you;
And in Jerusalem shall ye receive consolation.
- 14 And ye shall see it, and your heart shall rejoice;
And your bones shall flourish, like the green herb:
And the hand of JEHOVAH shall be manifested to his servants;
And he will be moved with indignation against his enemies.
- 15 For, behold! JEHOVAH shall come, as a fire;
And his chariot, as a whirlwind:
To breathe forth his anger in a burning heat,
And his rebuke in flames of fire.
- 16 For by fire shall JEHOVAH execute judgment;
And by his sword, upon all flesh:
And many shall be the slain of JEHOVAH.
- 17 They who sanctify themselves, and purify themselves,
In the gardens, after the rites of Achad;
In the midst of those who eat swine's flesh,
And the abomination, and the field-mouse:

Together shall they perish, saith JEHOVAH.

18 For I know their deeds, and their devices:

And I come to gather all the nations and tongues together;

And they shall come, and shall see my glory.

19 And I will impart to them a sign;

And of those that escape I will send to the nations:

To Tarshish, Phul, and Lud, who draw the bow;

Tubal, and Javan, the far distant coasts:

To those, who never heard my name;

And who never saw my glory:

And they shall declare my glory among the nations.

20 And they shall bring all your brethren,

From all the nations, for an oblation to JEHOVAH:

On horses, and in litters, and in couches;

On mules, and on dromedaries;

To my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith JEHOVAH:

Like as the sons of Israel brought the oblation,

In pure vessels, to the house of JEHOVAH.

21 And of them will I also take,

For priests, and for Levites, saith JEHOVAH.

22 For like as the new heavens,

And the new earth, which I make,

Stand continually before me, saith JEHOVAH;

So shall continue your seed, and your name.

23 And it shall be, from new moon to new moon,

And from sabbath to sabbath;

All flesh shall come to worship before me, saith JEHOVAH.

24 And they shall go forth, and shall see

The carcasses of the men who rebelled against me.

For their worm shall not die,

And their fire shall not be quenched;

And they shall be an abhorrence to all flesh.

ISAIAH.

ISAIAH exercised the prophetical office during a long period of time, if he lived to the reign of Manasseh; for the lowest computation, beginning from the year in which Uzziah died, when some suppose him to have received his first appointment to that office, brings it to 61 years. But the tradition of the Jews, that he was put to death by Manasseh, is very uncertain; and one of their principal rabbins (Aben Ezra, Com. in Isa. i. 1.) seems rather to think that he died before Hezekiah; which is indeed more probable. It is however certain, that he lived at least to the 15th or 16th year of Hezekiah: this makes the least possible term of the duration of his prophetical office about 48 years. The time of the delivery of some of his prophecies is either expressly marked, or sufficiently clear from the history to which they relate: that of a few others may with some probability be deduced from internal marks; from expressions, descriptions, and circumstances interwoven. It may therefore be of some use in this respect, and for the better understanding of his prophecies in general, to give here a summary view of the history of his time.

The kingdom of Judah seems to have been in a more flourishing condition during the reigns of Uzziah and Jotham, than at any other time after the revolt of the ten tribes. The former recovered the port of Elath on the Red Sea, which the Edomites had taken in the reign of Joram: he was successful in his wars with the Philistines, and took from them several cities, Gath, Jabneh, Ashdod; as likewise against some people of Arabia Deserta; and against the Ammonites, whom he compelled to pay him tribute. He repaired and improved the fortifications of Jerusalem; and had a great army well appointed and disciplined. He was no less attentive to the arts of peace; and very much encouraged agriculture, and the breeding of cattle. Jotham maintained the establishments and improvements made by his father; added to what Uzziah had done in strengthening the frontier places; conquered the Ammonites, who had revolted, and exacted from them a more stated and probably a larger tribute. However, at the latter end of his time, the league between Pekah king of Israel and Retsin king of Syria was formed against Judah; and they began to carry their designs into execution.

But in the reign of Ahaz his son, not only all these advantages were lost, but the kingdom of Judah was brought to the brink of destruction. Pekah king of Israel overthrew the army of Ahaz, who lost in battle 120,000 men; and the Israelites carried away captives 200,000 women and children; which however were released, and sent home again, upon the remonstrance of the prophet Oded. After this, as it should seem, (see Vitringa on chap. vii. 2.), the two kings of Israel and Syria, joining their forces, laid siege to Jerusalem; but in this attempt they failed of success. In this distress Ahaz called in the assistance of Tiglath-Pileser king of Assyria; who invaded the kingdoms of Israel and Syria, and slew Retsin: but he was more in danger than ever from his too powerful ally; to purchase whose forbearance, as he had before bought his assistance, he was forced to strip himself and his people of all the wealth he could possibly raise, from his own treasury, from the temple, and from the country. About the time of the siege of Jerusalem the Syrians took Elath, which was never after recovered. The Edomites likewise, taking advantage of the distress of Ahaz, ravaged Judea, and carried away many captives. The Philistines recovered what they had before lost; and took many places in Judea, and maintained themselves there. Idolatry was established by the command of the king in Jerusalem, and throughout Judea; and the service of the temple was either intermitted, or converted into an idolatrous worship.

Hezekiah, his son, at his accession to the throne, immediately set about the restoration of the legal worship of God, both in Jerusalem and through Judea. He cleansed and repaired the temple, and held a solemn passover. He improved the city, repaired the fortifications, erected magazines of all sorts, and built a new aqueduct. In the fourth year of his reign Shalmaneser king of Assyria invaded the kingdom of Israel, took Samaria, and carried away the Israelites into captivity; and replaced them by different people sent from his own country: and this was the final destruction of that kingdom, in the sixth year of the reign of Hezekiah.

Hezekiah was not deterred by this alarming example from refusing to pay the tribute to the king of Assyria, which had been imposed on Ahaz. This brought on the invasion of Senacherib in the fourteenth year of his reign; an account of which is inserted among the prophecies of Isaiah. After a great and miraculous deliverance from so powerful an enemy, Hezekiah continued his reign in peace: he prospered in all his works, and left his kingdom in a flourishing state to his son Manasseh; a son in every respect unworthy of such a father.

CHAPTER I.

1. The vision of Isaiah—] It seems doubtful, whether this title belong to the whole book, or only to the prophecy contained in this chapter. The former part of the title seems properly to belong to this particular prophecy: the latter part, which enumerates the kings of Judah under whom Isaiah exercised his prophetic office, seems to extend it to the whole collection of prophecies delivered in the course of his ministry. Vitringa (to whom the world is greatly indebted for his learned labours on this Prophet; and to whom we should have owed much more, if he had not so totally devoted himself to Masoretic authority) has, I think, very judiciously resolved this doubt. He supposes, that the former part of the title was originally prefixed to this single prophecy; and that, when the collection of all Isaiah's prophecies was made, the enumeration of the kings of Judah was added, to make it at the same time a proper title to the whole book. As such it is plainly taken in 2 Chron. xxxii. 32. where the book of Isaiah is cited by this title: "The vision of Isaiah the Prophet, the son of Amos."

The prophecy contained in this first chapter stands single and unconnected, making an entire piece of itself. It contains a severe remonstrance against the corruptions prevailing among the Jews of that time; powerful exhortations to repentance; grievous threatenings to the impenitent; and gracious promises of better times, when the nation shall have been reformed by the just judgments of God. The expression upon the whole is clear; the connexion of the several parts easy; and, in regard to the images, sentiments, and style, it gives a beautiful example of the Prophet's elegant manner of writing; though perhaps it may not be equal in these respects to many of the following prophecies.

2. Hear, O ye heavens—] God is introduced as entering upon a solemn and public action, or pleading, before the whole world, against his disobedient people. The Prophet, as herald or officer to proclaim the summons to the court, calls upon all created beings, celestial and terrestrial, to attend, and bear witness to the truth of his plea, and the justice of his cause. The same scene is more fully displayed in the noble exordium of Psalm l. where God summons all mankind, from east to west, to be present to hear his appeal; and the solemnity is held on Sion, where he is attended with the same terrible pomp that accompanied him on Mount Sinai:—

“A consuming fire goes before him,
And round him rages a violent tempest :
He calleth the heavens from above,
And the earth, that he may contend in judgment with his people.”Psal. l. 3, 4.

By the same bold figure, Micah calls upon the mountains, that is, the whole country of Judea, to attend to him : Chap. vi. 1. 2.

“Arise, plead thou before the mountains,
And let the hills hear thy voice.
Hear, O ye mountains, the controversy of JEHOVAH ;
And ye, O ye strong foundations of the earth :
For JEHOVAH hath a controversy with his people,
And he will plead his cause against Israel.”

With the like invocation Moses introduces his sublime song; the design of which was the same as that of this prophecy, “to testify, as a witness, against the Israelites,” for their disobedience, Deut. xxxi. 21.

“Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak ;
And let the earth hear the words of my mouth.”

Deut. xxxii. 1.

This in the simple yet strong oratorical style of Moses is,
“I call heaven and earth to witness against thee this day :

life and death have I set before thee; the blessing and the curse: choose now life, that thou mayest live, thou and thy seed:" Deut. xxx. 19. The poetical style, by an apostrophe, sets the personification in a much stronger light.

Ibid. —that speaketh] I render it in the present time, pointing it יִדְבָּר. There seems to be an impropriety in demanding attention to a speech already delivered.

Ibid. I have nourished—] The LXX have ἐσθηνησα, I have begotten. Instead of גְּדַלְתִּי, they read יִלְדִּיתִי; a word little differing from the other, and perhaps more proper: which the Chaldee likewise seems to favour; "vocavi eos filios." See Exod. iv. 22. Jer. xxxi. 9.

3. The ox knoweth—] An amplification of the gross insensibility of the disobedient Jews, by comparing them with the most heavy and stupid of all animals, yet not so insensible as they. Bochart has well illustrated the comparison, and shewn the peculiar force of it. "He sets them lower than the beasts, and even than the stupidest of all beasts; for there is scarce any more so than the ox and the ass. Yet these acknowledge their master; they know the manger of their lord: by whom they are fed, not for their own, but for his good; neither are they looked upon as children, but as beasts of burthen; neither are they advanced to honours, but oppressed with great and daily labours: While the Israelites, chosen by the mere favour of God, adopted as sons, promoted to the highest dignity, yet acknowledged not their Lord and their God; but despised his commandments, though in the highest degree equitable and just." Hieroz. i. col. 409.

Jeremiah's comparison to the same purpose is equally elegant; but has not so much spirit and severity as this of Isaiah:

"Even the stork in the heavens knoweth her season;
And the turtle, and the swallow, and the crane, observe the time of their coming:
But my people doth not know the judgment of JEHOVAH."
Jer. viii. 7.

Hosea has given a very elegant turn to the same image, in the way of metaphor or allegory:

"I drew them with human cords, with the bands of love:
And I was to them, as he that lifteth up the yoke upon their cheek;
And I laid down their fodder before them." Hosea xi. 4.

Salomo ben Melech thus explains the middle part of the verse, which is somewhat obscure: "I was to them at their desire, as they that have compassion on a heifer, lest she be over-worked in ploughing; and that lift up the yoke from off her neck, and rest it upon her cheek, that she may not still draw, but rest from her labour an hour or two in the day."

Ibid. But Israel—] The LXX, Syriac, Aquila, Theodotion, and Vulgate, read וישראל, adding the conjunction; which, being rendered as an adversative, sets the opposition in a stronger light.

Ibid. Me.] The same ancient versions agree in adding this word; which very properly answers, and indeed is almost necessarily required to answer, the words possessor and lord preceding. Ἰσραηλ. δὲ ME אֶעֱנֶה, LXX. "Israel autem ME non cognovit," Vulg. Ἰσραηλ. δὲ ΜΟΥ אֶעֱנֶה, Aq. Theod. The testimony of so scrupulous an interpreter as Aquila is of great weight in this case. And both his and Theodotion's rendering is such as shews plainly, that they did not add the word ΜΟΥ to help out the sense; for it only embarrasses it. It also clearly determines what was the original reading in the old copies, from which they translated. It could not be ידעני, which most obviously answers to the version of LXX and Vulg. for it does not accord with that of Aquila and Theodotion. The version of these latter interpreters, however injudicious, clearly ascertains both the phrase, and the order of the words, of the original Hebrew: it was וישראל אותי לא ידע. The word אותי has been lost out of the text. The very same phrase is used by Jeremiah, chap. iv. 22. עמי אותי לא ידעו: and the order of the words must have been as above represented; for they have joined ישראל with אותי, as in regimine: they could not have taken it in this sense, Israel MEUS non cognovit, had either this phrase, or the order of the words, been different. I have endeavoured to set this matter in a clear light, as it is the first example of a whole word lost out of the text; of which the reader will find many other plain examples in the course of these Notes.

The LXX, Syr. Vulg. read ועמי, "and my people;" and so likewise sixteen MSS.

4. degenerate] Five MSS (one of them ancient) read משהחית without the first י; in Hophal, corrupted, not corrupters. See the same word, in the same form, and in the same sense, Prov. xxv. 26.

Ibid. —are estranged] Thirty-two MSS (five ancient) and two editions read נזירו : which reading determines the word to be from the root נזר, to alienate, not from נזר, to separate: so Kimchi understands it. See also Annotat. in Noldium, 68.

Ibid. they have turned their backs upon him] So Kimchi explains it: “they have turned unto him the back, and not the face:” see Jer. ii. 27. vii. 24. I have been forced to render this line paraphrastically; as the verbal translation “they are estranged backward,” would have been unintelligible.

5. On what part—] The Vulgate renders על מה, super quo, (see Job xxxviii. 6. 2 Chron. xxxii. 10.), upon what part: and so Abendana, on Sal. b. Melech: “There are some who explain it thus: Upon what limb shall you be smitten, if you add defection? for already for your sins have you been smitten upon all of them; so that there is not to be found in you a whole limb, on which you can be smitten.” Which agrees with what follows: “From the sole of the foot even to the head, there is no soundness therein:” and the sentiment and image is exactly the same with that of Ovid, Pont. ii. 7. 42.

“Vix habet in nobis jam nova plaga locum.”

Or that still more expressive line of Euripides; the great force and effect of which Longinus ascribes to its close and compressed structure, analogous to the sense which it expresses:—

Γεμυ αααων δη' κ' ααα' εσθ' ὁπη τεσθη.

I'm full of miseries: there's no room for more.

Herc. Fur. 1245. Long. sect. 40.

“On what part will ye strike again; will ye add correction?” This is addressed to the instruments of God's vengeance; those that inflicted the punishment, who or whatsoever they were. “Ad verbum certæ personæ intelligendæ sunt, quibus ista actio [quæ per verbum exprimitur] competit:” as Glassius says in a similar case, Phil. Sacr. i. 3. 22. See chap. viii. 4.

As from ידע, ידעה, knowledge; from יעץ, עצה, counsel; from ישן, שנה, sleep, &c.: so from יסר is regularly derived סרה, correction.

6. It hath not been pressed—] The art of medicine in the East consists chiefly in external applications: accordingly the Prophet's images in this place are all taken from surgery. Sir John Chardin, in his note on Prov. iii. 8. "It shall be health to thy navel, and marrow to thy bones," observes, that "the comparison is taken from the plasters, ointments, oils, frictions, which are made use of in the East upon the belly and stomach in most maladies. Being ignorant in the villages of the art of making decoctions and potions, and of the proper doses of such things, they generally make use of external medicines." Harmer's Observations on Scripture, vol. ii. p. 488. And in surgery their materia medica is extremely simple; oil making the principal part of it. "In India," says Tavernier, "they have a certain preparation of oil and melted grease, which they commonly use for the healing of wounds." Voyage Ind. So the good Samaritan poured oil and wine on the wounds of the distressed Jew: wine, cleansing and somewhat astringent, proper for a fresh wound; oil, mollifying and healing. Luke x. 34.

Of the three verbs in this sentence, one is in the singular number in the text, another is singular in two MSS (one of them ancient) חבשה; and Syr. and Vulg. render all of them in the singular number.

7—9. Your country is desolate—] The description of the ruined and desolate state of the country in these verses, does not suit with any part of the prosperous times of Uzziah and Jotham. It very well agrees with the time of Ahaz, when Judea was ravaged by the joint invasion of the Israelites and Syrians, and by the incursions of the Philistines and Edomites. The date of this prophecy is therefore generally fixed to the time of Ahaz. But on the other hand it may be considered, whether those instances of idolatry which are urged in the 29th verse, (the worshipping in groves and gardens), having been at all times too commonly practised, can be supposed to be the only ones which the Prophet would insist upon in the time of Ahaz; who spread the grossest idolatry through the whole country, and introduced it even into the temple; and, to complete his abominations, made his son pass through the fire to Moloch. It is said, 2 Kings xv. 37. that in Jotham's time "the Lord began to send against Judah Retsin and Pekah:" If we may suppose any invasion from that quarter to have been actually made at the latter end of Jotham's reign, I should choose to refer this prophecy to that time.

7. זרים, (at the end of the verse). This reading, though confirmed by all the ancient versions, gives us no good sense; for your land is devoured by "strangers, and is desolate as if overthrown by strangers," is a mere tautology, or, what is as bad, an identical comparison. Aben Ezra thought that the word, in its present form, might be taken for the same with זרם, an inundation: Schultens is of the same opinion, (see Taylor's Concord.); and Schindler in his Lexicon explains it in the same manner: and so, says Kimchi, some explain it. Abendana endeavours to reconcile it to grammatical analogy in the following manner:—"זרים is the same with זרם; that is, as overthrown by an inundation of waters: and these two words have the same analogy as קדם and קדים. Or it may be a concrete, of the same form with שכור; and the meaning will be, as overthrown by rain pouring down violently, and causing a flood." On Sal. b. Melech, in loc. But I rather suppose the true reading to be זרם, and have translated it accordingly: the word זרים, in the line above, seems to have caught the transcriber's eye, and to have led him into this mistake.

8. as a shed in a vineyard—] A little temporary hut covered with boughs, straw, turf, or the like materials, for a shelter from the heat by day, and the cold and dews by night, for the watchman that kept the garden, or vineyard, during the short season while the fruit was ripening; (see Job xxvii. 18.); and presently removed, when it had served that purpose. See Harmer, Observ. i. 454. They were probably obliged to have such a constant watch, to defend the fruit from the jackals. "The jackal," (chical of the Turks), says Hasselquist, (Travels, p. 277.), "is a species of mustela which is very common in Palestine, especially during the vintage, and often destroys whole vineyards, and gardens of cucumbers." "There is also plenty of the canis vulpes, the fox, near the convent of St John in the Desert, about vintage time; for they destroy all the vines, unless they are strictly watched." Ibid. p. 184. See Cant. ii. 15.

Fruits of the gourd kind, melons, water-melons, cucumbers, &c. are much used, and in great request, in the Levant, on account of their cooling quality. The Israelites in the wilderness regretted the loss of the cucumbers and the melons, among the other good things of Egypt: Numb. xi. 5.

In Egypt, the season of water-melons, which are most in request, and which the common people then chiefly live upon, lasts but three weeks. See Hasselquist, p. 256. Tavernier makes it of longer continuance:—"L'on y void de grands carreaux de melons et de concombres; mais beaucoup plus des derniers, dont les Levantins font leur delices. Le plus souvent ils les mangent sans les peler, après quoy ils vont boire une verre d'eau. Dans toute l'Asie c'est la nourriture ordinaire du petit peuple pendant trois ou quatre mois; toute la famille en vit, et quand un enfant demande à manger, au lieu qu'en France ou ailleurs nous luy donnerions du pain, dans le Levant on luy presente un concombre, qu'il mange cru comme on le vient de cueillir.—Les concombres dans le Levant ont une bonté particulière, et quoyqu' on les mange crus, ils ne font jamais de mal." Tavernier, Relat. du Serail, c. xix.

Ibid. a city taken by siege.] So LXX and Vulg.

6. Jehovah God of Hosts.] As this title of God יהוה צבאות, "JEHOVAH of Hosts," occurs here for the first time, I think it proper to note, that I translate it always, as in this place, "JEHOVAH God of Hosts;" taking it as an elliptical expression for יהוה אלהי צבאות. This title imports, that JEHOVAH is the God, or Lord, of hosts or armies; as he is the Creator, and supreme Governor, of all beings in heaven and earth; and disposeth and ruleth them all in their several orders and stations; the Almighty, Universal Lord.

10. Ye princes of Sodom—] The incidental mention of Sodom and Gomorrah in the preceding verse, suggested to the Prophet this spirited address to the rulers and inhabitants of Jerusalem, under the character of princes of Sodom and people of Gomorrah. Two examples of a sort of elegant turn of the like kind may be observed in St Paul's Epistle to the Romans, xv. 4, 5. and 12, 13. See Locke on the place; and see 29, 30. of this chapter; which gives another example of the same.

11. —the fat of fed beasts; And in the blood—] The fat and the blood are particularly mentioned, because these were in all sacrifices set apart to God. The fat was always burnt upon the altar; and the blood was partly sprinkled, differently on different occasions, and partly poured out at the bottom of the altar. See Lev. iv.

11—16. What have I to do—] The prophet Amos has expressed the same sentiments with great elegance:

“ I hate, I despise your feasts ;
 And I will not delight in the odour of your solemnities ;
 Though ye offer unto me burnt-offerings :
 And your meat-offerings I will not accept ;
 Neither will I regard the peace-offering of your fatlings.
 Take away from me the noise of your songs ;
 And the melody of your viols I will not hear.
 But let judgment roll down like waters ;
 And righteousness like a mighty stream.” Amos v. 21–24.

12. Tread my courts no more—] So the LXX divide the sentence ; joining the end of this verse to the beginning of the next.

13. The fast, and the day of restraint] און ועצרה. These words are rendered in many different manners by different interpreters ; to a good and probable sense by all ; but, I think, by none in such a sense as can arise from the phrase itself, agreeably to the idiom of the Hebrew language. Instead of און, the LXX manifestly read צום, ἡμέραν, “ the fast.” This Houbigant has adopted. The Prophet could not well have omitted the fast in the enumeration of their solemnities ; nor the abuse of it, among the instances of their hypocrisy, which he has treated at large with such force and elegance in his 58th chapter. Observe also, that the prophet Joel twice joins together the fast, and the day of restraint :

קדשו צום קראו עצרה

“ Sanctify a fast ; proclaim a day of restraint.” Joel i. 14. ii. 15.

Which shews how properly they are here joined together. עצרה, the restraint, is rendered, both here and in other places in our English translation, the solemn assembly. Certain holy days, ordained by the law, were distinguished by a particular charge, that “ no servile work should be done therein.” Lev. xxiii. 36. Numb. xxix. 35. Deut. xvi. 8. This circumstance clearly explains the reason of the name, the restraint, or the day of restraint, given to those days.

If I could approve of any translation of these two words which I have met with, it should be that of the Spanish version of the Old Testament, made for the use of the Spanish Jews : “ tortura y detenimiento,” “ it is a pain and a constraint unto me.” But I still think, that the reading of the LXX is more probably the truth.

15. When ye spread—] The Syr. LXX, and MS, read בפרשכם, without the conjunction ו.

Ibid. For your hands—] At γὰρ χεῖρες, LXX. Manus enim vestræ, Vulg. They seem to have read כי ידיכם.

16. Wash ye—] Referring to the preceding verse, “your hands are full of blood;” and alluding to the legal washings commanded on several occasions. See Lev. xiv. 8, 9. 47.

17. amend that which is corrupted] אשרו חמוץ. In rendering this obscure phrase I follow Bochart, (Hieroz. Part I. lib. ii. cap. 7.), though I am not perfectly satisfied with his explication of it.

18. Though your sins were as scarlet—] שני, “scarlet, or crimson,” dibaphum, twice dipped, or double-dyed; from שנה, iterare, to double, or to do a thing twice. This derivation seems much more probable than that which Salmasius prefers, from שנן, acuere, from the sharpness and strength of the colour; σφραγισμα. תליע, the same; properly the worm, vermiculus, (from whence vermeil); for this colour was produced from a worm, or insect, which grew in a coccus, or excrescence, of a shrub of the ilex kind, (see Plin. Nat. Hist. xvi. 8.); like the cochineal worm in the opuntia of America, (see Ulloa’s Voyage, b. v. ch. 2. note to p. 342.) There is a shrub of this kind that grows in Provence and Languedoc, and produces the like insect, called the hermes oak, (see Miller, Dict. Quercus); from kermez, the Arabic word for this colour; whence our word crimson is derived.

“Neque amissos colores
Lana refert medicata fuco,” says the poet; applying the same image to a different purpose. To discharge these strong colours is impossible to human art or power; but to the grace and power of God, all things, even much more difficult, are possible and easy.

19. Ye shall feed on the good of the land] Referring to ver. 7.; it shall not be “devoured by strangers.”

20. Ye shall be food for the sword] The LXX and Vulg. read תאכלכם, “the sword shall devour you;” which is of much more easy construction than the present reading of the text.

“The Chaldee seems to read בחרב אויב תאכלו, “ye shall be consumed by the sword of the enemy.” Syr. also reads בחרב, and renders the verb passively. And the rhythmus seems to require this addition. Dr Jubb.

21. —become a harlot] See Lowth, Comment. on the place; and De S. Poes. Hebr. Præl. xxxi.

22. wine mixed with water] An image used for the adulteration of wine, with more propriety than may at first appear, if what Thevenot says of the people of the Levant of late times was true of them formerly: He says, “they never mingle water with their wine to drink; but drink by itself what water they think proper for abating the strength of the wine.” “Lorsque les Persans boivent du vin, ils le prennent tout pur, à la façon des Levantins, qui ne le mêlent jamais avec de l’eau; mais en buvant du vin, de temps en temps ils prennent un pot d’eau, et en boivent de grand traits.” Voyage, Part II. liv. ii. chap. 10. “Ils (les Turcs) n’y meslent jamais d’eau, et se moquent des Chrestiens, qui en mettent, ce qui leur semble tout-à-fait ridicule.” Ibid. Part I. chap. 24.

It is remarkable, that whereas the Greeks and Latins by mixed wine always understood wine diluted and lowered with water, the Hebrews on the contrary generally mean by it wine made stronger and more inebriating, by the addition of higher and more powerful ingredients; such as honey, spices, defrutum, (or wine inspissated by boiling it down to two-thirds, or one-half, of the quantity), myrrh, mandragora, opiates, and other strong drugs. Such were the exhilarating, or rather stupifying, ingredients, which Helen mixed in the bowl together with the wine for her guests oppressed with grief, to raise their spirits; the composition of which she had learned in Egypt:

Αὐτὴν ἄρ' εἰς οἶνον βάλε φαρμακκόν, εὐθὺν ἐπίνον,

Νηπειθεὶς τ' ἀχολόν τε, κακῶν ἐπιλήθον ἀπανήλων. Hom. Odys. iv. 220.

“Mean while, with genial joy to warm the soul,
Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl;
Temper'd with drugs of sovereign use, t' assuage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage:
Charm'd with that virtuous draught, th' exalted mind
All sense of woe delivers to the wind.”

Pope.

Such was “the spiced wine and the juice of pomegranates,” mentioned Cant. viii. 2. And how much the eastern people to this day deal in artificial liquors of prodigious strength, the use of wine being forbidden, may be seen in a curious chapter of Kempfer upon that subject. Amœn. Exot. Fasc. iii. Obs. 15.

Thus the drunkard is properly described, (Prov. xxiii. 30.), as one “that seeketh mixt wine;” and is “mighty to minge strong drink;” Isaiah v. 22. And hence the Psalmist took that highly poetical and sublime image of the cup of God's wrath, called by Isaiah (li. 17.) "the cup of trembling," (causing intoxication and stupefaction; see Chappelow's note on Hariri, p. 33.); containing, as St John expresses in Greek this Hebrew idea with the utmost precision, though with a seeming contradiction in terms, κεκρασμενον ακρατον, merum mixtum, pure wine made yet stronger by a mixture of powerful ingredients: Rev. xiv. 10. "In the hand of JEHOVAH," saith the Psalmist, (Psal. lxxv. 9.), "there is a cup, and the wine is turbid: it is full of a mixed liquor, and he poureth out of it: (or rather, "he poureth it out of one vessel into another," to mix it perfectly: according to the reading expressed by the ancient versions, ויגר מזה אל זה): verily the dregs thereof, (the thickest sediment of the strong ingredients mingled with it), all the ungodly of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them."

23. associates—] The LXX, Vulg. and four MSS, read חברי, without the conjunction ו.

24. Aha! I will be eased—] Anger, arising from a sense of injury and affront, especially from those who, from every consideration of duty and gratitude, ought to have behaved far otherwise, is an uneasy and painful sensation; and revenge, executed to the full on the offenders, removes that uneasiness, and consequently is pleasing and quieting, at least for the present. Ezekiel introduces God expressing himself in the same manner:

"And mine anger shall be fully accomplished;
And I will make my fury rest upon them;
And I will give myself ease."

Chap. v. 13.

This is a strong instance of the metaphor called Anthropopathia; by which, throughout the Scriptures, as well the historical as the poetical parts, the sentiments, sensations, and affections, the bodily faculties, qualities, and members of men, and even of brute animals, are attributed to God; and that with the utmost liberty and latitude of application. The foundation of this is obvious; it arises from necessity: we have no idea of the natural attributes of God, of his pure essence, of his manner of existence, of his manner of acting: when therefore we would treat on these subjects, we find ourselves forced to express them by sensible images. But necessity leads to beauty: this is true of metaphor in general, and in particular of this kind of metaphor; which is used with great elegance and sublimity in the sacred poetry : and what is very remarkable, in the grossest instances of the application of it, it is generally the most striking and the most sublime. The reason seems to be this : When the images are taken from the superior faculties of the human nature, from the purer and more generous affections, and applied to God, we are apt to acquiesce in the notion ; we overlook the metaphor, and take it as a proper attribute : but when the idea is gross and offensive, as in this passage of Isaiah, where the impatience of anger, and the pleasure of revenge, is attributed to God ; we are immediately shocked at the application ; the impropriety strikes us at once ; and the mind, casting about for something in the divine nature analogous to the image, lays hold on some great, obscure, vague idea, which she endeavours in vain to comprehend, and is lost in immensity and astonishment. See De S. Poesi Hebr. Præl. xvi. sub fin. where this matter is treated and illustrated by examples.

25. in the furnace] The text has כּבּר ; which some render “ as with soap ;” as if it were the same with כּבוּרִית ; so Kimchi ; but soap can have nothing to do with the purifying of metals : others, “ according to purity, or purely,” as our version. Le Clerc conjectured, that the true reading is כּבוּר, “ as in the furnace :” see Ezek. xxii. 18. 20. Dr Durell proposes only a transposition of letters בכּר ; to the same sense : and so likewise Archbishop Secker. That this is the true reading is highly probable.

26. And after this—] The LXX, Syr. Chald. and eighteen MSS, add the conjunction ו.

27. —in judgment ;] by the exercise of God’s strict justice in destroying the obdurate, (see ver. 28.) ; and delivering the penitent : —in righteousness ; by the truth and faithfulness of God in performing his promises.

29, 30. For ye shall be ashamed of the ilexes—] Sacred groves were a very ancient and favourite appendage of idolatry. They were furnished with the temple of the god to whom they were dedicated ; with altars, images, and every thing necessary for performing the various rites of worship offered there ; and were the scenes of many impure ceremonies, and of much abominable superstition. They made a principal part of the religion of the old inhabitants of Canaan ; and the Israelites were commanded to destroy their groves, among other monuments of their false worship.

The Israelites themselves became afterward very much addicted to this species of idolatry.

“When I had brought them into the land,
Which I swore that I would give unto them ;
Then they saw every high hill, and every thick tree :
And there they slew their victims ;
And there they presented the provocation of their offerings ;
And there they placed their sweet savour ;
And there they poured out their libations.” Ezek. xx. 28.

“On the tops of the mountains they sacrifice ;
And on the hills they burn incense :
Under the oak, and the poplar ;
And the ilex, because her shade is pleasant.” Hosea iv. 13.

Of what particular kinds the trees here mentioned are, it cannot be determined with certainty. In regard to אלה, in this place of Isaiah, as well as in Hosea, Celsius (Hierobot.) understands it of the terebinth ; because the most ancient interpreters render it so ; in the first place the LXX. He quotes eight places ; but in three of these eight places the copies vary, some having δρυς instead of τερεβινθος. And he should have told us, that these same LXX render it in sixteen other places by δρυς : so that their authority is really against him ; and the LXX stant pro quercu, contrary to what he says at first setting out. Add to this, that Symmachus, Theodotion, and Aquila, generally render it by δρυς ; the latter only once rendering it by τερεβινθος. His other arguments seem to me not very conclusive : he says, that all the qualities of אלה agree to the terebinth ; that it grows in mountainous countries ; that it is a strong tree ; long-lived ; large and high ; and deciduous. All these qualities agree just as well to the oak, against which he contends ; and he actually attributes them to the oak in the very next section. But, I think, neither the oak nor the terebinth will do in this place of Isaiah, from the last circumstance which he mentions, their being deciduous ; where the Prophet's design seems to me to require an ever-green : otherwise the casting of its leaves would be nothing out of the common established course of nature, and no proper image of extreme distress, and total desolation ; parallel to that of a garden without water, that is, wholly burnt up and destroyed. An ancient, who was an inhabitant and a native of this country, understands it, in like manner, of a tree blasted with uncommon and immoderate heat:—"velut arbores, cum frondes æstu torrente decusserunt." Ephræm Syr. in loc. edit. Assemani. Compare Psal. i. 4. Jer. xvii. 8. Upon the whole, I have chosen to make it the ilex; which word Vossius (Etymolog.) derives from the Hebrew אֵלֶּה; that, whether the word itself be rightly rendered or not, I might at least preserve the propriety of the poetical image.

29. For ye shall be ashamed] תבושו, in the second person, Vulg. Chald. two MSS, and one edition; and in agreement with the rest of the sentence.

30. —whose leaves] Twenty-six MSS and three editions read עֲלֵיהָ, in its full and regular form. This is worth remarking, as it accounts for a great number of anomalies of the like kind, which want only the same authority to rectify them.

30. —a garden wherein is no water.] In the hotter parts of the eastern countries, a constant supply of water is so absolutely necessary for the cultivation, and even for the preservation and existence of a garden, that should it want water but for a few days, every thing in it would be burnt up with the heat, and totally destroyed. There is therefore no garden whatever in those countries, but what has such a certain supply; either from some neighbouring river, or from a reservoir of water collected from springs, or filled with rain-water in the proper season, in sufficient quantity to afford ample provision for the rest of the year.

Moses, having described the habitation of man newly created, as a garden, planted with every tree pleasant to the sight and good for food, adds, as a circumstance necessary to complete the idea of a garden, that it was well supplied with water: (Gen. ii. 10. and see xiii. 10.) "And a river went out of Eden to water the garden."

That the reader may have a clear notion of this matter, it will be necessary to give some account of the management of their gardens in this respect.

"Damascus, (says Maundrell, p. 122.), is encompassed with gardens, extending no less, according to common estimation, than thirty miles round; which makes it look like a city in a vast wood. The gardens are thick set with fruit-trees of all kinds, kept fresh and verdant by the waters of Barrady, (the Chrysorrhœas of the ancients), which supply both the gardens and city in great abundance. This river, as soon as it issues out from between the cleft of the mountain before mentioned into the plain, is immediately divided into three streams; of which the middlemost and biggest runs directly to Damascus, and is distributed to all the cisterns and fountains of the city. The other two (which I take to be the work of art) are drawn round, one to the right hand, and the other to the left, on the borders of the gardens, into which they are let as they pass, by little currents, and so dispersed all over the vast wood: inso-much, that there is not a garden but has a fine quick stream running through it. Barrady is almost wholly drunk up by the city and gardens. What small part of it escapes is united, as I was informed, in one channel again, on the south-east side of the city; and, after about three or four hours' course, finally loses itself in a bog there, without ever arriving at the sea." This was likewise the case in former times, as Strabo, lib. xvi. Pliny, v. 18. testify; who say, "that this river was expended in canals, and drunk up by watering the place."

"The best sight (says the same Maundrell, p. 39.) that the palace [of the Emir of Beroot, anciently Berytus] affords, and the worthiest to be remembered, is the orange garden. It contains a large quadrangular plat of ground, divided into sixteen lesser squares, four in a row, with walks between them. The walks are shaded with orange-trees, of a large spreading size. Every one of these sixteen lesser squares in the garden was bordered with stone; and in the stone-work were troughs, very artificially contrived, for conveying the water all over the garden; there being little outlets cut at every tree, for the stream, as it passed by, to flow out, and water it." The royal gardens at Ispahan are watered just in the same manner, according to Kempfer's description, Amœn. Exot. p. 193.

This gives us a clear idea of the פלגי מים, mentioned in the first Psalm, and other places of Scripture, "the divisions of waters," the waters distributed in artificial canals; for so the phrase properly signifies. The prophet Jeremiah has imitated, and elegantly amplified, the passage of the Psalmist above referred to:—

"He shall be like a tree planted by the water-side,
And which sendeth forth her roots to the aqueduct:
She shall not fear, when the heat cometh;
But her leaf shall be green;
And in the year of drought she shall not be anxious,
Neither shall she cease from bearing fruit." Jer. xvii. 8.

From this image the Son of Sirach has most beautifully illustrated the influence and the increase of religious wisdom in a well-prepared heart :—

“I also came forth as a canal from a river,
And as a conduit flowing into a paradise.
I said: I will water my garden,
And I will abundantly moisten my border:
And lo! my canal became a river,
And my river became a sea.” Eccles xxiv. 30, 31.

This gives us the true meaning of the following elegant proverb :—

“The heart of the king is like the canals of waters in the hand of JEHOVAH; Whithersoever it pleaseth him, he inclineth it.” Prov. xxi. 1.

The direction of it is in the hand of JEHOVAH, as the distribution of the water of the reservoir through the garden, by different canals, is at the will of the gardener :—

“Et, quum exustus ager morientibus æstuat herbis,
Ecce supercilio clivosi tramitis undam
Elicit: illa cadens raucum per levia murmur
Saxa ciet, scatebrisque arentia temperat arva.”

Virg. Georg. i. 107.

Solomon mentions his own works of this kind :—

“I made me gardens, and paradises;
And I planted in them all kinds of fruit-trees.
I made me pools of water,
To water with them the grove flourishing with trees.”

Eccles. ii. 5. 6.

Maundrell (p. 88.) has given a description of the remains, as they are said to be, of these very pools made by Solomon for the reception and preservation of the waters of a spring rising at a little distance from them, which will give us a perfect notion of the contrivance and design of such reservoirs. “As for the pools, they are three in number, lying in a row above each other; being so disposed, that the waters of the uppermost may descend into the second, and those of the second into the third. Their figure is quadrangular; the breadth is the same in all, amounting to about ninety paces: in their length there is some difference between them; the first being about one hundred and sixty paces long; the second two hundred; the third two hundred and twenty. They are all lined with wall, and plastered; and contain a great depth of water.”

The immense works which were made by the ancient kings of Egypt for receiving the waters of the Nile when it overflowed, for such uses, are well known. But there never was a more stupendous work of this kind, than the reservoir of Saba, or Merab, in Arabia Felix. According to the tradition of the country, it was the work of Balkis, that queen of Sheba who visited Solomon. It was a vast lake formed by the collection of the waters of a torrent in a valley, where, at a narrow pass between two mountains, a very high mole, or dam, was built. The water of the lake so formed had near twenty fathom depth; and there were three sluices at different heights, by which, at whatever height the lake stood, the plain below might be watered. By conduits and canals from these sluices the water was constantly distributed in due proportion to the several lands; so that the whole country for many miles became a perfect paradise. The city of Saba, or Merab, was situated immediately below the great dam: a great flood came, and raised the lake above its usual height; the dam gave way in the middle of the night; the waters burst forth at once, and overwhelmed the whole city, with the neighbouring towns, and people. The remains of eight tribes were forced to abandon their dwelling, and the beautiful valley became a morass and a desert. This fatal catastrophe happened long before the time of Mohammed, who mentions it in the Koran, chap. xxxiv. ## CHAPTER II.

THE prophecy contained in the second, third, and fourth chapters, makes one continued discourse. The first five verses of chapter second foretell the kingdom of Messiah, the conversion of the Gentiles, and their admission into it. From the sixth verse to the end of the second chapter is foretold the punishment of the unbelieving Jews, for their idolatrous practices, their confidence in their own strength, and distrust of God's protection; and moreover the destruction of idolatry, in consequence of the establishment of Messiah's kingdom. The whole third chapter, with the first verse of the fourth, is a prophecy of the calamities of the Babylonian invasion and captivity; with a particular amplification of the distress of the proud and luxurious daughters of Sion. Chap. iv. 2—6. promises to the remnant which shall have escaped this severe purgation, a future restoration to the favour and protection of God.

This prophecy was probably delivered in the time of Jotham, or perhaps in that of Uzziah; as Isaiah is said to have prophesied in his reign: to which time not any of his prophecies is so applicable as that of these chapters. The seventh verse of the second, and the latter part of the third chapter, plainly point out times in which riches abounded, and luxury and delicacy prevailed. Plenty of silver and gold could only arise from their commerce; particularly from that part of it which was carried on by the Red Sea. This circumstance seems to confine the prophecy within the limits above mentioned, while the port of Elath was in their hands: it was lost under Ahaz, and never recovered.

2. —in the latter days—] “Wherever the latter times are mentioned in Scripture, the days of the Messiah are always meant,” says Kimchi on this place; and, in regard to this place, nothing can be more clear and certain. The Prophet Micah (chap. iv. 1—4.) has repeated this prophecy of the establishment of the kingdom of Christ, and of its progress to universality and perfection, in the same words, with little and hardly any material variation: for, as he did not begin to prophesy till Jotham’s time, and this seems to be one of the first of Isaiah’s prophecies, I suppose Micah to have taken it from hence. The variations, as I said, are of no great importance. Verse 2. וְנִשְׂאָה after הָיָה, a word of some emphasis, may be supplied from Micah, if dropt in Isaiah: an ancient MS has it here in the margin: It has in like manner been lost in chap. liii. 4. (see note on the place); and in Psal. xxii. 29. where it is supplied by Syr. and LXX. Instead of כָּל הַגּוֹיִם, all the nations, Micah has only עַמִּים, peoples; where Syr. has כָּל עַמִּים, all peoples, as probably it ought to be. Verse 3. for the 2d אֵל read וְאֵל, seventeen MSS, two editions, LXX, Vulg. Syr. Chald. and so Micah iv. 2. Verse 4. Micah adds, עַד רִחֵק, afar off, which the Syriac also reads in this parallel place of Isaiah. It is also to be observed, that Micah has improved the passage by adding a verse, or sentence, for imagery and expression worthy even of the elegance of Isaiah:—

“ And they shall sit, every man under his vine,
And under his fig-tree, and none shall affright them :
For the mouth of JEHOVAH God of Hosts hath spoken it.”

The description of well-established peace, by the image of “beating their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks,” is very poetical. The Roman poets have employed the same image: Martial, xiv. 34. “Falx ex ense.”

“ *Pax me certa ducis placidos curvavit in usus :
Agricolæ nunc sum ; militis ante fui.*”

The Prophet Joel hath reversed it, and applied it to war prevailing over peace :—

“ Beat your ploughshares into swords ;
And your pruning-hooks into spears.” Joel iii. 10.

And so likewise the Roman poets :—

“ *Non ullus aratro
Dignus honos : squalent abductis arva colonis,
Et curvæ rigidum falces conflantur in ensem.*”
Virg. Georg. i. 506.

“ *Bella diu tenere viros : erat aptior ensis
Vomere : cedebat taurus arator equo.
Sarcula cessabant ; versique in pila ligones ;
Factaque de rastri pondere cassis erat.*” Ovid. Fast. i. 697.

The Prophet Ezekiel has presignified the same great event with equal clearness, though in a more abstruse form, in an allegory ; from an image, suggested by the former part of the prophecy, happily introduced, and well pursued :—

“ Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH :
I myself will take from the shoot of the lofty cedar ;
Even a tender cion from the top of his cions will I pluck off :
And I myself will plant it on a mountain high and eminent.
On the lofty mountain of Israel will I plant it ;
And it shall exalt its branch and bring forth fruit ;
And it shall become a majestic cedar :
And under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing ;
In the shadow of its branches shall they dwell :
And all the trees of the field shall know,
That I JEHOVAH have brought low the high tree ;
Have exalted the low tree ;
Have dried up the green tree ;
And have made the dry tree to flourish :
I JEHOVAH have spoken it, and will do it.” Ezek. xvii. 22–24.

The word וַיִּנְחֵתִי in this passage, verse 22. as the sentence now stands, seems incapable of being reduced to any proper construction or sense; none of the ancient versions acknowledge it, except Theodotion and Vulg.; and all but the latter vary very much from the present reading of this clause. Houbigant's correction of the passage, by reading, instead of ויִּוְנֶקֶת, ויִּוְנֶהֱתִי (and a tender cion), which is not very unlike it, (perhaps better ויִּוְנֶק, with which the adjective רך will agree without alteration), is ingenious and probable; and I have adopted it in the above translation.

6. they are filled with diviners—] Heb. They are filled from the east; or, more than the east. The sentence is manifestly imperfect. The LXX, Vulg. and Chaldee, seem to have read מְקֻדָּם; and the latter, with another word before it signifying idols: They are filled with idols as from of old. Houbigant for מְקֻדָּם reads מְקַסֵּם, as Brentius had proposed long ago. I rather think that both words together give us the true reading: מְקַסֵּם מְקֻדָּם, with divination from the east; and that the first word has been by mistake omitted, from its similitude to the second.

Ibid. And they multiply—] Seven MSS and one edition read יספיקו. “Read יספִּחוּ; and have joined themselves to the children of strangers; that is, in marriage, or worship.” Dr JUBB. So Vulg. adhæserunt. Compare chap. xiv. 1. But the very learned professor Chevalier Michaelis has explained the word יספִּחוּ, Job xxx. 7. (German translation, note on the place) in another manner; which perfectly well agrees with that place, and perhaps will be found to give as good a sense here. ספִּיחַ, the noun, means corn springing up, not from the seed regularly sown on cultivated land, but in the untilled field, from the scattered grains of the former harvest. This, by an easy metaphor, is applied to a spurious brood of children irregularly and casually begotten. The LXX seem to have understood the verb here in this sense, reading it as Vulg. seems to have done: this justifies their version, which it is hard to account for in any other manner: καὶ τέκνα πολλὰ ἀλλοθρῦλα ἐγενήθη αὐτοῖς. Compare Hos. v. 7. and LXX there.

7. And his land is filled with horses] This was in direct contradiction to God's command in the law: “But he [the king] shall not multiply horses to himself; nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses:—neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold:” Deut. xvii. 16, 17. Uzziah seems to have followed the example of Solomon, (see 1 Kings x. 26, —29.), who first transgressed in these particulars: he recovered the port of Elath on the Red Sea, and with it that commerce which, in Solomon's days, had "made silver and gold as plenteous at Jerusalem as stones:" 2 Chron. i. 15. He had an army of 307,500 men; in which, as we may infer from this testimony of Isaiah, the chariots and horse made a considerable part. "The law above-mentioned was to be a standing trial of prince and people, whether they had trust and confidence in God their deliverer." See Bp. Sherlock's Discourses on Prophecy, Dissert. iv. where he has excellently explained the reason and effect of the law, and the influence which the observance or neglect of it had on the affairs of the Israelites.

8. And his land is filled with idols] Uzziah and Jotham are both said (2 Kings xv. 3, 4. and 34, 35.) "to have done that which was right in the sight of the Lord;" (that is, to have adhered to, and maintained, the legal worship of God, in opposition to idolatry, and all irregular worship; for to this sense the meaning of that phrase is commonly to be restrained); "save that the high places were not removed, where the people still sacrificed and burned incense." There was hardly any time when they were quite free from this irregular and unlawful practice; which they seem to have looked upon as very consistent with the true worship of God; and which seems in some measure to have been tolerated, while the tabernacle was removed from place to place, and before the temple was built. Even after the conversion of Manasseh, when he had removed the strange gods, and commanded Judah to serve JEHOVAH the God of Israel; it is added, "Nevertheless the people did sacrifice still on the high places, yet unto JEHOVAH their God only:" 2 Chron. xxxiii. 17. The worshipping on the high places therefore does not necessarily imply idolatry: and from what is said of these two kings, Uzziah and Jotham, we may presume, that the public exercise of idolatrous worship was not permitted in their time. The idols therefore here spoken of, must have been such as were designed for a private and secret use. Such probably were the Teraphim so often mentioned in Scripture; a kind of household gods, of human form, as it should seem, (see 1 Sam. xix. 13. and compare Gen. xxxi. 34.), of different magnitude, used for idolatrous and superstitious purposes; particularly for divination, and as oracles, which they consulted for direction in their affairs.

9. —shall be bowed down] This has reference to the preceding verse : they bowed themselves down to their idols ; therefore shall they be bowed down and brought low under the avenging hand of God.

10. When he ariseth to strike the earth with terror.] On the authority of LXX, confirmed by the Arabic and an ancient MS, I have here added to the text a line, which in the 19th and 21st verses is repeated together with the preceding line, and has, I think, evidently been omitted by mistake in this place. The MS here varies only in one letter from the reading of the other two verses : it has בארץ instead of הארץ.

11. —be humbled] “שפלו ושה, שפלו שח, read שפלו ושה.” Dr DURELL. Which rectifies the grammatical construction.

13—16. Even against all the cedars—] These verses afford us a striking example of that peculiar way of writing which makes a principal characteristic of the parabolical or poetical style of the Hebrews, and in which their prophets deal so largely ; namely, their manner of exhibiting things divine, spiritual, moral, and political, by a set of images taken from things natural, artificial, religious, historical ; in the way of metaphor or allegory. Of these, nature furnishes much the largest and the most pleasing share ; and all poetry has chiefly recourse to natural images, as the richest and most powerful source of illustration. But it may be observed of the Hebrew poetry in particular, that in the use of such images, and in the application of them in the way of illustration and ornament, it is more regular and constant than any other poetry whatever ; that it has, for the most part, a set of images appropriated in a manner to the explication of certain subjects. Thus you will find, in many other places beside this before us, that cedars of Libanus and oaks of Basan are used, in the way of metaphor and allegory, for kings, princes, potentates, of the highest rank ; high mountains and lofty hills, for kingdoms, republics, states, cities ; towers and fortresses, for defenders and protectors, whether by counsel or strength, in peace or war ; ships of Tarshish, and works of art and invention employed in adorning them, for merchants, men enriched by commerce, and abounding in all the luxuries and elegancies of life ; such as those of Tyre and Sidon : for it appears from the course of the whole passage, and from the train of ideas, that the fortresses and the ships are to be taken metaphorically, as well as the high trees and the lofty mountains.

Ships of Tarshish are in Scripture frequently used by a metonymy for ships in general, especially such as are employed in carrying on traffic between distant countries; as Tarshish was the most celebrated mart of those times, frequented of old by the Phenicians, and the principal source of wealth to Judea and the neighbouring countries. The learned seem now to be perfectly well agreed, that Tarshish is Tartessus, a city of Spain, at the mouth of the river Bætis; whence the Phenicians, who first opened this trade, brought silver and gold, (Jer. x. 9. Ezek. xxvii. 12.), in which that country then abounded; and pursuing their voyage still further to the Cassiterides, (Bochart. Canaan, I. cap. 39. Huet, Hist. de Commerce, p. 194.), the islands of Scilly and Cornwall, they brought from thence lead and tin.

Tarshish is celebrated in Scripture (2 Chron. viii. 17, 18. ix. 21.) for the trade which Solomon carried on thither, in conjunction with the Tyrians. Jehosaphat (1 Kings xxii. 48. 2 Chron. xx. 36.) attempted afterward to renew that trade; and from the account given of his attempt it appears, that his fleet was to sail from Eziongeber on the Red Sea: they must therefore have designed to sail round Africa, as Solomon's fleet probably had done before, (see Huet, Histoire de Commerce, p. 32.); for it was a three years' voyage, (2 Chron. ix. 21.); and they brought gold from Ophir, probably on the coast of Arabia, silver from Tartessus, and ivory, apes, and peacocks, from Africa. "אופיר, Afri, Africa, the Roman termination, Africa terra. תרשיש, some city, or country, in Africa. So Chald. on 1 Kings xxii. 49. where he renders תרשיש by אפריקה; and compare 2 Chron. xx. 36. from whence it appears, that to go to Ophir and to Tarshish is one and the same thing." Dr Jubb. It is certain, that under Pharaoh Necho, about two hundred years afterward, this voyage was made by the Egyptians. (Herodot. iv. 42.) They sailed from the Red Sea, and returned by the Mediterranean, and they performed it in three years; just the same time that the voyage under Solomon had taken up. It appears likewise from Pliny, (Nat. Hist. ii. 67.), that the passage round the Cape of Good Hope was known and frequently practised before his time; by Hanno the Carthaginian, when Carthage was in its glory; by one Eudoxus, in the time of Ptolemy Lathyrus king of Egypt: and Cælius Antipater, an historian of good credit, somewhat earlier than Pliny, testifies, that he had seen a merchant who had made the voyage from Gades to Æthiopia. The Portuguese under Vasco de Gama, near three hundred years ago, recovered this navigation, after it had been intermitted and lost for many centuries.

18.—shall disappear] The ancient versions, and an ancient MS, read יִחְלֹפוּ, plural.

19—21. into caverns of rocks—] The country of Judea, being mountainous and rocky, is full of caverns; as it appears from the history of David's persecution under Saul. At Engedi, in particular, there was a cave so large, that David with six hundred men hid themselves in the sides of it; and Saul entered the mouth of the cave without perceiving that any one was there: 1 Sam. xxiv. Josephus (Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 15.; and Bell. Jud. lib. i. cap. 16.) tells us of a numerous gang of banditti, who, having infested the country, and being pursued by Herod with his army, retired into certain caverns, almost inaccessible, near Arbela in Galilee, where they were with great difficulty subdued. Some of these were natural, others artificial. "Beyond Damascus," says Strabo, lib. xvi. "are two mountains called Trachones; [from which the country has the name of Trachonitis]; and from hence, towards Arabia and Iturea, are certain rugged mountains, in which there are deep caverns; one of which will hold four thousand men." Tavernier (Voyage de Perse, Part II. chap. 4.) speaks of a grot, between Aleppo and Bir, that would hold near three thousand horse. "Three hours distant from Sidon, about a mile from the sea, there runs along a high rocky mountain; in the sides of which are hewn a multitude of grots, all very little differing from each other. They have entrances about two feet square: on the inside, you find in most or all of them a room of about four yards square. There are of these subterraneous caverns two hundred in number. It may, with probability at least, be concluded that these places were contrived for the use of the living, and not of the dead. Strabo describes the habitations of the Troglodytæ to have been somewhat of this kind:" Maundrell, p. 118. The Horites, who dwelt in Mount Seir, were Troglodytes, as their name הֹרִים imports. But those mentioned by Strabo were on each side of the Arabian Gulf. Mohammed (Koran, chap. xv. and xxvi.) speaks of a tribe of Arabians, the tribe of Thamud, "who hewed houses out of the mountains, to secure themselves." Thus, "because of the Midianites, the children of Israel made them the dens which are in the mountains, and caves, and strongholds:" Judges vi. 2. To these they betook themselves for refuge in times of distress and hostile invasion: "When the men of Israel saw that they were in a strait, (for the people were distressed), then the people did hide themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits:" 1 Sam. xiii. 6. and see Jer. xli. 9. Therefore, "to enter into the rock; to go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth," was to them a very proper and familiar image to express terror and consternation. The Prophet Hosea hath carried the same image further, and added great strength and spirit to it: Chap. x. 8.

"They shall say to the mountains, Cover us;
And to the hills, Fall on us."

Which image, together with those of Isaiah, is adopted by the sublime author of the Revelation, (chap. vi. 15, 16.), who frequently borrows his imagery from our Prophet.

20. —which they have made to worship—] The word לִי, for himself, is omitted by an ancient MS, and is unnecessary. It does not appear that any copy of LXX has it, except MS Pachom. and MS 1. D. 11.; and they have ἐαυτοῖς, לֵהֶם, plural.

Ibid. —to the moles—] They shall carry their idols with them into the dark caverns, old ruins, or desolate places, to which they shall flee for refuge; and so shall give them up and relinquish them to the filthy animals that frequent such places, and have taken possession of them as their proper habitation. Bellonius, Greaves, P. Lucas, and many other travellers, speak of bats of an enormous size as inhabiting the great Pyramid. See Harmer, Obser. vol. ii. 455. Three MSS express הַפְּרוּרִים, the moles, as one word.

CHAPTER III.

1. Every stay and support.—] Heb. "the support masculine, and the support feminine;" that is, every kind of support, whether great or small, strong or weak: "Al kanîtz, wal-kanîtzah"; the wild beast, male and female: proverbially applied both to fishing and hunting; i. e. I seized the prey, great or little, good or bad. From hence, as Schultens observes, is explained Isa. iii. 1. literally the male and female stay; i. e. the strong and weak, the great and small." Chappelow, note on Hariri, Assembly I. Compare Eccles. ii. 8.

The two following verses, 2, 3. are very clearly explained by the sacred historian's account of the event, the captivity of Jehoiachin by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon: "And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths; none remained, save the poorest sort of the people of the land:" 2 Kings xxiv. 14.

4. I will make boys their princes—] This also was fully accomplished in the succession of weak and wicked princes, from the death of Josiah to the destruction of the city and temple, and the taking of Zedekiah, the last of them, by Nebuchadnezzar.

6. —of his father's house.] For בית, the ancient interpreters seem to have read מִבֵּית: טז טוֹלְמוֹס טז טוֹלְמוֹס; LXX: domesticum patris sui; Vulg. which gives no good sense. (But LXX, MS I. D. II. for טוֹלְמוֹס, has טוֹלְמוֹס.) And, his brother, of his father's house, is little better than a tautology. The case seems to require, that the man should apply to a person of some sort of rank and eminence; one that was the head of his father's house, (see Josh. xxii. 14.); whether of the house of him who applies to him, or of any other; ראש בית אביו. I cannot help suspecting, therefore, that the word ראש has been lost out of the text.

Ibid. —saying—] Before שמלה, garment, two MSS (one ancient), and the Babylonish Talmud, have the word לאמר: and so LXX, Vulg. Syr. Chald. I place it, with Houbigant, after שמלה.

Ibid. —take by the garment.] That is, shall entreat him in an humble and supplicating manner. "Ten men shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew; saying, Let us go with you; for we have heard that God is with you:" Zech. viii. 23. And so in Isaiah, chap. iv. 1. the same gesture is used to express earnest and humble entreaty. The behaviour of Saul towards Samuel was of the same kind, when he laid hold on the skirt of his raiment: 1 Sam. xv. 27. The preceding and following verses shew, that his whole deportment, in regard to the prophet, was full of submission and humility.

Ibid. And let thy hand support—] Before תחת ירך a

MS adds תהיה ; another MS adds in the same place תקח בידך, which latter seems to be a various reading of the two preceding words, making a very good sense ; “take into thy hand our ruinous state.” Twenty-one MSS, and three editions, and the Babylonish Talmud, have יידך, plural.

7. Then shall he openly declare—] The LXX, Syr. and Jerom. read וישא, adding the conjunction ; which seems necessary in this place.

Ibid. For in my house is neither bread nor raiment.] “It is customary through all the East,” says Sir J. Chardin, “to gather together an immense quantity of furniture and clothes ; for their fashions never alter.” Princes and great men are obliged to have a great stock of such things in readiness for presents upon all occasions. “The kings of Persia,” says the same author, “have great wardrobes, where there are always many hundreds of habits ready, designed for presents, and sorted.” Harmer, Observ. ii. 11. and 88. A great quantity of provision for the table was equally necessary. The daily provision for Solomon’s household, whose attendants were exceedingly numerous, was proportionably great : 1 Kings iv. 22, 23. Even Nehemiah, in his strait circumstances, had a large supply daily for his table ; at which were received an hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, beside those that came from among the neighbouring heathens : Neh. v. 17, 18.

This explains the meaning of the excuse made by him that is desired to undertake the government : he alleges, that he has not wherewithal to support the dignity of the station, by such acts of liberality and hospitality as the law of custom required of persons of superior rank. See Harmer’s Observations, i. 340. ii. 88.

8. —the cloud] This word appears to be of very doubtful form, from the printed editions, the MSS, and the ancient versions. The first jod in עיני, which is necessary according to the common interpretation, is in many of them omitted : the two last letters are upon a rasure in two MSS. I think it should be ענן, as the Syriac reads ; and that the allusion is to the cloud in which the glory of the Lord appeared above the tabernacle. See Exod. xvi. 9, 10. xl. 34—38. Numb. xvi. 41, 42.

10. Pronounce ye—] The reading of this verse is very dubious. The LXX for אמרו read נאמר ; or both, אמרו נאמר : and כי לא טוב לנו. Διὸ καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμῖν καλόν·

ששט. Perhaps, for אמרו, the true reading may be אשרו, bless ye: or אמרו אשרי, say ye, blessed is—. Vulg. and an ancient MS read, in the singular number, יאכל, comedet.

12. Pervert] בלעו, swallow. Among many unsatisfactory methods of accounting for the unusual meaning of this word in this place, I choose Jarchi's explication, as making the best sense. "Read בללו, confound. Syr." Dr JUBB. "Read בהלו, disturb, or trouble." SECKER. So LXX.

13. —his people] עמו, LXX.

14. —my vineyard] כרמי, LXX, Chald. Jerom.

15. And grind the faces] The expression and the image is strong, to denote grievous oppression, but is exceeded by the prophet Micah:

"Hear, I pray you, ye chiefs of Jacob;
And ye princes of the house of Israel:
Is it not yours to know what is right?
Ye that hate good, and love evil:
Who tear their skin from off them;
And their flesh from off their bones:
Who devour the flesh of my people;
And flay from off them their skin:
And their bones they dash in pieces;
And chop them asunder, as morsels for the pot;
And as flesh thrown into the midst of the cauldron."
Micah iii. 1—3.

In the last line but one, for באשר, read, by the transposition of a letter, בשאר, with the LXX, and Chald.

16. And falsely setting off their eyes with paint] Heb. falsifying their eyes. I take this to be the true meaning and literal rendering of the word; from שקר. The Masoretes have pointed it, as if it were from שקר, a different word. This arose, as I imagine, from their supposing that the word was the same with סקר, Chald. intueri, innuere oculis; or that it had an affinity with the noun סיקרא, which the Chaldeans, or the Rabbins at least, use for stibium, the mineral which was commonly used in colouring the eyes. See Jarchi's comment on the place. Though the colouring of the eyes with stibium be not particularly here expressed, yet I suppose it to be implied: and so the Chaldee paraphrase explains it; "stibio linitis oculis." This fashion seems to have prevailed very generally among the eastern people in ancient times; and they retain the very same to this day.

Pietro della Valle, giving a description of his wife, an Assyrian lady, born in Mesopotamia, and educated at Baghdad, whom he married in that country, (Viaggi, tom. i. lettera 17.), says, “ Her eye-lashes, which are long, and, according to the custom of the East, dressed with stibium, (as we often read in the Holy Scriptures of the Hebrew women of old, Jer. iv. 30. Ezek. xxiii. 40.; and in Xenophon of Astyages the grandfather of Cyrus, and of the Medes of that time, Cyropæd. lib. i.), give a dark, and at the same time a majestic shade to the eyes.”—“ Great eyes (says Sandys, Travels, p. 67., speaking of the Turkish women) they have in principal repute; and of those, the blacker they be, the more amiable: insomuch that they put between the eye-lids and the eye a certain black powder, with a fine long pencil, made of a mineral brought from the kingdom of Fez, and called alcohol; which by the not disagreeable staining of the lids, doth better set forth the whiteness of the eye; and though it be troublesome for a time, yet it comforteth the sight, and repelleth ill humours.” “ Vis ejus [stibii] astringere ac refrigerare, principalis autem circa oculos; namque ideo etiam plerique Platyophthalmion id appellavere, quoniam in calliblepharis mulierum dilatat oculos; et fluxiones inhibet oculorum exulcerationesque.” Plin. Nat. Hist. xxxiii. 6.

“ Ille supercilium madida fuligine tinctum

Obliqua producit acu, pingitque tremantes

Attollens oculos.”

Juv. Sat. ii. 92.

“ But none of those [Moorish] ladies,” says Dr Shaw, (Travels, p. 294. fol.), “ take themselves to be completely dressed, till they have tinged the hair and edges of their eye-lids with al-kahol, the powder of lead ore. This operation is performed by dipping first into the powder a small wooden bodkin of the thickness of a quill, and then drawing it afterwards through the eye-lids, over the ball of the eye.” Ezekiel (xxiii. 40.) uses the same word in the form of a verb, כְּחָלַת עֵינַיךְ, “ thou didst dress thine eyes with al-cahol ;” which the LXX render ἐπέστρεψας ὀφθαλμούς σου, “ thou didst dress thine eyes with stibium ;” just as they do when the word פּוֹךְ is employed : (compare 2 Kings ix. 30. Jer. iv. 30.) : they supposed therefore, that פּוֹךְ and כְּחָלַת, or, in the Arabic form, al-cahol, meant the same thing; and probably the mineral used of old, for this purpose, was the same that is used now; which Dr Shaw (Ibid. note) says is “a rich lead ore, pounded into an impalpable powder.” Alcoholados; the word מִשְׁקֶרֶת, in this place, is thus rendered in an old Spanish translation. Sanctius. See also Russell’s Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, p. 102.

The following inventory, as one may call it, of the wardrobe of a Hebrew lady, must, from its antiquity, and from the nature of the subject, have been very obscure, even to the most ancient interpreters which we have of it; and, from its obscurity, must have been also peculiarly liable to the mistakes of transcribers: however, it is rather matter of curiosity than of importance; and indeed it is, upon the whole, more intelligible, and less corrupted, than one might have reasonably expected. Clemens Alexandrinus (Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 12.) and Julius Pollux (lib. vii. cap. 22.) have each of them preserved, from a comedy of Aristophanes, now lost, a similar catalogue of the several parts of the dress and ornaments of a Grecian lady; which, though much more capable of illustration from other writers, though of later date, and quoted and transmitted down to us by two different authors, yet seems to be much less intelligible, and considerably more corrupted, than this passage of Isaiah. Salmasius has endeavoured, by comparing the two quotations, and by much critical conjecture and learned disquisition, to restore the true reading, and to explain the particulars—with what success, I leave to the determination of the learned reader, whose curiosity shall lead him to compare the passage of the comedian with this of the Prophet, and to examine the critic’s learned labours upon it. Exercit. Plinian. p. 1148.; or see Clem. Alex. as cited above, edit. Potter, where the passage as corrected by Salmasius is given.

Nich. Guil. Schroederus, professor of Oriental languages in the university of Marburg, has published a very learned and judicious treatise upon this passage of Isaiah. The title of it is, “Commentarius Philologico-Criticus De Vestitu Mulierum Hebræarum ad Iesai, iii. ver. 16—24.” Lugd. Bat. 1745. 4to. As I think no one has handled this subject with so much judgment and ability as this author, I have for the most part followed him, in giving the explanation of the several terms denoting the different parts of dress of which this passage consists; signifying the reasons of my dissent, where he does not give me full satisfaction.

17.—will the Lord humble—] ταπεινωσει, LXX; and so Syr. and Chald. For שפח they read שפל.

Ibid. —expose their nakedness] It was the barbarous custom of the conquerors of those times to strip their captives naked, and to make them travel in that condition, exposed to the inclemency of the weather; and, the worst of all, to the intolerable heat of the sun. But this to the women was the height of cruelty and indignity; and especially to such as those here described, who had indulged themselves in all manner of delicacies of living, and all the superfluities of ornamental dress; and even whose faces had hardly ever been exposed to the sight of man. This is always mentioned as the hardest part of the lot of captives. Nahum, denouncing the fate of Nineveh, paints it in very strong colours:

“ Behold, I am against thee, saith JEHOVAH God of Hosts :
 And I will discover thy skirts upon thy face ;
 And I will expose thy nakedness to the nations ;
 And to the kingdoms thy shame.
 And I will throw ordures upon thee ;
 And I will make thee vile, and set thee as a gazing-stock.”
 Nahum iii. 5, 6.

18. —the ornaments of the feet-rings—] The late learned Dr Hunt, professor of Hebrew and Arabic in the university of Oxford, has very well explained the word עֲנָם, both verb and noun, in his very ingenious Dissertation on Prov. vii. 22, 23. The verb means to skip, to bound, to dance along; and the noun, those ornaments of the feet which the eastern ladies wore; chains, or rings, which made a tinkling sound as they moved nimbly in walking. Eugene Roger, Description de la Terre Sainte, liv. ii. chap. 2. speaking of the Arabian women of the first rank in Palestine, says, “ Au lieu de brasselets elles ont de menottes d’argent, qu’elles portent aux poignets et aux pieds; où sont attachez quantité de petits annelets d’argent, qui font un cliquetis comme d’une cymbale, lorsqu’elles cheminent ou se mouvent quelque peu.” See Dr Hunt’s Dissertation; where he produces other testimonies to the same purpose from authors of travels.

Ibid. —the net-works] I am obliged to differ from the learned Schroederus, almost at first setting out: he renders the word שְׁבִיטִים by soliculi, little ornaments, bullæ, or studs, in shape representing the sun, and so answering to the following word שְׁהֲרִינִים, lunulæ, crescents. He supposes the word to be the same with שְׁמִישִׁים, the ך in the second syllable making the word diminutive, and the letter נ being changed for ב, a letter of the same organ. How just and well-founded his authorities for the transmutation of these letters in the Arabic language are, I cannot pretend to judge; but, as I know of no such instance in Hebrew, it seems to me a very forced etymology. Being dissatisfied with this account of the matter, I applied to my good friend above-mentioned, the late Dr Hunt, who very kindly returned the following answer to my inquiries:—

“I have consulted the Arabic lexicons, as well MS as printed, but cannot find שביסים in any of them, nor any thing belonging to it. So that no help is to be had from that language towards clearing up the meaning of this difficult word. But what the Arabic denies, the Syriac perhaps may afford; in which I find the verb שבש, to entangle or interweave, an etymology which is equally favourable to our marginal translation, net-works, with שבץ, to make chequer-work, or embroider, (the word by which Kimchi and others have explained שבים), and has moreover this advantage over it, that the letters ש and ס are very frequently put for each other, but צ and ס scarce ever. Aben Ezra joins שביסים and עכסים (which immediately precedes it) together; and says, that שבים was the ornament of the legs, as עכס was of the feet. His words are, שבים תכשיט של שוקים כמו עכס של רגלים.”

21. The jewels of the nostril—] נזמי האף. Schroederus explains this, as many others do, of jewels, or strings of pearl, hanging from the forehead, and reaching to the upper part of the nose. But it appears from many passages of Holy Scripture, that the phrase is to be literally and properly understood of nose-jewels, rings set with jewels hanging from the nostrils, as ear-rings from the ears, by holes bored to receive them.

Ezekiel, enumerating the common ornaments of women of the first rank, has not omitted this particular, and is to be understood in the same manner; chap. xvi. 11, 12. (See also Gen. xxiv. 47.)

“And I decked thee with ornaments;
And I put bracelets upon thine hands,
And a chain on thy neck:
And I put a jewel on thy nose,
And ear-rings on thine ears,
And a splendid crown upon thine head.”

And in an elegant proverb of Solomon there is a manifest allusion to this kind of ornament, which shews it to have been used in his time :

“ As a jewel set in gold in the snout of a swine ;
So is a woman beautiful, but wanting discretion.”

Prov. xi. 22.

This fashion, however strange it may appear to us, was formerly, and is still, common in many parts of the East, among women of all ranks. Paul Lucas, speaking of a village, or clan, of wandering people, a little on this side of the Euphrates ; “ The women,” says he, (2d Voyage du Levant, tom. i. art. 24.), “ almost all of them, travel on foot : I saw none handsome among them. They have almost all of them the nose bored, and wear in it a great ring, which makes them still more deformed.” But, in regard to this custom, better authority cannot be produced than that of Pietro della Valle, in the account which he gives of the lady before-mentioned, Signora Maani Gioerida, his own wife. The description of her dress, as to the ornamental parts of it, with which he introduces the mention of this particular, will give us some notion of the taste of the eastern ladies for finery. “ The ornaments of gold, and of jewels, for the head, for the neck, for the arms, for the legs, and for the feet, (for they wear rings even on their toes), are indeed, unlike those of the Turks, carried to great excess, but not of great value ; for in Baghdad jewels of high price either are not to be had, or are not used ; and they wear such only as are of little value ; as turquoises, small rubies, emeralds, carbuncles, garnets, pearls, and the like. My spouse dresses herself with all of them according to their fashion ; with exception, however, of certain ugly rings of very large size, set with jewels, which in truth, very absurdly, it is the custom to wear fastened to one of their nostrils, like buffalos : an ancient custom however in the East, which, as we find in the Holy Scriptures, prevailed among the Hebrew ladies even in the time of Solomon : Prov. xi. 22. These nose-rings in complaisance to me she has left off ; but I have not yet been able to prevail with her cousin and her sisters to do the same : so fond are they of an old custom, be it ever so absurd, who have been long habituated to it.” Viaggi, tom. i. lett. 17.

23. The transparent garments—] הדגליניים, τα διαφανη λαζωνικα, LXX. A kind of silken dress, transparent, like gauze; worn only by the most delicate women, and such as dressed themselves “elegantius, quam necesse eset probis.” This sort of garments was afterwards in use among the Greeks. Prodicus, in his celebrated fable (Xenoph. Memorab. Socr. lib. ii.) exhibits the personage of Sloth in this dress: εσθητα δε, εξ ης αν μαλιστα ωρα διαλαμποι.

“ Her robe betray’d

Through the clear texture every tender limb,

Height’ning the charms it only seemed to shade;

And as it flow’d adown so loose and thin,

Her stature shew’d more tall, more snowy white her skin.”

They were called Multitia and Coa (sc. vestimenta) by the Romans, from their being invented, or rather introduced into Greece, by one Pamphila of the island of Cos. This, like other Grecian fashions, was received at Rome when luxury began to prevail under the Emperors; it was sometimes worn even by the men, but looked upon as a mark of extreme effeminacy: (see Juvenal, Sat. ii. 65, &c.) Publius Syrus, who lived when the fashion was first introduced, has given a humorous satirical description of it in two lines, which by chance have been preserved:

“ Æquum est, induere nuptam ventum textilem?

Palam prostare nudam in nebula lineâ?”

24. Instead of perfume—] A principal part of the delicacy of the Asiatic ladies consists in the use of baths, and of the richest oils and perfumes: an attention to which is, in some degree, necessary in those hot countries. Frequent mention is made of the rich ointments of the spouse in the Song of Solomon:—

“ How beautiful are thy breasts, my sister, my spouse!

How much more excellent than wine;

And the odour of thine ointments than all perfumes!

Thy lips drop as the honey-comb, my spouse!

Honey and milk are under thy tongue:

And the odour of thy garments is as the odour of Lebanon.”

Cant. iv. 10, 11.

The preparation for Esther’s being introduced to King Ahasuerus was a course of bathing and perfuming for a whole year; “ Six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours:” Esth. ii. 12. A diseased and loathsome habit of body, instead of a beautiful skin, softened and made agreeable with all that art could devise, and all that nature, so prodigal in those countries of the richest perfumes, could supply, must have been a punishment the most severe and the most mortifying to the delicacy of these haughty daughters of Sion.

Ibid. A sun-burnt skin—] Gaspar Sanctius thinks the words כִּי תַחַת an interpolation, because the Vulgate has omitted them. The clause כִּי תַחַת יָפִי seems to me rather to be imperfect at the end. Not to mention that כִּי, taken as a noun, for adustio, burning, is without example, and very improbable; the passage ends abruptly, and seems to want a fuller conclusion.

In agreement with which opinion of the defect of the Hebrew text in this place, the LXX, according to MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. and Marchal. which are of the best authority, express it with the same evident marks of imperfection at the end of the sentence; thus, κατακαυσθησιν αὐταὶ ὡς ὁ καλ- λυπῶν— The two latter add αὐταὶ. This chasm in the text, from the loss probably of three or four words, seems therefore to be of long standing.

Taking כִּי in its usual sense, as a particle, and supplying לָךְ from σοι of the LXX, it might possibly have been originally somewhat in this form:—

כִּי תַחַת יָפִי תַחַת לָךְ רַעַת מְרֹאֶה :

“Yea, instead of beauty, thou shalt have an ill-favoured countenance.”

יָפִי [יָחַת q.] “for beauty shall be destroyed.” Syr. from תַּחַת, or נַחַת. Dr DURELL.

“May it not be כְּהִי, “wrinkles instead of beauty?” as from יָפִי is formed יָפָה; from מְרִי, מְרָה, &c. so from כְּהִי, to be wrinkled, כְּהִי.” Dr JUBB.

25. thy mighty men—] For גִּבּוֹרֶיךָ, an ancient MS has גִּבּוֹרִךְ. The true reading from LXX, Vulg. Syr. Chald. seems to be גִּבּוֹרִיךְ.

26. —sit on the ground.] Sitting on the ground was a posture that denoted mourning and deep distress. The Prophet Jeremiah has given it the first place, among many indications of sorrow, in the following elegant description of the same state of distress of his country:—

“The elders of the daughter of Sion sit on the ground, they are silent :

They have cast up dust on their heads ; they have girded themselves with sackcloth :

The virgins of Jerusalem have bowed down their heads to the ground.”

Lam. ii. 10.

“ We find Judea,” says Mr Addison, (on Medals, Dial. ii.) “ on several coins of Vespasian and Titus, in a posture that denotes sorrow and captivity.—I need not mention her sitting on the ground, because we have already spoken of the aptness of such a posture to represent an extreme affliction. I fancy the Romans might have an eye on the customs of the Jewish nation, as well as those of their country, in the several marks of sorrow they have set on this figure. The Psalmist describes the Jews lamenting their captivity in the same pensive posture: “ By the waters of Babylon we sat down and wept, when we remembered thee, O Sion.” But what is more remarkable, we find Judea represented as a woman in sorrow sitting on the ground, in a passage of the Prophet that foretells the very captivity recorded on this medal.” Mr Addison, I presume, refers to this place of Isaiah; and therefore must have understood it as foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation by the Romans: whereas it seems plainly to relate, in its first and more immediate view at least, to the destruction of the city by Nebuchadnezzar, and the dissolution of the Jewish state under the captivity at Babylon.

CHAPTER IV.

1. And seven women—] THE division of the chapters has interrupted the Prophet's discourse, and broken it off almost in the midst of the sentence. “ The numbers slain in battle shall be so great, that seven women shall be left to one man.” The Prophet has described the greatness of this distress by images and adjuncts the most expressive and forcible. The young women, contrary to their natural modesty, shall become suitors to the men: they will take hold of them, and use the most pressing importunity to be married: in spite of the natural suggestions of jealousy, they will be content with a share only of the rights of marriage in common with several others; and that on hard conditions, renouncing the legal demands of the wife on the husband, (see Exod. xxi. 10.), and begging only the name and credit of wedlock, and to be freed from the reproach of celibacy, (see chap. liv. 4, 5.) Like Marcia, on a different occasion, and in other circumstances,—

“ Da tantum nomen inane

Connubii: liceat tumulo scripsisse, Catonis Marcia.”

Lucan. ii. 342.

Ibid. —in that day—] These words are omitted in LXX and MS.

Ibid. The Branch of JEHOVAH—] The Messiah of JEHOVAH, says the Chaldee. The Branch is an appropriated title of the Messiah; and the fruit of the land means the great Person to spring from the house of Judah, and is only a parallel expression signifying the same; or perhaps the blessings consequent upon the redemption procured by him. Compare chap. xlv. 8. where the same great event is set forth in similar images; and see the note there.

Ibid. —the house of Israel.] A MS has בית ישראל.

3. —written among the living.] That is, whose name stands in the enrolment or register of the people; or every man living, who is a citizen of Jerusalem. See Ezek. xiii. 9. where “they shall not be written in the writing of the house of Israel,” is the same with what immediately goes before, “they shall not be in the assembly of my people.” Compare Psal. lxxxvii. 6. lxix. 28.; Exod. xxxii. 32. To number and register the people was agreeable to the law of Moses, and probably was always practised; being in sound policy useful, and even necessary. David’s design of numbering the people was of another kind; it was to enrol them for his army. Michaelis; Mosaisches Recht, Part III. p. 227. See also his Dissert. de Censibus Hebræorum.

4. “The spirit of burning,”] means the fire of God’s wrath, by which he will prove and purify his people; gathering them into his furnace, in order to separate the dross from the silver, the bad from the good. The severity of God’s judgments, the fiery trial of his servants, Ezekiel (chap. xxii. 18—22.) has set forth at large, after his manner, with great boldness of imagery and force of expression. God threatens to gather them into the midst of Jerusalem, as into the furnace; to blow the fire upon them, and to melt them. Malachi (chap. iii. 2, 3.) treats the same subject, and represents the same event under the like images:—

“But who may abide the day of his coming?
And who shall stand when he appeareth?
For he is like the fire of the refiner,
And like the soap of the fullers.
And he shall sit refining and purifying the silver;
And he shall purify the sons of Levi,
And cleanse them like gold, and like silver;
That they may be JEHOVAH’s ministers,
Presenting unto him an offering in righteousness.”

5. —the station—] The Hebrew text has, every station; but four MSS (one ancient) omit כל; very rightly, as it should seem; for the station was Mount Sion itself, and no other. See Exod. xv. 17. And the LXX and MS add the same word כל before מקראיה, probably right: the word has only changed its place by mistake. מקראיה, “the place where they were gathered together in their holy assemblies,” says Sal. b. Melec.

Ibid. A cloud by day—] This is a manifest allusion to the pillar of a cloud and of fire which attended the Israelites in their passage out of Egypt, and to the glory that rested on the tabernacle, Exod. xiii. 21. xl. 38. The prophet Zechariah applies the same image to the same purpose:—

“And I will be unto her a wall of fire round about;

And a glory will I be in the midst of her.” Zech. ii. 5.

That is, the visible presence of God shall protect her. Which explains the conclusion of this verse of Isaiah; where the makkaph between כל and כבוד, connecting the two words in construction, which ought not to be connected, has thrown an obscurity upon the sentence, and misled most of the translators.

6. And a tabernacle—] In countries subject to violent tempests, as well as to intolerable heat, a portable tent is a necessary part of a traveller’s baggage, for defence and shelter.

CHAPTER V.

THIS chapter likewise stands single and alone, unconnected with the preceding or following. The subject of it is nearly the same with that of the first chapter. It is a general reproof of the Jews for their wickedness: but it exceeds that chapter in force, in severity, in variety, and elegance; and it adds a more express declaration of vengeance, by the Babylonian invasion.

1. Let me sing now a song] A MS, respectable for its antiquity, adds the word שיר (a song) after נא; which gives so elegant a turn to the sentence by the repetition of it in the next member, and by distinguishing the members so exactly in the style and manner of the Hebrew poetical composition, that I am much inclined to think it genuine.

Ibid. A song of loves] דודי, for דורים; status constructus pro absoluto, as the grammarians say; as Micah vi. 16.; Lament. iii. 14. and 66.: so Archbishop Secker. Or rather, in all these and the like cases, a mistake of the transcribers, by not observing a small stroke, which in many MSS is made to supply the ם of the plural, thus שירת דודים. דודי' is the same with שיר ידודת, Psal. xlv. 1. In this way of understanding it, we avoid the great impropriety of making the author of the song, and the person to whom it is addressed, to be the same.

Ibid. On a high and fruitful hill] Heb. "on a horn the son of oil." The expression is highly descriptive and poetical. "He calls the land of Israel a horn, because it is higher than all lands; as the horn is higher than the whole body: and the son of oil, because it is said to be a land flowing with milk and honey." Kimchi on the place. The parts of animals are, by an easy metaphor, applied to parts of the earth, both in common and poetical language. A promontory is called a cape, or head; the Turks call it a nose. "Dorsum immane mari summo;" Virg. a back, or ridge of rocks.

"Hanc latus angustum jam se cogentis in arctum
Hesperiae tenuem producit in æquora linguam,
Adriacas flexis claudit quæ cornibus undas."

Lucan. ii. 612. of Brundisium, i. e. Βρυτηρίον, which, in the ancient language of that country, signifies stag's head, says Strabo. A horn is a proper and obvious image for a mountain, or mountainous country. Solinus, cap. viii. says, "Italiam, ubi longius processerit, in cornua duo scindi:" that is, the high ridge of the Alps, which runs through the whole length of it, divides at last into two ridges, one going through Calabria, the other through the country of the Brutii. "Cornwall is called by the inhabitants in the British tongue Kernaw, as lessening by degrees like a horn, running out into promontories like so many horns. For the Britains call a horn corn, in the plural kern:" Camden. "And Sammes is of opinion, that the country had this name originally from the Phenicians, who traded hither for tin; keren, in their language, being a horn:" Gibson.

Here the precise idea seems to be that of a high mountain standing by itself: "vertex montis, aut pars montis ab aliis divisa;" which signification, says I. H. Michaelis, (Bibl. Hallens. Not. in loc.) the word has in Arabic.

Judea was in general a mountainous country; whence Moses sometimes calls it the Mountain:—"Thou shalt plant them in the Mountain of thine inheritance;" Exod. xv. 17. "I pray thee let me go over, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan; that goodly Mountain, and Lebanon;" Deut. iii. 25. And in a political and religious view it was detached and separated from all the nations round it. Whoever has considered the descriptions given of Mount Tabor, (see Reland, Palæstin.; Eugene Roger, Terre Sainte, p. 64.), and the views of it which are to be seen in books of travels, (Maundrell, p. 114. Egmont and Heyman, vol. ii. p. 25. Thevenot, vol. i. p. 429.); its regular conic form, rising singly in a plain to a great height from a base small in proportion; its beauty and fertility to the very top—will have a good idea of "a horn the son of oil;" and will perhaps be induced to think, that the prophet took his image from that mountain.

2. and he cleared it from the stones.] This was agreeable to the ancient husbandry: "Saxa, summa parte terræ, et vites et arbores lædunt; ima parte, refrigerant;" Columell. De Arb. 3. "Saxosum facile est expedire lectione lapidum;" Id. ii. 2. "Lapides, qui supersunt, [al. insuper sunt] hieme rigent, æstate fervescent; idcirco satis, arbustis, et vitibus nocent;" Pallad. i. 6. A piece of ground thus cleared of the stones, Persius, in his hard way of metaphor, calls "Exossatus ager;" Sat. vi. 52.

Ibid. Sorek.] Many of the ancient interpreters, LXX, Aq. Theod. have retained this word as a proper name; I think, very rightly. Sorek was a valley lying between Ascalon and Gaza, and running far up eastward in the tribe of Judah. Both Ascalon and Gaza were anciently famous for wine: the former is mentioned as such by Alexander Trallianus; the latter by several authors: (quoted by Reland, Palæst. p. 589. and 986.) And it seems, that the upper part of the valley of Sorek, and that of Eshcol, where the spies gathered the single cluster of grapes which they were obliged to bear between two upon a staff, being both near to Hebron, were in the same neighbourhood; and that all this part of the country abounded with rich vineyards. Compare Numb. xiii. 22, 23. Judg. xvi. 3, 4. P. Nau supposes Eshcol and Sorek to be only different names for the same valley: Voyage Nouveau de la Terre Sainte, liv. iv. chap. 18. So likewise De Lisle's posthumous map of the Holy Land; Paris, 1763. See Bochart, Hieroz. ii. col. 725. Thevenot, i. p. 406. Michaelis (note on Judg. xvi. 4. German translation) thinks it probable, from some circumstances of the history there given, that Sorek was in the tribe of Judah, not in the country of the Philistines.

The vine of Sorek was known to the Israelites, being mentioned by Moses (Gen. xlix. 11.) before their coming out of Egypt. Egypt was not a wine country: "Throughout this country there are no wines;" Sandys, p. 101. At least in very ancient times they had none. Herodotus, ii. 77. says, it had no vines; and therefore used an artificial wine made of barley. That is not strictly true; for the vines of Egypt are spoken of in Scripture, (Psal. lxxviii. 47. cv. 33., and see Gen. xl. 11. by which it should seem, that they drank only the fresh juice pressed from the grape, which was called οἶνος ἀμπέλινος, Herodot. ii. 37.): but they had no large vineyards; nor was the country proper for them, being little more than one large plain, annually overflowed by the Nile. The Mareotic in later times is, I think, the only celebrated Egyptian wine which we meet with in history. The vine was formerly, as Hasselquist tells us it is now, "cultivated in Egypt for the sake of eating the grapes, not for wine; which is brought from Candia," &c. "They were supplied with wine from Greece, and likewise from Phenicia;" Herod. iii. 6. The vine and the wine of Sorek, therefore, which lay near at hand for importation into Egypt, must, in all probability, have been well known to the Israelites when they sojourned there. There is something remarkable in the manner in which Moses makes mention of it, which, for want of considering this matter, has not been attended to: It is in Jacob's prophecy of the future prosperity of the tribe of Judah:—

"Binding his foal to the vine,
And his ass's colt to his own Sorek;
He washeth his raiment in wine,
And his cloak in the blood of grapes." Gen. xlix. 11.

I take the liberty of rendering שורק, for שורקו, his Sorek, as the Masoretes do of pointing עירֹה, for עירו, his foal. עיר might naturally enough appear in the feminine form, but it is not at all probable that שורק ever should. By naming particularly the vine of Sorek, and as the vine belonging to Judah, the prophecy intimates the very part of the country which was to fall to the lot of that tribe. Sir John Chardin says, "That at Casbin, a city in Persia, they turn their cattle into the vineyards, after the vintage, to browse on the vines." He speaks also of vines in that country, so large that he could hardly compass the trunks of them with his arms. Voyages, tom. iii. p. 12. 12mo. This shews, that the ass might be securely bound to the vine; and without danger of damaging the tree by browsing on it.

Ibid. And he built a tower in the midst of it.] Our Saviour, who has taken the general idea of one of his parables (Matt. xxi. 33. Mark xii. 1.) from this of Isaiah, has likewise inserted this circumstance of building a tower; which is generally explained by commentators, as designed for the keeper of the vineyard to watch and defend the fruits. But for this purpose it was usual to make a little temporary hut, (Isa. i. 8.), which might serve for the short season while the fruit was ripening, and which was removed afterwards. The tower, therefore, should rather mean a building of a more permanent nature and use; the farm, as we may call it, of the vineyard, containing all the offices and implements, and the whole apparatus necessary for the culture of the vineyard, and the making of the wine. To which image in the allegory, the situation, the manner of building, the use, and the whole service of the temple, exactly answered. And so the Chaldee paraphrast very rightly expounds it:—"Et statui eos (Israelitas) ut plantam vineæ selectæ, et ædificavi sanctuarium meum in medio illorum." So also Hieron. in loc. "Ædificavit quoque turrin in medio ejus: templum videlicet in media civitate." That they have still such towers or buildings, for use or pleasure, in their gardens in the East, see Harmer's Observations, ii. p. 241.

Ibid. And hewed out a lake therein.] This image also our Saviour has preserved in his parable. יקב, LXX render it here πρὸς ἔλκευσιν; and in four other places ὑποσοληγεῖον; Isa. xvi. 10. Joel iii. 13. Hagg. ii. 17. Zech. xiv. 10.; I think, more properly: and this latter word St Mark uses. It means, not the wine-press itself, or calcatorium, which is called גת, or פורר, but what the Romans called lacus, the lake; the large open place, or vessel, which, by a conduit or spout, received the must from the wine-press. In very hot countries it was perhaps necessary, or at least very convenient, to have the lake under ground, or in a cave hewed out of the side of the rock, for coolness; that the heat might not cause too great a fermentation, and sour the must. "Vini confectio instituitur in cella, vel intimæ domus camera quadam, a ventorum ingressu remota:" Kempfer, of Schiras wine; Amœn. Exot. p. 376.: For the hot wind, to which that country is subject, would injure the wine. "The wine-presses in Persia," says Sir John Chardin, "are formed by making hollow places in the ground, lined with mason's work." Harmer's Observations, i. p. 392. See a print of one in Kempfer, p. 377. Nonnus describes, at large, Bacchus hollowing the inside of the rock, and hewing out a place for the wine-press, or rather the lake:—

Και σκοπέλεις ελαχινε' πεδοσκαφεος δε σιδηρου
Θηγαλη γλαχινι μυχον κοιληνατο πετρης·
Λεινιας δε μελωπα βαθυνομεριων κενεωνων
Αφρον [f. ακρον.] ευσφυλοιο τυπον ποιησατο ληνου.

"He pierc'd the rock; and with the sharpen'd tool
Of steel well temper'd scoop'd its inmost depth:
Then smooth'd the front, and form'd the dark recess
In just dimension for the foaming lake." Dionysiac. lib. xii.

Ibid. And he expected—] Jeremiah uses the same image, and applies it to the same purpose, in an elegant paraphrase of this part of Isaiah's parable, in his flowing and plaintive manner:

"But I planted thee a Sorek, a cion perfectly genuine:
How then art thou changed, and become to me the degenerate shoots of the strange vine!" Chap. ii. 21.

Ibid. poisonous berries] באושים, not merely useless unprofitable grapes, such as wild grapes; but grapes offensive to the smell, noxious, poisonous. By the force and intent of the allegory, to good grapes ought to be opposed fruit of a dangerous and pernicious quality; as, in the explication of it, to judgment is opposed tyranny, and to righteousness oppression. גפן, the vine, is a common name, or genus, including several species under it; and Moses, to distinguish the true vine, or that from which wine is made, from the rest, calls it, Numb. vi. 4. גפן היין, the wine-vine. Some of the other sorts were of a poisonous quality; as appears from the story related among the miraculous acts of Elisha: 2 Kings iv. 39—41. "And one went out into the field to gather pot-herbs; and he found a field-vine: and he gathered from it wild fruit, his lapful; and he went, and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not. And they poured it out for the men to eat: and it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, There is death in the pot, O man of God! and they could not eat of it. And he said, Bring meal; (leg. קמח, nine MSS, one edition); and he threw it into the pot. And he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat. And there was nothing hurtful in the pot."

From some such sort of poisonous fruits, of the grape kind, Moses has taken those strong and highly poetical images, with which he has set forth the future corruption and extreme degeneracy of the Israelites, in an allegory which has a near relation, both in its subject and imagery, to this of Isaiah :—

“ Their vine is from the vine of Sodom,
And from the fields of Gomorrah :
Their grapes are grapes of gall ;
Their clusters are bitter :
Their wine is the poison of dragons,
And the cruel venom of aspics.” Deut. xxxii. 32, 33.

“ I am inclined to believe, (says Hasselquist), that the Prophet here (Isa. v. 2. and 4.) means the hoary nightshade, solanum incanum ; because it is common in Egypt, Palestine, and the East ; and the Arabian name agrees well with it. The Arabs call it aneb el dib, i. e. wolf-grapes. The Prophet could not have found a plant more opposite to the vine than this ; for it grows much in the vineyards, and is very pernicious to them ; wherefore they root it out : it likewise resembles a vine by its shrubby stalk :” Travels, p. 289. See also Michaelis, Questions aux Voyageurs Danois, No. 64.

3. —inhabitants] יֹשְׁבֵי, in the plural number ; three MSS, (two ancient) ; and so likewise LXX and Vulg.

6. —the thorn shall spring up in it.] A MS has בְּשִׁמְרִי ; the true reading seems to be בּוֹ שִׁמְרִי : which is confirmed by LXX, Syr. Vulg.

7. And he looked for judgment—] The paronomasia, or play on the words, in this place, is very remarkable : mispāt, mispach ; zedakah, zeakah. There are many examples of it in the other Prophets ; but Isaiah seems peculiarly fond of it : see chap. xiii. 6. xxiv. 17. xxvii. 7. xxxiii. 1. lvii. 6. lxi. 3. lxv. 11, 12. The Rabbins esteem it a great beauty : their term for it is צְהוּת הַלָּשׁוֹן, “ elegance of language.”

Ibid.—tyranny] מִשְׁפָּחָה, from שָׂפָח, servum fecit, Arab. Houbigant : שְׂפָחָה, is serva, a handmaid, or female slave. מִסְפָּחָה, eighteen MSS.

8. You who lay field—] Read תְּקַרְבֵּנוּ, in the second person, to answer to the verb following ; so Vulg.

9. To mine ear—] The sentence in the Hebrew text seems to be imperfect in this place ; as likewise in chap. xxii. 14. where the very same sense seems to be required as here. See the note there; and compare 1 Sam. ix. 15. In this place LXX supply the word ἡκούσθη, and Syr. אִשְׁתָּמַע, auditus est JEHOVAH in auribus meis: i. e. נִגְלָה, as in chap. xxii. 14.

9, 10. —many houses—] This has reference to what was said in the preceding verse: “In vain are ye so intent upon joining house to house, and field to field: your houses shall be left uninhabited, and your fields shall become desolate and barren; so that a vineyard of ten acres shall produce but one bath (not eight gallons) of wine, and the husbandman shall reap but a tenth part of the seed which he has sown.”

11. —to follow strong drink] Theodoret and Chrysostom on this place, both Syrians, and unexceptionable witnesses in what belongs to their own country, inform us, that שכר, (sikra in the Greek of both Testaments, rendered by us by the general term strong drink), meant properly palm-wine, or date-wine, which was and is still much in use in the eastern countries. Judea was famous for the abundance and excellence of its palm-trees; and consequently had plenty of this wine. “Fiunt (vina) et è pomis:—primumque è palmis, quo Parthi et Indi utuntur, et Oriens totus: maturarum modio in aquæ congiis tribus macerato expressoque;” Plin. xiv. 19. “Ab his cariotæ [palmæ] maxime celebrantur; et cibo quidem, sed et succo, uberrimæ. Ex quibus præcipua vina Orienti; iniqua capiti, unde pomo nomen:” Id. xiii. 9. Καρσοζ signifies stupefaction: and in Hebrew likewise, the wine has its name from its remarkable inebriating quality.

11, 12. Wo unto them who rise early—] There is a likeness between this and the following passage of the Prophet Amos, who probably wrote before Isaiah: if the latter is the copyer, he seems hardly to have equalled the elegance of the original:—

“Ye that put far away the evil day,
And affect the seat of violence;
Who lie upon beds of ivory,
And stretch yourselves upon your couches;
And eat the lambs from the flock,
And calves from the midst of the stall;
Who chant to the sound of the viol,
And like David invent for yourselves instruments of music;
Who quaff wine in large bowls,
And are anointed with the choicest ointments:
But are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.” Amos vi. 3-6.

13, 14. And their nobles—] These verses have likewise a reference to the two preceding. They that indulged in feasting and drinking, shall perish with hunger and thirst; and Hades shall indulge his appetite as much as they had done, and devour them all. The image is strong, and expressive in the highest degree. Habakkuk uses the same image with great force: the ambitious and avaricious conqueror

“ Enlargeth his appetite like Hades ;

And he is like death, and will never be satisfied." Hab. ii. 5.

But, in Isaiah, Hades is introduced, to much greater advantage, in person; and placed before our eyes in the form of a ravenous monster, opening wide his immeasurable jaws, and swallowing them all together.

17.—without restraint—] כדבום, secundum ductum eorum: i. e. suo ipsorum ductu; as their own will shall lead them.

Ibid. And the kids—] Heb. גרים, strangers. The LXX read, more agreeably to the design of the Prophet, בריום, αρνεις, the lambs: גרים, the kids, Dr DURELL; nearer to the present reading: and so Archbishop Secker. The meaning is, their luxurious habitations shall be so entirely destroyed, as to become a pasture for flocks.

18.—as a long cable] The LXX, Aquila, Sym. and Theod. for כַּחבִּיל read כַּחבִּיל, ὡς σχοινίον, or σχοινίον; and the LXX, instead of שׂוּא, read some other word signifying long; ὡς σχοινίον μακρόν; and so likewise the Syriac, אַרְיבָּא. Houbigant conjectures, that the word which the LXX had in their copies was שׂוּרִית, which is used, Lev. xxi. 18. xxii. 23. for something in an animal body superfluous, lengthened beyond its natural measure. And he explains it of sin added to sin, and one sin drawing on another, till the whole comes to an enormous length and magnitude; compared to the work of a rope-maker, still increasing and lengthening his rope, with the continued addition of new materials. “Eos propheta similes facit homini restiario, qui funem torquet, cannabe addita et contorta, eadem iterans, donec funem in longum duxerit, neque eum liceat protrahi longius.” “An evil inclination (says Kimchi on the place, from the ancient Rabbins) is at the beginning like a fine hair-string, but at the finishing like a thick cart-rope.” By a long progression in iniquity, and a continued accumulation of sin, men arrive at length to the highest degree of wickedness; bidding open defiance to God, and scoffing at his threatened judgments, as it is finely expressed in the next verse. The Chaldee paraphrast explains it in the same manner, of wickedness increasing from small beginnings, till it arrives to a great magnitude.

23. —the righteous] צדיק, singular, LXX, Vulg. and two editions.

24. —the tongue of fire] “The flame, because it is in the shape of a tongue; and so it is called metaphorically:” Sal. b. Melec. The metaphor is so exceedingly obvious, as well as beautiful, that one may wonder that it has not been more frequently used. Virgil very elegantly intimates, rather than expresses, the image: Æn. ii. 682.

“Ecce levis summo de vertice visus Iuli

Fundere lumen apex; tractuque innoxia molli

Lambere flamma comas, et circum tempora pasci.”

And more boldly of Ætna darting out flames from its top: Æn. iii. 574.

“Attollitque globos flammarum, et sidera lambit.”

The parted tongues, as it were of fire, (Acts ii. 3.), which appeared at the descent of the Holy Spirit on the apostles, give the same idea; that is, of flames shooting diversely into pyramidal forms, or points, like tongues. It may be further observed, that the Prophet in this place has given the metaphor its full force, in applying it to the action of fire in eating up and devouring whatever comes in its way, like a ravenous animal, whose tongue is principally employed in taking in his food or prey; which image Moses has strongly exhibited in a most expressive comparison:—“And Moab said to the elders of Midian, Now shall this collection of people lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field;” Numb. xxii. 4. See also 1 Kings xviii. 38.

25. —and the mountains trembled—] Probably referring to the great earthquakes in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, in, or not long before, the time of the Prophet himself: recorded as a remarkable era in the title of the Prophecies of Amos, chap. i. 1. and by Zechariah, chap. xiv. 5.

26. —he will hiss—] “The metaphor is taken from the practice of those that keep bees; who draw them out of their hives into the fields, and lead them back again, συσσημασι, by a hiss or a whistle;” Cyril, on the place: and to the same purpose Theodoret, ibid. In chap. vii. 18. the metaphor is more apparent, by being carried further; where the hostile armies are expressed by the fly and the bee:—

“JEHOVAH shall hist the fly,
That is in the utmost parts of Egypt;
And the bee, that is in the land of Assyria.”

On which place see Deut. i. 44. Psal. cxviii. 12.; and God calls the locusts his great army, Joel ii. 25. Exod. xxiii. 28. See Huet. Quæst. Alnet. ii. 12.

Ibid. —with speed—] This refers to the 19th verse. As the scoffers had challenged God to make speed and to hasten his work of vengeance; so now God assures them, that with speed and swiftly it shall come.

27. Nor shall the girdle—] The eastern people, wearing long and loose garments, were unfit for action or business of any kind, without girding their clothes about them: when their business was finished, they took off their girdles. A girdle therefore denotes strength and activity; and to unloose the girdle, is to deprive of strength, to render unfit for action. God promises to unloose the loins of kings before Cyrus, chap. xlv. 1. The girdle is so essential a part of a soldier's accoutrement, being the last that he puts on to make himself ready for action, that to be girded, ζωννυσθαι, with the Greeks, means to be completely armed, and ready for battle:—

Ἀτρείδης ὃ ἐξοήσεν, ἰδὲ ζωννυσθαι ἀνωγεν
Ἀργεΐδης.

Il. xi. 5.

Το δὲ ἐνδύσαι τὰ ὅπλα ἐκαλῶν οἱ παλαιοὶ ζωννυσθαι. Pausan. Bæot.

It is used in the same manner by the Hebrews:—“Let not him that girdeth himself, boast as he that unlooseth his girdle,” 1 Kings xx. 11.; that is, “triumph not, before the war is finished.”

28. The hoofs of their horses shall be counted as adamant.] The shoeing of horses with iron plates nailed to the hoof is quite a modern practice, and unknown to the ancients; as appears from the silence of the Greek and Roman writers, especially those that treat of horse-medicine; who could not have passed over a matter so obvious, and of such importance, that now the whole science takes its name from it, being called by us Farriery. The horse-shoes of leather and of iron, which are mentioned; the silver and the gold shoes with which Nero and Poppea shod their mules, used occasionally to preserve the hoofs of delicate cattle, or for vanity, were of a very different kind; they enclosed the whole hoof as in a case, or as a shoe does a man's foot, and were bound or tied on. For this reason, the strength, firmness, and solidity of a horse's hoof was of much greater importance with them than with us; and was esteemed one of the first praises of a fine horse. Xenophon says, that a good horse's hoof is hard, hollow, and sounds upon the ground like a cymbal. Hence the χαλκοποδες ιπποι of Homer; and Virgil's "solido graviter sonat ungula cornu." And Xenophon gives directions for hardening the horse's hoofs, by making the pavement on which he stands in the stable with round-headed stones. For want of this artificial defence to the foot, which our horses have, Amos (vi. 12.) speaks of it as a thing as much impracticable to make horses run upon a hard rock, as to plough up the same rock with oxen:—

“ Shall horses run upon a rock ?

Shall one plough it up with oxen ? ”

These circumstances must be taken into consideration, in order to give us a full notion of the propriety and force of the image by which the Prophet sets forth the strength and excellence of the Babylonish cavalry; which made a great part of the strength of the Assyrian army. Xenoph. Cyrop. lib. ii.

27, 28. None among them—] Kimchi has well illustrated this continued exaggeration, or hyperbole, as he rightly calls it, to the following effect:—“ Through the greatness of their courage, they shall not be fatigued with their march; nor shall they stumble, though they march with the utmost speed: they shall not slumber by day, nor sleep by night; neither shall they ungird their armour, or put off their sandals, to take their rest: their arms shall be always in readiness, their arrows sharpened, and their bows bent: the hoofs of their horses are hard as a rock; they shall not fail, or need to be shod with iron: the wheels of their carriages shall move as rapidly as a whirlwind.”

30. And these shall look to the heaven upward, and down to the earth.] ונבט לארץ. Και εμελεψονται εις την γην. So the LXX, according to Vat. and Alex. copies; but the Compl. and Ald. editions have it more fully thus, Και εμελεψονται εις τον θρανον ανω, και κατω: and the Arabic, from the LXX, as if it had stood thus, Και εμελεψονται εις τον θρανον, και εις την γην κατω: both of which are plainly defective; the words εις την γην being wanted in the former, and the word ανω in the latter. But an ancient Coptic version from the LXX, supposed to be of the 2d century, some fragments of which are preserved in the library of St Germain des Prez at Paris, completes the sentence; for, according to this version, it stood thus in LXX, και ἐμῆλθον ἰσχυροὶ εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν ἄνω, καὶ εἰς τὴν γῆν κατω; and so it stands in LXX, MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. according to which they must have read in their Hebrew text in this manner: וּנְבִט לַשָּׁמַיִם לַמַּעְלָה וּלְאָרֶץ לַמַּטָּה. This is probably the true reading; with which I have made the translation agree. Compare chap. viii. 22. where the same sense is expressed in regard to both particulars, which are here equally and highly proper, the looking upwards, as well as down to the earth; but the form of expression is varied. I believe the Hebrew text in that place to be right, though not so full as I suppose it was originally here; and that of the LXX there to be redundant, being as full as the Coptic version, and MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. represent it in this place, from which I suppose it has been interpolated.

Ibid. the gloomy vapour] Syr. and Vulg. seem to have read בְּעֶרְפֹּלָה. But Jarchi explains the present reading as signifying darkness; and so possibly Syr. and Vulg. may have understood it in the same manner.

CHAPTER VI.

As this vision seems to contain a solemn designation of Isaiah to the prophetic office, it is by most interpreters thought to be the first in order of his prophecies. But this perhaps may not be so: for Isaiah is said, in the general title of his Prophecies, to have prophesied in the time of Uzziah; whose acts first and last he wrote, 2 Chron. xxvi. 22. which was usually done by a contemporary Prophet: and the phrase, “in the year when Uzziah died,” probably means after the death of Uzziah; as the same phrase, chap. xiv. 28. means after the death of Ahaz. Not that Isaiah’s prophecies are placed in exact order of time: chapters ii. iii. iv. v. seem by internal marks to be antecedent to chap. i.: they suit the time of Uzziah, or the former part of Jotham’s reign; whereas chap. i. can hardly be earlier than the last years of Jotham. See note on chap. i. 7. and ii. 1. This might be a new designation, to introduce more solemnly a general declaration of the whole course of God’s dispensations in regard to his people, and the fates of the nation; which are even now still depending, and will not be fully accomplished till the final restoration of Israel.

In this vision the ideas are taken in general from royal majesty, as displayed by the monarchs of the East: for the Prophet could not represent the ineffable presence of God by any other than sensible and earthly images. The particular scenery of it is taken from the temple. God is represented as seated on his throne above the ark in the most holy place, where the glory appeared above the cherubim, surrounded by his attendant ministers. This is called by God himself, "The place of his throne, and the place of the soles of his feet;" Ezek. xliii. 7. "A glorious throne, exalted of old, is the place of our sanctuary," saith the Prophet Jeremiah, chap. xvii. 12. The very posture of sitting is a mark of state and solemnity: "Sed et ipsum verbum sedere regni significat potestatem," saith Jerom, Comment. in Ephes. i. 20. See note on chap. lii. 2. St John, who has taken many sublime images from the Prophets of the Old Testament, and in particular from Isaiah, hath exhibited the same scenery, drawn out into a greater number of particulars, Rev. chap. iv.

The veil, separating the most holy place from the holy, or outermost part of the temple, is here supposed to be taken away; for the Prophet, to whom the whole is exhibited, is manifestly placed by the altar of burnt-offering, at the entrance of the temple, (compare Ezek. xliii. 5, 6.), which was filled with the train of the robe, the spreading and overflowing of the divine glory. The Lord upon the throne, according to St John, xii. 41. was Christ; and the vision related to his future kingdom; when the veil of separation was to be removed, and the whole earth was to be filled with the glory of God, revealed to all mankind: which is likewise implied in the hymn of the seraphim; the design of which is, saith Jerom on the place, "ut mysterium Trinitatis in una Divinitate demonstrent; et nequaquam templum Judaicum, sicut prius, sed omnem terram illius gloria plenam esse testentur." It relates indeed primarily to the Prophet's own time, and the obduration of the Jews of that age, and their punishment by the Babylonish captivity; but extends in its full latitude to the age of Messiah, and the blindness of the Jews to the gospel; (see Matt. xiii. 14. John xii. 40. Acts xxviii. 26. Rom. xi. 8.); the desolation of their country by the Romans, and their being rejected by God: that nevertheless a holy seed, a remnant, should be preserved ; and that the nation should sprout out and flourish again from the old stock.

In the 1st verse, fifty-one MSS, and one edition ; in the 8th verse, forty-four MSS, and one edition ; and in the 11th verse, thirty-three MSS, and one edition, for אֲדֹנִי, “ the Lord,” read יְהוָה, “ JEHOVAH :” which is probably the true reading, (compare verse 6th) ; as in many other places, in which the superstition of the Jews has substituted אֲדֹנִי for יְהוָה.

2. he covereth his feet.] By the feet the Hebrews mean all the lower parts of the body. But the people of the East generally wearing long robes reaching to the ground, and covering the lower parts of the body down to the feet, it may hence have been thought want of respect and decency to appear in public, and on solemn occasions, with even the feet themselves uncovered. Kempfer, speaking of the king of Persia giving audience, says ; “ Rex in medio supremi atrii cruribus more patrio inflexis sedebat : corpus tunica investiebat flava, ad suras cum staret protensa ; discumbentis vero pedes discalceatos pro urbanitate patria operiens :” Amœn. Exot. p. 227. Sir John Chardin’s MS note on this place of Isaiah is as follows : “ Grande marque de respect en Orient de se cacher les pieds, quand on est assis, et de baisser le visage. Quand le souverain se monstre en Chine et à Japon, chacun se jette le visage contre terre, et il n’est pas permis de regarder le roi.”

3. Holy, holy, holy—] This hymn, performed by the seraphim, divided into two choirs, the one singing responsively to the other, which Gregory Nazian. Carm. 18. very elegantly calls Συμφωνον, αντισφωνον, αλληλων στασιον, is formed upon the practice of alternate singing, which prevailed in the Jewish church from the time of Moses, whose ode at the Red Sea was thus performed, (see Exod. xv. 20, 21.), to that of Ezra, under whom the priests and Levites sung alternately,

“ O praise JEHOVAH, for he is gracious ;
For his mercy endureth for ever :”

Ezra iii. 11. See De S. Poes. Hebr. Præl. xix. at the beginning.

5. I am struck dumb.] נִרְמַחִי, twenty-eight MSS (five ancient) and three editions. I understand it as from דָּוִם, or דָּמָם, silere ; and so it is rendered by Syr. Vulg. Sym. and by some of the Jewish interpreters, apud Sal. b. Melec. The rendering of the Syriac is, חויר אני, stupens, attonitus sum. He immediately gives the reason why he was struck dumb; because he was a man of polluted lips, and dwelt among a people of polluted lips; and was unworthy either to join the seraphim in singing praises to God, or to be the messenger of God to his people. Compare Exod. iv. 10. vi. 12. Jer. i. 6.

6. from off the altar.] That is, from the altar of burnt-offerings, before the door of the temple; on which the fire that came down at first from heaven, Lev. ix. 24. 2 Chron. vii. 1. was perpetually kept burning: it was never to be extinguished, Lev. vi. 12, 13.

9. Thirteen MSS have ראה, in the regular form.

10. Make gross—] The Prophet speaks of the event, the fact as it would actually happen; not of God's purpose and act by his ministry. The Prophets are in other places said to perform the thing which they only foretell:—

“Lo! I have given thee a charge this day,
Over the nations, and over the kingdoms;
To pluck up, and to pull down;
To destroy, and to demolish;
To build, and to plant.”

Jer. i. 10.

And Ezekiel says, “when I came to destroy the city;” that is, as it is rendered in the margin of our version, “when I came to prophesy that the city should be destroyed;” chap. xliii. 3. To hear, and not understand; to see, and not perceive; is a common saying in many languages. Demosthenes uses it, and expressly calls it a proverb: ὥστε τοῦ της παροιμιας ὁρῶντας μὴ ὁρᾶν, καὶ ἀκουσοντας μὴ ἀκοῦειν: Contra Aristogit. i. sub fin. The Prophet, by the bold figure in the sentiment above-mentioned, and the elegant form and construction of the sentence, has raised it from a common proverb into a beautiful mashal, and given it the sublime air of poetry.

Ibid. —close up] השע: this word Sal. b. Melec explains to this sense, in which it is hardly used elsewhere, on the authority of Onkelos. He says, it means closing up the eyes, so that one cannot see; that the root is שוע, by which word the Targum has rendered the word טח, Lev. xiv. 42. וטח את בית, “and shall plaster the house.” And the word טח is used in the same sense, Isa. xlv. 18. So that it signifies to close up the eyes by some matter spread upon the lids. Mr Harmer very ingeniously applies to this passage a practice of sealing up the eyes as a ceremony, or as a kind of punishment, used in the East, from which the image may possibly be taken. Observations, ii. 278.

Ibid. — with their hearts.] וּבִלְבָּבֵי, fifteen MSS, and two editions.

Ibid. — and I should heal.] וְיִרְפָּא, LXX, Vulg. So likewise Matt. xiii. 14. John xii. 40. Acts xxviii. 27.

11. — be left.] For תִּשָּׂא, LXX and Vulg. read תִּשָּׂאָר.

13. — a tenth part] This passage, though somewhat obscure, and variously explained by various interpreters, yet, I think, has been made so clear by the accomplishment of the prophecy, that there remains little room to doubt of the sense of it. When Nebuchadnezzar had carried away the greater and better part of the people into captivity, there was yet a tenth remaining in the land, the poorer sort, left to be vine-dressers and husbandmen under Gedaliah, 2 Kings xxv. 12. 22.; and the dispersed Jews gathered themselves together, and returned to him, Jer. xl. 12.: yet even these, fleeing into Egypt after the death of Gedaliah, contrary to the warning of God given by the Prophet Jeremiah, miserably perished there. Again, in the subsequent and more remarkable completion of the prophecy, in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dissolution of the commonwealth by the Romans, when the Jews, after the loss of above a million of men, had increased from the scanty residue that was left of them, and had become very numerous again in their country; Hadrian, provoked by their rebellious behaviour, slew above half a million more of them, and a second time almost extirpated the nation. Yet after these signal and almost universal destructions of that nation, and after so many other repeated exterminations and massacres of them in different times and on various occasions since, we yet see, with astonishment, that the stock still remains, from which God, according to his promise frequently given by his Prophets, will cause his people to shoot forth again, and to flourish.

For בָּם, above seventy MSS (eleven ancient) read בָּה; and so LXX.

CHAPTER VII.

THE confederacy of Retsin king of Syria, and Pekah king of Israel, against the kingdom of Judah, was formed in the time of Jotham; and perhaps the effects of it were felt in the latter part of his reign : see 2 Kings xv. 37. and note on chap. i. 7—9. However, in the very beginning of the reign of Ahaz, they jointly invaded Judah with a powerful army, and threatened to destroy, or to dethrone, the house of David. The king and royal family being in the utmost consternation on receiving advices of their designs, Isaiah is sent to them to support and comfort them in their present distress, by assuring them, that God would make good his promises to David and his house. This makes the subject of this, and the following, and the beginning of the ninth chapters ; in which there are many and great difficulties.

Chapter vii. begins with an historical account of the occasion of this prophecy ; and then follows, ver. 4—16. a prediction of the ill success of the designs of the Israelites and Syrians against Judah ; and, from thence to the end of the chapter, a denunciation of the calamities to be brought upon the king and people of Judah by the Assyrians, whom they had now hired to assist them. Chapter viii. has a pretty close connexion with the foregoing : it contains a confirmation of the prophecy before given of the approaching destruction of the kingdoms of Israel and Syria by the Assyrians ; of the denunciation of the invasion of Judah by the same Assyrians : ver. 9, 10. give a repeated general assurance, that all the designs of the enemies of God's people shall be in the end disappointed, and brought to nought ; ver. 11, &c. admonitions and threatenings, (I do not attempt a more particular explanation of this very difficult part), concluding with an illustrious prophecy (chap. ix. 1—6.) of the manifestation of Messiah ; the transcendent dignity of his character ; and the universality and eternal duration of his kingdom.

4. The Syriac omits וּאֶרֶם ; Vulg. reads מֶלֶךְ אֲרָם : one or the other seems to be the true reading. I prefer the former ; or, instead of וּאֶרֶם וּבֶן, read וּפִקֵּחַ בֶּן, MS.

8, 9. Though the head of Syria be Damascus,
And the head of Damascus, Retsin ;
Yet within threescore and five years
Ephraim shall be broken, that he be no more a people :
And the head of Ephraim be Samaria ;
And the head of Samaria, Remaliah's son.]

“ Here are six lines, or three distichs, the order of which seems to have been disturbed by a transposition, occasioned by three of the lines beginning with the same word וּרָאשׁ ; which three lines ought not to have been separated by any other line intervening; but a copyist, having written the first of them, and casting his eye on the third, might easily proceed to write, after the first line beginning with וראש, that which ought to have followed the third line beginning with וראש: then, finding his mistake, to preserve the beauty of his copy, added at the end the distich which should have been in the middle; making that the second distich which ought to have been the third. For the order as it now stands is preposterous: the destruction of Ephraim is denounced, and then their grandeur is set forth; whereas naturally the representation of the grandeur of Ephraim should precede that of their destruction. And the destruction of Ephraim has no coherence with the grandeur of Syria, simply as such, which it now follows; but it naturally and properly follows the grandeur of Ephraim, joined to that of Syria their ally.

“The arrangement then of the whole sentence seems originally to have been thus:

“Though the head of Syria be Damascus;
 And the head of Damascus, Retsin;
 And the head of Ephraim be Samaria;
 And the head of Samaria, Remaliah's son;
 Yet within threescore and five years
 Ephraim shall be broken, that he be no more a people.”

DR JUBB.

8. —threescore and five years] It was sixty-five years from the beginning of the reign of Ahaz, when this prophecy was delivered, to the total depopulation of the kingdom of Israel by Esarhaddon, who carried away the remains of the ten tribes which had been left by Tiglath Pileser and Shalmaneser, and who planted the country with new inhabitants. That the country was not wholly stripped of its inhabitants by Shalmaneser, appears from many passages of the history of Josiah; where Israelites are mentioned as still remaining there, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 6, 7. 33. and xxxv. 18. 2 Kings xxiii. 19, 20. This seems to be the best explanation of the chronological difficulty in this place, which has much embarrassed the commentators: see Usserii Annal. V. T. ad an. 3327; and Sir I. Newton, Chronol. p. 283.

“That the last deportation of Israel by Esarhaddon was in the sixty-fifth year after the second of Ahaz, is probable, for the following reasons: The Jews, in Seder Olam Rabba, and the Talmudists, in D. Kimchi on Ezek. iv. say, that Manasseh king of Judah was carried to Babylon by the king of Assyria's captains, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. in the twenty-second year of his reign; that is, before Christ 676, according to Dr Blair's Tables. And they are probably right in this. It could not be much earlier, as the king of Assyria was not king of Babylon till 680; ibid. As Esarhaddon was then in the neighbourhood of Samaria, it is highly probable that he did then carry away the last remains of Israel, and brought those strangers thither who mention him as their founder, Ezra iv. 2. But this year is just the sixty-fifth year from the second of Ahaz, which was 740 before Christ. Now the carrying away of the last remains of Israel, (who till then, though their kingdom was destroyed forty-five years before, and though small in number, yet might keep up some form of being a people by living according to their own laws), entirely put an end to the people of Israel, as a people separate from all others: for from this time they never returned to their own country in a body, but were confounded with the people of Judah in the captivity; and the whole people, the ten tribes included, were called Jews." Dr JUBB.

9. If ye believe not—] "This clause is very much illustrated, by considering the captivity of Manasseh as happening at the same time with this predicted final ruin of Ephraim as a people. The near connexion of the two facts makes the prediction of the one naturally to cohere with the prediction of the other. And the words are well suited to this event in the history of the people of Judah: "If ye believe not, ye shall not be established;" that is, unless ye believe this prophecy of the destruction of Israel, ye Jews also, as well as the people of Israel, shall not remain established as a kingdom and people; ye also shall be visited with punishment at the same time: As our Saviour told the Jews in his time, "unless ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish;" intimating their destruction by the Romans; to which also, as well as to the captivity of Manasseh, and to the Babylonish captivity, the views of the Prophet might here extend. The close connexion of this threat to the Jews, with the prophecy of the destruction of Israel, is another strong proof that the order of the preceding lines above proposed is right." Dr JUBB.

Ibid. If ye believe not in me—] The exhortation of Jehoshaphat to his people, when God had promised to them, by the Prophet Jahaziel, victory over the Moabites and Ammonites, is very like this both in sense and expression, and seems to be delivered in verse :

“Hear me, O Judah ; and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem !

Believe in Jehovah your God, and ye shall be established :

Believe his prophets, and ye shall prosper.” 2 Chron. xx. 20.

Where both the sense and construction render very probable a conjecture of Archbishop Secker on this place, that instead of כי we should read ב. “If ye will not believe in me, ye shall not be established.” So likewise Dr Durell. The Chaldee has, “If ye will not believe in the words of the Prophet ;” which seems to be a paraphrase of the reading here proposed. In favour of which it may be further observed, that in one MS כי is upon a rasure ; and another for the last לא reads ולא ; which would properly follow כי, but could not follow כי.

11. Go deep to the grave—] So Aquila, Sym. Theodot. Vulg.

14. Jehovah] For אדני, twenty-five MSS (nine ancient) read יהוה. And so ver. 20. eighteen MSS.

14—16. When he shall know—] “Though so much has been written on this important passage, there is an obscurity and inconsequence which still attends it, in the general run of all the interpretations given to it by the most learned. And this obscure incoherence is given to it by the false rendering of a Hebrew particle, viz. ל in לדעתו. This has been generally rendered, either “that he may know,” or “till he know.” It is capable of either version, without doubt. But either of these versions makes ver. 15. incoherent and inconsistent with ver. 16. For ver. 16. plainly means to give a reason for the assertion in ver. 15., because it is subjoined to it by the particle כי, for. But it is no reason why a child should eat butter and honey till he was at an age to distinguish, that before that time the land of his nativity should be free from its enemies. This latter supposition indeed implies what is inconsistent with the preceding assertion ; for it implies, that in part of that time of the infancy spoken of, the land should not be free from enemies, and consequently these species of delicate food could not be attainable as they are in times of peace. The other version, “that he may know,” has no meaning at all : for what sense is there in asserting, that a child shall eat butter and honey, that he may know to refuse evil and choose good? Is there any such effect in this food? Surely no. Besides, the child is thus represented to eat those things which only a state of peace produces, during its whole infancy, inconsistently with ver. 16. which promises a relief from enemies only before the end of this infancy; implying plainly, that part of it would be passed in distressful times of war and siege; which was the state of things when the prophecy was delivered.

“But all these objections are cut off, and a clear coherent sense is given to this passage, by giving another sense to the particle ל; which never occurred to me till I saw it in Harmer’s Observat. vol. i. p. 299. See how coherent the words of the Prophet run, with how natural a connexion one clause follows another, by properly rendering this one particle:—“Behold this virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and thou shalt call his name Immanuel: Butter and honey shall he eat, when he shall know to refuse evil, and choose good. For, before this child shall know to refuse evil, and choose good, the land shall be desolate by whose two kings thou art distressed.” Thus ver. 16. subjoins a plain reason why the child should eat butter and honey, the food of plentiful times, when he came to a distinguishing age; viz. because before that time the country of the two kings who now distressed Judea should be desolated; and so Judea should recover that plenty which attends peace. That this rendering, which gives perspicuity and rational connexion to the passage, is according to the use of the Hebrew particle is certain. Thus, לפנות בקר, “at the appearing of morning, or, when morning appeared;” Exod. xiv. 27. לעת האכל, “at meal-time, or, when it was time to eat;” Ruth ii. 14. In the same manner, לדעתו, “at his knowing, that is, when he knows.”

“Harmer (ibid.) has clearly shewn, that these articles of food are delicacies in the East; and as such denote a state of plenty. See also Josh. v. 6. They therefore naturally express the plenty of the country, as a mark of peace restored to it. Indeed, ver. 22. it expresses a plenty arising from the thinness of the people; but that it signifies, ver. 15. a plenty arising from deliverance from war then present, is evident; because otherwise there is no expression of this deliverance. And that a deliverance was intended to be here expressed is plain, from calling the child which should be born, Immanuel, God with us. It is plain, also, because it is before given to the Prophet in charge to make a declaration of the deliverance, ver. 3—7. ; and it is there made ; and this prophecy must undoubtedly be conformable to that in this matter.” Dr JUBB.

The circumstance of the child's eating butter and honey is explained by Jarchi as denoting a state of plenty ; “ Butyrum et mel comedet infans iste, quoniam terra nostra plena erit omnis boni :” Comment. in locum. The infant Jupiter, says Callimachus, was tenderly nursed with goat's milk and honey : Hymn. in Jov. 48. Homer, of the orphan daughters of Pandareus,

“ Κομισσας δε δι' Αφροδιτη
Τυρω, και μελιτι γλυκερω, και ηδει οινω.” Odys. xx. 68.

“ Venus in tender delicacy rears

With honey, milk, and wine, their infant years.” POPE.

Τρυφης εστιν ενδειξις. “ This is a description of delicate food,” says Eustathius on the place.

Agreeably to the observations communicated by the learned person above-mentioned, which perfectly well explain the historical sense of this much-disputed passage, not excluding a higher secondary sense, the obvious and literal meaning of the prophecy is this : ‘ That within the time that a young woman, now a virgin, should conceive and bring forth a child, and that child should arrive at such an age as to distinguish between good and evil, that is, within a few years, (compare chap. viii. 4.), the enemies of Judah should be destroyed.’ But the prophecy is introduced in so solemn a manner ; the sign is so marked, as a sign selected and given by God himself, after Ahaz had rejected the offer of any sign of his own choosing out of the whole compass of nature ; the terms of the prophecy are so peculiar, and the name of the child so expressive, containing in them much more than the circumstances of the birth of a common child required, or even admitted ; that we may easily suppose, that, in minds prepared by the general expectation of a great Deliverer to spring from the house of David, they raised hopes far beyond what the present occasion suggested ; especially when it was found, that in the subsequent prophecy, delivered immediately afterward, this child, called Immanuel, is treated as the Lord and Prince of the land of Judah. Who could this be, other than the heir of the throne of David ? under which character a great and even a divine Person had been promised. No one of that age answered to this character, except Hezekiah; but he was certainly born nine or ten years before the delivery of this prophecy. That this was so understood at that time, is collected, I think, with great probability, from a passage of Micah, a Prophet contemporary with Isaiah, but who began to prophesy after him; and who, as I have already observed, imitated him, and sometimes used his expressions. Micah, having delivered that remarkable prophecy which determines the place of the birth of Messiah, "the ruler of God's people, whose goings forth have been of old, from everlasting;" that it should be Bethlehem Ephrata; adds immediately, that nevertheless, in the mean time, God would deliver his people into the hands of their enemies: "he will give them up, till she, who is to bear a child, shall bring forth;" Micah v. 3. This obviously and plainly refers to some known prophecy concerning a woman to bring forth a child; and seems much more properly applicable to this passage of Isaiah, than to any others of the same Prophet to which some interpreters have applied it. St Matthew, therefore, in applying this prophecy to the birth of Christ, does it not merely in the way of accommodating the words of the Prophet to a suitable case not in the Prophet's view; but takes it in its strictest, clearest, and most important sense, and applies it according to the original design and principal intention of the Prophet.

17. But JEHOVAH will bring] Houbigant reads ייביא, from LXX; αλλ' α επειξει ο Θεος; to mark the transition to a new subject.

Ibid. Even the king of Assyria—] Houbigant supposes these words to have been a marginal gloss, brought into the text by mistake; and so likewise Archbp. Secker. Besides their having no force or effect here, they do not join well in construction with the words preceding; as may be seen by the strange manner in which the ancient interpreters have taken them: and they very inelegantly forestall the mention of the king of Assyria, which comes in with great propriety in the 20th verse. I have therefore taken the liberty of omitting them in the translation.

18. —hast the fly] See note on chap. v. 26.

Ibid. Egypt and Assyria] Senacherib, Esarhaddon, Pharaoh Necho, and Nebuchadnezzar, who one after another desolated Judea.

19. —caverns] So LXX, Syr. Vulg. whence Houbigant supposes the true reading to be הנהללים.

20. —the river] That is, the Euphrates; הנהר, so read the LXX, and two MSS.

Ibid. JEHOVAH shall shave by the hired razor—] To shave with the hired razor the head, the feet, and the beard, is an expression highly parabolical; to denote the utter devastation of the country from one end to the other, and the plundering of the people, from the highest to the lowest, by the Assyrians; whom God employed as his instrument to punish the Jews. Ahaz himself, in the first place, hired the king of Assyria to come to help him against the Syrians, by a present made to him of all the treasures of the temple, as well as his own: and God himself considered the great nations whom he thus employed as his mercenaries, and paid them their wages: thus he paid Nebuchadnezzar for his services against Tyre, by the conquest of Egypt; Ezek. xxix. 18—20. The hairs of the head are those of the highest order in the state; those of the feet, or the lower parts, are the common people; the beard is the king, the high-priest, the very supreme in dignity and majesty. The eastern people have always held the beard in the highest veneration, and have been extremely jealous of its honour. To pluck a man's beard is an instance of the greatest indignity that can be offered. See Isa. l. 6. The king of the Ammonites, to shew the utmost contempt of David, "cut off half the beards of his servants; and the men were greatly ashamed: and David bade them tarry at Jericho till their beards were grown;" 2 Sam. x. 4, 5. Niebuhr, Arabie, p. 275. gives a modern instance of the very same kind of insult. "The Turks," says Thevenot, "greatly esteem a man who has a fine beard: it is a very great affront to take a man by his beard, unless it be to kiss it: they swear by the beard;" Voyages, i. p. 57. D'Arvieux gives a remarkable instance of an Arab, who, having received a wound in his jaw, chose to hazard his life, rather than suffer his surgeon to take off his beard. Mémoires, tom. iii. p. 214. See also Niebuhr, Arabie, p. 61.

The remaining verses of this chapter, 21—25. contain an elegant and very expressive description of a country depopulated, and left to run wild, from its adjuncts and circumstances: the vineyards and corn-fields, before well cultivated, now overrun with briars and thorns: much grass, so that the few cattle that are left, a young cow and two sheep, have their full range, and abundant pasture, so as to yield milk in plenty to the scanty family of the owner: the thinly scattered people, living not on corn, wine and oil, the produce of cultivation, but on milk and honey, the gifts of nature; and the whole land given up to the wild beasts; so that the miserable inhabitants are forced to go out armed with bows and arrows, either to defend themselves against the wild beasts, or to supply themselves with necessary food by hunting.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE prophecy in the foregoing chapter relates directly to the kingdom of Judah only: the first part of it promises them deliverance from the united invasion of the Israelites and Syrians; the latter part, from ver. 17. denounces the desolation to be brought upon the kingdom of Judah by the Assyrians. The 6th, 7th, and 8th verses of this chapter, seem to take in both the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. "This people, that refuseth the waters of Siloah," may be meant of both: the Israelites despised the kingdom of Judah, which they had deserted, and now attempted to destroy; the people of Judah, from a consideration of their own weakness, and a distrust of God's promises, being reduced to despair, applied to the Assyrians for assistance against the two confederate kings. But how could it be said of Judah, that they rejoiced in Retsin and the son of Remaliah, the enemies confederated against them? If some of the people were inclined to revolt to the enemy, which however does not clearly appear from any part of the history or the prophecy, yet there was nothing like a tendency to a general defection. This, therefore, must be understood of Israel. The Prophet denounces the Assyrian invasion, which should overwhelm the whole kingdom of Israel under Tiglath Pileser and Shalmaneser; and the subsequent invasion of Judah by the same power under Senacherib, which would bring them into the most imminent danger, like a flood reaching to the neck, in which a man can but just keep his head above water. The two next verses, 9, 10, are addressed by the Prophet, as a subject of the kingdom of Judah, to the Israelites and Syrians; and perhaps to all the enemies of God's people; assuring them, that their attempts against that kingdom shall be fruitless; for that the promised Immanuel, to whom he alludes by using his name to express the signification of it, for God is with us, shall be the defence of the house of David, and deliver the kingdom of Judah out of their hands. He then proceeds to warn the people of Judah against idolatry, divination, and the like forbidden practices; to which they were much inclined, and which would soon bring down God's judgments upon Israel. The prophecy concludes, at the 6th verse of chap. ix. with promises of blessings in future times, by the coming of the great Deliverer already pointed out by the name of Immanuel, whose person and character are set forth in terms the most ample and magnificent.

And here it may be observed, that it is almost the constant practice of the Prophet to connect in like manner deliverances temporal with spiritual. Thus the xith chapter, setting forth the kingdom of Messiah, is closely connected with the xth, which foretells the destruction of Senacherib. So likewise the destruction of nations, enemies to God, in the xxxivth chapter, introduces the flourishing state of the kingdom of Christ in the xxxvth. And thus the chapters, from xl. to xlix. inclusive, plainly relating to the deliverance from the captivity of Babylon, do in some parts as plainly relate to the greater deliverance by Christ.

1. Take unto thee a large mirror—] The word גליון is not regularly formed from גלל, to roll, but from גלה; as פדיון from פדה, כליון from כלה, נקיון from נקה, עליון from עלה, &c. the י supplying the place of the radical ה. גלה signifies to shew, to reveal; properly, as Schroederus says, (De Vestitu Mulier. Hebr. p. 294.), to render clear and bright by rubbing, to polish: גליון, therefore, according to this derivation, is not a roll or volume, but may very well signify a polished tablet of metal, such as anciently was used for a mirror: the Chaldee paraphrast renders it by לוח, a tablet; and the same word, though somewhat differently pointed, the Chaldee paraphrast and the Rabbins render a mirror, chap. iii. 23. The mirrors of the Israelitish women were made of brass finely polished, Exod. xxxviii. 8.; from which place it likewise appears, that what they used were little hand-mirrors, which they carried with them, even when they assembled at the door of the tabernacle. I have a metalline mirror, found in Herculaneum, which is not above three inches square. The Prophet is commanded to take a mirror, or brazen polished tablet, not like these little hand-mirrors, but a large one; large enough for him to engrave upon it, in deep and lasting characters, בחרט אנוש, with a workman's graving tool, the prophecy which he was to deliver. חרט in this place certainly signifies an instrument to write, or to engrave with; but חריט, the same word, only differing a little in the form, means something belonging to a lady's dress, chap. iii. 22. (where however five MSS leave out the י, whereby only it differs from the word in this place); either a crimping-pin, which might be not unlike a graving tool, as some will have it; or a purse, as others infer from 2 Kings v. 23. It may therefore be called here חרט אנוש, a workman's instrument, to distinguish it from חריט אשה, an instrument of the same name used by the women. In this manner he was to record the prophecy of the destruction of Damascus and Samaria by the Assyrians: the subject and sum of which prophecy is here expressed with great brevity in four words, maher shalal, hash baz; i. e. "to hasten the spoil, to take quickly the prey;" which are afterwards applied as the name of the Prophet's son, who was made a sign of the speedy completion of it: Maher-shalal Hash-baz; Haste-to-the-spoil Quick-to-the-prey. And that it might be done with the greater solemnity, and to preclude all doubt of the real delivery of the prophecy before the event, he calls witnesses to attest the recording of it.

4. For before the child—] The prophecy was accordingly accomplished within three years; when Tiglath Pileser, king of Assyria, went up against Damascus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Retsin; and also took the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, and carried them captive to Assyria; 2 Kings xvi. 9. xv. 29. 1 Chron. v. 26.

6, 7. Because this people have rejected—] The gentle waters of Siloah, a small fountain and brook just without Jerusalem, which supplied a pool within the city for the use of the inhabitants, is an apt emblem of the state of the kingdom and house of David, much reduced in its apparent strength, yet supported by the blessing of God: and is finely contrasted with the waters of the Euphrates, great, rapid, and impetuous; the image of the Babylonian empire, which God threatens to bring down, like a mighty flood, upon all these apostates of both kingdoms, as a punishment for their manifold iniquities, and their contemptuous disregard of his promises. The brook and the river are put for the kingdoms to which they belong, and the different states of which respectively they most aptly represent. Juvenal, inveighing against the corruption of Rome by the importation of Asiatic manners, says, with great elegance, that the Orontes has been long discharging itself into the Tiber:—

“Jampridem Syrus in Tiberim defluxit Orontes.”

And Virgil, to express the submission of some of the eastern countries to the Roman arms, says, that the waters of Euphrates now flowed more humbly and gently:—“Euphrates ibat jam mollior undis: Æn. viii. 726. But the happy contrast between the brook and the river gives a peculiar beauty to this passage of the Prophet, with which the simple figure in the Roman poets, however beautiful, yet uncontrasted, cannot contend.

8. Even to the neck shall he reach] He compares Jerusalem (says Kimchi) to the head in the human body: As when the waters come up to a man's neck, he is very near drowning; for a little increase of them would go over his head: so the king of Assyria coming up to Jerusalem was like a flood reaching to the neck; the whole country was overflowed, and the capital was in imminent danger. Accordingly the Chaldee renders reaching to the neck, by reaching to Jerusalem.

9. Know ye this] God by his Prophet plainly declares to the confederate adversaries of Judah, and bids them regard and attend to his declaration, that all their efforts shall be in vain. The present reading רעו, is subject to many difficulties: I follow that of the LXX, רעו, γινώσκετε. Archbishop Secker approves this reading. רעו, know ye this, is parallel and synonymous to האזינו, give ear to it, in the next line. The LXX have likewise very well paraphrased the conclusion of this verse: “When ye have strengthened yourselves, ye shall be broken; and though ye again strengthen yourselves, again shall ye be broken;” taking דחו as meaning the same with נשברו.

11. As taking me by the hand] Eleven MSS (two ancient) read כהזקת: and so Sym. Syr. Vulg.

12. Say ye not, It is holy—] קשר. Both the reading and the sense of this word are doubtful. The LXX manifestly read קשה; for they render it by σκληρόν, hard. Syr. and Chald. render it מרדא and מרור, rebellion. How they came by this sense of the word, or what they read in their copies, is not so clear. But the worst of it is, that neither of these readings or renderings gives any clear sense in this place: For why should God forbid his faithful servants to say, with the unbelieving Jews, it is hard; or, there is a rebellion; or, as our translators render it, a confederacy? And how can this be called "walking in the way of this people," ver. 11. which usually means, following their example; joining with them in religious worship? Or what confederacy do they mean? The union of the kingdoms of Syria and Israel against Judah? That was properly a league between two independent states; not an unlawful conspiracy of one part against another in the same state; for this is the meaning of the word קשר. For want of any satisfactory interpretation of this place, that I can meet with, I adopt a conjecture of Archbishop Secker, which he proposes with great diffidence; and even seems immediately to give up, as being destitute of any authority to support it. I will give it in his own words: "Videri potest ex cap. v. 16. et hujus cap. 13, 14. 19. legendum קדש, vel קדוש, eadem sententia, qua אלהינו Hos. xiv. 3. Sed nihil necesse est. Vide enim Jer. xi. 9. Ezek. xxii. 25. Optimè tamen sic responderent huic versiculo versiculi 13, 14." The passages of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, above referred to, seem to me not at all to clear up the sense of the word קשר in this place. But the context greatly favours the conjecture here given, and makes it highly probable: "Walk not in the way of this people; call not their idols holy; nor fear ye the object of their fear: (that is, the σεβασματα, or gods of the idolaters; for so fear here signifies, to wit, the thing feared; so God is called "the fear of Isaac," Gen. xxxi. 42. 53.): but look up to JEHOVAH as your Holy One; and let Him be your fear, and let Him be your dread; and He shall be a holy refuge unto you." Here there is a harmony and consistency running through the whole sentence; and the latter part naturally arises out of the former, and answers to it. Observe, that the difference between קשר and קדש is chiefly in the transposition of the two last letters; for the letters ר and ד are hardly distinguishable in some copies, printed as well as MS; so that the mistake, in respect of the letters themselves, is a very easy and a very common one.

14. And He shall be unto you a sanctuary.] The word לבס, unto you, absolutely necessary, as I conceive, to the sense, is lost in this place: it is preserved by the Vulgate;

“et erit vobis in sanctificationem:” the LXX have it in the singular number;  $\epsilon\sigma\tau\alpha\iota \sigma\omicron\iota \epsilon\upsilon\varsigma \acute{\alpha}\gamma\iota\sigma\mu\omicron\varsigma$ . Or else, instead of מִקְדָּשׁ, a sanctuary, we must read מִוֶּקֶשׁ, a snare, which would then be repeated, without any propriety or elegance, at the end of the verse. The Chaldee reads instead of it מִשְׁפָּט, judgment; for he renders it by פֻּרְעָן, which word frequently answers to מִשְׁפָּט in his paraphrase. A MS has (instead of מִקְדָּשׁ וּלְאֲבָן) לֵהָא לְאֲבָן; which clears the sense and construction. But the reading of the Vulgate is, I think, the best remedy to this difficulty; and is in some degree authorized by לֵהָא, the reading of the MS above mentioned.

16. among my disciples] בְּלִמְדֵי. “The LXX render it,  $\tau\epsilon \mu\eta \mu\alpha\theta\epsilon\upsilon\omicron\upsilon$ . Bishop Chandler, Defence of Christianity, p. 308. “thinks they read מוֹלִמֵּד, that it be not understood; and approves this reading:” Archbishop SECKER.

18. God of Hosts] A MS reads אֱלֹהֵי צְבָאוֹת.

19. Should they seek—] After יִדְרֹשׁ, the LXX, repeating the word, read הִדְרֹשׁ:  $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota \pi\epsilon\tau\epsilon\iota \pi\epsilon\tau\epsilon\iota \alpha\upsilon\tau\epsilon\iota \alpha\epsilon\lambda\eta\eta\delta\eta\sigma\alpha\iota$ ;  $\omega\delta \alpha\epsilon\lambda\eta\delta\eta\sigma\alpha\iota \omega\delta \pi\epsilon\tau\epsilon\iota \omega\delta \alpha\upsilon\tau\epsilon\iota \alpha\epsilon\lambda\eta\eta\delta\eta\sigma\alpha\iota$ ; and this repetition of the verb seems necessary to the sense; and, as Procopius on the place observes, it strongly expresses the Prophet’s indignation at their folly.

20. Unto the command, and unto the testimony—] “Is not הַעוֹדָה here the attested prophecy, ver. 1—4.? and perhaps הוֹרָה the command, ver. 11—15.? for it means sometimes a particular, and even a human command; see Prov. vi. 20. and vii. 1, 2. where it is ordered to be hid, that is, secretly kept:” Archbishop SECKER. So Deschamps in his translation, or rather paraphrase, understands it: “Ténon-nous à l’instrument authentique, mis en dépôt par ordre du Seigneur.” If this be right, the 16th verse must be understood in the same manner.

Ibid. In which there is no obscurity] שָׁחַר, as an adjective, frequently signifies dark, obscure; and the noun שָׁחַר signifies darkness, gloominess, Joel ii. 2. if we may judge by the context:

“A day of darkness and obscurity;
Of cloud, and of thick vapour;
As the gloom spread upon the mountains:
A people mighty and numerous:”

where the gloom, שָׁחַר, seems to be the same with the cloud and thick vapour mentioned in the line preceding: see Lam. iv. 8. Job xxx. 30. See this meaning of the word שחר well supported in Christ. Muller Satura Observationum Philolog. p. 53. Lugd. Bat. 1752. The morning seems to be an idea wholly incongruous in the passage of Joel: And in this of Isaiah, the words, “in which there is no morning,” (for so it ought to be rendered, if שחר in this place signifies, according to its usual sense, morning), seem to give no meaning at all. “It is because there is no light in them,” says our translation: If there be any sense in these words, it is not the sense of the original; which cannot justly be so translated. Qui n’a rien d’obscur; Deschamps. The reading of LXX and Syr. שחר, gift, affords not any assistance towards the clearing up of this difficult place.

21. —distressed—] Instead of נקשה, distressed, the Vulg. Chald. and Sym. manifestly read נבשל, stumbling, tottering through weakness, ready to fall; a sense which suits very well with the place.

22. And he shall cast his eyes upward—] The learned Professor Michaelis, treating of this place, (Not. in De S. Poes. Hebr. Præl. ix.), refers to a passage in the Koran, which is similar to it. As it is a very celebrated passage, and on many accounts remarkable, I shall give it here at large, with the same author’s further remarks upon it in another place of his writings. It must be noted here, that the learned Professor renders נבט in this and the parallel place, chap. v. 30. which I translate he looketh, by it thundereth, from Schultens, Orig. Ling. Hebr. lib. i. chap. 2.; of the justness of which rendering I much doubt. This brings the image of Isaiah more near, in one circumstance, to that of Mohammed, than it appears to be in my translation.

“One must have a curiosity to examine a passage which had so great an effect upon Labid. It is, I must own, the finest that I know in the whole Koran; but I scarce think it will have a second time the like effect, so as to tempt any one of my readers to submit to circumcision. It is in the second chapter; where he is speaking of certain apostates from the faith. ‘They are like,’ saith he, ‘to a man who kindleth a light. As soon as it begins to shine, God takes from them the light, and leaves them in darkness, that they see nothing. They are deaf, dumb, and blind; and return not into the right way. Or they fare as when a cloud, full of darkness, thunder, and lightning, covers the heaven: when it bursteth, they stop their ears with their fingers, with deadly fear; and God hath the unbelievers in his power. The lightning almost robbeth them of their eyes: as often as it flasheth, they go on by its light; and when it vanisheth in darkness, they stand still. If God pleased, they would retain neither hearing nor sight.' That the thought is beautiful, no one will deny; and Labid, who had probably a mind to flatter Mohammed, was lucky in finding a passage in the Koran, so little abounding in poetical beauties, to which his conversion might with any propriety be ascribed. It was well that he went no further; otherwise his taste for poetry might have made him again an infidel." Michaelis, Erpenii Arabische Grammatik abgekürzt, Vorrede, s. 32.

23. —accumulated darkness] Either מנודח, fem. to agree with אפלה; or אפל המנודח, alluding perhaps to the palpable Egyptian darkness, Exod. x. 21.

Ibid. The land of Zebulon—] Zebulon, Naphthali, Manasseh, that is, the country of Galilee all round the Sea of Genesareth, were the parts that principally suffered in the first Assyrian invasion under Tiglath Pileser: see 2 Kings xv. 29. 1 Chron. v. 26.: and they were the first that enjoyed the blessing of Christ's preaching the gospel, and exhibiting his miraculous works among them. See Mede's Works, p. 101. and 457.

CHAPTER IX.

2. Thou hast increased their joy] Eleven MSS (two ancient) read לו, according to the Masoretical correction.

Ibid. —as with the joy of harvest] כשמחה בקציר. For בקציר a MS has קציר, and another הקציר: one of which seems to be the true reading, as the noun preceding is in regimine.

4. The greaves of the armed warrior] סמון סמן. This word, occurring only in this place, is of very doubtful signification. Schindler fairly tells us, that we must guess at it by the context. The Jews have explained it, by guess I believe, as signifying battle, conflict: the Vulgate renders it violenta prædatio. But it seems as if something was rather meant which was capable of becoming fuel for the fire, together with the garments mentioned in the same sentence. In Syriac, the word, as a noun, signifies a shoe or a sandal, as a learned friend suggested to me some years ago: see Luke xv. 22. Acts xii. 8. I take it therefore to mean that part of the armour which covered the legs and feet, and I would render the two words in Latin by caliga caligati. The burning of heaps of armour, gathered from the field of battle, as an offering made to the god supposed to be the giver of victory, was a custom that prevailed among some heathen nations; and the Romans used it as an emblem of peace: which perfectly well suits with the design of the Prophet in this place. A medal, struck by Vespasian on finishing his wars both at home and abroad, represents the goddess Peace, holding an olive branch in one hand, and with a lighted torch in the other setting fire to a heap of armour. Virgil mentions the custom:

“Cum primam aciem Præneste sub ipsa

Stravi, scutorumque incendi victor acervos.” Æn. viii. 561.

See Addison on Medals, Series ii. 18. And there are notices of some such practice among the Israelites, and other nations of the most early times. God promises to Joshua victory over the kings of Canaan: “To-morrow I will deliver them up all slain before Israel: thou shalt hough their horses, and burn their chariots with fire;” Josh. xi. 6. See also Nahum ii. 13. And the Psalmist employs this image to express complete victory, and a perfect establishment of peace:

“He maketh wars to cease, even to the end of the land:

He breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder;

And burneth the chariots in the fire.” Psal. xlv. 9.

עגליות, properly plaustra, the *baggage-waggon*s; which however the LXX and Vulg. render scuta, shields, and Chald. round shields, to shew the propriety of that sense of the word from the etymology; which, if admitted, makes the image the same with that used by the Romans.

Ezekiel, in his bold manner, has carried this image to a degree of amplification which, I think, hardly any other of the Hebrew poets would have attempted. He describes the burning of the arms of the enemy, in consequence of the complete victory to be obtained by the Israelites over Gog and Magog :

“ Behold, it is come to pass, and it is done ;

Saith the Lord JEHOVAH.

This is the day, of which I spake :

And the inhabitants of the cities of Israel shall go forth ;

And shall set on fire the armour, and the shield,

And the buckler, and the bow, and the arrows,

And the clubs, and the lances ;

And they shall set them on fire for seven years :

And they shall not bear wood from the field ;

Neither shall they hew from the forest :

For of the armour shall they make their fires ;

And they shall spoil their spoilers,

And they shall plunder their plunderers.” Ezek. xxxix. 8-10.

5. The government shall be upon his shoulder.] That is, the ensign of government ; the sceptre, the sword, the key, or the like, which was borne upon or hung from the shoulder. See note on chap. xxii. 22.

Chap. ix. 7.—Chap. x. 4.] This whole passage, reduced to its proper and entire form, and healed of the dislocation which it suffers by the absurd division of the chapters, makes a distinct prophecy, and a just poem, remarkable for the regularity of its disposition, and the elegance of its plan. It has no relation to the preceding or the following prophecy ; though the parts, violently torn asunder, have been, on the one side and the other, patched on to them. Those relate principally to the kingdom of Judah ; this is addressed exclusively to the kingdom of Israel. The subject of it is a denunciation of vengeance awaiting their crimes. It is divided into four parts, each threatening the particular punishment of some grievous offence—of their pride ; of their perseverance in their vices ; of their impiety ; and of their injustice. To which is added a general denunciation of a further reserve of divine wrath, contained in a distich before used by the Prophet on a like occasion, chap. v. 25. and here repeated after each part : this makes the intercalary verse of the poem, or, as we call it, the burthen of the song.

“ Post hoc comma (cap. x. 4.) interponitur spatium unius lineæ, in cod. 2. et 3. : idemque observatur in 245. in quo nullum est spatium ad finem capitis ix.” Kennicott, Var. Lect.

7. JEHOVAH.] For אֲדֹנָי, thirty MSS and three editions read יְהוָה.

8. —carry themselves haughtily] וידעו, and they shall know: so ours, and the versions in general. But what is it that they shall know? The verb stands destitute of its object; and the sense is imperfect. The Chaldee is the only one, as far as I can find, that expresses it otherwise. He renders the verb in this place by ואתרברבו, they exalt themselves, or carry themselves haughtily; the same word by which he renders גבהו, chap. iii. 16. He seems therefore in this place to have read ויגבהו; which agrees perfectly well with what follows, and clears up the difficulty. Archbishop Secker conjectured וידברו, referring it to לאמר in the next verse; which shews, that he was not satisfied with the present reading. Houbigant reads וירעו, et pravi facti sunt; which is found in a MS; but I prefer the reading of the Chaldee, which suits much better with the context.

9. The bricks—] “The eastern bricks, (says Sir John Chardin, see Harmer, Obser. i. p. 176.), are only clay well moistened with water, and mixed with straw, and dried in the sun.” So that their walls are commonly no better than our mud-walls: see Maundrell, p. 124. That straw was a necessary part in the composition of this sort of bricks, to make the parts of the clay adhere together, appears from Exodus, chap. v. These bricks are properly opposed to hewn stone, so greatly superior in beauty and durability. The sycamores, which, as Jerom on the place says, are timber of little worth, with equal propriety are opposed to the cedars. “As the grain and texture of the sycamore is remarkably coarse and spongy, it could therefore stand in no competition at all (as it is observed Isa. ix. 10.) with the cedar for beauty and ornament:” Shaw, Supplement to Travels, p. 96. We meet with the same opposition of cedars to sycamores 1 Kings x. 27. where Solomon is said to have made silver as the stones, and cedars as the sycamores in the vale, for abundance. By this mashal, or figurative and sententious speech, they boast, that they shall easily be able to repair their present losses, suffered perhaps by the first Assyrian invasion under Tiglath Pileser; and to bring their affairs to a more flourishing condition than ever.

10. —the princes of Retsin against him] For צרי, enemies, Houbigant by conjecture reads שרי, princes; which is confirmed by twenty-one MSS (two ancient), and nine more have צ upon a rasure, and therefore had probably at first שרי. The princes of Retsin, the late ally of Israel, that is, the Syrians, expressly named in the next verse, shall now be excited against Israel.

The LXX in this place give us another variation : for רצין, they read צין <sup>הר ציון</sup>, <sup>ορος Σιών</sup>, Mount Sion ; of which this may be the sense : But JEHOVAH shall set up the adversaries of Mount Sion against him, (i. e. against Israel), and will strengthen his enemies together : the Syrians—the Philistines—who are called the adversaries of Mount Sion. See Simonis Lex. in voce סכך.

11.—on every side] בכל פה, in every corner ; in every part of their country, pursuing them to the remotest extremities, and the most retired parts. So the Chald. בכל אתר, in every place.

13.—in one day] Eight MSS read ביום ; and another has a rasure in the place of the letter ב.

16. JEHOVAH] For אדני, eighteen MSS read יהוה.

17. For wickedness—] Wickedness rageth like a fire, destroying and laying waste the nation : but it shall be its own destruction, by bringing down the fire of God's wrath, which shall burn up the briers and the thorns ; that is, the wicked themselves. Briers and thorns are an image frequently applied in Scripture, when set on fire, to the rage of the wicked, violent yet impotent, and of no long continuance—"they are extinct as the fire of thorns;" Psal. cxviii. 12.;—to the wicked themselves, as useless and unprofitable, proper objects of God's wrath, to be burned up, or driven away by the wind—"as thorns cut up, they shall be consumed in the fire;" Isa. xxxiii. 12. Both these ideas seem to be joined in Psal. lviii. 9.

"Before your pots shall feel the thorn,

As well the green as the dry, the tempest shall bear them away."

The green and the dry is a proverbial expression, meaning all sorts of them, good and bad, great and small, &c. ; so Ezekiel:—"Behold, I will kindle a fire, and it shall devour every green tree, and every dry tree;" chap. xx. 47. D'Herbelot quotes a Persian poet describing a pestilence under the image of a conflagration:—"This was a lightning that, falling upon a forest, consumed there the green wood with the dry." See Harmer, Obser. ii. p. 187.

19.—the flesh of his neighbour] "Του βραχίονος του ἀδελφου αυτου, LXX, Alexand. Duplex Versio, quarum altera legit רצו, quæ vox extat Jer. vi. 21. Nam רע, ἀδελφός, Gen. xliii.

33. Recte, in fallor:" SECKER. I add to this excellent remark, that the Chaldee manifestly reads רעו, not זרעו; for he renders it by קריביו, his neighbour. And Jeremiah has the very same expression: ואיש בשר רעהו יאכלו, "And every one shall eat the flesh of his neighbour; chap. xix. 9. This observation, I think, gives the true reading and sense of this place; and the context strongly confirms it, by explaining the general idea by particular instances, in the following verse: "Every man shall devour the flesh of his neighbour; (that is, they shall harass and destroy one another): Manasseh shall devour Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasseh; (which two tribes were most closely connected both in blood and situation, as brothers and neighbours); and both of them in the midst of their own dissensions shall agree in preying upon Judah." The common reading, "shall devour the flesh of his own arm," in connexion with what follows, seems to make either an inconsistency or an anticlimax; whereas by this correction the following verse becomes an elegant illustration of the foregoing.

CHAPTER X.

4. Without me—] That is, without my aid, they shall be taken captive even by the captives, and shall be subdued by the vanquished. "The ׀ in בלתי is a pronoun, as in Hos. xiii. 4.:" Kimchi on the place.

5. Ho to the Assyrian—] Here begins a new and distinct prophecy; continued to the end of the xiith chapter; and it appears from ver. 9–11. of this chapter, that this prophecy was delivered after the taking of Samaria by Shalmaneser; which was in the sixth year of the reign of Hezekiah: and as the former part of it foretells the invasion of Senacherib, and the destruction of his army, which makes the whole subject of this chapter, it must have been delivered before the fourteenth of the same reign.

Ibid. The staff in whose hand] The word הוא in this place seems to embarrass the sentence. I omit it on the authority of the Alexandrine copy of LXX; and five MSS. (two ancient), for ומטה הוא, read מטתו. Archbishop Secker was not satisfied with the present reading: he proposes another method of clearing up the sense, by reading ביום instead of ביום: "And he is a staff in the day of mine indignation."

12. JEHOVAH] For אדני, fourteen MSS, and three editions, read יהוה.

Ibid. —the effect—] “פרי, f. צבי, vid. xiii. 19. sed confer Prov. i. 31. xxxi. 16. 31. :” SECKER. The Chaldee renders the word פרי by עובדי, opera; which seems to be the true sense; and I have followed it.

13. —strongly—] Twelve MSS agree with the Keri in reading כביר without the א. And S. b. Melec and Kimchi thus explain it: “Them, who dwelled in a great and strong place, I have brought down to the ground.”

15.—its master] I have here given the meaning, without attempting to keep to the expression of the original: לא עץ, “the no-wood;” that which is not wood like itself, but of a quite different and superior nature. The Hebrews have a peculiar way of joining the negative particle לא to a noun, to signify in a strong manner a total negation of the thing expressed by the noun.

“How hast thou given help, ללא כח, to the no-strength?

And saved the arm, לא עז, of the no-power?

How hast thou given counsel, ללא חכמה, to the no-wisdom?” that is, to the man totally deprived of strength, power, and wisdom: Job xxvi. 2, 3.

“Ye that rejoice, ללא דבר, in no-thing:”

that is, in your fancied strength, which is none at all, a mere nonentity: Amos vi. 13.

“For I am God, ולא איש, and no-man;

The Holy One in the midst of thee, yet do not frequent cities.” Hosea xi. 9.

“And the Assyrian shall fall by a sword, ולא איש, of no-man;

And a sword of, לא אדם, no-mortal shall devour him.”

Isa. xxxi. 8.

“Wherefore do ye weigh out your silver, בלוא להם, for the no-bread.”

Isa. lv. 2.

So here לא עץ means him who is far from being an inert piece of wood, but is an animated and active being; not an instrument, but an agent.

16. JEHOVAH] For אדני, fifty-two MSS, and six editions, read יהוה.

Ibid. And under his glory] That is, all that he could boast of as great and strong in his army; (Sal. b. Melec in loc.); expressed afterwards, ver. 18. by the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field.

17, 18. And he shall burn and consume his thorn—] The briers and thorns are the common people; the glory of his forest are the nobles, and those of highest rank and importance. See note on chap. ix. 17. and compare Ezek. xx. 47. The fire of God's wrath shall destroy them, both great and small; it shall consume them from the soul to the flesh: a proverbial expression—soul and body, as we say; it shall consume them entirely and altogether. And the few that escape shall be looked upon as having escaped from the most imminent danger; “as a firebrand plucked out of the fire;” Amos iv. 11. Ὡς δια πυρός, 1 Cor. iii. 15. as a man, when a house is burning, is forced to make his escape by running through the midst of the fire.

I follow here the reading of the LXX; במאש נסס, ὥς ὁ φεγγων ἀπο φλογος καιομενης. Symmachus also renders the latter word by φεγγων.

22, 23. For though thy people, O Israel—] I have endeavoured to keep to the letter of the text, as nearly as I can, in this obscure passage. But it is remarkable, that neither the LXX, nor St Paul, Rom. ix. 28. who, except in a few words of no great importance, follows them nearly in this place, nor any one of the ancient versions, take any notice of the word הִשָּׁב, overflowing; which seems to give an idea not easily reconcileable with those with which it is here joined. I. S. Mærlius (Schol. Philolog. ad Selecta S. Cod. loca) conjectures, that the two last letters of this word are by mistake transposed, and that the true reading is פִּשָּׁב, judging with strict justice. The LXX might think this sufficiently expressed by ἐν δικαιοσυνη. A MS, with St Paul and LXX Alex. omits בִּי in the 22d verse; sixty-nine MSS, and six editions, omit בִּי in the 23d verse: and so St Paul, Rom. ix. 28.

The learned Dr Bagot, dean of Christchurch, Oxford, in some observations on this place, which he has been so kind as to communicate to me, and which will appear in their proper light when he himself shall give them to the public, renders the word בִּי by accomplishment, and makes it refer to the predictions of Moses; the blessing and the curse which he laid before the people; both conditional, and depending on their future conduct. They had by their disobedience incurred those judgments which were now to be fully executed upon them. His translation is: “The accomplishment determined overflows with justice; for it is accomplished, and that which is determined the Lord God of Hosts doeth in the midst of the land."

24. and 26. — in the way of Egypt] I think there is a designed ambiguity in these words. Senacherib, soon after his return from his Egyptian expedition, which, I imagine, took him up three years, invested Jerusalem. He is represented by the Prophet as lifting up his rod in his march from Egypt, and threatening the people of God, as Pharaoh and the Egyptians had done when they pursued them to the Red Sea. But God in his turn will lift up his rod over the sea, as he did at that time, in the way, or after the manner, of Egypt: and as Senacherib has imitated the Egyptians in his threats, and came full of rage against them from the same quarter; so God will act over again the same part that he had taken formerly in Egypt, and overthrow their enemies in as signal a manner. It was all to be, both the attack and the deliverance, בדרך, or כדרך, as a MS has it in each place, in the way, or after the manner, of Egypt.

25. mine indignation] Indignatio mea, Vulg.; ἡ ὀργή, LXX; ἡ ὀργή ἡ κατὰ σε, MS Pachom.; ἡ ὀργή κατὰ σε, MS I. D. II.: so that זעמי, or הועם, as a MS has it, seems to be the true reading.

26. And like his rod which he lifted up over the sea] The Jewish interpreters suppose here an ellipsis of כ, the particle of similitude, before מטהו, to be supplied from the line above: so that here are two similitudes; one comparing the destruction of the Assyrians to the slaughter of the Midianites at the rock of Oreb; the other, to that of the Egyptians at the Red Sea. Aben Ezra, Kimchi, Salomo b. Melec.

27. — from off your shoulders] I follow here the LXX, who, for מפני שמן, read משכמיכם, αὐτοὶ ἐπὶ ὤμων ὑμῶν; not being able to make any good sense out of the present reading. I will add here the marginal conjectures of Archbishop Secker, who appears, like all others, to have been at a loss for a probable interpretation of the text as it now stands. "ἡ. leg. שכם; forte legend. מבני שמן, vid. cap. v. I. Zech. iv. 14. Et possunt intelligi Judæi uncti Dei; Psal. cv. 15. vel Assyrii משמנים, hic ver. 16. ut dicat Propheta depulsum iri jugum ab his impositum: sed hoc durius. Vel potest legi מפני שמי:" SECKER.

28—32. He is come to Aiath—] A description of the march of Senacherib's army approaching Jerusalem in order to invest it, and of the terror and confusion spreading and increasing through the several places as he advanced ; expressed with great brevity, but finely diversified. The places here mentioned are all in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem ; from Ai northward, to Nob westward of it ; from which last place he might probably have a prospect of Mount Sion. Anathoth was within three Roman miles of Jerusalem ; according to Eusebius, Jerom, and Josephus : Onomast. Loc. Hebr. et Antiq. Jud. x. 7. 3. Nob probably still nearer. And it should seem from this passage of Isaiah, that Sennacherib's army was destroyed near the latter of these places. In coming out of Egypt, he might perhaps join the rest of his army at Ashdod, after the taking of that place, which happened about that time, (see chap. xx.) ; and march from thence near the coast by Lachish and Libnah, which lay in his way, from south to north, and both which he invested, till he came to the north-west of Jerusalem ; crossing over to the north of it, perhaps by Joppa and Lydda, or still more north through the plain of Esdraelon.

29. They have passed the strait—] The strait here mentioned is that of Michmas, a very narrow passage between two sharp hills or rocks, (see 1 Sam. xiv. 4, 5.), where a great army might have been opposed with advantage by a very inferior force. The author of the book of Judith might perhaps mean this pass, at least among others : " Charging them to keep the passages of the hill country ; for by them there was an entrance into Judea, and it was easy to stop them that would come up ; because the passage was strait, for two men at the most : " Judith iv. 7. The enemies having passed the strait without opposition, shews that all thoughts of making a stand in the open country were given up, and that their only resource was in the strength of the city.

Ibid. —their lodging—] The sense seems necessarily to require, that we read למ instead of לנו. These two words are in other places mistaken one for the other. Thus Isa. xliv. 7. for למ read לנו, with the Chaldee : and in the same manner Psal. lxiv. 6. with Syr. and Psal. lxxx. 7. on the authority of LXX and Syr. beside the necessity of the sense.

30. Hearken unto her, O Laish ; answer her, O Anathoth!] I follow in this the Syriac version. The Prophet plainly alludes to the name of the place ; and with a peculiar propriety, if it had its name from its remarkable echo.

“עֲנֵהוּ, responsiones: eadem ratio nominis, quæ in בית עֵנָה, locus echûs; nam hodiernum ejus rudera ostenduntur in valle, scil. in medio montium, ut referunt Robertus in Itiner. p. 70. et Monconnysius, p. 301.” Simonis Onomasticon Vet. Test.

CHAPTER XI.

THE Prophet had described the destruction of the Assyrian army under the image of a mighty forest, consisting of flourishing trees, growing thick together, and of a great height—of Lebanon itself, crowned with lofty cedars; but cut down and laid level with the ground by the axe, wielded by the hand of some powerful and illustrious agent. In opposition to this image he represents the great person, who makes the subject of this chapter, as a slender twig, shooting out from the trunk of an old tree, cut down, lopped to the very root, and decayed; which tender plant, so weak in appearance, should nevertheless become fruitful and prosper. This contrast shews plainly the connexion between this and the preceding chapter; which is moreover expressed by the connecting particle. And we have here a remarkable instance of that method so common with the Prophets, and particularly with Isaiah, of taking occasion, from the mention of some great temporal deliverance, to launch out into the display of the spiritual deliverance of God's people by the Messiah: for that this prophecy relates to the Messiah, we have the express authority of St Paul, Rom. xv. 12. “Conjungit Parasciam hanc, quæ respicit dies futuros Messiaë, cum fiducia, quæ fuit in diebus Ezekiaë:” Kimchi in ver. 1. Thus, in the latter part of Isaiah's prophecies, the subject of the great redemption, and of the glories of Messiah's kingdom, arises out of the restoration of Judah by the deliverance from the captivity of Babylon, and is all along connected and intermixed with it.

4. By the blast of his mouth] For בשבט, by the rod, Houbigant reads בשבת, by the blast of his mouth, from נשב, to blow. The conjecture is ingenious and probable; and seems to be confirmed by the LXX and Chaldee, who render it, by the word of his mouth; which answers much better to the correction than to the present reading. Add to this, that the blast of his mouth, is perfectly parallel to the breath of his lips in the next line.

5. —the cincture—] All the ancient versions, except that of Symmachus, have two different words for girdle in the two hemistichs. It is not probable that Isaiah would have repeated אָזוֹר, when a synonymous word so obvious as דָּגוּר occurred. The tautology seems to have arisen from the mistake of some transcriber. The meaning of this verse is, that a zeal for justice and truth shall make him active and strong in executing the great work which he shall undertake. See note on chap. v. 27.

6—8. Then shall the wolf—] The idea of the renewal of the golden age, as it is called, is much the same in the oriental writers with that of the Greeks and Romans: the wild beasts grow tame; serpents and poisonous herbs become harmless; all is peace and harmony, plenty and happiness:

“Occidet et serpens, et fallax herba veneni Occidet.”

—— “Nec magnos metuent armenta leones.”

“Nec lupus insidias pecori ——.” Virg.

“Nec vespertinus circumgemit ursus ovile,
Nec intumescit alta viperis humus.” Hor.

“Εσαι δη τὰτ' ἀμὰρ, σπηνικὰ νεῶρον ἐν εὐνᾷ Καρχαροδὼν σινεσθαι ἰδὼν λυκὸς ἅκ' ἐβεληται.” Theoc.

I have laid before the reader these common passages from the most elegant of the ancient poets, that he may see how greatly the Prophet on the same subject has the advantage upon the comparison; how much the former fall short of that beauty and elegance, and variety of imagery, with which Isaiah has set forth the very same ideas. The wolf and the leopard not only forbear to destroy the lamb and the kid, but even take their abode and lie down together with them. The calf, and the young lion, and the fatling, not only come together, but are led quietly in the same band, and that by a little child. The heifer and the she-bear not only feed together, but even lodge their young ones, for whom they used to be most jealously fearful, in the same place. All the serpent kind is so perfectly harmless, that the sucking infant, and the newly weaned child, puts his hand on the basilisk's den, and plays upon the hole of the aspic. The lion not only abstains from preying on the weaker animals, but becomes tame and domestic, and feeds on straw like the ox. These are all beautiful circumstances, not one of which has been touched upon by the ancient poets.

The Arabian and Persian poets elegantly apply the same ideas, to shew the effects of justice impartially administered, and firmly supported, by a great and good king:

“Rerum dominus Mahmud, rex potens;

Ad cujus aquam potum veniunt simul agnus et lupo.”

Ferdusi.

“Justitia, a qua mansuetus fit lupo fame astrictus, Esuriens, licet hinnuleum candidum videat.” Ibn. Onein.

Jones, Poes. Asiat. Comment. p. 380.

The application is extremely ingenious and beautiful; but the exquisite imagery of Isaiah is not equalled.

7. Together—] Here a word is omitted in the text, יחדו, together; which ought to be repeated in the second hemistich, being quite necessary to the sense. It is accordingly twice expressed by the LXX, and Syr.

10. The root of Jesse, which standeth—] St John hath taken this expression from Isaiah, Rev. v. 5. and xxii. 16. where Christ hath twice applied it to himself. Seven MSS have עומר, the present participle. “Radix Isæi dicitur jam stare, et aliquantum stetisse, in signum populorum:” Vitranga. Which rightly explains either of the two readings.

11. JEHOVAH] For ארני, thirty-three MSS, and two editions, read יהוה.

11—16. And it shall come to pass in that day—] This part of the chapter contains a prophecy, which certainly remains yet to be accomplished. See Lowth on the place.

13. And the enmity of Judah—] צורים. “Postulat pars posterior versus, ut intelligantur inimicitie Judæ in Ephraïmum:—et potest צורים inimicitiam notare, ut נחמים pœnitentiam, Hos. xi. 8:” SECKER.

15. smite with a drought—] The Chaldee reads החרב; and so perhaps LXX, who have εὐσυνήρητος, the word by which they commonly render it. Vulg. desolabit. The LXX, Vulg. and Chald. read הוריקהו, “shall make it passable,” adding the pronoun, which is necessary.

Here is a plain allusion to the passage of the Red Sea. And the Lord’s shaking his hand over the river with his vehement wind, refers to a particular circumstance of the same miracle; for “he caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land:” Exod. xiv. 21. The tongue; a very apposite and descriptive expression for a bay, such as that of the Red Sea: it is used in the same sense, Josh. xv. 2. 5. xviii. 19. The Latins gave the same name to a narrow strip of land running into the sea: "tenuem producit in æquora linguam:" Lucan, ii. 613.

Herodotus, i. 189. tells a story of his Cyrus, (a very different character from that of the Cyrus of the Scriptures and Xenophon), which may somewhat illustrate this passage; in which it is said, that God would inflict a kind of punishment and judgment on the Euphrates, and render it fordable, by dividing it into seven streams. "Cyrus being impeded in his march to Babylon by the Gyndes, a deep and rapid river which falls into the Tigris, and having lost one of his sacred white horses that attempted to pass it, was so enraged against the river, that he threatened to reduce it, and make it so shallow, that it should be easily fordable even by women, who should not be up to their knees in passing it. Accordingly, he set his whole army to work; and, cutting three hundred and sixty trenches, from both sides of the river, turned the waters into them, and drained them off."

CHAPTER XII.

THIS hymn seems, by its whole tenor, and by many expressions in it, much better calculated for the use of the Christian church, than for the Jewish in any circumstances, or at any time, that can be assigned. The Jews themselves seem to have applied it to the times of Messiah. On the last day of the feast of tabernacles, they fetched water in a golden pitcher from the fountain of Siloah, springing at the foot of Mount Sion without the city: they brought it through the water-gate into the temple, and poured it, mixed with wine, on the sacrifice as it lay upon the altar, with great rejoicing. They seem to have taken up this custom, for it is not ordained in the law of Moses, as an emblem of future blessings, in allusion to this passage of Isaiah, "Ye shall draw waters with joy from the fountains of salvation:" expressions, that can hardly be understood of any benefits afforded by the Mosaic dispensation. Our Saviour applied the ceremony, and the intention of it, to himself, and to the effusion of the Holy Spirit, promised, and to be given, by him. The sense of the Jews in this matter is plainly shewn by the following passage of the Jerusalem Talmud: "Why is it called the place, or house, of drawing?" (for that was the term for this ceremony, or for the place where the water was taken up): "Because from thence they draw the Holy Spirit; as it is written, And ye shall draw water with joy from the fountains of salvation." See Wolf. Curæ Philol. in N. T. on John vii. 37. 39.

1. for, though thou hast been angry—] The Hebrew phrase, to which the LXX and Vulg. have too closely adhered, is exactly the same with that of St Paul, Rom. vi. 17. "But thanks be to God, that ye were the slaves of sin; but have obeyed from the heart;"—that is, "that whereas, or though, ye were the slaves of sin; yet ye have now obeyed from the heart the doctrine, on the model of which ye were formed."

2. —my song—] The pronoun is here necessary; and it is added by LXX, Vulg. Syr. who read ומרת יי; as it is in a MS. Two MSS omit יי: See Houbigant, not. in loc. Another MS has it in one word, ומרתיה. Seven others omit יהוה. See Exod. xv. 2. with Var. Lect. Kennicott.

CHAPTERS XIII. & XIV.

THESE two chapters (striking off the five last verses of the latter, which belong to a quite different subject), contain one entire prophecy, foretelling the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians; delivered probably in the reign of Ahaz, (see Vitringa, i. 380.), about 200 years before the completion of it. The captivity itself of the Jews at Babylon, (which the Prophet does not expressly foretell, but supposes, in the spirit of prophecy, as what was actually to be effected), did not fully take place till about 130 years after the delivery of this prophecy: and the Medes, who are expressly mentioned, chap. xiii. 17. as the principal agents in the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy, by which the Jews were released from that captivity, were at this time an inconsiderable people; having been in a state of anarchy ever since the fall of the great Assyrian empire, of which they had made a part, under Sardanapalus, and did not become a kingdom under Deioces till about the 17th of Hezekiah.

The former part of this prophecy is one of the most beautiful examples, that can be given, of elegance of composition, variety of imagery, and sublimity of sentiment and diction, in the prophetic style; and the latter part consists of an ode of supreme and singular excellence.

The prophecy opens with the command of God to gather together the forces which he had destined to this service, ver. 2, 3. Upon which the Prophet immediately hears the tumultuous noise of the different nations crowding together to his standard: he sees them advancing, prepared to execute the divine wrath, ver. 4, 5. He proceeds to describe the dreadful consequences of this visitation; the consternation which will seize those that are the objects of it; and, transferring unawares the speech from himself to God, ver. 11. sets forth, under a variety of the most striking images, the dreadful destruction of the inhabitants of Babylon which will follow, ver. 11—16.; and the everlasting desolation to which that great city is doomed, ver. 17—22.

The deliverance of Judah from captivity, the immediate consequence of this great revolution, is then set forth, without being much enlarged upon, or greatly amplified; chap. xiv. 1, 2. This introduces, with the greatest ease, and the utmost propriety, the triumphant song on that subject, ver. 4—28: the beauties of which, the various images, scenes, persons introduced, and the elegant transitions from one to another, I shall here endeavour to point out in their order; leaving a few remarks upon particular passages of these two chapters to be given, after these general observations on the whole.

A chorus of Jews is introduced, expressing their surprise and astonishment at the sudden downfall of Babylon, and the great reverse of fortune that had befallen the tyrant, who, like his predecessors, had oppressed his own, and harassed the neighbouring kingdoms. These oppressed kingdoms, or their rulers, are represented under the image of the fir-trees and the cedars of Libanus, frequently used to express any thing in the political or religious world that is supereminently great and majestic: the whole earth shouteth for joy; the cedars of Libanus utter a severe taunt over the fallen tyrant, and boast their security now he is no more.

The scene is immediately changed; and a new set of persons is introduced: The regions of the dead are laid open, and Hades is represented as rousing up the shades of the departed monarchs: they rise from their thrones to meet the king of Babylon at his coming; and insult him on his being reduced to the same low estate of impotence and dissolution with themselves. This is one of the boldest proso-popœias that ever was attempted in poetry; and is executed with astonishing brevity and perspicuity, and with that peculiar force which in a great subject naturally results from both. The image of the state of the dead, or the Infernum Poeticum of the Hebrews, is taken from their custom of burying, those at least of the higher rank, in large sepulchral vaults hewn in the rock. Of this kind of sepulchres there are remains at Jerusalem now extant; and some that are said to be the sepulchres of the kings of Judah: see Maundrell, p. 76. You are to form to yourself an idea of an immense subterraneous vault, a vast gloomy cavern, all round the sides of which there are cells to receive the dead bodies: Here the deceased monarchs lie in a distinguished sort of state, suitable to their former rank, each on his own couch, with his arms beside him, his sword at his head, and the bodies of his chiefs and companions round about him: see Ezek. xxxii. 27. On which place Sir John Chardin's MS note is as follows;—"En Mingrelie ils dorment tous leur épée sous leurs têtes, et leurs autres armes à leur coté; et on les enterre de mesme, leurs armes posées de cette façon." These illustrious shades rise at once from their couches, as from their thrones; and advance to the entrance of the cavern to meet the king of Babylon, and to receive him with insults on his fall.

The Jews now resume the speech: They address the king of Babylon as the morning-star fallen from heaven, as the first in splendour and dignity in the political world fallen from his high state: they introduce him as uttering the most extravagant vaunts of his power and ambitious designs in his former glory: these are strongly contrasted in the close with his present low and abject condition.

Immediately follows a different scene, and a most happy image, to diversify the same subject, to give it a new turn and an additional force. Certain persons are introduced, who light upon the corpse of the king of Babylon, cast out and lying naked on the bare ground, among the common slain, just after the taking of the city; covered with wounds, and so disfigured that it is some time before they know him. They accost him with the severest taunts, and bitterly reproach him with his destructive ambition, and his cruel usage of the conquered; which have deservedly brought upon him this ignominious treatment, so different from that which those of his rank usually meet with, and which shall cover his posterity with disgrace.

To complete the whole, God is introduced declaring the fate of Babylon, the utter extirpation of the royal family, and the total desolation of the city; the deliverance of his people, and the destruction of their enemies; confirming the irreversible decree by the awful sanction of his oath.

I believe it may with truth be affirmed, that there is no poem of its kind extant in any language, in which the subject is so well laid out and so happily conducted, with such a richness of invention, with such variety of images, persons, and distinct actions, with such rapidity and ease of transition, in so small a compass, as in this ode of Isaiah. For beauty of disposition, strength of colouring, greatness of sentiment, brevity, perspicuity, and force of expression, it stands among all the monuments of antiquity unrivalled.

2. Exalt the voice—] The word להם, to them, which is of no use, and rather weakens the sentence, is omitted by an ancient MS and Vulg.

4. —for the battle] The Bodley MS has למלחמה. Cyrus's army was made up of many different nations. Jeremiah calls it "an assembly of great nations from the north country," chap. i. 9. And afterwards mentions the kingdoms of "Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz, (i. e. Armenia, Corduene, Pontus vel Phrygia; Vitring.), with the kings of the Medes;" chap. li. 27, 28. See Xenophon. Cyrop.

8. —and they shall be terrified] I join this verb, וינבהלו, to the preceding verse, with Syr. and Vulg.

Ibid. pangs shall seize them] The LXX, Syr. and Chald. read יאחזון, instead of יאחזון, which does not express the pronoun them, necessary to the sense.

10. Yea the stars of heaven—] The Hebrew poets, to express happiness, prosperity, the instauration and advancement of states, kingdoms, and potentates, make use of images taken from the most striking parts of nature—from the heavenly bodies, from the sun, moon, and stars; which they describe as shining with increased splendour, and never setting; the moon becomes like the meridian sun, and the sun's light is augmented sevenfold; see Isa. xxx. 26.: new heavens and a new earth are created, and a brighter age commences. On the contrary, the overthrow and destruction of kingdoms is represented by opposite images: the stars are obscured, the moon withdraws her light, and the sun shines no more; the earth quakes, and the heavens tremble; and all things seem tending to their original chaos. See Joel ii. 10. iii. 15, 16. Amos viii. 9. Matt. xxiv. 29. and De S. Poes. Hebr. Præl. vi. and ix.

11. I will visit the world] That is, the Babylonish empire: as ἡ οἰκουμένη, for the Roman empire, or for Judea; Luke ii. 1. Acts xi. 28. So, universus orbis Romanus, for the Roman empire; Salvian. lib. v. Minos calls Crete his world: "Creten, quæ meus est orbis;" Ovid. Metamorph. viii. 99.

14. And the remnant—] Here is plainly a defect in this sentence, as it stands in the Hebrew text; the subject of the proposition is lost. What is it, that shall be like a roe chased? The LXX happily supply it: οἱ καταλελειμμένοι, רשׁא, the remnant. A MS here supplies the word יושב, the inhabitant, which makes a tolerably good sense; but I much prefer the reading of the LXX.

Ibid. They shall look—] That is, the forces of the king of Babylon, destitute of their leader, and all his auxiliaries, collected from Asia Minor and other distant countries, shall disperse, and flee to their respective homes.

15. Every one that is overtaken—] That is, none shall escape from the slaughter; neither they who flee singly, dispersed and in confusion; nor they who endeavour to make their retreat in a more regular manner, by forming compact bodies—they shall all be equally cut off by the sword of the enemy. The LXX have understood it in this sense; which they have well expressed:—

“Ὅς γὰρ ἀν’ ἄλφ’ ἠτλήθησεται, καὶ ὅτινες συνηγμένοι εἰσι πρὸς ἀνταρμαχίαν.”

Where for ἠτλήθησεται, MS Pachom. has ἐκκενθησεται; and ὁ r Cod. Marchal. in margin, and MS 1. D. II. ἐκκεντηθησεται: which seems to be right, being properly expressive of the Hebrew.

17. Who shall hold silver of no account] That is, who shall not be induced, by large offers of gold and silver for ransom, to spare the lives of those whom they have subdued in battle: their rage and cruelty will get the better of all such motives. We have many examples in the Iliad and in the Æneid of addresses of the vanquished to the pity and avarice of the vanquishers, to induce them to spare their lives.

“ Est domus alta : jacent penitus defossa talenta
 Cælati argenti : sunt auri pondera facti
 Infectique mihi : non hic victoria Teucrûm
 Vertitur ; aut anima una dabit discrimina tanta.
 Dixerat : Æneas contra cui talia reddit :
 Argenti atque auri memoras quæ multa talenta
 Gnatis parce tuis.” Æn. x. 526.

“ High in my dome are silver talents roll'd,
 With piles of labour'd and unlabour'd gold :
 These, to procure my ransom, I resign ;
 The war depends not on a life like mine :
 One, one poor life can no such difference yield,
 Nor turn the mighty balance of the field.
 Thy talents, (cried the prince), thy treasur'd store,
 Keep for thy sons.” Pitt.

It is remarkable, that Xenophon makes Cyrus open a speech to his army, and in particular to the Medes, who made the principal part of it, with praising them for their disregard of riches. Ἄνδρες Μηδοί, καὶ πάντες οἱ παρόντες, ἐγὼ ὑμᾶς οἶδα σαφῶς, ὅτι ὅτε χρημάτων δεόμενοι σὺν ἐμοὶ ἐξήλθετε:— “Ye Medes, and others who now hear me, I well know that you have not accompanied me in this expedition with a view of acquiring wealth :” Cyrop. lib. v.

18. Their bows shall dash—] Both Herodotus, i. 61. and Xenophon, Anab. iii. mention, that the Persians used large bows, τοῖα μεγάλα : and the latter says particularly, that their bows were three cubits long ; Anab. iv. They were celebrated for their archers : see chap. xxii. 6. Jer. xlix. 35. Probably their neighbours and allies, the Medes, dealt much in the same sort of arms. In Psal. xviii. 35. and Job xx. 24. mention is made of a bow of brass : If the Persian bows were of metal, we may easily conceive, that with a metalline bow of three cubits length, and proportionably strong, the soldiers might dash and slay the young men, the weaker and unresisting part of the inhabitants, (for they are joined with the fruit of the womb and the children), in the general carnage on taking the city.

18. And on the fruit—] A MS reads ועל פרי. And nine MSS (three ancient) and two editions, with LXX, Vulg. Syr. add likewise the conjunction ו to על afterward.

19. And Babylon] The great city of Babylon was at this time rising to its height of glory, while the Prophet Isaiah was repeatedly denouncing its utter destruction. From the first of Hezekiah to the first of Nebuchadnezzar, under whom it was brought to the highest degree of strength and splendour, are about one hundred and twenty years. I will here very briefly mention some particulars of the greatness of the place, and note the several steps by which this remarkable prophecy was at length accomplished in the total ruin of it.

It was, according to the lowest account given of it by ancient historians, a regular square, forty-five miles in compass, enclosed by a wall two hundred feet high, fifty broad; in which there were a hundred gates of brass. Its principal ornaments were the temple of Belus, in the middle of which was a tower of eight stories of building, upon a base of a quarter of a mile square; a most magnificent palace; and the famous hanging gardens; which were an artificial mountain, raised upon arches, and planted with trees of the largest as well as the most beautiful sorts.

Cyrus took the city by diverting the waters of the Euphrates, which ran through the midst of it, and entering the place at night by the dry channel. The river, being never restored afterward to its proper course, overflowed the whole country, and made it little better than a great morass: This, and the great slaughter of the inhabitants, with other bad consequences of the taking of the city, was the first step to the ruin of the place. The Persian monarchs ever regarded it with a jealous eye; they kept it under, and took care to prevent its recovering its former greatness. Darius Hystaspis not long afterward most severely punished it for a revolt, greatly depopulated the place, lowered the walls, and demolished the gates. Xerxes destroyed the temples, and with the rest the great temple of Belus: Herod. iii. 159. Arrian. Exp. Alexandri, lib. vii. The building of Seleucia on the Tigris exhausted Babylon by its neighbourhood, as well as by the immediate loss of inhabitants taken away by Seleucus to people his new city: Strabo, lib. xvi. A king of the Parthians soon after carried away into slavery a great number of the inhabitants, and burnt and destroyed the most beautiful parts of the city: Valesii Excerpt. Diodori, p. 377. Strabo (ibid.) says, that in his time great part of it was a mere desert; that the Persians had partly destroyed it; and that time, and the neglect of the Macedonians, while they were masters of it, had nearly completed its destruction. Jerom (in loc.) says, that in his time it was quite in ruins, and that the walls served only for the inclosure of a park or forest for the king's hunting. Modern travellers, who have endeavoured to find the remains of it, have given but a very unsatisfactory account of their success: what Benjamin of Tudela and Pietro della Valle supposed to have been some of its ruins, Tavernier thinks are the remains of some late Arabian building. Upon the whole, Babylon is so utterly annihilated, that even the place where this wonder of the world stood, cannot now be determined with any certainty. See also note on chap. xliii. 14.

We are astonished at the accounts which ancient historians of the best credit give, of the immense extent, height, and thickness of the walls of Nineveh and Babylon: nor are we less astonished when we are assured, by the concurrent testimony of modern travellers, that no remains, not the least traces, of these prodigious works are now to be found. Our wonder will, I think, be moderated in both respects, if we consider the fabric of these celebrated walls, and the nature of the materials of which they consisted. Buildings in the East have always been, and are to this day, made of earth or clay, mixed or beat up with straw to make the parts cohere, and dried only in the sun. This is their method of making bricks: see note on chap. ix. 9. The walls of the city were built of the earth digged out on the spot, and dried upon the place; by which means both the ditch and the wall were at once formed; the former furnishing materials for the latter. That the walls of Babylon were of this kind is well known; and Berosus expressly says, (apud Joseph. Antiq. x. 11.), that Nebuchadnezzar added three new walls both to the old and new city, partly of brick and bitumen, and partly of brick alone. A wall of this sort must have a great thickness in proportion to its height, otherwise it cannot stand. The thickness of the walls of Babylon is said to have been one-fourth of their height, which seems to have been no more than was absolutely necessary. Maundrell, speaking of the garden walls of Damascus,—“They are,” says he, “of a very singular structure. They are built of great pieces of earth, made in the fashion of brick, and hardened in the sun. In their dimensions they are two yards long each, and somewhat more than one broad, and half a yard thick.” And afterward, speaking of the walls of the houses:—“From this dirty way of building they have this amongst other inconveniences, that upon any violent rain the whole city becomes, by the washing of the houses, as it were a quagmire,” p. 124.; and see note on chap. xxx. 13.

When a wall of this sort comes to be out of repair, and is neglected, it is easy to conceive the necessary consequences; namely, that in no long course of ages it must be totally destroyed by the heavy rains, and at length washed away, and reduced to its original earth.

22. —in their palaces] בארמנותי, a plain mistake, I presume, for בארמנותי. It is so corrected in one MS.

“ Πηλυποδες δ’ ἐν ἐμοὶ θαλάμας, φασκότε μελαιναι, Οικία ποιητονται ακηδεα, χητει λαων.” Homer. Hymn. in Apol. 77.

Of which the following passage of Milton may be taken for a translation, though not so designed:—

“ And in their palaces,
Where luxury late reign’d, sea-monsters whelp’d,
And stabled.” P. L. xi. 750.

CHAPTER XIV.

1. And will yet choose Israel.] That is, will still regard Israel as his chosen people; however he may seem to desert them, by giving them up to their enemies, and scattering them among the nations. Judah is sometimes called Israel; see Ezek. xiii. 16. Mal. i. 1. ii. 11.; but the name of Jacob, and of Israel, used apparently with design in this place, each of which names includes the twelve tribes, and the other circumstances mentioned in this and the next verse, which did not in any complete sense accompany the return from the captivity of Babylon, seem to intimate, that this whole prophecy extends its views beyond that event.

3. —in that day] ביום ההוא. The word ההוא is added in two MSS, and was in the copies from which the LXX and Vulg. translated: ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ, in die illa, (ἢ ἀναπαυσει, MS Pachom. adding ἡ). This is a matter of no great consequence: however, it restores the text to the common form almost constantly used on such occasions; and is one among many instances of a word lost out of the printed copies.

4. —this parable—] Mashal. I take this to be the general name for poetic style among the Hebrews, including every sort of it, as ranging under one or other, or all of the characters, of sententious, figurative, and sublime; which are all contained in the original notion, or in the use and application of the word mashal. Parables or proverbs, such as those of Solomon, are always expressed in short pointed sentences; frequently figurative, being formed on some comparison, generally forcible and authoritative both in the matter and the form. And such in general is the style of the Hebrew poetry. The verb mashal signifies to rule, to exercise authority; to make equal, to compare one thing with another; to utter parables, or acute, weighty, and powerful speeches, in the form and manner of parables, though not properly such. Thus Balaam's first prophecy, Numb. xxiii. 7—10. is called his mashal; though it has hardly any thing figurative in it: but it is beautifully sententious, and, from the very form and manner of it, has great spirit, force, and energy. Thus Job's last speeches, in answer to the three friends, chap. xxvii—xxxi. are called mashals; from no one particular character which discriminates them from the rest of the poem, but from the sublime, the figurative, the sententious manner, which equally prevails through the whole poem, and makes it one of the first and most eminent examples extant of the truly great and beautiful in poetic style.

The LXX in this place render the word by ὁδονομία, a lamentation. They plainly consider the speech here introduced as a piece of poetry; and of that species of poetry which we call the elegiac—either from the subject, it being a poem on the fall and death of the king of Babylon; or from the form of the composition, which is of the longer sort of Hebrew verse, in which the Lamentations of Jeremiah, called by the LXX ὁδονομίας, are written.

11. —thy covering] Twenty-eight MSS (ten ancient) and seven editions, with the LXX and Vulg. read ומכסה, in the singular number.

12. O Lucifer, son of the morning] See note on xiii. 10.

13. the mount of the divine presence—] It appears plainly from Exod. xxv. 22. and xxix. 42, 43. where God appoints the place of meeting with Moses, and promises to meet with him before the ark, to commune with him, and to speak unto him; and to meet the children of Israel at the door of the tabernacle; that the tabernacle, and afterward the temple, and Mount Sion, (or Moriah, which is reckoned a part of Sion), whereon it stood, was called the tabernacle, and the mount of convention, or of appointment; not from the people's assembling there to perform the services of their religion, (which is what our translation expresses by calling it the tabernacle of the congregation), but because God appointed that for the place where he himself would meet with

Moses, and commune with him, and would meet with the people. Therefore, הר מועד, or אהל מועד, means the place appointed by God, where he would present himself; agreeably to which I have rendered it, in this place, the mount of the divine presence.

19. —like the tree abominated] That is, as an object of abomination and detestation; such as the tree is on which a malefactor has been hanged. “It is written,” saith St Paul, Gal. iii. 13. “Cursed is every man that hangeth on a tree;” from Deut. xxi. 23. The Jews therefore held also as accursed and polluted the tree itself on which a malefactor had been executed, or on which he had been hanged after having been put to death by stoning. “Non suspendunt super arbore, quæ radicibus solo adhæreat; sed super ligno eradicato, ut ne sit excisio molesta: nam lignum, super quo fuit aliquis suspensus, cum suspendioso sepelitur; ne maneat illi malum nomen, et dicant homines, Istud est lignum, in quo suspensus est ille, ὁ δεινός. Sic lapis, quo aliquis fuit lapidatus; et gladius, quo fuit occisus is qui est occisus; et sudarium sive mantile, quo fuit aliquis strangulatus; omnia hæc cum iis, qui perierunt, sepeliuntur:” Maimonides, apud Casaub. in Baron. Exercitat. xvi. An. 34. Num. 134. “Cum itaque homo suspensus maximæ esset abominationi—Judæi quoque præ cæteris abominabantur lignum quo fuerat suspensus, ita ut illud quoque terra tegerent, tanquam rem abominabilem. Unde Interpres Chaldæus hæc verba translulit כחט טמיר, sicut virgultum absconditum, sive sepulchrum:” Kalinski, Vaticinia Observationibus illustrata, p. 342. Agreeably to which, Theodoret, Hist. Ecclesiast. i. 17, 18. in his account of the finding of the cross by Helena, says, that the three crosses were buried in the earth near the place of our Lord’s sepulchre.

Ibid. —clothed with the slain.] Thirty-five MSS (ten ancient), and three editions, have the word fully written, לבוש. It is not a noun, but the participle passive: thrown out among the common slain, and covered with the dead bodies. So ver. 11. the earth-worm is said to be his bed-covering.

20. Because thou hast destroyed thy country; thou hast slain thy people.] Xenophon gives an instance of this king’s wanton cruelty in killing the son of Gobrias, on no other provocation than that, in hunting, he struck a boar and a lion, which the king had missed: Cyrop. iv. p. 309.

23. I will plunge it—] I have here very nearly followed the version of the LXX: the reasons for which see in the last note on De Poesi Hebr. Prælect. xxviii.

25. To crush the Assyrian—on my mountains] The Assyrians and Babylonians are the same people: Herod. i. 199, 200. Babylon is reckoned the principal city in Assyria: ibid. 178. Strabo says the same thing; lib. xvi. sub init. The circumstance of this judgment's being to be executed on God's mountains is of importance: it may mean the destruction of Senacherib's army near Jerusalem; and have still a further view: Compare Ezek. xxxix. 4.; and see Lowth on this place of Isaiah.

28. Uzziah had subdued the Philistines, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7.; but taking advantage of the weak reign of Ahaz, they invaded Judea, and took and held in possession some cities in the southern part of the kingdom. On the death of Ahaz, Isaiah delivers this prophecy, threatening them with the destruction that Hezekiah, his son, and great-grandson of Uzziah, should bring upon them: which he effected; for "he smote the Philistines, even unto Gaza, and the borders thereof;" 2 Kings xviii. 8. Uzziah therefore must be meant by the rod that smote them, and by the serpent, from whom should spring the flying fiery serpent; that is, Hezekiah, a much more terrible enemy than even Uzziah had been.

30. —he will slay] The LXX read הַמִּית, in the third person, ἀνελεῖ; and so Chald. The Vulgate remedies the confusion of persons in the present text, by reading both the verbs in the first person.

31. From the north cometh a smoke] That is, a cloud of dust, raised by the march of Hezekiah's army against Philistia; which lay to the south-west from Jerusalem. A great dust raised has, at a distance, the appearance of smoke: "fumantes pulvere campi:" Virg. Æn. xi. 908.

32. —to the ambassadors of the nations] The LXX read γῶν, ἐθνῶν, plural; and so the Chaldee, and one MS. The ambassadors of the neighbouring nations, that send to congratulate Hezekiah on his success; which in his answer he will ascribe to the protection of God. See 2 Chron. xxxii. 23. Or, if גִּי, singular, the reading of the text, be preferred, the ambassadors sent by the Philistines to demand peace.

CHAPTER XV.

THIS and the following chapter, taken together, make one entire prophecy, very improperly divided into two parts. The time of the delivery, and consequently of the completion of it, which was to be in three years from that time, is uncertain; the former not being marked in the prophecy itself, nor the latter recorded in history. But the most probable account is, that it was delivered soon after the foregoing, in the first year of Hezekiah; and that it was accomplished in his fourth year, when Shalmaneser invaded the kingdom of Israel. He might probably march through Moab; and, to secure every thing behind him, possess himself of the whole country, by taking their principal strong places, Ar and Kirhahes.

Jeremiah has happily introduced much of this prophecy of Isaiah into his own larger prophecy against the same people in his xlviiith chapter; denouncing God's judgments on Moab, subsequent to the calamity here foretold, and to be executed by Nebuchadnezzar: by which means several mistakes in the present text of both Prophets may be rectified.

1. Because in the night—] בליל. That both these cities should be taken in the night, is a circumstance somewhat unusual; and not so material as to deserve to be so strongly insisted upon. Vitringa, by his remark on this word, shews that he was dissatisfied with it in its plain and obvious meaning; and is forced to have recourse to a very hard metaphorical interpretation of it: "Noctu, vel nocturno impetu; vel metaphorice, repente, subito, inexpectata destructione: placet posterius." Calmet conjectures, and I think it probable, that the true reading is בליל. There are many mistakes in the Hebrew text arising from the very great similitude of the letters ב and כ, which in many MSS, and even in some printed editions, are hardly distinguishable. Admitting this reading, the translation will be:—

"Because Ar is utterly destroyed, Moab is undone!

Because Kir is utterly destroyed, Moab is undone!"

2. Beth-Dibon:—] This is the name of one place; and the two words are to be joined together, without the ו intervening: so Chald. and Syr.

Ibid. —on every head] For ראש ראשי read ראש. So the parallel place, Jer. xlviii. 37. and so three MSS (one ancient). An ancient MS reads על כל ראש.

Ibid. On every head there is baldness, and every beard is shorn.] Herodotus, ii. 36. speaks of it as a general practice among all men, except the Egyptians, to cut off their hair as a token of mourning. "Cut off thy hair and cast it away," says Jeremiah, vii. 29. "and take up a lamentation."

Τατο νυ και γερας οιον οἷζυροισι βροτοισι

Κειρασθαι τε κομην, βαλσειν τ' απο δακρυ παρειων. Hom. Od. iv. 197.

"The rites of woe

Are all, alas! the living can bestow;

O'er the congenial dust enjoin'd to shear

The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear." Pope.

Ibid. —shorn—] The printed editions, as well as the MSS, are divided on the reading of this word: some have גרועה, others גרעה. The similitude of the letters ד and ר has likewise occasioned many mistakes. In the present case, the sense is pretty much the same with either reading. The text of Jer. xlviii. 37. has the latter.

4. —the very loins—] So the LXX, ἡ σφυς, and Syr. They cry out violently, with their utmost force.

5. The heart of Moab crieth within her.] For לבי, LXX read לבו, or לב; the Chald. לבו. For בריחיה, Syr. reads ברוחה; and so likewise the LXX, rendering it εν αυτη, Edit. Vat. or εν εαυτη, Edit. Alex. and MS 1. D. 11.

Ibid. a young heifer] Heb. a heifer three years old, in full strength; as Horace uses equa trima for a young mare just coming to her prime. Bochart observes from Aristotle, Hist. Animal. lib. iv., that, in this kind of animals alone, the voice of the female is deeper than that of the male; therefore the lowing of the heifer, rather than of the bullock, is chosen by the Prophet as the properer image to express the mourning of Moab. But I must add, that the expression here is very short and obscure, and the opinions of interpreters are various in regard to the meaning. Compare Jer. xlviii. 34.

Ibid. —they shall ascend] For יעלה, LXX and a MS read in the plural יעלו. And from this passage the parallel place in Jer. xlviii. 5. must be corrected; where, for יעלה בכי, which gives no good sense, read בו יעלה.

7. —shall perish] אבדו, or אבדה. This word seems to have been lost out of the text: it is supplied by the parallel place, Jer. xlviii. 36. Syr. expresses it by עבר, præterit; and Chald. by יתבזזון, diripientur.

Ibid. to the valley of willows.] That is, to Babylon.

Hieron. and Jarchi in loc. both referring to Psal. cxxxvii. 2. So likewise Prideaux, Le Clerc, &c.

9. Upon the escaped of Moab and Ariel, and the remnant of Admah.] The LXX for אריה read אריאל. Ar Moab was called also Ariel or Areopolis; Hieron. and Theodoret. See Cellarius. They make ארמה also a proper name. Michaelis thinks, that the Moabites might be called the remnant of Admah, as sprung from Lot and his daughters escaped from the destruction of that and the other cities; or metaphorically, as the Jews are called the princes of Sodom and people of Gomorrah, chap. i. 10. Bibliothek Orient. Part. V. p. 195. The reading of this verse is very doubtful; and the sense, in every way in which it can be read, very obscure.

CHAPTER XVI.

1. I will send forth the son—] Both the reading and meaning of this verse are still more doubtful than those of the preceding. The LXX and Syr. read אשליח, in the first person sing. future tense: the Vulg. and Talmud Babylon. read שלח, sing. imperative. The Syr. for בר reads בר, which is confirmed by one MS, and perhaps by a second. The two first verses describe the distress of Moab on the Assyrian invasion; in which even the son of the prince of the country is represented as forced to flee for his life through the desert, that he may escape to Judea; and the young women are driven forth, like young birds cast out of the nest, and endeavouring to wade through the fords of the river Arnon.

3. Impart counsel—] The Vulg. renders the verbs in the beginning of this verse in the singular number. So the Keri; and so likewise many MSS have it, and some editions, and Syr. The verbs throughout the verse are also in the feminine gender; agreeing with Sion, which I suppose to be understood.

4. —the outcasts of Moab—] Setting the points aside, this is by much the most obvious construction of the Hebrew, as well as most agreeable to the context, and the design of the Prophet. And it is confirmed by the LXX, οἱ ἐκπαῖδες Μωαβ, et Syr.

Ibid. —the oppressor—] Perhaps the Israelites; who in the time of Ahaz invaded Judah, defeated his army, slay-ing 120,000 men; and brought the kingdom to the brink of destruction. Judah, being now in a more prosperous condition, is represented as able to receive and to protect the fugitive Moabites. And with those former times of distress, the security and flourishing state of the kingdom under the government of Hezekiah is contrasted.

6. We have heard the pride of Moab—] For גא, read גאה; two MSS, (one ancient), and Jer. xlviii. 29. Zephaniah, in his prophecy against Moab, the subject of which is the same with that of Jeremiah in his xlviiiith chapter, (see above Note on xv. 1.), enlarges much on the pride of Moab, and their insolent behaviour towards the Jews:—

“I have heard the reproach of Moab;
And the revilings of the sons of Ammon;
Who have reproached my people;
And have magnified themselves against their borders.
Therefore, as I live, saith JEHOVAH God of Hosts, the God of Israel,
Surely Moab shall be as Sodom,
And the sons of Ammon as Gomorrah:
A possession of nettles, and pits of salt,
And a desolation for ever.
The residue of my people shall spoil them,
And the remnant of my nation shall dispossess them:
This shall they have for their pride;
Because they have raised a reproach, and have magnified themselves, Against the people of JEHOVAH God of Hosts.”
Zeph. ii. 8—10.

7. For the men of Kirhares—] A palpable mistake in this place is happily corrected by the parallel text of Jer. xlviii. 31. where, instead of אשישי, foundations, or flagons, we read אנשי, men. In the same place of Jeremiah, and in ver. 36., and here in ver. 11., the name of the city is Kirhares, not Kirhareth.

Ibid. —are put to shame] Here the text of Jeremiah leaves us much at a loss, in a place that seems to be greatly corrupted. The LXX join the two last words of this verse with the beginning of the following. Their rendering is, και αα εντραπηση τα πεδια Εσθλων. For הא they must have read אל; otherwise, how came they by the negative, which seems not to belong to this place? Neither is it easy to make sense of the rest without a small alteration, by reading, instead of εντραπηση τα, εντραπησεται. In a word, the Arabic version taken from the LXX, plainly authorizes this reading of the LXX, and without the negative; and it is fully confirmed by MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. which have both of them ἐντραπήσεται πᾶσα Ἐσβεῶν, without the negative; which makes an excellent sense, and, I think, gives us the true reading of the Hebrew text: אך נכלמו שדמות חשבון. They frequently render the verb נכלם by ἐντραπήσεται. And נכלמו answers perfectly well to אמלל, the parallel word in the next line. The MSS vary in expressing the word נבאים, which gives no tolerable sense in this place: one reads נוכאים, two others בבאים, in another the כ is upon a rasure of two letters; and Vulg. instead of it reads מכותם, plagas suas.

8. Her branches extended themselves—] For נטשו a MS has נגשו; which may perhaps be right: Compare Jer. xlviii. 32. which has in this part of the sentence the synonymous word נגעו.

The meaning of this verse is, that the wines of Sibmah and Heshbon were greatly celebrated, and in high repute with all the great men and princes of that and the neighbouring countries, who indulged themselves even to intemperance in the use of them. So that their vines were so much in request, as not only to be propagated all over the country of Moab, to the sea of Sodom; but to have cions of them sent even beyond the sea into foreign countries.

הלמו, knocked down, demolished; that is, overpowered, intoxicated. The drunkards of Ephraim are called by the Prophet, chap. xxviii. 1. הלומי יין. See Schultens on Prov. xxiii. 25. Gratius, speaking of the Mareotic wine, says of it, “Pharios quæ fregit noxia reges.” Cynege. ver. 312.

9. as with the weeping—] For בבכי a MS reads בכי. In Jer. xlviii. 32. it is מבכי. LXX read בבכי, which I follow.

Ibid. And upon thy vintage the destroyer hath fallen] ועל קצירך הידר נפל. In these few words there are two great mistakes; which the text of Jer. xlviii. 32. rectifies: for קצירך, it has בצירך; and for הידר, שדר: both which corrections the Chaldee in this place confirms. As to the first,

“Hesebon and Elealeh, and

The flowery dale of Sibmah clad with vines,” were never celebrated for their harvests; it was the vintage that suffered by the irruption of the enemy: and so read

LXX and Syr. הִידֹר is the noisy acclamation of the treaders of the grapes: and see what sense this makes in the literal rendering of the Vulgate—super messem tuam “vox calcantium irruit.” The reading in Jer. xlviii. 32. is certainly right, שֹׁדֵר נָפַל, vastator irruit. The shout of the treaders does not come in till the next verse; in which the text of Isaiah in its turn mends that of Jeremiah xlviii. 33. where instead of the first הִידֹר, the shout, we ought undoubtedly to read, as here, הִדֹרֶךְ, the treader.

10. An end is put to the shouting] The LXX read הִשְׁבָּה, passive, and in the third person—rightly; for God is not the speaker in this place. The rendering of LXX is παραυπαται γὰρ κελευσμα; which last word, necessary to the rendering of the Hebrew, and to the sense, is supplied by MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11., having been lost out of the other copies.

12. when Moab shall see—] For נִרְאָה a MS reads רִאָה, and so Syr. and Chald. “Perhaps כִּי נִרְאָה is only a various reading of כִּי נִלְאָה:” SECKER. A very probable conjecture.

14. —and without strength] An ancient MS, with LXX, reads וְלֹא.

CHAPTER XVII.

THIS prophecy by its title should relate only to Damascus; but it full as much concerns, and more largely treats of, the kingdom of Samaria and the Israelites, confederated with Damascus and the Syrians against the kingdom of Judah. It was delivered probably soon after the prophecies of the viith and viiith chapters, in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz; and was fulfilled by Tiglath Pileser’s taking Damascus, and carrying the people captives to Kir, (2 Kings xvi. 9.); and overrunning great part of the kingdom of Israel, and carrying a great number of the Israelites also captives to Assyria; and still more fully in regard to Israel, by the conquest of the kingdom, and the captivity of the people, effected a few years after by Shalmaneser.

1. —a ruinous heap] For מְעִי the LXX read לְעִי, Vulg. כְּעִי. I follow the former.

2. The cities are deserted for ever] What has Aroer on the river Arnon to do with Damascus? and if there be another Aroer on the northern border of the tribe of Gad, (as Reland seems to think there might be), this is not much more to the purpose. Besides, the cities of Aroer, if Aroer itself is a city, makes no good sense. The LXX, for ערער, Aroer, read ער ער, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, for ever, or for a long duration. The Chald. takes the word for a verb from ערה, translating it חרבנו, devastabuntur. The Syr. read ערוער. So that the reading is very doubtful. I follow the LXX, as making the plainest sense.

3. —the pride of Syria—] For שאר Honbigant reads שאה, the pride, answering, as the sentence seems evidently to require, to כבוד, the glory of Israel. The conjecture is so very probable, that I venture to follow it.

5. —as when one gathereth—] That is, the king of Assyria shall sweep away the whole body of the people, as the reaper strippeth off the whole crop of corn; and the remnant shall be no more, in proportion, than the scattered ears left to the gleaner. The valley of Rephaim near Jerusalem* was celebrated for its plentiful harvests; it is here used poetically for any fruitful country.

8. —the altars dedicated to the work of his hands] The construction of the words, and the meaning of the sentence, in this place, are not obvious: all the ancient versions, and most of the modern, have mistaken it. The word מעשה stands in regimine with מזבחות, not in apposition with it: it means the altars of the work of their hands; that is, of the idols; not which are the work of their hands. Thus Kimchi has explained it, and Le Clerc has followed him.

9. —the Hivites and the Amorites—] החורש והאמרי. No one has ever yet been able to make any tolerable sense of these words. The translation of the LXX has happily preserved what seems to be the true reading of the text, as it stood in the copies of their time; though the words are now transposed, either in the text, or in their version: οἱ Ἀμορῖται καὶ οἱ Χιτῖται. It is remarkable, that many commentators, who never thought of admitting the reading of the LXX, yet understand the passage as referring to that very event which their version expresses; so that it is plain, that nothing can be more suitable to the context. My Father saw the necessity of admitting this variation, at a time when it was not usual to make so free with the Hebrew text. See Lowth on the place.

10. —shoots from a foreign soil] The pleasant plants, and shoots from a foreign soil, are allegorical expressions for strange and idolatrous worship; vicious and abominable practices connected with it; reliance on human aid, and on alliances entered into with the neighbouring nations, especially Egypt—to all which the Israelites were greatly addicted; and in their expectations from which they should be grievously disappointed.

12—14. Wo to the multitude—] The three last verses of this chapter seem to have no relation to the foregoing prophecy, to which they are joined. It is a beautiful piece, standing singly and by itself; for neither has it any connexion with what follows: whether it stands in its right place, or not, I cannot say. It is a noble description of the formidable invasion, and of the sudden overthrow, of Sennacherib; which is intimated in the strongest terms, and the most expressive images, exactly suitable to the event.

12, 13. Like the roaring of mighty waters—] Five words, three at the end of the 12th verse, and two at the beginning of the 13th, are omitted in five MSS; that is, in effect, the repetition contained in the first line of verse 13. in this translation is not made. After having observed, that it is equally easy to account for the omission of these words by a transcriber, if they are genuine; or their insertion, if they are not genuine; occasioned by his carrying his eye backwards to the word לִאֲמִים, or forwards to יִשְׁאֹן; I shall leave it to the reader's judgment to determine, whether they are genuine, or not.

14. —and he is no more] For אֵינְנוּ, ten MSS (three ancient) and two editions, and LXX, Syr. Chald. Vulg. have וְאֵינְנוּ. This particle, authenticated by so many good vouchers, restores the sentence to the true poetical form, implying a repetition of some part of the parallel line preceding, thus:

“At the season of evening, behold terror!

Before the morning, and [behold] he is no more!”

See Prelim. Dissert. p. xi. note.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THIS is one of the most obscure prophecies in the whole book of Isaiah. The subject of it, the end and design of it, the people to whom it is addressed, the history to which it belongs, the person who sends the messengers, and the nation to whom the messengers are sent ; are all obscure and doubtful.

1. The winged cymbal] צלצל כנפים. I adopt this as the most probable of the many interpretations that have been given of these words. It is Bochart's: see Phaleg. iv. 2. The Egyptian Sistrum is expressed by a periphrasis; the Hebrews had no name for it in their language, not having in use the instrument itself. The cymbal they had; an instrument in its use and sound not much unlike to the sistrum; and to distinguish from it the sistrum, they called it the cymbal with wings. The cymbal was a round hollow piece of metal, which being struck against another, gave a ringing sound: the sistrum was a round instrument, consisting of a broad rim of metal, through which from side to side ran several loose laminae, or small rods, of metal, which, being shaken, gave a like sound: These projecting on each side, had somewhat of the appearance of wings; or might be very properly expressed by the same word which the Hebrews used for wings, or for the extremity, or a part of any thing projecting. The sistrum is given in a medal of Adrian, as the proper attribute of Egypt. See Addison on Medals, Series iii. No. 4. where the figure of it may be seen.

In opposition to other interpretations of these words which have prevailed, it may be briefly observed, that צלצל is never used to signify shadow, nor כנף applied to the sails of ships.

If therefore the words are rightly interpreted the winged cymbal, meaning the sistrum, Egypt must be the country to which the prophecy is addressed: And upon this hypothesis the version and explanation must proceed. I further suppose, that the prophecy was delivered before Senacherib's return from his Egyptian expedition, which took up three years; and that it was designed to give to the Jews, and perhaps likewise to the Egyptians, an intimation of God's counsels in regard to the destruction of their great and powerful enemy.

Ibid. Which borders on the rivers of Cush] What are the rivers of Cush, whether the eastern branches of the lower Nile, the boundary of Egypt towards Arabia, or the parts of the upper Nile towards Ethiopia, it is not easy to determine. The word מעבר signifies either on this side or on the further side: I have made use of the same kind of ambiguous expression in the translation.

2. —in vessels of papyrus] This circumstance agrees perfectly well with Egypt. It is well known, that the Egyptians commonly used on the Nile a light sort of ships, or boats, made of the reed papyrus. “Ex ipso quidem papyro navigia texunt :” Plin. xiii. 11.

“Conseritur bibula Memphitis cymba papyro.” Luc. iv. 136.

Ibid. Go, ye swift messengers—] To this nation before mentioned, who, by the Nile, and by their numerous canals, have the means of spreading the report, in the most expeditious manner, through the whole country; go, ye swift messengers, and carry this notice of God’s designs in regard to them. By the swift messengers are meant, not any particular persons specially appointed to this office, but any the usual conveyers of news whatsoever, travellers, merchants, and the like, the instruments and agents of common fame: these are ordered to publish this declaration made by the Prophet throughout Egypt, and to all the world; and to excite their attention to the promised visible interposition of God.

Ibid. —stretched out in length—] Egypt, that is, the fruitful part of it, exclusive of the deserts on each side, is one long vale, through the middle of which runs the Nile, bounded on each side to the east and west by a chain of mountains, seven hundred and fifty miles in length; in breadth, from one to two or three days’ journey: even at the widest part of the Delta, from Pelusium to Alexandria, not above two hundred and fifty miles broad. Egmont and Hayman, and Pococke’s Travels.

Ibid. —smoothed—] Either relating to the practice of the Egyptian priests, who made their bodies smooth by shaving off their hair; see Herod. ii. 37.; or rather to the country’s being made smooth, perfectly plain and level, by the overflowing of the Nile.

Ibid. —meted out by line—] It is generally referred to the frequent necessity of having recourse to mensuration in Egypt, in order to determine the boundaries after the inundations of the Nile; to which even the origin of the science of geometry is by some ascribed. Strabo, lib. xvii. sub init.

Ibid. —trodden down—] Supposed to allude to a peculiar method of tillage in use among the Egyptians. Both Herodotus (lib. ii.) and Diodorus (lib. i.) say, that when the Nile had retired within its banks, and the ground became somewhat dry, they sowed their land, and then sent in their cattle (their hogs, says the former) to tread in the seed; and without any further care expected the harvest.

Ibid. —the rivers have nourished] The word בּוֹאוֹ is generally taken to be an irregular form for בּוֹזוּ, have spoiled, as an ancient MS has it in this place; and so most of the versions, both ancient and modern, understand it. On which Schultens, Gram. Heb. p. 491. has the following remark: “Ne minimam quidem speciem veri habet בּוֹאוֹ, Esai. xviii. 2. elatum pro בּוֹזוּ, diripiunt. Hæc esset anomalia, cui nihil simile in toto linguæ ambitu. In talibus nil finire, vel fateri ex mera agi conjectura, tutius justiusque. Radicem בּוֹא olim extare potuisse, quis neget? Si cognatum quid sectandum erat, ad בּוֹה, contempsit, potius decurrendum fuisset: ut בּוֹאוֹ pro בּוֹזוּ sit enuntiatum, vel בּוֹזוּ. Digna phrasis, flumina contemnunt terram, i. e. inundant.” “בּוֹא, Arab. extulit se superbius, item subjecit sibi: unde præt. pl. בּוֹאוּ subjecerunt sibi, i. e. inundarunt.” Simonis Lexic. Heb.

A learned friend has suggested to me another explanation of the word. בּוֹא, Syr. and בּוֹא, Chald. signifies uber, mamma; agreeably to which the verb might signify to nourish. This would perfectly well suit with the Nile: whereas nothing can be more discordant than the idea of spoiling and plundering; for to the inundation of the Nile Egypt owed every thing—the fertility of the soil, and the very soil itself. Besides, the overflowing of the Nile came on by gentle degrees, covering without laying waste the country. “Mira æque natura fluminis, quod cum cæteri omnes abluant terras et eviscerent, Nilus tanto cæteris major adeo nihil exedit, nec abradit, ut contra adjiciat vires; minimumque in eo sit, quod solum temperet. Illato enim limo arenas saturat ac jungit: debetque illi Ægyptus non tantum fertilitatem terrarum, sed ipsas:” Seneca, Nat. Quæst. iv. 2. I take the liberty, therefore, which Schultens seems to think allowable in this place, of hazarding a conjectural interpretation.

3. When the standard is lifted up—] I take God to be the agent in this verse; and that by the standard and the trumpet are meant the meteors, the thunder, the lightning, the storm, earthquake, and tempest, by which Senacherib’s army shall be destroyed, or by which at least the destruction of it shall be accompanied; as it is described in chap. xxix. 6. and xxx. 30, 31. and x. 16, 17. See also Psal. lxxvi. and the title of it according to LXX, Vulg. and Æthiop. They are called, by a bold metaphor, the standard lifted up, and the trumpet sounded. The latter is used by Homer, I think, with great force, in his introduction to the battle of the gods; though I find it has disgusted some of the minor critics:

Βραχὺ δ' εὐρεῖα χθών,
 Ἀμφὶ δὲ σάλπιγγ' ἔσεν μέγας ἔρνος.

Il. xxi. 388.

“Heaven in loud thunders bids the trumpet sound,
 And wide beneath them groans the rending ground.” Pope.

4. For thus hath JEHOVAH said unto me—] The subject of the remaining part of the chapter is, that God would comfort and support his own people, though threatened with immediate destruction by the Assyrians: that Senacherib’s great designs and mighty efforts against them should be frustrated, and that his vast expectations should be rendered abortive, when he thought them mature, and just ready to be crowned with success: that the chief part of his army should be made a prey for the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, (for this is the meaning of the allegory continued through the 5th and 6th verses); and that Egypt, being delivered from his oppression, and avenged by the hand of God of the wrongs which she had suffered, should return thanks for the wonderful deliverance, both of herself and of the Jews, from this most powerful adversary.

Ibid. Like the clear heat—] The same images are employed by an Arabian poet:—

“Solis more fervens, dum frigus; quumque ardet Sirius, tum vero frigus ipse et umbra.”

Which is illustrated in the note by a like passage from another Arabian poet:—

“Calor est hyeme, refrigerium æstate.”

Excerpta ex Hamasa; published by Schultens, at the end of Erpenius’s Arabic Grammar, p. 425.

Ibid. —after rain—] “אור hic significat pluviam; juxta illud, sparget nubes pluviam suam, Job xxxvii. 11.” Kimchi. In which place of Job the Chaldee paraphrast does indeed explain אור by מטריה: and so again ver. 21.; and chap. xxxvi. 30. This meaning of the word seems to make the best sense in this place; it is to be wished that it were better supported.

Ibid. —in the day of harvest.] For בהם, in the heat, five MSS, (three ancient), LXX, Syr. and Vulg. read ביום, in the day. The mistake seems to have risen from כהם in the line above.

5. —the blossom—] Heb. her blossom; נצה: that is, the blossom of the vine, גפן, understood, which is of the common gender. See Gen. xl. 10. Note, that, by the defective punctuation of this word, many interpreters, and our translators among the rest, have been led into a grievous mistake, (for how can the swelling grape become a blossom?) taking the word נצה for the predicate; whereas it is the subject of the proposition, or the nominative case to the verb.

7. —a gift—] The Egyptians were in alliance with the kingdom of Judah, and were fellow-sufferers with the Jews under the invasion of their common enemy Senacherib; and so were very nearly interested in the great and miraculous deliverance of that kingdom by the destruction of the Assyrian army. Upon which wonderful event it is said, 2 Chron. xxxii. 23. that “many brought gifts unto JEHOVAH to Jerusalem, and presents to Hezekiah king of Judah; so that he was magnified of all nations from thenceforth.” It is not to be doubted, that among these the Egyptians distinguished themselves in their acknowledgments on this occasion.

Ibid. —from a people—] The LXX and Vulg. read מעם; which is confirmed by the repetition of it in the next line. The difference is of importance; for, if this be the true reading, the prediction of the admission of Egypt into the true church of God is not so explicit as it might otherwise seem to be. However, that event is clearly foretold at the end of the next chapter.

CHAPTER XIX.

NOT many years after the destruction of Senacherib's army before Jerusalem, by which the Egyptians were freed from the yoke with which they were threatened by so powerful an enemy, who had carried on a successful war of three years' continuance against them, the affairs of Egypt were again thrown into confusion by intestine broils among themselves; which ended in a perfect anarchy, that lasted some few years. This was followed by an aristocracy, or rather tyranny, of twelve princes, who divided the country between them; and at last by the sole dominion of Psammi-tichus, which he held for fifty-four years. Not long after that, followed the invasion and conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar; and then by the Persians under Cambyses, the son of Cyrus. The yoke of the Persians was so grievous, that the conquest of the Persians by Alexander may well be considered as a deliverance to Egypt; especially as he and his successors greatly favoured the people, and improved the country. To all these events the Prophet seems to have had a view in this chapter; and in particular, from ver. 18. the prophecy of the propagation of the true religion in Egypt seems to point to the flourishing state of Judaism in that country, in consequence of the great favour shewn to the Jews by the Ptolemies. Alexander himself settled a great many Jews in his new city Alexandria, granting them privileges equal to those of the Macedonians. The first Ptolemy, called Soter, carried great numbers of them thither, and gave them such encouragement, that still more of them were collected there from different parts; so that Philo reckons, that in his time there were a million of Jews in that country. These worshipped the God of their fathers; and their example and influence must have had a great effect in spreading the knowledge and worship of the true God through the whole country. See Bishop Newton on the Prophecies, Dissert. xii.

4. —cruel lords] Nebuchadnezzar in the first place, and afterwards the whole succession of Persian kings, who in general were hard masters, and grievously oppressed the country. Note, that for קשה, a MS reads קשים, agreeable to which is the rendering of LXX, Syr. and Vulg.

6. —shall become putrid] הִאֲזִיחוּ. This sense of the word, which Simonis gives in his Lexicon from the meaning of it in the Arabic, suits the place much better than any other interpretation hitherto given. And that the word in Hebrew had some such signification is probable from 2 Chron. xxix. 19. where the Vulgate renders it by polluit, and the Targum by profanavit and abominabile fecit, which the context in that place seems plainly to require. The form of the verb here is very irregular; and the rabbins and grammarians seem to give no probable account of it.

8. And the fishers—] There was great plenty of fish in Egypt: see Numb. xi. 5. “The Nile,” says Diodorus, lib. 1. “abounds with incredible numbers of all sorts of fish.” And much more the lakes; Egmont, Pococke, &c.

10. —her stores—] שתתיה, αποθηκαι, Aquila.

Ibid. all that make a gain of pools for fish] This obscure line is rendered by different interpreters in very different manners. Kimchi explains אנמי, as if it were the same with ענמי, from Job xxx. 25. In which he is followed by some of the rabbins, and supported by LXX: and שכר, which I translate gain, and which some take for nets, or inclosures, the LXX render by ζυθον, strong drink, or beer, which it is well known was much used in Egypt: and so likewise the Syriac, retaining the Hebrew word שכר. I submit these very different interpretations to the reader's judgment. The version of the LXX is as follows:—Και παντες οι ποιουντες τον ζυθον λυπηθησονται, και τας ψυχας πονεσασαι: “And all they that make barley-wine shall mourn, and be grieved in soul.”

11. —have counselled a brutish counsel] The sentence, as it now stands in the Hebrew, is imperfect; it wants the verb. Archbishop Secker conjectures, that the words יעצי פרעה should be transposed; which would in some degree remove the difficulty. But it is to be observed, that the translator of the Vulgate seems to have found in his copy the verb יעצי added after פרעה: “Sapientes consilarii Pharaonis dederunt consilium insipiens.” This is probably the true reading; it is perfectly agreeable to the Hebrew idiom, makes the construction of the sentence clear, and renders the transposition of the above words unnecessary.

12. —let them come—] Here too a word seems to have been left out of the text. After והכמין, two MSS (one ancient) add יבאו, let them come. Which, if we consider the form and the construction of the sentence, has very much the appearance of being genuine; otherwise the connective conjunction, at the beginning of the next member, is not only superfluous but embarrassing. See also the version of LXX, in which the same deficiency is manifest.

Ibid. —and let them declare—] “For ידעו, let them know, perhaps we ought to read יודיעו, let them make known.” SECKER. The LXX and Vulg. favour this reading; εἰπατωσαν, indigent.

13. They have caused—] The text has והחעו, and they have caused to err. Fifty MSS, thirteen editions, Vulg. and Chald. omit the ו.

Ibid. —pillars—] פנת, to be pointed as plural without doubt. So Grotius, and so Chald.

14. —in the midst of them—] “בקרבים, LXX, quod forte rectius:” SECKER. So likewise Chald.

16. —the Egyptians shall be—] יהיו, plural, MS Bodl. LXX, and Chald. This is not proposed as an emendation, for either form is proper.

17. And the land of Judah—] The threatening hand of God will be held out and shaken over Egypt, from the side of Judea; through which the Assyrians will march to invade it. Five MSS and two editions have לחגה.

18. —the City of the Sun] עיר ההרם. This passage is attended with much difficulty and obscurity. First, In regard to the true reading. It is well known, that Onias applied it to his own views, either to procure from the king of Egypt permission to build his temple in the Hieropolitan Nome, or to gain credit and authority to it when built; from the notion which he industriously propagated, that Isaiah had in this place prophesied of the building of such a temple. He pretended, that the very place where it should be built was expressly named by the Prophet עיר ההרם, the city of the sun. This possibly may have been the original reading. The present text has עיר ההרם, the city of destruction: which some suppose to have been introduced into the text by the Jews of Palestine afterwards; to express their detestation of the place, being much offended with this schismatical temple in Egypt. Some think the latter to have been the true reading, and that the Prophet himself gave this turn to the name out of contempt, and to intimate the demolition of this Hieropolitan temple; which in effect was destroyed by Vespasian's orders after that of Jerusalem. “Videtur Propheta consulto scripsisse הרם pro הרם, ut alibi scribitur בית און pro בית אל, איש בעל pro איש בשת, &c. Vide Lowth in loc. :” SECKER. But on supposition that עיר ההרם is the true reading, others understand it differently. The word הרם in Arabic signifies a lion: and Conrad Ikenius has written a dissertation (Dissert. Philol. Theol. xvi.) to prove that the place here mentioned is not Heliopolis, as it is commonly supposed to be, but Leontopolis in the Heliopolitan Nome; as it is indeed called in the letter, whether real or pretended, of Onias to Ptolemy, which Josephus has inserted in his Jewish Antiquities, lib. xiii. cap. 3. And I find, that several persons of great learning and judgment think that Ikenius has proved the point beyond contradiction. See Christian Muller, Saturæ Observ.

Philolog.; Michaelis Bibliothek Oriental, Part V. p. 171. But after all I believe, that neither Onias, nor Heliopolis, nor Leontopolis, has any thing to do with this subject. The application of this place of Isaiah to Onias's purpose seems to have been a mere invention; and, in consequence of it, there may perhaps have been some unfair management to accommodate the text to that purpose; which has been carried even further than the Hebrew text; for the Greek version has here been either translated from a corrupted text, or wilfully mistranslated or corrupted to serve the same cause. The place is there called πολις Ασεδης, the city of righteousness; a name apparently contrived by Onias's party to give credit to their temple, which was to rival that of Jerusalem. Upon the whole, the true reading of the Hebrew text in this place is very uncertain; nine MSS and seven editions have חרם, so likewise Sym. Vulg. Arab. LXX, Compl. On the other hand, Aquila, Theodot. and Syr. read הרם: the Chaldee paraphrase takes in both readings.

The reading of the text being so uncertain, no one can pretend to determine what the city was that is here mentioned by name; much less to determine, what the four other cities were which the Prophet does not name. I take the whole passage, from the 18th verse to the end of the chapter, to contain a general intimation of the future propagation of the knowledge of the true God in Egypt and Syria, under the successors of Alexander; and, in consequence of this propagation, of the early reception of the gospel in the same countries, when it should be published to the world. See further on this subject, Prideaux's Connect. an. 149.; Dr Owen's Inquiry into the Present State of the LXX Version, p. 41., and Bryant's Observations on Ancient History, p. 124.

CHAPTER XX.

THARTHAN besieged Ashdod or Azotus, which probably belonged at this time to Hezekiah's dominions: see 2 Kings xviii. 8. The people expected to be relieved by the Cushites of Arabia, and by the Egyptians. Isaiah was ordered to go uncovered, that is, without his upper garment, the rough mantle commonly worn by the Prophets, (see Zech. xiii. 4.), probably three days, to shew that within three years the town should be taken, after the defeat of the Cushites and Egyptians by the king of Assyria; which event should make their case desperate, and induce them to surrender. Azotus was a strong place: it afterwards held out twenty-nine years against Psammitichus, king of Egypt, Herod. ii. 157. Tharthan was one of Senacherib's generals, 2 Kings xviii. 17., and Tirhakah king of the Cushites was in alliance with the king of Egypt against Senacherib. These circumstances make it probable, that by Sargon is meant Senacherib. It might be one of the seven names by which Jerom, on this place, says he was called. He is called Sacherdonus and Sacherdan in the book of Tobit. The taking of Azotus must have happened before Senacherib's attempt on Jerusalem; when he boasted of his late conquests, chap. xxxvii. 25. And the warning of the Prophet had a principal respect to the Jews also, who were too much inclined to depend upon the assistance of Egypt. As to the rest, history and chronology affording us no light, it may be impossible to clear either this, or any other hypothesis, (which takes Sargon to be Shalmaneser, or Asarhaddon, &c.), from all difficulties.

It is not probable that the Prophet walked uncovered and barefoot for three years: his appearing in that manner was a sign, that within three years the Egyptians and Cushites should be in the same condition, being conquered and made captives by the king of Assyria. The time was denoted, as well as the event; but his appearing in that manner for three whole years, could give no premonition of the time at all. It is probable, therefore, that the Prophet was ordered to walk so for three days, to denote the accomplishment of the event in three years; a day for a year, according to the prophetic rule: Numb. xiv. 34. Ezek. iv. 6. The words שלש ימים, three days, may possibly have been lost out of the text, at the end of the second verse, after יהי, barefoot; or after the same word in the third verse: where, in the Alexandrine and Vatican copies of LXX, and in MSS Pachom. and I. D. 11. the words τρια ετη are twice expressed. Perhaps, instead of שלש ימים, the Greek translator might read שלש שנים, by his own mistake, or by that of his copy, after יהי in the third verse, for which stands the first τρια ετη in the Alexandrine and Vatican LXX, and in the two MSS above-mentioned.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE ten first verses of this chapter contain a prediction of the taking of Babylon by the Medes and Persians. It is a passage singular in its kind, for its brevity and force; for the variety and rapidity of the movements; and for the strength and energy of colouring with which the action and event is painted. It opens with the Prophet's seeing at a distance the dreadful storm that is gathering, and ready to burst upon Babylon: The event is intimated in general terms; and God's orders are issued to the Persians and Medes to set forth upon the expedition which he has given them in charge. Upon this the Prophet enters into the midst of the action; and, in the person of Babylon, expresses in the strongest terms the astonishment and horror that seizes her on the sudden surprise of the city, at the very season dedicated to pleasure and festivity, ver. 3, 4.: then in his own person describes the situation of things there; the security of the Babylonians, and in the midst of their feasting the sudden alarm of war, ver. 5. The event is then declared in a very singular manner. God orders the Prophet to set a watchman to look out, and to report what he sees: he sees two companies marching onward, representing by their appearance the two nations that were to execute God's orders, who declare, that Babylon is fallen, ver. 6—9.

But what is this to the Prophet, and to the Jews, the object of his ministry? The application, the end, and design of the prophecy, is admirably given in a short expressive address to the Jews, partly in the person of God, partly in that of the Prophet: "O my threshing!"—"O my people, whom for your punishment I shall make subject to the Babylonians, to try and to prove you, and to separate the chaff from the corn, the bad from the good among you; hear this for your consolation: Your punishment, your slavery and oppression, will have an end in the destruction of your oppressors."

1. —the Desert of the sea] This plainly means Babylon, which is the subject of the prophecy. The country about Babylon, and especially below it towards the sea, was a great flat morass, often overflowed by the Euphrates and Tigris. It became habitable by being drained by the many canals that were made in it.

Herodotus, i. 184. says, that “Semiramis confined the Euphrates within its channel, by raising great dams against it; for before it overflowed the whole country like a sea.” And Abydenus, (quoting Megasthenes, apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. ix. 41.), speaking of the building of Babylon by Nebuchadonosor, “It is reported, that all this part was covered with water, and was called the sea; and that Belus drew off the waters, conveying them into proper receptacles, and surrounded Babylon with a wall.” When the Euphrates was turned out of its channel by Cyrus, it was suffered still to drown the neighbouring country. The Persian government, which did not favour the place, taking no care to remedy this inconvenience, it became in time a great barren morassy desert; which event the title of the prophecy may perhaps intimate. Such it was originally; such it became after the taking of the city by Cyrus; and such it continues to this day.

Ibid. Like the southern tempests—] The most vehement storms to which Judea was subject, came from the great desert country to the south of it. “Out of the south cometh the whirlwind;” Job xxxvii. 9. “And there came a great wind from the wilderness, and smote the four corners of the house;” Ibid. i. 19. For the situation of Idumea, the country, as I suppose, of Job, (see Lam. iv. 21. compared with Job i. 1.), was the same in this respect with that of Judea.

“And JEHOVAH shall appear over them,
And his arrow shall go forth as the lightning;
And the Lord JEHOVAH shall sound the trumpet;
And shall march in the whirlwinds of the south.” Zech. ix. 14.

2. The plunderer is plundered, and the destroyer is destroyed.] הַבּוֹגֵד בּוֹגֵד וְהַשּׁוֹדֵד שׁוֹדֵד. The MSS vary in expressing or omitting the ו in these four words. Ten MSS are without the ו in the second word, and eight MSS are without the ו in the fourth word; which justifies Symmachus, who has rendered them passively: ὁ ἀθετῶν ἀθετῆται, καὶ ὁ ταρακτωρὶζὼν ταρακτωρεῖ. He read שׁוֹדֵד, בּוֹגֵד. Cocceius (Lexicon in voce) observes, that the Chaldee very often renders the verb בּוֹגֵד by בָּזַז, spoliavit; and in this place, and in xxxiii. 1. by the equivalent word אָנַס; and in chap. xxiv. 16. both by אָנַס and בָּזַז; and Syr. in this place renders it by טָלַם, oppressit.

Ibid. —her vexations—] Heb. her sighing; that is, the sigling caused by her. So Kimchi on the place: "Innuit illos, qui gemebant ob timorem ejus; quia suffixa nominum referuntur ad agentem et ad patientem." "Omnes qui gemebant a facie regis Babylonis, requiescere feci eos;" Chald. And so likewise Ephraem Syr. in loc. edit. Assemani: "Gemitum ejus: dolorem scilicet et lachrymas, quas Chaldæi reliquis per orbem gentibus ciere pergunt."

5. The table is prepared—] In Heb. the verbs are in the infinitive mode absolute; as in Ezek. i. 14. "And the animals ran and returned, רצוּ וּשׁוּב, like the appearance of lightning:" just as the Latins say currere et reverti, for currebant et revertebantur. See chap. xxxii. 2. and the note there.

7. And he saw a chariot with two riders; a rider on an ass, a rider on a camel.] This passage is extremely obscure, from the ambiguity of the term רכב, which is used three times; and which signifies a chariot, or any other vehicle, or the rider in it; or a rider on a horse, or any other animal; or a company of chariots or riders. The Prophet may possibly mean a cavalry in two parts, with two sorts of riders—riders on asses or mules, and riders on camels; or led on by two riders, one on an ass, and one on a camel. However, so far it is pretty clear, that Darius and Cyrus, the Medes and the Persians, are intended to be distinguished by the two riders, or the two sorts of cattle. It appears from Herodotus, i. 80. that the baggage of Cyrus's army was carried on camels. In his engagement with Cræsus, he took off the baggage from the camels, and mounted his horsemen upon them: the enemy's horses, offended with the smell of the camels, turned back and fled.

8. he that looked out on the watch—] The present reading ארִיָּה, a lion, is so unintelligible, and the mistake so obvious, that I make no doubt that the true reading is הִרְאֶה, as the Syriac translator manifestly found it in his copy, who renders it by דּוֹקָא, speculator.

9. —a man, one of the two riders] So the Syriac understands it; and Ephraem Syr.

10. O my threshing—] "O thou, the object upon which I shall exercise the severity of my discipline; that shalt lie under my afflicting hand, like corn spread upon the floor to be threshed out and winnowed, to separate the chaff from the wheat!" The image of threshing is frequently used by the Hebrew poets, with great elegance and force, to express the punishment of the wicked and the trial of the good, or the utter dispersion and destruction of God's enemies. Of the different ways of threshing in use among the Hebrews, and the manner of performing them, see note on chap. xxviii. 27.

Our translators have taken the liberty of using the word threshing in a passive sense, to express the object or matter that is threshed: in which I have followed them, not being able to express it more properly, without departing too much from the form and letter of the original. Son of my floor, Heb. It is an idiom of the Hebrew language to call the effect, the object, the adjunct, any thing that belongs in almost any way to another, the son of it. "O my threshing—" The Prophet abruptly breaks off the speech of God, and, instead of continuing it in the form in which he had begun, and in the person of God, "This I declare unto you by my Prophet;" he changes the form of address, and adds, in his own person, "This I declare unto you from God."

11, 12. The oracle concerning Dumah.] "Pro דומה Codex R. Meiri habet אדום; et sic LXX. Vid. Kimchi ad h. l.;" Biblia Michaelis, Halæ 1720, not. ad l.

This prophecy, from the uncertainty of the occasion on which it was uttered, and from the brevity of the expression, is extremely obscure. The Edomites as well as Jews were subdued by the Babylonians. They inquire of the Prophet, how long their subjection is to last? He intimates, that the Jews should be delivered from their captivity; not so the Edomites. Thus far the interpretation seems to carry with it some degree of probability. What the meaning of the last line may be, I cannot pretend to divine. In this difficulty the Hebrew MSS give no assistance. The MSS of LXX, and the fragments of the other Greek versions, give some variations, but no light. This being the case, I thought it best to give an exact literal translation of the whole two verses; which may serve to enable the English reader to judge in some measure of the foundation of the various interpretations that have been given of them.

13. The oracle concerning Arabia.] This title is of doubtful authority. In the first place, because it is not in many of the MSS of the LXX; it is in MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. only, as far as I can find with certainty: secondly, from the singularity of the phraseology; for משה is generally prefixed to its object without a preposition, as משה בבל; and never but in this place with the preposition ב. Besides, as the word בערב occurs at the very beginning of the prophecy itself, the first word but one, it is much to be suspected that some one, taking it for a proper name and the object of the prophecy, might note it as such by the words משא בערב written in the margin, from whence they might easily get into the text. The LXX did not take it for a proper name, but render it ἔσπερας; and so Chald. whom I follow: for, otherwise, the forest in Arabia is so indeterminate and vague a description, that in effect it means nothing at all. This observation might have been of good use in clearing up the foregoing very obscure prophecy, if any light had arisen from joining the two together by removing the separating title; but I see no connexion between them.

This prophecy was to have been fulfilled within a year of the time of its delivery, see ver. 16.; and it was probably delivered about the same time with the rest in this part of the book, that is, soon before or after the 14th of Hezekiah, the year of Senacherib's invasion. In his first march into Judea, or in his return from the Egyptian expedition, he might perhaps overrun these several clans of Arabians: their distress on some such occasion is the subject of this prophecy.

14. —the southern country] Θαιμαυ, LXX; Austri, Vulg. They read תימן, which seems to be right; for probably the inhabitants of Tema might be involved in the same calamity with their brethren and neighbours of Kedar, and not in a condition to give them assistance, and to relieve them, in their flight before the enemy, with bread and water. To bring forth bread and water is an instance of common humanity in such cases of distress; especially in these desert countries, in which the common necessities of life, more particularly water, are not easily to be met with or procured. Moses forbids the Ammonite and Moabite to be admitted into the congregation of the Lord to the tenth generation: one reason which he gives for this reprobation is, their omission of the common offices of humanity towards the Israelites; "because they met them not with bread and water in the way, when they came forth out of Egypt;" Dent. xxiii. 4.

17. —the mighty bowmen] Sagittariorum fortium, Vulg. transposing the two words, and reading גבורי קשה; which seems to be right.

Ibid. For JEHOVAH hath spoken it.] The prophetic Carmina of Marcius, foretelling the battle of Cannæ, Liv. xxv. 12.

conclude with the same kind of solemn form :—" Nam mihi ita Jupiter fatus est." Observe, that the word נאם, (to pronounce, to declare), is the solemn word appropriated to the delivering of prophecies :—" Behold, I am against the prophets, saith (נאם) יְהוָה, who use their tongues, וינאמו נאם, and solemnly pronounce, He hath pronounced it;" Jer. xxiii. 31.

CHAPTER XXII.

THIS prophecy, ending with the 14th verse of this chapter, is entitled, "The Oracle concerning the Valley of Vision," by which is meant Jerusalem, because, says Sal. b. Melec, it was the place of prophecy. Jerusalem, according to Josephus, was built upon two opposite hills, Sion and Acra, separated by a valley in the midst: he speaks of another broad valley between Acra and Moriah, Bell. Jud. v. 13. vi. 6. It was the seat of divine revelation, the place where chiefly prophetic vision was given, and where God manifested himself visibly in the holy place. The prophecy foretells the invasion of Jerusalem by the Assyrians under Senacherib; or by the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar. Vitranga is of opinion, that the Prophet has both in view: that of the Chaldeans in the first part, ver. 1—5. (which he thinks relates to the flight of Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxv. 4, 5.); and that of the Assyrians in the latter part; which agrees with the circumstances of that time, and particularly describes the preparations made by Hezekiah for the defence of the city, ver. 8—11. Compare 2 Chron. xxxii. 2—5.

1. —are gone up to the house-tops.] The houses in the East were in ancient times, as they are still generally, built in one and the same uniform manner. The roof or top of the house is always flat, covered with broad stones, or a strong plaster of terrace, and guarded on every side with a low parapet wall: see Deut. xxii. 8. The terrace is frequented as much as any part of the house. On this, as the season favours, they walk, they eat, they sleep, they transact business, (1 Sam. ix. 25. see also the LXX in that place), they perform their devotions, (Acts x. 9.) The house is built with a court within, into which chiefly the windows open; those that open to the street are so obstructed with lattice-work, that no one either without or within can see through them. Whenever therefore any thing is to be seen or heard in the streets, any public spectacle, any alarm of a public nature, every one immediately goes up to the house-top to satisfy his curiosity. In the same manner, when any one had occasion to make any thing public, the readiest and most effectual way of doing it was to proclaim it from the house-tops to the people in the streets: "What ye hear in the ear, that publish ye on the house-top," saith our Saviour, Matt. x. 27. The people's running all to the tops of their houses gives a lively image of a sudden general alarm. Sir John Chardin's MS note on this place is as follows:—"Dans les festes pour voir passer quelque chose, et dans les maladies pour les annoncer aux voisins en allumant des lumières, le peuple monte sur les terrasses."

3. —are gone off together.] There seems to be somewhat of an inconsistency in the sense, according to the present reading. If the leaders were bound, אֲסֹרוּ, how could they flee away? for their being bound, according to the obvious construction and course of the sentence, is a circumstance prior to their flight. I therefore follow Houbigant, who reads הִסְרוּ, remoti sunt, they are gone off. גִּלוּ, transmigraverunt, Chald. which seems to confirm this emendation.

6. —the Syrian—] It is not easy to say what רֶכֶב אֲדָם, a chariot of men, can mean. It seems, by the form of the sentence, which consists of three members, the first and the third mentioning a particular people, that the second should do so likewise; thus בִּרְכֵב אָרָם וּפָרָשִׁים, "with chariots the Syrian, and with horsemen:" the similitude of the letters ר and ר is so great, and the mistakes arising from it so frequent, that I readily adopt the correction of Houbigant, אָרָם instead of אֲדָם, which seems to me extremely probable. The conjunction ו prefixed to פָּרָשִׁים seems necessary, in whatever way the sentence is taken; and it is confirmed by five MSS (one ancient) and three editions. Kir was a city belonging to the Medes. The Medes were subject to the Assyrians in Hezekiah's time: see 2 Kings xvi. 9. and xvii. 6.; and so perhaps might Elam (the Persians) likewise be, or auxiliaries to them.

8. —the arsenal—] Built by Solomon within the city, and called the House of the Forest of Lebanon; probably from the great quantity of cedar from Lebanon which was employed in the building: see 1 Kings vii. 2, 3.

9. And ye shall collect the waters—] There were two pools in or near Jerusalem, supplied by springs: the upper pool, or the old pool, supplied by the spring called Gihon, 2 Chron. xxxii. 30. towards the higher part of the city, near Sion or the city of David; and the lower pool, probably supplied by Siloam, towards the lower part. When Hezekiah was threatened with a siege by Senacherib, he stopped up all the waters of the fountains without the city, and brought them into the city by a conduit, or subterraneous passage cut through the rock; those of the old pool, to the place where he made a double wall, so that the pool was between the two walls. This he did in order to distress the enemy, and to supply the city during the siege. This was so great a work, that not only the historians have made particular mention of it, 2 Kings xx. 20. 2 Chron. xxxii. 2, 3. 5. 30.; but the son of Sirach also has celebrated it in his encomium on Hezekiah: "Hezekiah fortified his city, and brought in water into the midst thereof: he digged the hard rock with iron, and made wells for water:" Eccl'us xlvi. 17.

11. —to him that hath disposed this] That is, to God, the author and disposer of this visitation, the invasion with which he now threatens you. The very same expressions are applied to God, and upon the same occasion, chap. xxxvii. 26.

"Hast thou not heard, of old, that I have disposed it;
And, of ancient times, that I have formed it?"

14. the voice of JEHOVAH—] The Vulg. has vox Domini; as if in his copy he had read קול יהוה: and, in truth, without the word קול, it is not easy to make out the sense of the passage; as it appears from the strange versions which the rest of the ancients, (except Chald.), and many of the moderns, have given of it; as if the matter were revealed in, or to, the ears of JEHOVAH; ἐν τοῖς ὠσὶν Κυρίου, LXX. Vitringa translates it, "revelatus est in auribus meis JEHOVAH;" and refers to 1 Sam. ii. 27. iii. 21.: but the construction in those places is different, and there is no speech of God added; which here seems to want something more than the verb נגלה to introduce it. Compare chap. v. 9. where the text is still more imperfect.

15. Go unto Shebna—] The following prophecy concerning Shebna seems to have very little relation to the foregoing; except that it might have been delivered about the same time, and Shebna might be a principal person among those whose luxury and profaneness is severely reprehended by the Prophet in the conclusion of that prophecy, ver. 11—14.

Shebna the scribe, mentioned in the history of Hezekiah, chap. xxxvi. seems to have been a different person from this Shebna, the treasurer or steward of the household, to whom the prophecy relates. The Eliakim here mentioned was probably the person who, at the time of Senacherib's invasion, was actually treasurer, the son of Hilkiah. If so, this prophecy was delivered, as the preceding, which makes the former part of the chapter, plainly was, some time before the invasion of Senacherib. As to the rest, history affords us no information.

Ibid. —and say unto him] Here are two words lost out of the text; which are supplied by two MSS, (one ancient), which read וְאָמַרְתָּ אֵלָיו; by LXX, καὶ εἰπὼν αὐτῷ; and in the same manner by all the ancient versions. It is to be observed, that this passage is merely historical, and does not admit of that sort of ellipsis by which, in the poetical parts, a person is frequently introduced speaking, without the usual notice that what follows was delivered by him.

16. thy sepulchre on high—in the rock] It has been observed before, on chap. xiv., that persons of high rank in Judea, and in most parts of the East, were generally buried in large sepulchral vaults hewn out in the rock for the use of themselves and their families. The vanity of Shebna is set forth by his being so studious and careful to have his sepulchre on high; in a lofty vault, and that probably in a high situation, that it might be more conspicuous. Hezekiah was buried לְמַעַל, ἐν ἀνὰ ἑσάσσει, LXX; in the chiefest, says our translation; rather, in the highest part of the sepulchres of the sons of David, to do him the more honour; 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. There are some monuments still remaining in Persia of great antiquity, called Naksi Rustam, which give one a clear idea of Shebna's pompous design for his sepulchre. They consist of several sepulchres, each of them hewn in a high rock near the top: the front of the rock to the valley below is adorned with carved work in relief, being the outside of the sepulchre. Some of these sepulchres are about thirty feet in the perpendicular from the valley; which is itself raised perhaps above half as much by the accumulation of the earth since they were made. See the description of them in Chardin, Pietro della Valle, Thevenot, and Kempfer. Diodorus Siculus, lib. xvii. mentions these ancient monuments, and calls them the sepulchres of the kings of Persia.

17. —cover thee] That is, thy face. This was the condition of mourners in general, and particularly of condemned persons: see Esther vi. 12. vii. 8.

19. I will drive thee—] אֶהְרֹסָה, in the first person, Syr. Vulg.

21. —to the inhabitants—] לְיוֹשְׁבָיו, in the plural number, four MSS, (two ancient), LXX, Syr. Vulg.

22. —the key upon his shoulder.] As the robe and the baldric, mentioned in the preceding verse, were the ensigns of power and authority, so likewise was the key the mark of office, either sacred or civil. The priestess of Juno is said to be the key-bearer of the goddess, κλειδορχος Ηρας: Æschyl. Suppl. 299. A female high in office under a great queen has the same title:

Καλλιθοη κλειδορχος Ολυμπιαδος Βασιλειης.

Auctor Phoronidis ap. Clem. Alex. p. 418. Edit. Potter. This mark of office was likewise among the Greeks, as here in Isaiah, borne on the shoulder: the priestess of Ceres κατωμαθιαν εχε κλειδα: Callim. Ceres, ver. 45. To comprehend how the key could be borne on the shoulder, it will be necessary to say somewhat of the form of it: but, without entering into a long disquisition, and a great deal of obscure learning, concerning the locks and keys of the ancients, it will be sufficient to observe, that one sort of keys, and that probably the most ancient, was of considerable magnitude, and as to the shape very much bent and crooked. Aratus, to give his reader an idea of the form of the constellation Cassiopeia, compares it to a key. It must be owned that the passage is very obscure; but the learned Huetius has bestowed a great deal of pains in explaining it, Animadvers. in Manilii, lib. i. 355. and I think has succeeded very well in it. Homer, Odyss. xxi. 6. describes the key of Ulysses's storehouse as ευκαμπης, of a large curvature; which Eustathius explains by saying it was ορεπανοειδης, in shape like a reap-hook. Huetius says, the constellation Cassiopeia answers to this description; the stars to the north making the curve part, that is, the principal part of the key; the southern stars, the handle. The curve part was introduced into the key-hole; and, being properly directed by the handle, took hold of the bolts within, and moved them from their places. We may easily collect from this account, that such a key would lie very well upon the shoulder: that it must be of some considerable size and weight, and could hardly be commodiously carried otherwise. Ulysses's key was of brass, and the handle of ivory : but this was a royal key ; the more common ones were probably of wood. In Egypt they have no other than wooden locks and keys to this day ; even the gates of Cairo have no better : Baumgarten, Peregr. i. 18. Thevenot, Part II. ch. 10.

In allusion to the image of the key as the ensign of power, the unlimited extent of that power is expressed, with great clearness as well as force, by the sole and exclusive authority to open and shut. Our Saviour therefore has upon a similar occasion made use of a like manner of expression, Matt. xvi. 19. ; and in Rev. iii. 7. has applied to himself the very words of the Prophet.

23. —a nail—] In ancient times, and in the eastern countries, as the way of life, so the houses were much more simple than ours at present. They had not that quantity and variety of furniture, nor those accommodations of all sorts, with which we abound. It was convenient and even necessary for them, and it made an essential part in the building of a house, to furnish the inside of the several apartments with sets of spikes, nails, or large pegs, upon which to dispose of, and hang up, the several moveables and utensils in common use and proper to the apartment. These spikes they worked into the walls at the first erection of them—the walls being of such materials, that they could not bear their being driven in afterwards ; and they were contrived so as to strengthen the walls, by binding the parts together, as well as to serve for convenience. Sir John Chardin's account of this matter is this : “ They do not drive with a hammer the nails that are put into the eastern walls : the walls are too hard, being of brick ; or if they are of clay, too mouldering : but they fix them in the brick-work as they are building. They are large nails, with square heads like dice, well made ; the ends being bent so as to make them cramp-irons. They commonly place them at the windows and doors, in order to hang upon them, when they like, veils and curtains.” Harmer, Observat. i. p. 191. And we may add, that they were put in other places too, in order to hang up other things of various kinds ; as it appears from this place of Isaiah, and from Ezekiel xv. 3. who speaks of a pin, or nail, “ to hang any vessel thereon.” The word used here for a nail of this sort, is the same by which they express that instrument, the stake, or large pin of iron, with which they fastened down to the ground the cords of their tents. We see, therefore, that these nails were of necessary and common use, and of no small importance, in all their apartments; conspicuous, and much exposed to observation: and if they seem to us mean and insignificant, it is because we are not acquainted with the thing itself, and have no name to express it by, but what conveys to us a low and contemptible idea. "Grace hath been shewed from the Lord our God, (saith Ezra ix. 8.), to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us a nail in his holy place:" that is, as the margin of our Bible explains it, "a constant and sure abode."

"He that doth lodge near her [Wisdom's] house, Shall also fasten a pin in her walls." Eccl'us xiv. 24.

The dignity and propriety of the metaphor appears from the Prophet Zechariah's use of it:

"From him shall be the corner-stone; from him the nail,
From him the battle-bow,
From him every ruler together." Zech. x. 4.

And Mohammed, using the same word, calls Pharaoh the lord or master of the Nails; that is, well attended by nobles and officers capable of administering his affairs; Koran, Sur. xxxviii. 11. and lxxxix. 9. So some understand this passage of the Koran: Mr Sale seems to prefer another interpretation.

Taylor, in his Concordance, thinks יתד means the pillar or post that stands in the middle, and supports the tent, in which such pegs are fixed to hang their arms, &c. upon; referring to Shaw's Travels, p. 287. But יתד is never used, as far as it appears to me, in that sense. It was indeed necessary that the pillar of the tent should have such pegs on it for that purpose; but the hanging of such things in this manner upon this pillar, does not prove that יתד was the pillar itself.

23. —a glorious seat—] That is, his father's house, and all his own family, shall be gloriously seated, shall flourish in honour and prosperity; and shall depend upon him, and be supported by him.

24. —all the glory—] One considerable part of the magnificence of the eastern princes, consisted in the great quantity of gold and silver vessels which they had for various uses. "Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of the House of the Forest of Lebanon were of pure gold : none were of silver ; it was nothing accounted of in Solomon's days ;" 1 Kings x. 21. " The vessels in the House of the Forest of Lebanon (the armoury of Jerusalem so called) were two hundred targets, and three hundred shields, of beaten gold ;" Ibid. ver. 16, 17. These were ranged in order upon the walls of the armoury, (see Cant. iv. 4.), upon pins worked into the walls on purpose, as above mentioned. Eliakim is considered as a principal stake of this sort, immoveably fastened in the wall, for the support of all vessels destined for common or sacred uses : that is, as the principal support of the whole civil and ecclesiastical polity. And the consequence of his continued power will be the promotion and flourishing condition of his family and dependants, from the highest to the lowest.

Ibid. —meaner vessels] נבלים seems to mean earthen vessels of common use, brittle, and of little value, (see Lam. iv. 2. Jer. xlviii. 12.), in opposition to אגנות, goblets of gold and silver used in the sacrifices ; Exod. xxiv. 6.

25. The nail fastened—] This must be understood of Shebna, as a repetition and confirmation of the sentence above denounced against him.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1. Howl, O ye ships of Tarshish—] This prophecy denounceth the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar. It opens with an address to the Tyrian negociators and sailors at Tarshish, (Tartessus in Spain) ; a place which, in the course of their trade, they greatly frequented. The news of the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar is said to be brought to them from Chittim, the islands and coasts of the Mediterranean : " For the Tyrians, (says Jerom on ver. 6.), when they saw they had no other means of escaping, fled in their ships, and took refuge in Carthage, and in the islands of the Ionian and Egean Sea : " from whence the news would spread and reach Tarshish. So also Jarchi on the place. This seems to be the most probable interpretation of this verse.

2. Be silent] Silence is a mark of grief and consternation : see chap. xlvii. 5. Jeremiah has finely expressed this image :—

“The elders of the daughter of Sion sit on the ground, they are silent :

They have cast up dust on their heads, they have girded themselves with sackcloth.

The virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.” Lam. ii. 10.

3. And the seed of the Nile—] The Nile is called here Shichor, as it is Jer. ii. 18. and 1 Chron. xiii. 5. It had this name from the blackness of its waters charged with the mud which it brings down from Ethiopia, when it overflows, “Et viridem Ægyptum nigra fecundat arena :” as it was called by the Greeks Melas, and by the Latins Melo, for the same reason. See Servius on the above line of Virgil, Georg. iv. 291. It was called Siris by the Ethiopians ; by some supposed to be the same with Shichor. Egypt, by its extraordinary fertility, caused by the overflowing of the Nile, supplied the neighbouring nations with corn ; by which branch of trade the Tyrians gained great wealth.

4. Be ashamed, O Sidon—] Tyre is called, ver. 12. the daughter of Sidon. “The Sidonians, (says Justin, xviii. 3.), when their city was taken by the king of Ascalon, betook themselves to their ships, and landed, and built Tyre.” Sidon, as the mother city, is supposed to be deeply affected with the calamity of her daughter.

Ibid. —nor educated—] וירוממהי, so an ancient MS, prefixing the ו, which refers to the negative preceding, and is equivalent to ולא. See Deut. xxxiii. 6. Prov. xxx. 3.

7. —whose antiquity is of the earliest date.] Justin, in the passage above quoted, had dated the building of Tyre at a certain number of years before the taking of Troy ; but the number is lost in the present copies. Tyre, though not so old as Sidon, yet was of very high antiquity ; it was a strong city even in the time of Joshua : it is called עיר מבצר צר, “the city of the fortress of Sor,” Josh. xix. 29. Interpreters raise difficulties in regard to this passage, and will not allow it to have been so ancient : with what good reason I do not see ; for it is called by the same name, “the fortress of Sor,” in the history of David, 2 Sam. xxiv. 7. ; and the circumstances of the history determine the place to be the very same.

10. O daughter of Tarshish—] Tyre is called the daughter of Tarshish ; perhaps because, Tyre being ruined, Tarshish was become the superior city, and might be considered as the metropolis of the Tyrian people ; or rather, because of the close connexion and perpetual intercourse between them; according to that latitude of signification in which the Hebrews use the words son and daughter, to express any sort of conjunction and dependence whatever. מוֹד, a girdle, which collects, binds, and keeps together the loose raiment, when applied to a river, may mean a mound, mole, or artificial dam, which contains the waters, and prevents them from spreading abroad. A city, taken by siege, and destroyed, whose walls are demolished, whose policy is dissolved, whose wealth is dissipated, whose people is scattered over the wide country, is compared to a river whose banks are broken down, and its waters, let loose and overflowing all the neighbouring plains, are wasted and lost. This may possibly be the meaning of this very obscure verse; of which I can find no other interpretation that is at all satisfactory.

13. Behold the land of the Chaldeans—] This verse is extremely obscure: the obscurity arises from the ambiguity of the agents which belong to the verbs, and of the objects expressed by the pronouns; from the change of number in the verbs, and of gender in the pronouns. The MSS give us no assistance; and the ancient versions very little. The Chaldee and Vulg. read שְׁמֹרָה in the plural number. I have followed the interpretation which, among many different ones, seemed to me most probable, that of Perizonius and Vitranga.

The Chaldeans, Chasdim, are supposed to have had their origin, and to have taken their name, from Chesed the son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. They were known by that name in the time of Moses; who calls Ur in Mesopotamia, from whence Abraham came, to distinguish it from other places of the same name, Ur of the Chaldeans. And Jeremiah calls them an ancient nation. This is not inconsistent with what Isaiah here says of them: "This people was not;" that is, they were of no account, (see Deut. xxxii. 21.); they were not reckoned among the great and potent nations of the world, till of later times: they were a rude, uncivilized, barbarous people, without laws, without settled habitations, wandering in a wide desert country, צִיִּים, and addicted to rapine, like the wild Arabians. Such they are represented to have been in the time of Job, (i. 17.), and such they continued to be till Assur, some powerful king of Assyria, gathered them together, and settled them in Babylon, and the neighbouring country. This probably was Ninus, whom I suppose to have lived in the time of the Judges. In this, with many eminent chronologers, I follow the authority of Herodotus; who says, that the Assyrian monarchy lasted but five hundred and twenty years. Ninus got possession of Babylon from the Cuthean Arabians, the successors of Nimrod in that empire, collected the Chaldeans, and settled a colony of them there, to secure the possession of the city, which he and his successors greatly enlarged and ornamented. They had perhaps been useful to him in his wars, and might be likely to be further useful in keeping under the old inhabitants of that city, and of the country belonging to it; according to the policy of the Assyrian kings, who generally brought new people into the conquered countries. See Isa. xxxvi. 17. 2 Kings xvii. 6. 24. The testimony of Dicæarchus, a Greek historian contemporary with Alexander, (apud Steph. de Urbibus, in v. Χαλδαίως), in regard to the fact is remarkable, though he is mistaken in the name of the king he speaks of: He says, "That a certain king of Assyria, the fourteenth in succession from Ninus," (as he might be, if Ninus is placed, as in the common chronology, eight hundred years higher than we have above set him), "named as it is said Chaldaeus, having gathered together and united all the people called Chaldeans, built the famous city Babylon upon the Euphrates."

14. Howl, O ye ships—] The Prophet Ezekiel hath enlarged upon this part of the same subject with great force and elegance:

"Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH concerning Tyre:
 At the sound of thy fall, at the cry of the wounded,
 At the great slaughter in the midst of thee, shall not the islands tremble?
 And shall not all the princes of the sea descend from their thrones,
 And lay aside their robes, and strip off their embroidered garments?
 They shall clothe themselves with trembling, they shall sit on the ground;
 They shall tremble every moment, they shall be astonished at thee.
 And they shall utter a lamentation over thee, and shall say unto thee:
 How art thou lost, thou that wast inhabited from the seas!
 The renowned city, that was strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants!

That struck with terror all her neighbours !
 Now shall the coasts tremble in the day of thy fall,
 And the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure.”
 Ezek. xxvi. 15—18.

15. According to the days of one king—] That is, of one kingdom. See Dan. vii. 17. viii. 20. Nebuchadnezzar began his conquests in the first year of his reign ; from thence to the taking of Babylon by Cyrus are seventy years ; at which time the nations conquered by Nebuchadnezzar were to be restored to liberty. These seventy years limit the duration of the Babylonish monarchy. Tyre was taken by him towards the middle of that period ; so did not serve the king of Babylon during the whole period, but only for the remaining part of it. This seems to be the meaning of Isaiah : The days allotted to the one king, or kingdom, are seventy years ; Tyre, with the rest of the conquered nations, shall continue in a state of subjection and desolation to the end of that period—not from the beginning and through the whole of the period ; for, by being one of the latest conquests, the duration of that state of subjection in regard to her was not much more than half of it. “ All these nations,” saith Jeremiah, (xxv. 11.), “ shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.” Some of them were conquered sooner, some later ; but the end of this period was the common term for the deliverance of them all.

There is another way of computing the seventy years, from the year in which Tyre was actually taken to the nineteenth of Darius Hystaspis ; whom the Phenicians, or Tyrians, assisted against the Ionians, and probably on that account might then be restored to their former liberties and privileges. But I think the former the more probable interpretation.

Ibid. —sing as the harlot singeth—] “ Fidicinam esse meretricum est,” says Donatus in Terent. Eunuch. iii. 2. 4.

“ *Nec meretrix tibicina, cujus
 Ad strepitum salias.*”

Hor. I. Epist. xiv. 25.

Sir John Chardin, in his MS note on this place, says : “ C’est que les vieilles prostituées—ne font que chanter quand les jeunes dancent, et les animer par l’instrument et par la voix.”

17, 18. And at the end of seventy years—] Tyre, after its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, recovered, as it is here foretold, its ancient trade, wealth, and grandeur ; as it did likewise after a second destruction by Alexander. It became Christian early with the rest of the neighbouring countries. St Paul himself found many Christians there, Acts xxi. 4. It suffered much in the Diocletian persecution. It was an archbishoprick under the patriarchate of Jerusalem, with fourteen bishopricks under its jurisdiction. It continued Christian till it was taken by the Saracens in 639; was recovered by the Christians in 1124; but in 1280 was conquered by the Mamelukes; and afterwards taken from them by the Turks in 1516. Since that time it has sunk into utter decay; is now a mere ruin; a bare rock; "a place to spread nets upon," as the Prophet Ezekiel foretold it should be, chap. xxvi. 14. See Sandys's Travels; Vitranga on the place; Bishop Newton on the Prophecies, Dissert. xi.

CHAPTER XXIV.

FROM the xiiith chapter to the xxist inclusive, the fate of several cities and nations is denounced;—of Babylon, of the Philistines, Moab, Damascus, Egypt, Tyre. After having foretold the destruction of the foreign nations, enemies of Judah, the Prophet declares the judgments impending on the people of God themselves, for their wickedness and apostasy; and the desolation that shall be brought on their whole country.

The xxivth, and the three following chapters, seem to have been delivered about the same time—before the destruction of Moab by Shalmaneser, (see xxv. 10.); consequently before the destruction of Samaria; probably in the beginning of Hezekiah's reign. But concerning the particular subject of the xxivth chapter, interpreters are not at all agreed: some refer it to the desolation caused by the invasion of Shalmaneser; others to the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar; and others to the destruction of the city and nation by the Romans. Vitranga is singular in his opinion, who applies it to the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes. Perhaps it may have a view to all of the three great desolations of the country, by Shalmaneser, by Nebuchadnezzar, and by the Romans; especially the last, to which some parts of it may seem more peculiarly applicable. However, the Prophet chiefly employs general images; such as set forth the greatness and universality of the ruin and desolation that is to be brought upon the country by these great revolutions, involving all orders and degrees of men, changing entirely the face of things, and destroying the whole polity both religious and civil; without entering into minute circumstances, or necessarily restraining it by particular marks to one great event, exclusive of others of the same kind.

4. The world languisheth] The world is the same with the land; that is, the kingdoms of Judah and Israel; orbis Israeliticus. See note on chap. xiii. 11.

5. —the law] תורה, singular: so read LXX, Syr. Chald.

6. —are destroyed] For חרו, read חרבו: see LXX, Syr. Chald. Sym.

9. —palm wine—] This is the proper meaning of the word שכר, σικερα: see note on chap. v. 11. All enjoyment shall cease; the sweetest wine shall become bitter to their taste.

11. —is passed away] For ערבה, read עברה; transposing a letter: Houbigant, SECKER. Five MSS (two ancient) add כל after משיח: LXX add the same word before it.

14. But these—] That is, they that escaped out of these calamities. The great distresses brought upon Israel and Judah drove the people away, and dispersed them all over the neighbouring countries: they fled to Egypt, to Asia Minor, to the islands and the coasts of Greece. They were to be found in great numbers in most of the principal cities of these countries. Alexandria was in a great measure peopled by them. They had synagogues for their worship in many places; and were greatly instrumental in propagating the knowledge of the true God among these heathen nations, and preparing them for the reception of Christianity. This is what the Prophet seems to mean by the celebration of the name of JEHOVAH in the waters, in the distant coasts, and in the uttermost parts of the land. מַיִם, the waters; ὕδατος, LXX; ὕδατα, Theod.; not מַיִם, from the sea.

15. In the distant coasts of the sea] For בארים, I suppose, we ought to read באיים; which is in a great degree justified by the repetition of the word in the next member of the sentence, with the addition of הים to vary the phrase, exactly in the manner of the Prophet. אֵיִם is a word chiefly applied to any distant countries, especially those lying on the Mediterranean Sea. Others conjecture ביארים, בהרים, באמים, בעמים, בחורים; באורים, באר, illustrati; Le Clerc. Twenty-three MSS read באורים. The LXX do not acknowledge the reading of the text, expressing here only the word אִים, εν ταις νησοις, and that not repeated. But MSS Pachom. and I. D. II. supply in this place the defect in the other copies of LXX, thus: Δια τας το ἡ δοξα Κυριου εσται εν ταις νησοις της θαλασσης* εν ταις νησοις το ονομα τς Κυριου Θεου Ισραηλ ενδοξον εσται. According to which the LXX had in their Hebrew copy באים, repeated afterward, not בארים.

16. But I said—] The Prophet speaks in the person of the inhabitants of the land still remaining there; who should be pursued by divine vengeance, and suffer repeated distresses from the inroads and depredations of their powerful enemies. Agreeably to what he said before in a general denunciation of these calamities,

“ Though there be a tenth part remaining in it ;
Even this shall undergo a repeated destruction.”

Chap. vi. 13. See the note there.

Ibid. The plunderers plunder] See note on chap. xxi. 2.
17, 18. The terror, the pit,—] If they escape one calamity, another shall overtake them ;

“ As if a man should flee from a lion, and a bear should overtake him :

Or should betake himself to his house, and lean his hand on the wall,

And a serpent should bite him.”

Amos v. 19.

For, as our Saviour expressed it in a like parabolical manner, “ Wheresoever the carcass is, there shall the eagles be gathered together ;” Matt. xxiv. 28. The images are taken from the different methods of hunting and taking wild beasts which were anciently in use. The terror was a line strung with feathers of all colours, which fluttering in the air scared and frightened the beasts into the toils, or into the pit which was prepared for them. “ Nec est mirum, cum maximos ferarum greges linea pennis distincta contineat, et in insidias agat, ab ipso effectu dicta Formido :” Seneca de Ira, ii. 12. The pit, or pit-fall, Fovea; digged deep in the ground, and covered over with green boughs, turf, &c. in order to deceive them, that they might fall into it unawares. The snare, or toils, Indago; a series of nets, inclosing at first a great space of ground, in which the wild beasts were known to be; and then drawn in by degrees into a narrower compass, till they were at last closely shut up, and entangled in them.

For מקול a MS reads מפני, as it is in Jer. xlviii. 44.; and so the Vulg. and Chald. But perhaps it is only, like the latter, a Hebraism, and means no more than the simple preposition מן. See Psal. cii. 6. For it does not appear that the terror was intended to scare the wild beasts by its noise. The paronomasia is very remarkable, pachad, pachath, pach; and that it was a common proverbial form, appears from Jeremiah's repeating it in the same words, chap. xlviii. 43, 44.

18. from the pit] For מתוך, from the midst of, a MS reads מן, from, as it is in Jer. xlviii. 44.; and so likewise LXX, Syr. Vulg.

19. The land] “הארץ, forte delendum ה, ut ex præcedente ortum. Vid. seqq.” SECKER.

20. —like a lodge for a night.] See note on chap. i. 8.

21—23. —on high, —on earth—] That is, the ecclesiastical and civil polity of the Jews; which shall be destroyed: The nation shall continue in a state of depression and dereliction for a long time. The image seems to be taken from the practice of the great monarchs of that time; who, when they had thrown their wretched captives into a dungeon, never gave themselves the trouble of inquiring about them; but let them lie a long time in that miserable condition, wholly destitute of relief, and disregarded. God shall at length revisit and restore his people in the last age; and then the kingdom of God shall be established in such perfection, as wholly to obscure and eclipse the glory of the temporary, typical, preparative kingdom now subsisting.

“The figurative language of the Prophets is taken from the analogy between the world natural, and an empire or kingdom considered as a world politic. Accordingly the whole world natural, consisting of heaven and earth, signifies the whole world politic, consisting of thrones and people, or so much of it as is considered in prophecy; and the things in that world signify the analogous things in this. For the heavens and the things therein signify thrones and dignities, and those who enjoy them; and the earth, with the things thereon, the inferior people; and the lowest parts of the earth, called hades or hell, the lowest or most miserable part of them. Great earthquakes, and the shaking of heaven and earth, are put for the shaking of kingdoms, so as to distract and overthrow them; the creating a new heaven and earth, and the passing of an old one, or the beginning and end of a world, for the rise and ruin of a body politic signified thereby. The sun, for the whole species and race of kings, in the kingdoms of the world politic; the moon, for the body of the common people, considered as the king's wife; the stars, for subordinate princes and great men; or for bishops and rulers of the people of God, when the sun is Christ:—setting of the sun, moon, and stars; darkening the sun, turning the moon into blood, and falling of the stars, for the ceasing of a kingdom.” Sir I. Newton, Observations on the Prophecies, Part I. chap. ii.

CHAPTER XXV.

IT doth not appear to me, that this chapter hath any close and particular connexion with the chapter immediately preceding, taken separately and by itself. The subject of that was the desolation of the land of Israel and Judah, by the just judgment of God, for the wickedness and disobedience of the people; which, taken by itself, seems not with any propriety to introduce a hymn of thanksgiving to God for his mercies to his people in delivering them from their enemies. But taking the whole course of prophecies, from the xiiith to the xxvth chapter inclusive, in which the Prophet foretells the destruction of several cities and nations, enemies to the Jews, and of the land of Judah itself, yet with intimations of a remnant to be saved, and a restoration to be at length effected by a glorious establishment of the kingdom of God;—with a view to this extensive scene of God's providence in all its parts, and in all its consequences, the Prophet may well be supposed to break out into this song of praise; in which his mind seems to be more possessed with the prospect of future mercies than with the recollection of the past.

2. —the city—] Nineveh, Babylon, Ar Moab, or any other strong fortress possessed by the enemies of the people of God.

For the first מעיר, Syr. Vulg. read העיר; LXX and Chald. read, in the plural, ערים, transposing the letters. After the second מעיר, a MS adds לגל.

Ibid. —the proud ones—] For זרים, strangers, MS

Bodl. and another read זרים, the proud: so likewise the LXX; for they render it αἰσῶσι here, and in verse 5th, as they do in some other places: see Deut. xviii. 20. 22. Another MS reads צרים, adversaries; which also makes a good sense. But זרים and זרים are often confounded by the great similitude of the letters ז and ר. See Mal. iii. 15. iv. 1. Psal. xix. 14. apud LXX; and Psal. liv. 5. (where Chald. reads זרים) compared with Psal. lxxxvi. 14.

4. —a winter storm.] For קיר read קור: or as עיר from עיר, so קיר from קרר: Capellus.

5. —the proud—] The same mistake here as in ver. 2.: see note there. Here זרים, the proud, is parallel to עריצים, the formidable; as in Psal. liv. 5. and lxxxvi. 14.

Ibid. As the heat by a thick cloud.] For חרב, Syr. Chald. Vulg. and two MSS, read כחרב; which is a repetition of the beginning of the foregoing parallel line: and the verse taken out of the parallel form, and more fully expressed, would run thus: “As a thick cloud interposing tempers the heat of the sun on the burnt soil, so shalt thou, by the interposition of thy power, bring low and abate the tumult of the proud, and the triumph of the formidable.”

6. —shall make for all the people a feast.] A feast is a proper and usual expression of joy in consequence of victory, or any other great success. The feast here spoken of is to be celebrated on Mount Sion, and all the peoples without distinction are to be invited to it. This can be no other than the celebration of the establishment of Christ's kingdom, which is frequently represented in the gospel under the image of a feast; where many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down at table with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven;” Matt. viii. 11. See also Luke xiv. 16. xxii. 29, 30. This sense is fully confirmed by the concomitants of this feast expressed in the next verse; the removing of the veil from the face of the nations, and the abolition of death: the first of which is obviously and clearly explained of the preaching of the gospel; and the second must mean the blessing of immortality procured for us by Christ, “who hath abolished death, and through death hath destroyed him that had the power of death.”

Ibid. —of old wines] Heb. lees; that is, of wines kept long on the lees. The word used to express the lees in the original signifies the preservers; because they preserve the strength and flavour of the wine. "All recent wines, after the fermentation has ceased, ought to be kept on their lees for a certain time; which greatly contribute to increase their strength and flavour. Whenever this first fermentation has been deficient, they will retain a more rich and sweet taste than is natural to them in a recent true vinous state; and unless further fermentation is promoted by their lying longer on their own lees, they will never attain their genuine strength and flavour, but run into repeated and ineffectual fermentations, and soon degenerate into a liquor of an acetous kind. All wines of a light and austere kind, by a fermentation too great, or too long continued, certainly degenerate into a weak sort of vinegar; while the stronger not only require, but will safely bear a stronger and often repeated fermentation; and are more apt to degenerate from a defect than excess of fermentation, into a vapid, ropy, and at length into a putrescent state:" Sir Edward Barry, Observations on the Wines of the Ancients, p. 9, 10.

Thevenot observes particularly of the Schiras wine, that, after it is refined from the lees, it is apt to grow sour: "Il a beaucoup de lie; c'est pourquoi il donne puissamment dans la teste; et pour le rendre plus traitable, on le passe par un chausse d'hypocras: après quoi il est fort clair, et moins fumeux. Ils mettent ce vin dans des grandes jarres de terre, qui tiennent dix ou douze jusqu'à quatorze carabas: mais quand l'on a entamé une jarre, il faut la vider au plutost, et mettre le vin qu'on en tire dans des bouteilles ou carabas; car si l'on y manque en le laissant quelque tems après que la jarre est entamée, il se gâte et s'aigrit:" Voyages, tom. ii. p. 245.

This clearly explains the very elegant comparison, or rather allegory, of Jeremiah; where the reader will find a remarkable example of the mixture of the proper with the allegorical, not uncommon in the Hebrew poets:

"Moab hath been at ease from his youth,
And he hath settled upon his lees;
Nor hath he been drawn off from vessel to vessel,
Neither hath he gone into captivity:
Wherefore his taste remaineth in him,
And his flavour is not changed." Jer. xlviii. 11.

Sir John Chardin's MS note on this place of Jeremiah is as follows; "On change ainsi le vin de cupe en cupe en Orient; et quand on en entame une, il faut la vuider en petites cupes ou bouteilles, sans quoy s'aigrit."

7. —the face of all—] MS Bodl. reads על פני כל. The word פני has been removed from its right place into the line above, where it makes no sense; as Houbigant conjectured.

9. —shall they say—] So LXX and Vulg. in the plural number. They read ואמרו. Syr. reads ואמרה, Thou shalt say.

10. —shall give rest—] "Heb. תנוה, quiescet. Annon תניח, quietem dabit, ut Græci, ἀναπαύσει, et Copt.?" Mr WOIDE. That is, "shall give peace and quiet to Sion, by destroying the enemy;" as it follows.

Ibid. As the straw is threshed—] "Hoc juxta ritum loquitur Palæstinæ et multarum Orientis provinciarum, quæ ob pratorum et feni penuriam paleas preparant esui animantium. Sunt autem carpenta ferrata rotis per medium in serrarum modum se volventibus, quæ stipulam conterunt; et comminuunt in paleas. Quomodo igitur plaustris ferratis paleæ conteruntur, sic conteretur Moab sub eo; sive sub Dei potentia, sive in semetipso, ut nihil in eo integri remaneat." Hieron. in loc. See Note on chap. xxviii. 27.

Ibid. —under the wheels of the car.] For מרמנה, LXX, Syr. Vulg. read מרכבה; which I have followed. See Joshua xv. 31. compared with xix. 5. where there is a mistake very nearly the same. The Keri, במי, is confirmed by twenty-eight MSS (seven ancient), and three editions.

11. As he that sinketh stretcheth out his hands to swim.] There is great obscurity in this place: some understand God as the agent; others Moab. I have chosen the latter sense, as I cannot conceive that the stretching out of the hands of a swimmer in swimming, can be any illustration of the action of God stretching out his hands over Moab to destroy it. I take השחה, altering the point on the ש on the authority of LXX, to be the participle of שחח, the same with שוח and שחח, inclinari, deprimi; and that the Prophet designed a paronomasia here, a figure which he frequently uses, between the similar words שחח and שחית. As תהתי, in his place, or on the spot, as we say, in the preceding verse, gives us an idea of the sudden and complete destruction of Moab; so בקרבו, in the midst of him, means, that this destruction shall be open and exposed to the view of all: The neighbouring nations shall plainly see him struggling against it, as a man in the midst of the deep waters exerts all his efforts, by swimming, to save himself from drowning.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1.—we have a strong city] In opposition to the city of the enemy, which God hath destroyed, chap. xxv. 2.: see the note there.

3.—they have trusted] So Chald. בטהו. Syr. and Vulg. read בטהו, we have trusted. Schroeder, Gram. Hebr. p. 360. explains the present reading, בטהו, impersonally, confisum est.

4.—in JEHOVAH] In JAH JEHOVAH, Heb.; but see Houbigant, not. in cap. xii. 2.

8. We have placed our confidence in thy name] LXX, Syr. and Chald. read קיינו, without the pronoun annexed.

9.—have I desired thee] Forty-one MSS (nine ancient), and five editions, read אויתיך. It is proper to note this; because the second י being omitted in the text, Vulg. and many others have rendered it in the third person.

16.—we have sought thee—] So LXX, and two MSS, פקדנוך, in the first person. And so perhaps it should be נקנו, in the first person: but how LXX read this word is not clear; and this last member of the verse is extremely obscure.

For לנו the LXX read לינו, in the first person likewise: a frequent mistake: see note on chap. x. 29.

18.—we have brought forth wind] The learned Professor Michaelis explains this image in the following manner:—"Rariorem morbum describi, empneumatosin, aut ventosam molam, dictum; quo quæ laborant diu et sibi et peritis medicis gravidæ videntur, tandemque post omnes veræ graviditatis molestias et labores ventum ex utero emittunt: quem morbum passim describunt medici:" Syntagma Comment. vol. ii. p. 165. The Syriac translator seems to have understood it in this manner: "Enixi sumus, ut illæ, quæ ventos pariunt."

Ibid. —in the land] בארץ, so a MS, LXX, Syr. and Vulg.

19.—my deceased] All the ancient versions render it in the plural; they read נבלותי, my dead bodies. Syr. and Chald. read נבלותיהם, their dead bodies.

Ibid. —of the dawn] Lucis, Vulg. ; so also Syr. and Chald.

The deliverance of the people of God from a state of the lowest depression, is explained by images plainly taken from the resurrection of the dead. In the same manner the Prophet Ezekiel represents the restoration of the Jewish nation from a state of utter dissolution, by the restoring of the dry bones to life, exhibited to him in a vision, chap. xxxvii. which is directly thus applied and explained, ver. 11—13. And this deliverance is expressed with a manifest opposition to what is here said above, ver. 14. of the great lords and tyrants under whom they had groaned ; that they should be destroyed utterly, and should never be restored to their former power and glory. It appears from hence, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine : for an image which is assumed in order to express or represent any thing in the way of allegory or metaphor, whether poetical or prophetic, must be an image commonly known and understood ; otherwise it will not answer the purpose for which it is assumed.

“ They are dead, they shall not live ;

They are deceased tyrants, they shall not rise : ”

20. Come, O my people ; retire—] An exhortation to patience and resignation under oppression, with a confident expectation of deliverance, by the power of God manifestly to be exerted in the destruction of the oppressor. It seems to be an allusion to the command of Moses to the Israelites, when the destroying angel was to go through the land of Egypt, “ not to go out at the door of their houses until the morning ; ” Exod. xii. 22. And before the passage of the Red Sea : “ Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of JEHOVAH :—JEHOVAH shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace ; ” Exod. xiv. 13, 14.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE subject of this chapter seems to be the nature, the measure, and the design of God’s dealings with his people : ver. 1. his judgments inflicted on their great and powerful enemies : ver. 2. his constant care and protection of his favourite vineyard, in the form of a dialogue : ver. 7. the moderation and lenity with which the severity of his judgments have been tempered: ver. 9. the end and design of them, to recover them from idolatry: and, ver. 12. the recalling of them, on their repentance, from their several dispersions. The first verse seems connected with the two last verses of the preceding chapter.

1. Leviathan, &c.] The animals here mentioned seem to be—the crocodile, rigid, by the stiffness of the back-bone, so that he cannot readily turn himself when he pursues his prey; hence the easiest way of escaping from him is by making frequent and short turnings—the serpent, or dragon, flexible and winding; which coils himself up in a circular form—the sea-monster, or the whale. These are used allegorically, without doubt, for great potentates, enemies and persecutors of the people of God: but to specify the particular persons or states designed by the Prophet under these images is a matter of great difficulty, and comes not necessarily within the design of these Notes.

2. —the beloved vineyard] For חמר, a great number of MSS, and some printed editions, have חמר; which is confirmed by LXX, and Chald.

Ibid. —a responsive song] That ענה, to answer, signifies occasionally to sing responsively; and that this mode of singing was frequently practised among the ancient Jews, see De S. Poes. Hebr. Præl. xix. at the beginning.

3. I will take care of her] For פן יפקד, Syr. reads ואפקד: and fifteen MSS (six ancient), and six editions, read אפקד, in the first person.

4. I have no wall] For חמה, LXX and Syr. read חומה. An ancient MS has חימה. For בה, two MSS read במ, plural. The vineyard wishes for a wall, and a fence of thorns; human strength and protection; (as the Jews were too apt to apply to their powerful neighbours for assistance, and to trust to the shadow of Egypt): JEHOVAH replies, that this would not avail her, nor defend her against his wrath: he counsels her therefore to betake herself to his protection. On which she entreats him to make peace with her.

“About Tripoly there are abundance of vineyards and gardens, enclosed for the most part with hedges; which chiefly consist of the rhamnus, paliurus, oxyacantha,” &c.: Rawolf, p. 21, 22. A fence of thorns is esteemed equal to a wall for strength, being commonly represented as impenthrable. See Micah vii. 4. Hos. ii. 6.

Ibid. —of the thorn and brier] Seven MSS (two ancient), and one edition, and Syr. Vulg. Aquila, read וּשִׁית, with the conjunction ו prefixed.

5. Ah!] For או, I read אוי, as it was at first in a MS. The ו was easily lost, being followed by another ו.

6. —from the root] For יִשְׂרָשׁ I read with the Syr. מִשְׂרָשׁ. And for יִצְצוּ פֶּרֶה, יִצִּיץ וּפֶרֶה, joining the ו to the first word, and taking that into construction with the first part of the sentence. I suppose the dialogue to be continued in this verse, which pursues the same image of the allegory, but in the way of metaphor.

9. And if—] וְלֹא, four MSS (two ancient), and LXX.

11. —her boughs] קִצְרִיהָ, MS and Vulg.; that is, the boughs of the vineyard, referring still to the subject of the dialogue above.

The scarcity of fuel, especially wood, in most parts of the East is so great, that they supply it with every thing capable of burning; cow dung dried, roots, parings of fruit, withered stalks of herbs and flowers: see Matt. vi. 28—30. Vine-twigs are particularly mentioned as used for fuel in dressing their food, by D'Arvieux; La Roque, Palestine, p. 198. Ezekiel says, in his parable of the vine, used figuratively for the people of God, as the vineyard is here, “ Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon? Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel;” chap. xv. 3, 4. “ If a man abide not in me,” saith our Lord, “ he is cast forth as a branch [of the vine], and is withered: and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned;” John xv. 6. They employed women and children to gather these things; and they laid them up in store for use. The dressing and pruning of their vines afforded a good supply of the last sort of fuel: but the Prophet says, that the vines themselves of the beloved vineyard shall be blasted, withered, and broken; and the women shall come, and gather them up, and carry away the whole of them, to make their fires for domestic uses. See Harmer, Observ. i. p. 254, &c.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 The proud crown—] “ Sebaste, the ancient Samaria, is situated on a long mount of an oval figure; having first a fruitful valley, and then a ring of hills running round about it:" Maundrell, p. 58. "E regione horum ruderum mons est peramicus, planitie admodum frugifera circumseptus, super quem olim Samaria urbs condita fuit:" Fureri Itinerarium, p. 93. The city, beautifully situated on the top of a round hill, and surrounded immediately with a rich valley, and a circle of other hills beyond it, suggested the idea of a chaplet, or wreath of flowers, worn upon their heads on occasions of festivity; expressed by the proud crown, and the fading flower of the drunkards. That this custom of wearing chaplets in their banquets prevailed among the Jews, as well as among the Greeks and Romans, appears from the following passage of the book of Wisdom:

"Let us fill ourselves with costly wine and ointments,
And let no flower of the spring pass by us:
Let us crown ourselves with rose-buds, before they are withered." Wisd. ii. 7, 8.

2. —the exceedingly strong one] אַמִּיץ לְאֶרֶץ, fortis Domino, i. e. fortissimus, a Hebraism. For לְאֶרֶץ, thirty-eight MSS, and two editions, read לִיהוּדָה.

3. —crowns] I read עֲטֻרוֹת, plural, to agree with the verb תִּרְמֹסֶנָּה.

4. The early fruit before summer] "No sooner doth the boccore [the early fig] draw near to perfection, in the middle or latter end of June, than the kermes, or summer fig, begins to be formed, though it rarely ripens before August; about which time the same tree frequently throws out a third crop, or the winter fig, as we may call it. This is usually of a much longer shape and darker complexion than the kermes, hanging and ripening upon the tree even after the leaves are shed; and, provided the winter proves mild and temperate, is gathered as a delicious morsel in the spring: Shaw, Travels, p. 370. fol. The image was very obvious to the inhabitants of Judea and the neighbouring countries, and is frequently applied by the Prophets to express a desirable object; by none more elegantly than by Hosea, chap. ix. 10.

"Like grapes in the wilderness, I found Israel;
Like the first ripe fig in her prime, I saw your fathers."

Ibid. —he plucketh it] For יִרְאֶה, which with הִרְאֶה makes a miserable tautology, read by a transposition of a letter יִאֲרֶה; a happy conjecture of Houbigant. The image expresses in the strongest manner the great ease with which the Assyrians shall take the city and the whole kingdom, and the avidity with which they shall seize the rich prey without resistance.

5. In that day—] Thus far the prophecy relates to the Israelites, and manifestly denounces their approaching destruction by Shalmaneser. Here it turns to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the remnant of God's people, who were to continue a kingdom after the final captivity of the Israelites. It begins with a favourable prognostication of their affairs under Hezekiah; but soon changes to reproofs and threatenings, for their intemperance, disobedience, and profaneness.

7. —to the gate of the enemy] That is, who pursue the fleeing enemy even to the very gates of their own city: "But we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate;" 2 Sam. xi. 23.; that is, we drove the enemy back to their own gates: see also 1 Sam. xvii. 52.

9. Whom [say they] would he teach—] The scoffers mentioned below, ver. 14. are here introduced as uttering their sententious speeches: they treat God's method of dealing with them, and warning them by his Prophets, with contempt and derision. What, say they, doth he treat us as mere infants just weaned? doth he teach us like little children, perpetually inculcating the same elementary lessons, the mere rudiments of knowledge; precept after precept, line after line, here and there, by little and little? imitating at the same time, and ridiculing, ver. 10. the concise prophetic manner. God by his Prophet retorts upon them, with great severity, their own contemptuous mockery; turning it to a sense quite different from what they intended. Yes, saith he, it shall be in fact as you say: ye shall be taught by a strange tongue, and a stammering lip; in a strange country: ye shall be carried into captivity by a people whose language shall be unintelligible to you, and which ye shall be forced to learn like children: And my dealing with you shall be according to your own words; it shall be command upon command for your punishment; it shall be line upon line, stretched over you to mark out your destruction; (compare 2 Kings xxi. 13.): it shall come upon you at different times, and by different degrees; till the judgments, with which from time to time I have threatened you, shall have their full accomplishment.

Jerom seems to have rightly understood the general design of this passage, as expressing the manner in which the scoffers, by their sententious speeches, turned into ridicule the warnings of God by his Prophets; though he has not so well explained the meaning of the repetition of their speech in the 13th verse. His words are, on ver. 9. "Solebant hoc ex persona Prophetarum ludentes dicere:" and on ver. 14. "Quod supra diximus, cum irrisione solitos principes Judæorum Prophetis dicere, manda, remanda, et cætera his similia, per quæ ostenditur, nequaquam eos Prophetarum credidisse sermonibus, sed Prophetiam habuisse despectui, præsens ostendit capitulum, per quod appellantur viri illusores:" Hieron. in loc.

And so Jarchi interprets the word מְשַׁלִּים in the next verse: "Qui dicunt verba irrisionis parabolice." And the Chaldee paraphrases the 11th verse to the same purpose, understanding it as spoken, not of God, but of the people deriding his Prophets: "Quoniam in mutatione loquelæ et in lingua subsannationis irridebant contra Prophetas qui prophetabant populo huic."

12. This is the true rest—] The sense of this verse is: God had warned them by his Prophets, that their safety and security, their deliverance from their present calamities, and from the apprehensions of still greater approaching, depended wholly on their trust in God, their faith and obedience; but they rejected this gracious warning with contempt and mockery.

15. —a covenant with death] To be in covenant with, is a kind of proverbial expression to denote perfect security from evil and mischief of any sort:

"For thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field;
And the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee."

Job v. 23.

"And I will make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field,
And with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground."

Hos. ii. 18.

That is, none of these shall hurt them. But Lucan, speaking of the Psylli, whose peculiar property it was to be unhurt by the bite of serpents, with which their country abounded, comes still nearer to the expression of Isaiah in this place:—

“Gens unica terras

Incolit a sævo serpentum innoxia morsu

Marmaridæ Psylli.—

Pax illis cum morte data est.”

Pharsal. ix. 894.

“Of all who scorching Afric’s sun endure,
None like the swarthy Psyllians are secure;
With healing gifts and privileges graced,
Well in the land of serpents were they placed:
Truce with the dreadful tyrant death they have,
And border safely on his realm the grave.” Rowe.

18. —shall be broken] For כפר, which seems not to belong to this place, Chald. reads תפר; which is approved by Houbigant and SECKER: see Jer. xxxiii. 21. where the very same phrase is used. See Prelim. Dissert. p. xxvii.

20. For the bed is too short—] A marshal, or proverbial saying, the meaning of which is, that they will find all means of defence and protection insufficient to secure them, and cover them from the evils coming upon them. מסך, chap. xxii. 8. the covering, is used for the outworks of defence, the barrier of the country; and here in the allegorical sense it means much the same thing. Their beds were only mattresses laid on the floor; and the coverlet, a sheet, or in the winter a carpet, laid over it, in which the person wrapt himself. For כהתכנס, it ought probably to be מהתכנס: Houbigant, SECKER.

23. Listen ye, and hear my voice—] The foregoing discourse, consisting of severe reproofs, and threatenings of dreadful judgments impending on the Jews, for their vices, and their profane contempt of God’s warnings by his messengers, the Prophet concludes with an explanation and defence of God’s method of dealing with his people, in an elegant parable or allegory; in which he employs a variety of images, all taken from the science of agriculture. As the husbandman uses various methods in preparing his land, and adapting it to the several kinds of seed to be sown, with a due observation of times and seasons; and, when he hath gathered in his harvest, employs methods as various in separating the corn from the straw and the chaff by different instruments, according to the nature of the different sorts of grain: so God, with unerring wisdom, and with strict justice, instructs, admonishes, and corrects his people; chastises and punishes them in various ways, as the exigence of the case requires; now more moderately, now more severely; always tempering justice with mercy; in order to reclaim the wicked, to improve the good, and, finally, to separate the one from the other.

26. For his God instructeth him] All nations have agreed in attributing agriculture, the most useful and the most necessary of all sciences, to the invention and to the suggestions of their deities. “The Most High hath ordained husbandry,” saith the Son of Sirach; EccI’us vii. 15.

“Namque Ceres fertur fruges, Liberque liquoris Vitigeni laticem mortalibus instituisse.” Lucretius, v. 14.

‘Ο δ’ ἡπιος ἀνθρώποισι

Δέξια σημαίνει, λαούς δ’ ἐπὶ ἔργον ἐγείρει

Μημνησκων βιοτοιοῦ· λέγει δ’ ὅτε βώλος ἀρίστη

Βουσι τε καὶ μακελῆσι· λέγει δ’ ὅτε δέξιαί ὤραι

Καὶ φυτὰ γυρῶσαι, καὶ σπέρματα πάντα βαλεῖσθαι. Aratus, Ph. 5.

He (Jupiter) to the human race

Indulgent, prompts to necessary toil

Man provident of life; with kindly signs

The seasons marks, when best to turn the glebe

With spade and plough, to nurse the tender plant,

And cast o’er fostering earth the seeds abroad.

27, 28. Four methods of threshing are here mentioned, by different instruments; the flail, the drag, the wain, and the treading of the cattle. The staff, or flail, was used for the infirmiora semina, says Hieron. the grain that was too tender to be treated in the other methods. The drag consisted of a sort of frame of strong planks, made rough at the bottom with hard stones or iron: it was drawn by horses or oxen over the corn-sheaves spread on the floor, the driver sitting upon it. Kempfer has given a print representing the manner of using this instrument: Amœn. Exot. p. 682. fig. 3. The wain was much like the former, but had wheels with iron teeth or edges like a saw. “Ferrata carpenta rotis per medium in serrarum modum se volventibus:” Hieron. in loc.; by which it should seem that the axle was armed with iron teeth, or serrated wheels, throughout. See a description and print of such a machine used at present in Egypt for the same purpose—it moves upon three rollers armed with iron teeth or wheels, to cut the straw—in Niebuhr’s Voyage en Arabie, tab. xvii. p. 123. In Syria they make use of the drag, constructed in the very same manner as above described: Niebuhr, Description de l’Arabie, p. 140. This not only forced out the grain, but cut the straw in pieces for fodder for the cattle; for in the eastern countries they have no hay. See Harmer's Observ. i. p. 425. The last method is well known from the law of Moses, which "forbids the ox to be muzzled when he treadeth out the corn;" Deut. xxv. 4.

28. —but the bread-corn—] I read וְלֶחֶם, on the authority of Vulg. and Symmachus: the former expresses the conjunction ו, omitted in the text, by autem; the latter by δε.

Ibid. —hoofs—] For פְּרָשִׁי, horsemen, read פְּרָסִי, hoofs: so Syr. Sym. Theod. Vulg.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE subject of this and the four following chapters is the invasion of Senacherib; the great distress of the Jews while it continued; their sudden and unexpected deliverance by God's immediate interposition in their favour; the subsequent prosperous state of the kingdom under Hezekiah;—interspersed with severe reproofs, and threats of punishment, for their hypocrisy, stupidity, infidelity, their want of trust in God, and their vain reliance on the assistance of Egypt; and with promises of better times, both immediately to succeed, and to be expected in the future age. The whole making not one continued discourse, but rather a collection of different discourses upon the same subject; which is treated with great elegance and variety. Though the matter is various, and the transitions sudden, yet the Prophet seldom goes far from his subject. It is properly enough divided by the chapters in the common translation.

1. Ariel—] That Jerusalem is here called by this name is very certain; but the reason of this name, and the meaning of it as applied to Jerusalem, is very obscure and doubtful. Some, with the Chaldee, suppose it to be taken from the hearth of the great altar of burnt-offerings, which Ezekiel plainly calls by the same name; and that Jerusalem is here considered as the seat of the fire of God, אֵל אֵל, which should issue from thence to consume his enemies: Compare chap. xxxi. 9. Some, according to the common derivation of the word, אֵל אֵל, the lion of God, or the strong lion, suppose it to signify the strength of the place, by which it was enabled to resist and overcome all its enemies. Τινες δὲ

φασὶν ὅτι πάλιν ὁ ὑμῶν εὐχρησθῆναι ἐπεὶ, ὁ αἰ. Θεοῦ, λεοντὸς ὁ ἰσχυρὸς ἐσπαρασάτῃ

τους ανταινοντας : Procop. in loc. There are other explanations of this name given, but none that seems to be perfectly satisfactory.

Ibid. Add year to year—] Ironically : Go on year after year ; keep your solemn feasts : yet know, that God will punish you for your hypocritical worship, consisting of mere form destitute of true piety. Probably delivered at the time of some great feast, when they were thus employed.

2. —mourning and sorrow—] Instead of your present joy and festivity.

Ibid. —as the hearth of the great altar.] That is, it shall be the seat of the fire of God ; which shall issue from thence to consume his enemies. See note on ver. 1. Or, perhaps, all on flame, as it was when taken by the Chaldeans ; or covered with carcasses and blood, as when taken by the Romans : an intimation of which more distant events, though not immediate subjects of the prophecy, may perhaps be given in this obscure passage.

3. —like David] For כדור read כדור ; so LXX, and two MSS, and f. two more.

Ibid. —towers—] For מצרות read מצודות ; so LXX, and five MSS, one of them ancient.

4. —a feeble speech] That the souls of the dead uttered a feeble stridulous sound, very different from the natural human voice, was a popular notion among the heathens as well as among the Jews. This appears from several passages of their poets—Homer, Virgil, Horace. The pretenders to the art of necromancy, who were chiefly women, had an art of speaking with a feigned voice, so as to deceive those who applied to them, by making them believe that it was the voice of the ghost. They had a way of uttering sounds, as if they were formed, not by the organs of speech, but deep in the chest, or in the belly ; and were thence called εργαστριμυθοι, ventriloqui : they could make the voice seem to come from beneath the ground, from a distant part, in another direction, and not from themselves, the better to impose upon those who consulted them. Εξεπιτηδες το γένος τουτο τον αμυδρον ηχον επιτηδευουνται, ινα δια την ασαφειαν της φωνης τον του ψευδους αποδιδρασκωσιον ελεγχον : Psellus de Dæmonibus, apud Bochart. i. p. 731. “ These people studiously acquire, and affect on purpose, this sort of obscure sound, that by the uncertainty of the voice they may the better escape being detected in the cheat.” From these arts of the necroman-cers the popular notion seems to have arisen, that the ghost's voice was a weak, stridulous, almost inarticulate sort of sound, very different from the speech of the living.

5. —the proud—] For זרִיך, thy strangers, read זרִים, the proud, LXX; parallel and synonymous to עֲרִיצִים, the terrible, in the next line: the ך was at first ך in a MS. See note on xxv. 2.

5—7. But the multitude of the proud—] These verses contain an admirable description of the destruction of Sennacherib's army, with a beautiful variety of the most expressive and sublime images; perhaps more adapted to shew the greatness, the suddenness, and horror, of the event, than the means and manner by which it was effected. Compare chap. xxx. 30—33.

7. —like as a dream—] This is the beginning of the comparison, which is pursued and applied in the next verse. Sennacherib and his mighty army are not compared to a dream, because of their sudden disappearance; but the disappointment of their eager hopes is compared to what happens to a hungry and thirsty man, when he awakes from a dream in which fancy had presented to him meat and drink in abundance, and finds it nothing but a vain illusion. The comparison is elegant and beautiful in the highest degree, well wrought up, and perfectly suited to the end proposed: the image is extremely natural, but not obvious; it appeals to our inward feelings, not to our outward senses; and is applied to an event in its concomitant circumstances exactly similar, but in its nature totally different. See De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xii. For beauty and ingenuity it may fairly come in competition with one of the most elegant of Virgil, (greatly improved from Homer, Iliad xxii. 199.), where he has applied to a different purpose, but not so happily, the same image of the ineffectual working of imagination in a dream:—

“ Ac veluti in somnis oculos ubi languida pressit
Nocte quies, necquicquam avidos extendere cursus
Velle videmur, et in mediis conatibus ægri
Succidimus; non lingua valet, non corpore notæ
Sufficiunt vires, nec vox, aut verba sequuntur.” Æn. xii. 908.

“ And as, when slumber seals the closing sight,
The sick wild fancy labours in the night;
Some dreadful visionary foe we shun
With airy strides, but strive in vain to run :

In vain our baffled limbs their powers essay ;
 We faint, we struggle, sink, and fall away :
 Drain'd of our strength, we neither fight nor fly,
 And on the tongue the struggling accents die." Pitt.

Lucretius expresses the very same image with Isaiah :—

" Ac veluti in somnis sitiens quum quærit, et humor
 Non datur, ardorem in membris qui stinguere possit :
 Sed laticum simulachra petit, frustra que laborat,
 In medioque sitit torrenti flumine potans." iv. 1091.

Ibid. —their armies and their towers] For צביה ומצודה, I read with the Chald. צבאם ומצרתם.

9. They are drunken, but not with wine.] See note on chap. li. 21.

11. I cannot read it—] An ancient MS and LXX have preserved a word here, lost out of the text, לקרות, (for לקראת), αναγινωσκον.

13. JEHOVAH—] For אדני, sixty-three MSS and three editions read יהוה, and five MSS add יהוה.

Ibid. And vain—] I read, for ותהי ותהי with LXX, Matt. xv. 9. Mark vii. 7.; and for מלמדים, מלמודה with Chald.

17. Ere Lebanon become like Carmel—] A mashal, or proverbial saying, expressing any great revolution of things; and, when respecting two subjects, an entire reciprocal change: explained here by some interpreters, I think with great probability, as having its principal view beyond the revolutions then near at hand—to the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. The first were the vineyard of God, ברם אל, (if the Prophet, who loves an allusion to words of like sounds, may be supposed to have intended one here), cultivated and watered by him in vain, to be given up, and to become a wilderness: compare chap. v. 1—7. The last had been hitherto barren, but were, by the grace of God, to be rendered fruitful. See Matt. xxi. 43. Rom. xi. 30, 31. Carmel stands here opposed to Lebanon, and therefore is to be taken as a proper name.

21. —that pleaded in the gate] "They are heard by the treasurer, master of the horse, and other principal officers of the regency [of Algiers], who sit constantly in the gate of the palace for that purpose;" [that is, the distribution of justice]: Shaw's Travels, p. 315. fol. He adds, in the note, "That we read of the elders in the gate, Dent. xxii. 15. xxv. 7.; and Isa. xxix. 21. Amos v. 10. of him that reproveth and rebuketh in the gate. The Ottoman Court likewise seems to have been called the Port, from the distribution of justice, and the dispatch of public business, that is carried on in the gates of it."

22. —the God of the house of Jacob.] I read אל as a noun, not a preposition: the parallel line favours this sense; and there is no address to the house of Jacob, to justify the other.

Ibid. —covered with confusion] יחורו, Chald. ut δ [μεταξάλας], Theod. εντραπησσαι, Syr. נחפרו, videtur legendum יחפרו: hic enim solum legitur verbum חור, nec in linguis affinis habet pudoris significationem:" SECKER.

23. When his children shall see—] For בראתו, I read בראח, with LXX and Syr.

CHAPTER XXX.

1. Who ratify covenants—] Heb. "Who pour out a libation." Sacrifice and libation were ceremonies constantly used, in ancient times, by most nations, in the ratifying of covenants: a libation therefore is used for a covenant, as in Greek the word σπονδή, for the same reason, stands for both. This seems to be the most easy explication of the Hebrew phrase; and it has the authority of the LXX, σπονησας σπονδα.

4. —at Hanes] Six MSS, and perhaps six others, read חנם, in vain, for חנס, Hanes; and so also LXX, who read likewise יגיעו, laboured, for יגיעו, arrived at.

5. —were ashamed—] Eight MSS (one ancient) read הביש without א. So Chald. and Vulg.

Ibid. But proved—] Four MSS (three ancient) after כי add אם, which seems wanted to complete the phrase in its usual form.

8. The burthen—] משא seems here to be taken in its proper sense; the load, not the oracle. The same subject is continued; and there seems to be no place here for a new title to a distinct prophecy.

Ibid. —a land of distress—] The same deserts are here spoken of which the Israelites passed through when they came out of Egypt; which Moses describes, Dent. viii. 15. as "that great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought; where there was no water :” And which was designed to be a kind of barrier between them and Egypt, of which the Lord had said, “Ye shall henceforth return no more that way ;” Deut. xvii. 16.

6. —will not profit them] A MS adds in the margin the word לְמוֹ, which seems to have been lost out of the text : it is authorized by LXX and Vulg.

7. Rahab the Inactive] The two last words, הֵם שָׁבָה, joined into one, make the participle pihel, הַמְּשֻׁבָּה. I find, that the learned Professor Doederlein, in his version of Isaiah, and note on this place, has given the same conjecture ; which he speaks of as having been formerly published by him. A concurrence of different persons in the same conjecture, adds to it a greater degree of probability.

8. For a testimony] לִיעִד, so Syr. Chald. Vulg. and LXX, in MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. εἰς μαρτυρίαν ; which words have been lost out of the other copies of LXX.

12. —in obliquity] בְּעִקֵּשׁ, transposing the two last letters of בְּעִשְׁק, in oppression, which seems not to belong to this place : a very probable conjecture of Houbigant.

13. —a swelling in a high wall] It has been observed before, that the buildings in Asia generally consist of little better than what we call mud-walls. “All the houses at Ispahan,” says Thevenot, vol. ii. p. 159. “are built of bricks made of clay and straw, and dried in the sun ; and covered with a plaster made of a fine white stone. In other places in Persia, the houses are built with nothing else but such bricks, made with tempered clay and chopped straw, well mingled together, and dried in the sun, and then used ; but the least rain dissolves them.” Sir John Chardin’s MS remark on this place of Isaiah is very apposite : “Murs en Asie étant faits de terre, se fendent ainsi par milieu et de haut en bas.” This shews clearly how obvious and expressive the image is. The Psalmist has in the same manner made use of it, to express sudden and utter destruction :

“Ye shall be slain all of you ;

[Ye shall be] like an inclining wall, like a shattered fence.”

Psal. lxii. 4.

14. —and spareth it not] Five MSS add the conjunction וְ to the negative ; וְלֹא.

17. —ten thousand—] In the second line of this verse a word is manifestly omitted, which should answer to one thousand in the first : LXX supply πᾶλλαι, רַבִּים. But the true word is רַבְבָּה ; as, I am persuaded, any one will be convinced, who will compare the following passages with this place:

“How should one chase a thousand;

And two put ten thousand [רַבְבָּה] to flight?”

Deut. xxxii. 30.

“And five of you shall chase a hundred;

And a hundred of you shall chase [רַבְבָּה] ten thousand.”

Lev. xxvi. 8.

18. —shall he expect in silence] For יָרוּם, he shall be exalted, which belongs not to this place, Houbigant reads יָרוּם, he shall be silent: and so it seems to be in a MS. Another MS instead of it reads יָשׁוּב, he shall return. The mistakes occasioned by the similitude of the letters ו and ר are very frequent, as the reader may have already observed.

19. When a holy people—] Λαός ἅγιος, LXX, עַם קָדוֹשׁ. The word קָדוֹשׁ, lost out of the text, but happily supplied by LXX, clears up the sense, otherwise extremely obscure.

Ibid. —shalt implore him with weeping] The negative particle לֹא is not acknowledged by LXX. It may perhaps have been written by mistake for לוֹ, of which there are many examples.

20. Though JEHOVAH—] For אֲרָנִי, sixteen MSS and three editions have יְהוָה.

21. —to the right, or to the left] Syr. Chalk. Vulg. translate as if, instead of כִּי—וְכִי, they read לֹא—וְלֹא.

22. And ye shall treat—] The very prohibition of Moses, Deut. vii. 25. only thrown out of the prose into the poetical form: “The graven images of their gods ye shall burn with fire: thou shalt not desire the silver or the gold that is on them; nor take it unto thee, lest thou be snared therein; for it is an abomination to JEHOVAH thy God.”

25. —the mighty—] מַגְדִּילִים, Sym. μεγαλυνουσιν, Aquila; רַבְרַבִּין, Chald.

26. —shall be sevenfold] The text adds, כְּאוֹר שִׁבְעָה, as the light of seven days; a manifest gloss, taken in from the margin: it is not in most of the copies of LXX; it interrupts the rhythmical construction, and obscures the sense by a false, or at least an unnecessary, interpretation.

27. —the flame—] מִשְׁאָה; this word seems to be rightly rendered in our translation the flame, Judg. xx. 38. 40. &c.; a sign of fire, Jer. vi. 1. called properly מִשְׁאָה, an elevation, from its tending upwards.

28. —to toss the nations with the van of perdition] The word להנפה is in its form very irregular. Kimchi says it is for להניף. Houbigant supposes it to be a mistake, and shews the cause of it; the joining it to the ה, which should begin the following word. The true reading is להניף הגוים.

The Vulgate seems to be the only one of the ancient interpreters who has explained rightly the sense; but he has dropped the image: “ad perdendas gentes in nihilum.” Kimchi’s explanation is to the following effect: “נפה is a van with which they winnow corn; and its use is to cleanse the corn from the chaff and straw: but the van, with which God will winnow the nations, will be the van of emptiness, or perdition; for nothing useful shall remain behind, but all shall come to nothing, and perish. In like manner, a bridle is designed to guide the horse in the right way; but the bridle which God will put in the jaws of the people shall not direct them aright, but shall make them err, and lead them into destruction.” This latter image the Prophet has applied to the same subject afterward, chap. xxxvii. 29.

“I will put my bridle in thy jaws,
And turn thee back by the way in which thou camest.”

And as to the former it is to be observed, that the van of the ancients was a large instrument, somewhat like a shovel, with a long handle, with which they tossed the corn mixed with the chaff and chopped straw into the air, that the wind might separate them. See Hammond on Matt. iii. 12.

31. He, that was—] “Post אשר forte excidit אשר :”
SECKER.

32. —the rod of correction] For מוסרה, the grounded staff, of which no one yet has been able to make any tolerable sense, Le Clerc conjectured מוסרה, of correction; see Prov. xxii. 15.: and so it is in two MSS (one of them ancient), and seems to be so in the Bodley MS. Syr. has רשועבדה, virga domans, vel subjectionis.

Ibid. —against them] For בה, fifty-two MSS and five editions read במ.

Ibid. —with tabrets and harps] With every demonstration of joy and thanksgiving for the destruction of the enemy in so wonderful a manner: with hymns of praise, accompanied with musical instruments. See ver. 29.

33. For Tophet is ordained—] Tophet is a valley very near to Jerusalem, to the south-east, called also the valley of Hinnom, or Gehenna; where the Canaanites, and afterwards the Israelites, sacrificed their children, by making them pass through the fire—that is, by burning them in the fire—to Moloch. It is therefore used for a place of punishment by fire; and by our blessed Saviour in the gospel for hell-fire; as the Jews themselves had applied it. See Chald. on Isa. xxxiii. 14. where מוֹקֵדֵי עֵלֶם is rendered “the Gehenna of everlasting fire.” Here the place where the Assyrian army was destroyed is called Tophet by a metonymy; for the Assyrian army was destroyed probably at a greater distance from Jerusalem, and quite on the opposite side of it: for Nob is mentioned as the last station from which the king of Assyria should threaten Jerusalem, chap. x. 32. where the Prophet seems to have given a very exact chorographical description of his march in order to attack the city.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1. Who trust—] For לִי, 1<sup>mo</sup>, twenty MSS, and LXX and Vulg. read לִי, without the conjunction.

2. —his word] דְּבָרִי, singular, without י; MS and LXX, and Targ. Hieros.

4. Like as the lion—] This comparison is exactly in the spirit and manner, and very nearly approaching to the expression, of Homer:

Βῆ δ' ἴμεν, ὥστε λεων ὀρεσίτροφος, ὅσ' ἐπιδευσῆς
 Δηρὸν ἐν κρείων, κελεται δὲ ἐ θυμὸς ἀγηνῶρ,
 Μηλῶν πεύρησσοντα, καὶ ἐς πυκινὸν δομον εἰλθεν·
 Εἰπερ γὰρ χ' ἐύρησι παρ' αὐτοφί βωτορᾶς ἀνδρᾶς
 Σὺν κούσι καὶ δαρεσσι φυλάσσοντας περὶ μῆλα,
 Οὐ ῥα τ' ἀπειρητὸς μεμνὼν σταθμοῖο διεσθαι·
 Ἀλλ' ὁ γ' ἄρ' ἡ ἥρπαξ μετὰ λυμένοσ, ἥε καὶ αὐτὸς
 Ἐέλπῃ· ἐν πρώτοισι θοῆς ἀπο χειρὸς ἀκοντι.

Il. xii. 299.

As the bold lion, mountain-bred, now long
 Famish'd, with courage and with hunger stung,
 Attempts the thronged fold: him nought appals,
 Though dogs and armed shepherds stand in guard
 Collected; he nathless undaunted springs
 O'er the high fence, and rends the trembling prey;
 Or rushing onward in his breast receives
 The well-aimed spear.

Of metaphors, allegories, and comparisons of the Hebrew poets, in which the divine nature and attributes are represented under images taken from brutes and other low objects; of their effect, their sublimity, and the cause of it; see De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xvi. sub fin.

5. leaping forward—] The generality of interpreters observe, in this place, an allusion to the deliverance which God vouchsafed to his people, when he destroyed the first-born of the Egyptians, and exempted those of the Israelites sojourning among them by a peculiar interposition. The same word is made use of here which is used upon that occasion, and which gave the name to the feast which was instituted in commemoration of that deliverance; פסח. But the difficulty is, to reconcile the commonly received meaning of that word with the circumstances of the similitude here used to illustrate the deliverance, represented as parallel to the deliverance in Egypt:—

“As the mother-birds hovering over their young;
So shall JEHOVAH God of Hosts protect Jerusalem,
Protecting and delivering, passing over, and rescuing her.”

This difficulty is, I think, well solved by Vitranga; whose remark is the more worthy of observation, as it leads to the true meaning of an important word, which hitherto seems greatly to have been misunderstood; though Vitranga himself, as it appears to me, has not exactly enough defined the precise meaning of it. He says, “פסח signifies to cover, to protect by covering; σκεπασω ὑμας, LXX; JEHOVAH obteget ostium:” whereas it means that particular action or motion, by which God at that time placed himself in such a situation as to protect the house of the Israelite against the destroying angel—to spring forward, to throw one’s self in the way, in order to cover and protect. Cocceius comes nearer to the true meaning than Vitranga, by rendering it gradum facere, to march, to step forward: Lexicon in v. The common meaning of the word פסח upon other occasions is to halt, to be lame, to leap as in a rude manner of dancing, (as the prophets of Baal did, 1 Kings xviii. 26.); all which agrees very well together; for the motion of a lame person is a perpetual springing forward, by throwing himself from the weaker upon the stronger leg. The common notion of God’s passing over the houses of the Israelites is, that in going through the land of Egypt to smite the first-born, seeing the blood on the door of the houses of the Israelites, he passed over, or skipped, those houses, and forbore to smite them. But that this is not the true notion of the thing, will be plain from considering the words of the sacred historian ; where he describes very explicitly the action : “ For JEHOVAH will pass through, to smite the Egyptians ; and when he seeth the blood on the lintels and on the two side-posts, JEHOVAH will spring forward over (or before) the door, וַיַּפְסֵחַ יְהוָה עַל הַפֶּתַח, and will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses to smite you ;” Exod. xii. 23. Here are manifestly two distinct agents, with which the notion of passing over is not consistent ; for that supposes but one agent : The two agents are the destroying angel passing through to smite every house ; and JEHOVAH, the protector, keeping pace with him ; and who, seeing the door of the Israelite marked with the blood, the token prescribed, leaps forward, throws himself with a sudden motion in the way, opposes the destroying angel, and covers and protects that house against the destroying angel, nor suffers him to smite it. In this way of considering the action, the beautiful similitude of the bird protecting her young, answers exactly to the application by the allusion to the deliverance in Egypt : As the mother-bird spreads her wings to cover her young, throws herself before them, and opposes the rapacious bird that assaults them ; so shall JEHOVAH protect, as with a shield, Jerusalem from the enemy, protecting and delivering, springing forward and rescuing her : ὑπερβαίνων, as the three other Greek interpreters, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, render it : LXX, περιποιήσεται ; instead of which, MS Pachom. has περιέσεται, circumeundo proteget, which I think is the true reading. Homer (Il. viii. 331.) expresses the very same image by this word :—

Ἀλλὰ θεῶν περιέη, καὶ οἱ σάκος ἀμφεκαλύψε :

—— “ But Ajax his broad shield display’d,
And screen’d his brother with a mighty shade.” Pope.

—— Ὁς Χρυσὴν ἀμφιέεληκας.

Il. i. 37.

Which the Scholiast explains by περιέεληκας, ὑπερμαχεῖς.

6. ye have so deeply—] All the ancient versions read יְקַמְּךָ, in the second person.

7. The sin, which their own hands have made] The construction of the word חַטָּה, sin, in this place is not easy. The LXX have omitted it : MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. and Cod. Marchal. in margine, supply the omission by the word ἁμαρτίαν, or ἁμαρτήματα, said to be from Aquila’s version ; which I have followed. The learned Professor Schroeder, Institut. Ling. Hebr. p. 298. makes it to be in regimine with יְרִיכָם, as an epithet; your sinful hands. The LXX render the pronoun in the third person, αἱ χεῖρες αὐτῶν; and an ancient MS has, agreeably to that rendering, לָהֶם, for לָכֶם; which word they have likewise omitted, as not necessary to complete the sense.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1. And princes—] וְשָׂרִים, without ל; so the ancient versions. An ancient MS has וְשָׂרָיו, and his princes.

2. As the shadow of a great rock] The shadow of a great projecting rock is the most refreshing that is possible in a hot country; not only as most perfectly excluding the rays of the sun, but also having in itself a natural coolness, which it reflects and communicates to every thing about it.

“Speluncæque tegant, et saxea procubet umbra.”

Virg. Georg. iii. 145.

“Let the cool cave and shady rock protect them.”

Ἐπεὶ κεφαλὴν καὶ γούνατα Σείριος αἶψαι,
 Ἀναλῆος δὲ τε χροῶς ἀπο καυμάτων· ἀλλὰ τοῦτ' ἤδη
 Εἴη πέτρῳ τε σκίη, καὶ Βίβλινος οἶνος. Hesiod. ii. 206.

When Sirius rages, and thine aching head,
 Parch'd skin, and feeble knees, refreshment need;
 Then to the rock's projected shade retire,
 With Biblin wine recruit thy wasted powers.

3. And him the eyes] For וְלֵא Le Clerc reads וְלֵו; of which mistake the Masoretes acknowledge there are fifteen instances; and many more are reckoned by others. The removal of the negative restores to the verb its true and usual sense.

6. The fool will still utter folly] A sort of proverbial saying; which Euripides (Bacchæ, 369.) has expressed in the very same manner and words: μῶρος γὰρ μῶρος λεγέει. Of this kind of simple and unadorned proverb or parable, see De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xxiv.

Ibid. Against JEHOVAH] For אֵל, two MSS read עֵל, more properly.

7. As for the niggard his instruments—] His machinations, his designs. The paronomasia, which the Prophet frequently deals in, suggested this expression: וְכִלֵּי בָלִי. The first word is expressed with some variety in the MSS: seven MSS read וְכִלֵּי, one וְכֵל, another וְכִוִּלֵּי.

Ibid. And to defeat the assertions—] A word seems to have been lost here, and two others to have suffered a small alteration; which has made the sentence very obscure. The LXX have happily retained the rendering of the lost word, and restored the sentence in all its parts: και διασαςδασαις λου-γους παπινουσεν εν ιουδα במשפט יושפין במשפט. They frequently render the verb הפר by διασαςδασαις. A MS reads ולדבר; which gives authority for the preposition ל necessary to the sense; and LXX, Syr. Chald. read במשפט.

8. And he by his generous—] “Of the four sorts of persons mentioned ver. 5. three are described, ver. 6, 7, and 8. but not the fourth:” SECKER. Perhaps for והוא we ought to read ושוע.

11. gird the sackcloth—] שק, sackcloth, a word necessary to the sense, is here lost, but preserved by LXX, MSS Alex. and Pachom. and 1. D. 11. and Edit. Ald. and Comp. and Arab. and Syr.

Ibid. Tremble—be disquieted—strip ye—] פשטה, רגזה, &c. These are infinitives, with a paragogic ה, according to Schultens, Institut. Ling. Hebr. p. 453. and are to be taken in an imperative sense.

12. Mourn ye for the pleasant field] The LXX, Syr. and Vulg. read ספרו, mourn ye, imperative: twelve MSS (five ancient), two editions, LXX, Aquila, Sym. Theod. Syr. Vulg. all read שדה, field; not שרי, breasts.

13. —and the brier shall come up] All the ancient versions read ושמיר, with the conjunction. And an ancient MS has תעלה בו, which seems to be right; or rather בה: and there is a rasure in the place of בו in another ancient MS.

Ibid. Yea over all—] For כי, the ancient versions, except Vulg. seem to have read י. כי may perhaps be a mistake for בו or בה above-mentioned. It is not necessary in this place.

13—18. Over the land of my people—] This description of impending distress belongs to other times than that of Senacherib’s invasion, from which they were so soon delivered. It must at least extend to the ruin of the country and city by the Chaldeans. And the promise of blessings, which follows, was not fulfilled under the Mosaic dispensation; they belong to the kingdom of Messiah. Compare ver. 15. with chap. xxix. 17. and see the note there.

14. Ophel] It was a part of Mount Sion, rising higher than the rest; at the eastern extremity, near to the temple, a little to the south of it ; called by Micah, iv. 8. " Ophel of the daughter of Sion." It was naturally strong by its situation, and had a wall of its own, by which it was separated from the rest of Sion.

15. And the fruitful field] והכרמל, fifteen MSS (six ancient), and two editions ; which seems to make the noun an appellative.

19. The city shall be laid level with the plain] For ויבשפלה, Syr. reads וכשפלה. The city, probably Nineveh or Babylon : but this verse is very obscure. " Saltus ; Assyriorum regnum : civitas ; magna Assyriorum castra : " Ephraem. Syr. in loc. For וברר, a MS has וירר ; and so conjectured Archbishop Secker, referring to Zech. xi. 2.

20. who sow your seed in every watery place] Sir John Chardin's note on this place is : " This exactly answers the manner of planting rice ; for they sow it upon the water : and before sowing, while the earth is covered with water, they cause the ground to be trodden by oxen, horses, and asses, who go mid-leg deep ; and this is the way of preparing the ground for sowing. As they sow the rice on the water, they transplant it in the water : " Harmer's Observ. i. p. 280. " Rice is the food of two-thirds of mankind : " Dr Arbuthnot. " It is cultivated in most of the eastern countries : " Miller. " It is good for all, and at all times : " Sir J. Chardin, ibid. " Le riz, qui est leur principal aliment et leur froment (i. e. des Siamois), n'est jamais assez arrosé ; il croit au milieu de l'eau, et les campagnes où on le cultive ressemblent plutôt à de marêts que non pas à des terres qu'on laboure avec la charrue. Le riz a bien cette force, que quoy qu'il y ait six ou sept pieds d'eau sur lui, il pousse toujours sa tige au dessus, et le tuyau qui le porte s'élève et croit à proportion de la hauteur de l'eau qui noye son champ : " Voyage de l'Evêque de Beryte, p. 144. ; Paris, 1666.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

THE plan of the prophecy, continued in this chapter, and which is manifestly distinct from the foregoing, is peculiarly elegant. To set it in a proper light, it will be necessary to mark the transitions from one part of it to another.

In ver. 1. the Prophet addresses himself to Senacherib, briefly, but strongly and elegantly, expressing the injustice of his ambitious designs, and the sudden disappointment of them.

Ver. 2. the Jews are introduced offering up their earnest supplications to God in their present distressful condition ; with expressions of their trust and confidence in his protection.

Ver. 3. and 4. the Prophet, in the name of God, or rather God himself, is introduced addressing himself to Senacherib, and threatening him, that notwithstanding the terror which he had occasioned in the invaded countries, yet he should fall, and become an easy prey to those whom he had intended to subdue.

Ver. 5. and 6. a chorus of Jews is introduced, acknowledging the mercy and power of God, who had undertaken to protect them ; extolling it with direct opposition to the boasted power of their enemies ; and celebrating the wisdom and piety of their king Hezekiah, who had placed his confidence in the favour of God.

Then follows, ver. 7—9. a description of the distress and despair of the Jews, upon the king of Assyria's marching against Jerusalem, and sending his summons to them to surrender, after the treaty he had made with Hezekiah on the conditions of his paying, as he actually did pay to him, three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold ; 2 Kings xviii. 14—16.

Ver. 10. God himself is again introduced, declaring that he will interpose in this critical situation of affairs, and disappoint the vain designs of the enemies of his people, by discomfiting and utterly consuming them.

Then follows, ver. 11—22. still in the person of God, (which however falls at last into that of the Prophet), a description of the dreadful apprehensions of the wicked in those times of distress and imminent danger ; finely contrasted with the confidence and security of the righteous, and their trust in the promises of God, that he will be their never-failing strength and protector.

The whole concludes, in the person of the Prophet, with a description of the security of the Jews under the protection of God, and of the wretched state of Senacherib and his army, wholly discomfited, and exposed to be plundered even by the weakest of the enemy.

Much of the beauty of this passage depends on the explanation above given of ver. 3. and 4. as addressed by the Prophet, or by God himself, to Senacherib; not, as it is usually taken, as addressed by the Jews to God, ver. 3. and then, ver. 4. as addressed to the Assyrians. To set this in a clear light, it may be of use to compare it with a passage of the Prophet Joel; where, speaking of the destruction caused by the locusts, he sets in the same strong light of opposition, as Isaiah does here, the power of the enemy, and the power of JEHOVAH who would destroy that enemy. Thus Isaiah, to Senacherib:

“When thou didst raise thyself up, the nations were dispersed.
ver. 3.

“But now will I arise, saith JEHOVAH;
Now will I be exalted.”

ver. 10.

And thus Joel, ii. 20, 21.

“His stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall ascend;
Though he hath done great things.
Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice;
For JEHOVAH will do great things.”

1. thou plunderer—] See note on chap. xxi. 2.

Ibid. —when thou art weary—] “כנלתך, alibi non extat in s. s. nisi f. Job xv. 29. —simplicius est legere כבלתך. Vid. Capell. nec repugnat Vitranga. Vid. Dan. ix. 24. כלה, התיים.” SECKER.

2. our strength—] For זרעם, Syr. Chald. Vulg. read זרעני, in the first person of the pronoun, not the third: the edition of Felix Pratensis has זרעתינו in the margin.

3. From thy terrible voice—] For המון, LXX and Syr. read אמין; whom I follow.

6. —thy treasure—] Ο θησαυρος σου, Sym. He had in his copy אצרך, not אצרו.

7. —the mighty men raise a grievous cry] Three MSS read אראלים; that is, lions of God, or strong lions: so they called valiant men heroes; which appellation the Arabians and Persians still use. See Bochart, Hieroz. Part I. lib. iii. cap. 1. “Mahomet ayant reconnu Hamzeh son oncle pour homme de courage et de valeur, lui donne le titre ou surnom d’Assad Allah, qui signifie, le Lion de Dieu:” D’Herbelot, p. 427. And for חצה, Syr. and Chald. read קשה; whom I follow. Chald. Syr. Aquila, Sym. and Theod. read אראה להם, or יראה; with what meaning, is not clear.

9. —are stripped—] LXX, φανερα εσται they read ונערה.

11. And my spirit—] “For רוחכם, read רוחי כמו:”

Where the latter line only varies the expression of the former. And our blessed Saviour reasons with the Jews on the same principle: "Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins are forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?" Mark ii. 9. See also Matt. viii. 17. Isa. liii. 4. "Qui locus Isaiaë, 1 Pet. ii. 24. refertur ad remissionem peccatorum: hic vero ad sanationem morborum, quia ejusdem potentiaë et bonitatis est utrumque præstare; et, quia peccatis remissis, et morbi, qui fructus sunt peccatorum, pelluntur:" Wetstein on Matt. viii. 17.

That this prophecy was exactly fulfilled, I think we may gather from the history of this great event given by the Prophet himself. It is plain that Hezekiah, by his treaty with Senacherib, by which he agreed to pay him three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold, had stripped himself of his whole treasure: he not only gave him all the silver and gold that was in his own treasury, and in that of the temple, but was even forced to cut off the gold from the doors of the temple and from the pillars, with which he had himself overlaid them, to satisfy the demands of the king of Assyria: but after the destruction of the Assyrian army we find, that he "had exceeding much riches, and that he made himself treasuries for silver, and for gold, and for precious stones," &c.; 2 Chron. xxxii. 27. He was so rich, that out of pride and vanity he displayed his wealth to the ambassadors from Babylon. This cannot be otherwise accounted for, than by the prodigious spoil that was taken on the destruction of the Assyrian army.

CHAPTERS XXXIV. & XXXV.

THESE two chapters make one distinct prophecy; an entire, regular, and beautiful poem, consisting of two parts: the first containing a denunciation of Divine vengeance against the enemies of the people or church of God; the second describing the flourishing state of the church of God, consequent upon the execution of those judgments. The event foretold is represented as of the highest importance, and of universal concern: all nations are called upon to attend to the declaration of it; and the wrath of God is denounced against all the nations, that is, all those that had provoked to anger the defender of the cause of Sion. Among those, Edom is particularly specified. The principal provocation of Edom was their insulting the Jews in their distress, and joining against them with their enemies the Chaldeans: see Amos i. 11. Ezek. xxv. 12. xxxv. 15. Psal. cxxxvii. 7. Accordingly the Edomites were, together with the rest of the neighbouring nations, ravaged and laid waste by Nebuchadnezzar: see Jer. xxv. 15—26. Mal. i. 3, 4.; and see Marsham, Can. Chron. Sæc. xviii. who calls this the age of the destruction of cities. The general devastation spread through all these countries by Nebuchadnezzar, may be the event which the Prophet has primarily in view in the xxxivth chapter; but this event, as far as we have any account of it in history, seems by no means to come up to the terms of the prophecy, or to justify so high-wrought and so terrible a description. And it is not easy to discover what connexion the extremely flourishing state of the church or people of God, described in the next chapter, could have with those events; and how the former could be the consequence of the latter, as it is there represented to be. By a figure very common in the prophetic writings, any city, or people, remarkably distinguished as enemies of the people and kingdom of God, is put for those enemies in general. This seems here to be the case with Edom and Botsra. It seems therefore reasonable to suppose, with many learned expositors, that this prophecy has a further view to events still future; to some great revolutions to be effected in later times, antecedent to that more perfect state of the kingdom of God upon earth, and serving to introduce it, which the Holy Scriptures warrant us to expect.

That the xxxvth chapter has a view beyond any thing that could be the immediate consequence of those events, is plain from every part, especially from the middle of it, ver. 5, 6.; where the miraculous works wrought by our blessed Saviour are so clearly specified, that we cannot avoid making the application. And our Saviour himself has moreover plainly referred to this very passage as speaking of him and his works: Matt. xi. 4, 5. He bids the disciples of John to go and report to their master the things which they heard and saw; that the blind received their sight, the lame walked, and the deaf heard; and leaves it to him to draw the conclusion in answer to his inquiry, whether he who performed the very works which the Prophets foretold should be performed by the Messiah, was not indeed the Messiah himself? And where are these works so distinctly marked by any of the Prophets as in this place? and how could they be marked more distinctly? To these the strictly literal interpretation of the Prophet's words directs us. According to the allegorical interpretation they may have a further view: This part of the prophecy may run parallel with the former, and relate to the future advent of Christ; to the conversion of the Jews, and their restitution to their land; to the extension and purification of the Christian faith;—events predicted in the Holy Scriptures as preparatory to it.

1. And attend unto me—] A MS adds in this line the word אֵלַי, unto me, after לְאַמִּים; which seems to be genuine.

4. And all the host of heaven—] See note on chap. xxiv. 21. and De S. Poesi Hebræorum Præl. ix.

5. For my sword is made bare in the heaven] There seems to be some impropriety in this, according to the present reading, “my sword is made drunken, or is bathed, in the heavens;” which forestalls, and expresses not in its proper place, what belongs to the next verse: for the sword of JEHOVAH was not to be bathed or glutted with blood in the heavens, but in Botsra and the land of Edom: In the heavens it was only prepared for slaughter. To remedy this, Archbishop Secker proposes to read, for בְּדָמַם, בְּשָׁמַם; referring to Jer. xlv. 10. But even this is premature, and not in its proper place. The Chaldee, for רוּחָה, תְּחַגְלִי, shall be revealed, or disclosed: perhaps he read תְּרִאָה, or נִרְאָה. Whatever reading, different I presume from the present, he might find in his copy, I follow the sense which he has given of it.

6. For JEHOVAH celebrateth a sacrifice] Ezekiel has manifestly imitated this place of Isaiah: he hath set forth the great leaders and princes of the adverse powers under the same emblems of goats, bulls, rams, fatlings, &c. and has added to the boldness of the imagery, by introducing God as summoning all the fowls of the air, and all the beasts of the field, and bidding them to the feast which he has prepared for them by the slaughter of the enemies of his people:—

“And thou, son of man,

Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH:

Say to the bird of every wing,
 And to every beast of the field,
 Assemble yourselves, and come ;
 Gather together from every side,
 To the sacrifice which I make for you,
 A great slaughter on the mountains of Israel.
 And ye shall eat flesh and drink blood :
 The flesh of the mighty shall ye eat,
 And the blood of the lofty of the earth shall ye drink ;
 Of rams, of lambs, and of goats,
 Of bullocks, all of them the fat ones of Basan :
 And ye shall eat fat, till ye are cloyed,
 And drink blood, till ye are drunken ;
 Of my slaughter, which I have slain for you."

Ezek. xxxix. 16, 17.

The sublime author of the Revelation (chap. xix. 17, 18.) has taken this image from Ezekiel, rather than from Isaiah.

7. —with their blood] מִדָּמָם : so an ancient MS, Syr. and Chald.

8. —the defender of the cause of Sion] אֲדֹנָי, דִּין, דִּין, a judge ; so from רִיב, רִיב, an advocate, or defender : Judici Sionis, Syr.

11. —over her scorched plains] The word חֲרִיבָה, joined to the 12th verse, embarrasses it, and makes it inexplicable. At least I do not know that any one has yet made out the construction, or given any tolerable explication of it. I join it to the 11th verse, and supply a letter or two, which seem to have been lost. Fifteen MSS (five ancient), and two editions, read חֲרִיבָה. The first printed edition of 1486, I think nearer to the truth, חֲרִיבָה חֲרִיבָה. I read בחֲרִיבָה, or עַל חֲרִיבָה : see Jer. xvii. 6. A MS has חֲרִיבָה, and the Syriac reads חֲרִיבָה, gaudium, joining it to the two preceding words ; which he likewise reads differently, but without improving the sense. However, his authority is clear for dividing the verses, as they are here divided. I read שָׁם as a noun. They shall boast, יִקְרְאוּ ; see Prov. xx. 6.

13. And in her palaces shall spring up—] וְעָלָה בְּאַרְמֹנֶיהָ ; so read all the ancient versions.

15. Every one her mate] A MS adds אַל after אִשָּׁה, which seems necessary to the construction ; and so Syr. and Vulg. Another MS adds in the same place אֵת, which is equivalent.

16. For the mouth of JEHOVAH] הוּא, five MSS (three ancient) read יְהוָה, and another is so corrected : so likewise LXX. Two editions have צום, and so LXX and Vulg.; and a MS has קבצם, with the masculine pronoun instead of the feminine: and so in the next verses it is להם, instead of להן, in fourteen MSS, six of them ancient.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1. —shall be glad.] יִשְׁשׂוּם: In a MS the ם seems to have been added; and שום is upon a rasure in another. None of the ancient versions acknowledge it: it seems to have been a mistake arising from the next word's beginning with the same letter. Sixteen MSS have יִשְׁשׂוּם, and five MSS יִשְׁשׂם.

2. The well-watered plain of Jordan.] For יִרְדֵּן, the LXX read יִרְדֵּן; τα εὐχρηστὰ πεδία Ἰορδάνου. Four MSS read גִּלְתָּ; see Joshua xv. 19. irrigua Jordani; Houbigant: גִּירָתָּ, ripa Jordani; Kennicott. See De S. Poesi Hebr. Prælect. xx. note.

Ibid. For לָהּ, to it, nine MSS read לָךְ, to thee. See ibid.

7. —the glowing sand] שֶׁרֶב: This word is Arabic as well as Hebrew, expressing in both languages the same thing—the glowing sandy plain, which in the hot countries at a distance has the appearance of water. It occurs in the Koran, chap. xxiv. “But as to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain; which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until, when he cometh thereto, he findeth it to be nothing.” Mr Sale’s note on this place is:—“The Arabic word serab signifies that false appearance which in the eastern countries is often seen in sandy plains about noon, resembling a large lake of water in motion, and is occasioned by the reverberation of the sunbeams: [‘by the quivering undulating motion of that quick succession of vapours and exhalations, which are extracted by the powerful influence of the sun;’ Shaw, Trav. p. 378.] It sometimes tempts thirsty travellers out of their way, but deceives them, when they come near, either going forward, (for it always appears at the same distance), or quite vanishes.” Q. Curtius has mentioned it:—“Arenas vapor æstivi solis accendit;—camporumque non alia, quam vasti et profundi æquoris species est;” lib. vii. cap. 5. Dr Hyde gives us the precise meaning and derivation of the word:—“Dictum nomen [Barca] הַבְּרָקָה, splendorem, seu splendentem regio- nem notat; cum ea regio radiis solaribus tam copiose collustratur, ut reflexum ab arenis lumen adeo intense fulgens, a longinquo spectantibus, ad instar corporis solaris, aquarum speciem referat; et hinc arenarum splendor et radiatio (ex lingua Persica petito nomine) dicitur serab, i. e. aquæ superficies, seu superficialis aquarum species:” Annot. in Peritsol. cap. 2.

Ibid. —shall spring forth—] The ה, in רבצה, seems to have been at first ם in MS Bodl.; whence Dr Kennicott concludes it should be רבצים. But instead of this word, Syr. Vulg. and Chald. read some word signifying to grow, spring up, or abound; perhaps פרצה, or פרצו; or פרץ; or הוציר, as Houbigant reads.

8. And a highway] The word ודרך is by mistake added to the first member of the sentence from the beginning of the following member: sixteen MSS (seven ancient) have it but once; so likewise Syr.

Ibid. —err therein] A MS adds בו, which seems necessary to the sense: and so Vulg. per eam.

Ibid. But He shall be with them walking—] That is, God; see ver. 4. “Who shall dwell among them, and set them an example, that they should follow his steps.” Our old English versions translated the place to this purpose: our last translators were misled by the authority of the Jews, who have absurdly made a division of the verses in the midst of the sentence, thereby destroying the construction and the sense.

9. Neither shall he be found there] Three MSS read ולא, adding the conjunction; and so likewise LXX and Vulg. And four MSS (one ancient) read ימצא, the verb, as it certainly ought to be, in the masculine form.

For further remarks on the two foregoing chapters, see De S. Poesi Hebr. Prælect. xx.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

THE history of the invasion of Senacherib, and of the miraculous destruction of his army, which makes the subject of so many of Isaiah’s prophecies, is very properly inserted here, as affording the best light to many parts of those prophecies; and as almost necessary to introduce the prophecy in the xxxviith chapter, being the answer of God to Hezekiah’s prayer, which could not be properly understood without it. We find the same narrative in the second book of Kings, chapters xviii. xix. xx.; and these chapters of Isaiah, xxxvi. xxxvii. xxxviii. xxxix. for much the most part, (the account of the sickness of Hezekiah only excepted), are but a different copy of that narration. The difference of the two copies is little more than what has manifestly arisen from the mistakes of transcribers: they mutually correct each other, and most of the mistakes may be perfectly rectified by a collation of the two copies, with the assistance of the ancient versions. Some few sentences, or members of sentences, are omitted in this copy of Isaiah, which are found in the other copy in the book of Kings. Whether these omissions were made by design or by mistake, may be doubted: these therefore I have not inserted in the translation; I shall only report them in the Notes.

3. Then came out unto him] Before these words, the other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 18. adds ויקראו אל המלך, “and they demanded audience of the king.”

5. Thou hast said] Fourteen MSS (three ancient) have it in the second person, אמרת; and so the other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 20.

6. —in Egypt] MS Bodl. adds מלך, the king of Egypt: and so perhaps Chald. might read.

7. But if ye say] Two ancient MSS have תאמרו in the plural number: so likewise LXX, Chald. and the other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 22.

Ibid. only before this altar—] See 2 Chron. xxxii. 12.

12. destined to eat their own dung] לאכל, “that they may eat,” as our translation literally renders it. But Syr. reads מאכל, “that they may not eat,” perhaps rightly; and afterward ומשתהו, or ושתהו, to the same purpose.

17. —and of vineyards] The other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 32. adds here, “a land of oil-olive, and of honey; that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he seduceth you.”

19. —of Sepharcaim—] The other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 34. adds, of “Henah and Ivah.”

Ibid. have they delivered] ובי, the copulative is not expressed here by LXX, Syr. Vulg. and three MSS; nor is it in the other copy; Ibid. Houbigant reads הבי, with the interrogative particle: a probable conjecture, which the ancient versions, above quoted, seem to favour.

21. But the people held their peace] The word העם, the people, is supplied from the other copy; and is authorized by a MS, which inserts it after אתו.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

7. I will infuse a spirit into him] “נתון בו רוח” never signifies any thing but putting a spirit into a person; this was πνευμα δυνάμει: SECKER.

9. he sent messengers again] The word וישמע, (and he heard), which occurs the second time in this verse, is repeated by mistake from the beginning of the verse. It is omitted in an ancient MS. It is a mere tautology, and embarrasses the sense. The true reading, instead of it, is ישב, which the LXX read in this place, ἀπεστρεψεν, and which is preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 9. “He returned and sent”—that is, according to the Hebrew idiom, “he sent again.”

14. —and read them] ויקראם, so MS Bodl. in this place; and so the other copy; instead of ויקראהו, and read it.

Ibid. —and spread them] ויפרשהו; הו is upon a rasure in a MS; which probably was at first ה. The same mistake as in the foregoing note.

15. —before JEHOVAH] That is, in the sanctuary. For אל, Syr. Chald. and the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 15. read לפני.

18. —the nations—] הארצות, the lands: instead of this word, which destroys the sense, ten MSS (one ancient) have here גוים, nations; which is undoubtedly the true reading, being preserved also in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 17. Another MS suggests another method of rectifying the sense in this place, by reading מלכם, their king, instead of ארצם, their land; but it ought to be מלכיהם, “all the countries and their kings.”

20. Save us, we beseech thee—] The supplicating particle נא is supplied here from eighteen MSS (three ancient), and from the other copy.

Ibid. —that thou JEHOVAH art the only God] The word אלהים, God, is lost here in the Hebrew text, but preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 19. Syr. and LXX seem here to have had in their copies אלהים, instead of יהוה.

21. Then Isaiah sent unto Hezekiah] Syr. and LXX understand and render the verb passively, was sent.

Ibid. —I have heard] שמעתי : this word, necessary to the sense, is lost in this place out of the Hebrew text. A MS has it written above the line in a later hand. LXX and Syr. found it in their copies; and it is preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 20.

23. —against the Holy One of Israel] For אל, the other copy has על, rather more properly.

24. By thy messengers—] The text has עבדיך, thy servants: but the true reading seems to be מלאכיו, thy messengers, as in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 23.; and as LXX and Syr. found it in their copies in this place.

Ibid. —his extreme retreats] The text has מרום, the highth; which seems to have been taken by mistake from the line but one above. A MS has here מלון, the lodge, or retreat; which is the word in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 23.; and I think is the true reading.

25. —strange waters] The word זרים, strange, lost out of the Hebrew text in this place, is supplied from the other copy. A MS supplies the word רבים, many, instead of it.

Ibid. all the canals of fenced places] The principal cities of Egypt, the scene of his late exploits, were chiefly defended by deep moats, canals, or large lakes, made by labour and art, with which they were surrounded. See Harmer's Observ. ii. p. 304. Claudian introduces Alaric boasting of his conquests in the same extravagant manner :

“Subsidere nostris

Sub pedibus montes; arescere vidimus amnes.—

Fregi Alpes, galeisque Padum victricibus hausì.”

De Bello Getic. 526.

26. warlike nations] גלים נצים. It is not easy to give a satisfactory account of these two words; which have greatly embarrassed all the interpreters, ancient and modern. For גלים, I read גוים, as the LXX do in this place, γοις. The word נצים, Vulg. renders in this place compugnantium; in the parallel place, 2 Kings xix. 25. pugnantium, and LXX, μαχόμενοι, fighting, warlike. This rendering is as well authorized as any other that I know of, and, with the reading of LXX, perfectly clears up the construction.

27. corn blasted] שרומה. It does not appear that there is any good authority for this word. The true reading seems to be שרפה, as it is in four MSS (two ancient), here, and in the other copy.

29. I will put my hook in thy nose] “Et frænum meum :

Jonathan vocem מֶחֱג interpretedatus est זָמַם, i. e. annulum, sive uncum, eumque ferreum, quem infigunt naribus camelæ: eoque trahitur, quoniam illa feris motibus agitur: et hoc est, quod discimus in Talmude; et camela cum annulo narium: scilicet, egreditur die Sabbathi:” Jarchi in 2 Reg. xix. 28. “Ponam circulum in naribus tuis:” Hieron. Just as at this day they put a ring into the nose of the bear, the buffalo, and other wild beasts, to lead them, and to govern them when they are unruly.

35. And the angel—] Before “the angel,” the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 35. adds, “it came to pass the same night, that”——

The Prophet Hosea has given a plain prediction of this miraculous deliverance of the kingdom of Judah:

“And to the house of Judah I will be tenderly merciful:
And I will save them by JEHOVAH their God.
And I will not save them by the bow;
Nor by sword, nor by battle;
By horses, nor by horsemen.”

Hosea i. 7.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

2. Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall] The furniture of an eastern divan or chamber, either for the reception of company or for private use, consists chiefly of carpets spread on the floor in the middle, and of sophas or conches ranged on one or more sides of the room, on a part raised somewhat above the floor. On these they repose themselves in the day, and sleep at night. It is to be observed, that the corner of the room is the place of honour. Dr Pococke, when he was introduced to the Sheik of Furshout, found him sitting in the corner of his room. He describes another Arab Sheik “as sitting in a corner of a large green tent, pitched in the middle of an encampment of Arabs; and the Bey of Girge as placed on a sopha in a corner to the right as one entered the room:” Harmer’s Obs. ii. p. 60. Lady Mary W. Montague, giving an account of a visit which she made to the Kahya’s lady at Adrianople, says, “She ordered cushions to be given me, and took care to place me in the corner, which is the place of honour:” Letter xxxiii. The reason of this seems to be, that the person so placed is distinguished, and in a manner separated from the rest of the company, and as it were guarded by the wall on each side. We are to suppose Hezekiah's couch placed in the same situation; in which, turning on either side, he must turn his face to the wall; by which he would withdraw himself from those who were attending upon him in his apartment, in order to address his private prayer to God.

4, 5. The words in the translation included within crotchets are supplied from the parallel place, 2 Kings xx. 4, 5. to make the narration more perfect. I have also taken the liberty, with Houbigant, of bringing forward the two last verses of this chapter, and inserting them in their proper places of the narration with the same mark. Kimchi's note on these two verses is as follows: "This and the following verse belong not to the Writing of Hezekiah: and I see no reason why they are written here after the Writing; for their right place is above, after And I will protect this city, ver. 6. And so they stand in the book of Kings;" 2 Kings xx. 7, 8. The narration of this chapter seems to be in some parts an abridgment of that of 2 Kings xx. The abridger, having finished his extract here with the 11th verse, seems to have observed, that the 7th and 8th verses of 2 Kings xx. were wanted to complete the narration: he therefore added them at the end of the chapter, after he had inserted the song of Hezekiah, probably with marks for their insertion in their proper places; which marks were afterwards neglected by transcribers: or a transcriber might omit them by mistake, and add them at the end of the chapter with such marks. Many transpositions are, with great probability, to be accounted for in the same way.

6. I will protect this city—] The other copy, 2 Kings xx. 6. adds, "for mine own sake, and for the sake of David my servant;" and the sentence seems somewhat abrupt without it.

8. by which the sun is gone down—] For בשמש, LXX, Syr. Chald. read השמש: Houbigant. In the history of this miracle in the book of Kings, 2 Kings xx. 9—11. there is no mention at all made of the sun, but only of the going backward of the shadow; which might be effected by a supernatural refraction. The first ὁ ἡλίου in this verse is omitted in LXX, MS Pachom.

9. The writing of Hezekiah.] Here the book of Kings deserts us, the song of Hezekiah not being inserted in it. Another copy of this very obscure passage (obscure not only from the concise poetical style, but because it is probably very incorrect) would have been of great service. The MSS and ancient versions, especially the latter, will help us to get through some of the many difficulties which we meet with in it.

11. JEHOVAH—] יה יה seems to be יהוה in MS Bodl. and it was so at first written in another: so Syr. See Houbigant.

12. —a shepherd's tent—] רעי is put for רעה, say the Rabbins; Sal. b. Melec on the place: but much more probably is written imperfectly for רעים. See note on chap. v. 1.

Ibid. My life is cut off—] קפרתי: this verb is rendered passively, and in the third person, by Syr. Chald. Vulg.

13. The last line of the foregoing verse, מיום עד לילה, תשלימי, “In the course of the day thou wilt finish my web,” is not repeated at the end of this verse in the Syriac version; and a MS omits it. It seems to have been inserted a second time in the Hebrew text by mistake.

Ibid. I roared—] For שויתי, the Chaldee has נהמית: he read שאגתי, the proper term for the roaring of a lion; often applied to the deep groaning of men in sickness: see Psal. xxii. 2. xxxii. 3. xxxviii. 9. Job iii. 24. The Masoretes divide the sentence as I have done, taking בארי, like a lion, into the first member; and so likewise LXX.

14. Like the swallow—] כסים; so read two MSS, Theod. and Hieron.

Ibid. —mine eyes fail—] For רלו, the LXX read בלו, εἰς τὸ λυπεῖσθαι. Compare Psal. lxi. 4. cxix. 82. 123. Lam. ii. 11. iv. 17. in the Hebrew and in LXX.

Ibid. —O Lord—] For יהוה, thirty MSS and eight editions read אדני.

Ibid. —contend thou—] עשקה, with ש, Jarchi. This sense of the word is established by Gen. xxvi. 20. “he called the name of the well עשק, Esek, because they strove with him:” התעשקו, equivalent to יריבו at the beginning of the verse.

15. —will I reflect—] אדרכ, recogitabo, Vulg. reputabo, Hieron. in loc.

16. For this cause shall it be declared—] Ημερῶν αὐτῆς γὰρ ἀποκαλύψεται, καὶ αὐτῶν τῶν ἡμερῶν, LXX. They read in their copies, עליה יחנו לך ורחי רוחי; not very different from the present text, from which all the ancient versions vary. They entirely omit two words, ולכל בהן; as to which there is some variation in the MSS. A MS has וּבָכַל, two others וּכַל, and ten MSS have בָּהֶם.

Ibid. —hast prolonged my life.] A MS and the Babylonish Talmud read וַתַּחַיֵּינִי; and so the ancient versions. It must necessarily be in the second person.

17. My anguish is changed into ease—] מָר לִי מָר, “mutata mihi est amaritudo.” Paronomasia; a figure, which the Prophet frequently admits: I do not always note it, because it cannot ever be preserved in the translation, and the sense seldom depends upon it. But here it perfectly clears up the great obscurity of the passage. See Lowth on the place.

Ibid. Thou hast rescued—] חֲשַׁכְתָּ, with כ instead of ק; so LXX and Vulg.: Houbigant. See Chappelow on Job xxxiii. 18.

Ibid. —from perdition—] מוֹשַׁחַת בְּלִי, ἡ ἀπὸ μὴ ἀπολῆται, LXX; ut non periret, Vulg.; perhaps inverting the order of the words. See Houbigant.

19. —thy truth] אֱלֵ אֱמֶתָךְ. A MS omits אֱל; and instead of אֱל, an ancient MS and one edition read אֶת. The same mistake as in Psal. ii. 7.

21. Let them take a lump of figs: and they bruised them—] God, in effecting this miraculous cure, was pleased to order the use of means not improper for that end. “Folia, et, quæ non maturuere, fici, strumis illinuntur, omnibusque quæ emollienda sunt discutiendave:” Plin. Nat. Hist. xxiii. 7. “Ad discutienda ea, quæ in corporis parte aliqua coierunt, maxime possunt—ficus arida,” &c.: Celsus, v. 11.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

HITHERTO the copy of this history in the second book of Kings has been much the most correct: in this chapter, that in Isaiah has the advantage. In the two first verses two mistakes in the other copy are to be corrected from this: for חֲזַקִּיהוּ, Hezekiah, read וַיִּחְזַק, and was recovered; and for וַיִּשְׁמַע, he heard, read וַיִּשְׂמַח, he rejoiced.

1. —and ambassadors.] The LXX add here καὶ πρεσβυτεῖς; that is, וּמְלָאכִים, and ambassadors; which word seems necessary to the sense, though omitted in the Hebrew text both here and in the other copy, 2 Kings xx. 12. For the subsequent narration refers to them all along; “these men, whence came they?" &c. plainly supposing them to have been personally mentioned before. See Houbigant.

6. —to Babylon—] בבלה; so two MSS (one ancient); rightly without doubt, as the other copy, 2 Kings xx. 17. has it.

8. And Hezekiah said—] The nature of Hezekiah's crime, and his humiliation on the message of God to him by the Prophet, is more expressly declared by the author of the book of Chronicles: "But Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him; for his heart was lifted up: therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem. Notwithstanding, Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart, (both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem), so that the wrath of the Lord came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah. And Hezekiah prospered in all his works. Howbeit, in the business of the ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land, God left him, to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart;" 2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26. 30, 31.

CHAPTER XL.

THE course of prophecies which follow from hence to the end of the book, and which taken together constitute the most elegant part of the sacred writings of the Old Testament; interspersed also with many passages of the highest sublimity; was probably delivered in the latter part of the reign of Hezekiah. The Prophet in the foregoing chapter had delivered a very explicit declaration of the impending dissolution of the kingdom, and of the captivity of the royal house of David, and of the people, under the kings of Babylon. As the subject of his subsequent prophecies was to be chiefly of the consolatory kind, he opens them with giving a promise of the restoration of the kingdom, and the return of the people from that captivity, by the merciful interposition of God in their favour. But the views of the Prophet are not confined to this event. As the restoration of the royal family, and of the tribe of Judah, which would otherwise have soon become undistinguished, and have been irrecoverably lost, was necessary, in the design and order of Providence, for the fulfilling of God's promises of establishing a more glorious and an everlasting kingdom under the Messiah, to be born of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David; the Prophet connects these two events together, and hardly ever treats of the former without throwing in some intimations of the latter; and sometimes is so fully possessed with the glories of the future more remote kingdom, that he seems to leave the more immediate subject of his commission almost out of the question.

Indeed this evangelical sense of the prophecy is so apparent, and stands forth in so strong a light, that some interpreters cannot see that it has any other; and will not allow the prophecy to have any relation at all to the return from the captivity of Babylon. It may be useful, therefore, to examine more attentively the train of the Prophet's ideas, and to consider carefully the images under which he displays his subject. He hears a crier giving orders by solemn proclamation to prepare the way of the Lord in the wilderness; to remove all obstructions before JEHOVAH marching through the desert; through the wild, uninhabited, unpassable country. The deliverance of God's people from the Babylonish captivity is considered by him as parallel to the former deliverance of them from the Egyptian bondage. God was then represented as their king, leading them in person through the vast deserts which lay in their way to the promised land of Canaan. It is not merely for JEHOVAH himself that in both cases the way was to be prepared, and all obstructions to be removed; but for JEHOVAH marching in person at the head of his people. Let us first see how this idea is pursued by the sacred poets who treat of the Exodus, which is a favourite subject with them, and affords great choice of examples:

“When Israel came out of Egypt;
The house of Jacob, from the barbarous people;
Judah was his sanctuary,
Israel his dominion.” Psal. cxiv. 1, 2.

“JEHOVAH his God is with him;
And the shout of a king is among them:
God brought them out of Egypt.” Numb. xxiii. 21, 22.

“Make a highway for him that rideth through the deserts:
O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people;
When thou marchedst through the wilderness,
The heavens dropped—” Psal. lxxviii. 4, 7.

Let us now see how Isaiah treats the subject of the return of the people from Babylon: they were to march through the wilderness with JEHOVAH at their head, who was to lead them, to smooth the way before them, and to supply them with water in the thirsty desert; with perpetual allusion to the Exodus:

“Come ye forth from Babylon, flee ye from the land of the Chaldeans with the voice of joy:

Publish ye this, and make it heard; utter it forth even to the end of the earth:

Say ye, JEHOVAH hath redeemed his servant Jacob:

They thirsted not in the deserts, through which he made them go;

Waters from the rock he caused to flow for them;

Yea he clave the rock, and forth gushed the waters.”

Chap. xlvi. 20, 21.

“Remember not the former things;

And the things of ancient times regard not:”

(That is, the deliverance from Egypt):

“Behold, I make a new thing;

Even now shall it spring forth: will ye not regard it?

Yea I will make in the wilderness a way;

In the desert, streams of water.” Chap. xliii. 18, 19.

“But he that trusteth in me shall inherit the land,

And shall possess my holy mountain.

Then will I say, Cast up, cast up the causeway; make clear the way;

Remove every obstruction from the road of my people.”

Chap. lvii. 13, 14.

“How beautiful appear on the mountains

The feet of the joyful messenger, of him that announceth peace;

Of the joyful messenger of good tidings, of him that announceth salvation;

Of him that sayeth to Sion, Thy God reigneth!

All thy watchmen lift up their voice, they shout together;

For face to face shall they see, when JEHOVAH returneth to Sion.

Verily not in haste shall ye go forth;

And not by flight shall ye march along;

For JEHOVAH shall march in your front;

And the God of Israel shall bring up your rear.”

Chap. lii. 7, 8. 12.

Babylon was separated from Judea by an immense tract of country, which was one continued desert; that large part of Arabia called very properly Deserta. It is mentioned in history as a remarkable occurrence, that Nebuchadnezzar, having received the news of the death of his father, in order to make the utmost expedition in his journey to Babylon from Egypt and Phœnicia, set out with a few attendants, and passed through this desert. Berosus, apud Joseph. Antiq. x. 11. This was the nearest way homewards for the Jews; and whether they actually returned by this way or not, the first thing that would occur on the proposal or thought of their return, would be the difficulty of this almost impracticable passage. Accordingly the proclamation for the preparation of the way is the most natural idea, and the most obvious circumstance, by which the Prophet could have opened his subject.

These things considered, I have not the least doubt that the return of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon is the first, though not the principal, thing in the Prophet's view. The redemption from Babylon is clearly foretold; and at the same time is employed as an image to shadow out a redemption of an infinitely higher and more important nature. I should not have thought it necessary to employ so many words in endeavouring to establish what is called the literal sense of this prophecy, which I think cannot be rightly understood without it, had I not observed, that many interpreters of the first authority, in particular the very learned Vitringa, have excluded it entirely.

Yet obvious and plain as I think this literal sense is, we have nevertheless the irrefragable authority of John the Baptist, and of our blessed Saviour himself, as recorded by all the Evangelists, for explaining this exordium of the prophecy of the opening of the gospel by the preaching of John, and of the introducing of the kingdom of Messiah; who was to effect a much greater deliverance of the people of God, Gentiles as well as Jews, from the captivity of sin and the dominion of death. And this we shall find to be the case in many subsequent parts also of this prophecy, where passages manifestly relating to the deliverance of the Jewish nation, effected by Cyrus, are with good reason, and upon undoubted authority, to be understood of the redemption wrought for mankind by Christ.

If the literal sense of this prophecy, as above explained, cannot be questioned, much less surely can the spiritual; which, I think, is allowed on all hands, even by Grotius himself. If both are to be admitted, here is a plain example of the mystical allegory, or double sense, as it is commonly called, of prophecy; which the sacred writers of the New Testament clearly suppose, and according to which they frequently frame their interpretation of passages of the Old Testament. Of the foundation and properties of this sort of allegory, see De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xi.

2. Blessings double to the punishment] It does not seem reconcileable to our notions of the divine justice, which always punishes less than our iniquities deserve, to suppose that God had punished the sins of the Jews in double proportion: and it is more agreeable to the tenor of this consolatory message, to understand it as a promise of ample recompense for the effects of past displeasure, on the reconciliation of God to his returning people. To express this sense of the passage, which the words of the original will very well bear, it was necessary to add a word or two in the version to supply the elliptical expression of the Hebrew. Compare chap. lxi. 7. Job xlii. 10. Zech. ix. 12. חטאת signifies punishment for sin, Lam. iii. 39. Zech. xiv. 19.

3. A voice crieth: In the wilderness—] The idea is taken from the practice of eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered upon an expedition, or took a journey, especially through desert and unpractised countries, sent harbingers before them to prepare all things for their passage, and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments. The officers appointed to superintend such preparations the Latins call Stratores. “Ipse (Johannes Baptista) se stratorem vocat Messie, cujus esset alta et elata voce homines in desertis locis habitantes ad itinera et vias Regi mox venturo sternendas et reficiendas hortari:” Mosheim, Instituta Majora, p. 96.

Diodorus’s account of Semiramis’s marches into Media and Persia, will give us a clear notion of the preparation of the way for a royal expedition: “In her march to Ecbatane she came to the Zarcean mountain; which extending many furlongs, and being full of craggy precipices and deep hollows, could not be passed without taking a great compass about. Being therefore desirous of leaving an everlasting memorial of herself, as well as of shortening the way, she ordered the precipices to be digged down, and the hollows to be filled up; and at a great expense she made a shorter and more expeditious road, which to this day is called from her the Road of Semiramis. Afterward she went into Persia, and all the other countries of Asia subject to her dominion; and wherever she went, she ordered the mountains and precipices to be levelled, raised causeways in the plain country, and at a great expense made the ways passable :” Diod. Sic. lib. ii.

The writer of the apocryphal book called Baruch expresses the same subject by the same images; either taking them from this place of Isaiah, or from the common notions of his countrymen: “For God hath appointed, that every high hill, and banks of long continuance, should be cast down, and vallies filled up, to make even the ground, that Israel may go safely in the glory of God;” chap. v. 7.

The Jewish church, to which John was sent to announce the coming of Messiah, was at that time in a barren and desert condition, unfit without reformation for the reception of her king. It was in this desert country, destitute at that time of all religious cultivation, in true piety and good works unfruitful, that John was sent to prepare the way of the Lord by preaching repentance. I have distinguished the parts of the sentence according to the punctuation of the Masoretes, which agrees best both with the literal and the spiritual sense; which the construction and parallelism of the distich in the Hebrew plainly favours; and of which the Greek of the LXX and of the Evangelists is equally susceptible.

John was born in the desert of Judea, and passed his whole life in it, till the time of his being manifested to Israel. He preached in the same desert: it was a mountainous country; however, not entirely and properly a desert, for, though less cultivated than other parts of Judea, yet it was not uninhabited: Joshua (chap. xv. 61, 62.) reckons six cities in it. We are so prepossessed with the idea of John’s living and preaching in the desert, that we are apt to consider this particular sense of his preaching as a very important and essential part of his history: whereas I apprehend this circumstance to be no otherwise important, than as giving us a strong idea of the rough character of the man, which was answerable to the place of his education; and as affording a proper emblem of the rude state of the Jewish church at that time; which was the true wilderness meant by the Prophet, in which John was to prepare the way for the coming of the Messiah.

4. The word עֶקֶב is very generally rendered crooked; but this sense of the word seems not to be supported by any good authority. Ludolphus, Comment. ad Hist. Æthiop. p. 206. says, that in the Æthiopic language it signifies clivus, locus editus; and so the Syriac version renders it in this place עֲרֹמָא, Heb. עֲרֹמָה, tumulus, acervus. Thus the parallelism would be more perfect: "the hilly country shall be made level, and the precipices a smooth plain."

5. —the salvation of our God] These words are added here by LXX: τοῦ σωτηρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ, אֵת יְשׁוּעַת אֱלֹהֵינוּ, as it is in the parallel place, chap. lii. 10. The sentence is abrupt without it, the verb wanting its object; and I think it is genuine. Our English translation has supplied the word it, which is equivalent to this addition from LXX.

This omission in the Hebrew text is ancient, being prior to the Chaldee, Syriac, and Vulgate versions: but the words stand in all the copies of the LXX; and they are acknowledged by Luke, iii. 6.

6. its glory—] For הָדָר read הָדָר; LXX, and Vulg. and 1 Pet. i. 24.

7. this people—] So Syr. who perhaps read הָעָם הַזֶּה.

6—8. A voice sayeth, Proclaim—] To understand rightly this passage is a matter of importance; for it seems designed to give us the true key to the remaining part of Isaiah's prophecies; the general subject of which is the restoration of the people and church of God. The Prophet opens the subject with great clearness and elegance: he declares at once God's command to his messengers, (his Prophets, as the Chaldee rightly explains it), to comfort his people in captivity, to impart to them the joyful tidings that their punishment has now satisfied the divine justice, and the time of reconciliation and favour is at hand. He then introduces a harbinger giving orders to prepare the way for God leading his people from Babylon, as he did formerly from Egypt, through the wilderness; to remove all obstacles, and to clear the way for their passage. Thus far nothing more appears to be intended than a return from the Babylonish captivity; but the next words seem to intimate something much greater:

"And the glory of JEHOVAH shall be revealed;

And all flesh shall see together the salvation of our God."

He then introduces a voice commanding him to make a solemn proclamation. And what is the import of it? That the people, the flesh, is of a vain temporary nature ; that all its glory fadeth, and is soon gone ; but that the word of God endureth for ever. What is this, but a plain opposition of the flesh to the spirit ; of the carnal Israel to the spiritual ; of the temporary Mosaic economy to the eternal Christian dispensation ? You may be ready to conclude, (the Prophet may be supposed to say), by this introduction to my discourse, that my commission is only to comfort you with a promise of the restoration of your religion and polity, of Jerusalem, of the temple, and its services and worship, in all its ancient splendour : These are earthly, temporary, shadowy, fading things, which shall soon pass away, and be destroyed for ever ; these are not worthy to engage your attention, in comparison of the greater blessings, the spiritual redemption, the eternal inheritance, covered under the veil of the former, which I have it in charge to unfold unto you. The law has only a shadow of good things ; the substance is the gospel. I promise you a restoration of the former ; which, however, is only for a time, and shall be done away, according to God's original appointment : but under that image I give you a view of the latter ; which shall never be done away, but shall endure for ever. This I take to be agreeable to St Peter's interpretation of this passage of the Prophet, quoted by him 1 Pet. i. 24, 25. " All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away ; but the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." This is the same word of the Lord of which Isaiah speaks, which hath now been preached unto you by the gospel. The law and the gospel are frequently opposed to one another by St Paul under the images of flesh and spirit : " Having begun in the spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh ?" Gal. iii. 3.

7. When the wind of JEHOVAH— רוח יהוה, a wind of JEHOVAH, is a Hebraism, meaning no more than a strong wind. It is well known, that a hot wind in the East destroys at once every green thing. Compare Psal. ciii. 16. Two MSS omit the word יהוה, JEHOVAH.

9. O daughter that bringest glad tidings] That the true construction of the sentence is this, which makes Sion the receiver, not the publisher, of the glad tidings, (which latter has been the most prevailing interpretation), will, I think, very clearly appear, if we rightly consider the image itself, and the custom and common practice from which it is taken. I have added the word daughter, to express the feminine gender of the Hebrew participle, which I know not how to do otherwise in our language. And this is absolutely necessary in order to ascertain the image; for the office of announcing and celebrating such glad tidings as are here spoken of, belonged peculiarly to the women. On occasion of any great public success, a signal victory, or any other joyful event, it was usual for the women to gather together, and with music, dances, and songs, to publish and celebrate the happy news. Thus, after the passage of the Red Sea, Miriam, and all the women, with timbrels in their hands, formed a chorus, and joined the men in their triumphant song, dancing, and throwing in alternately the refrain or burthen of the song:—

“Sing ye to JEHOVAH, for he is greatly exalted;
The horse and his rider hath he cast into the sea.”

Exod. xv. 20, 21.

So Jephthah's daughter collected a chorus of virgins, and with dances and songs came out to meet her father, and to celebrate his victory; Judg. xi. 34. After David's conquest of Goliath, “all the women came out of the cities of Israel, singing and dancing, to meet Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of music;” and, forming themselves into two choruses, they sung alternately,— “Saul hath slain his thousands;

And David his ten thousands.” 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7.

And this gives us the true sense of a passage in the lxviiith Psalm, which has frequently been misunderstood;—

“JEHOVAH gave the word; (that is, the joyful news);
The women, who published the glad tidings, were a great company:

The kings of mighty armies did flee, did flee;

And even the matron, who staid at home, shared the spoil.”

The word signifying the publishers of glad tidings is the same, and expressed in the same form by the feminine participle, as in this place; and the last distich is the song which they sung. So in this place, JEHOVAH having given the word by his Prophet, the joyful tidings of the restoration of Sion, and of God's returning to Jerusalem, (see chap. lii. 8.), the women are exhorted by the Prophet to publish the joyful news with a loud voice from eminences, whence they might best be heard all over the country ; and the matter and burthen of their song was to be, “ Behold your God ! ”

10. —his reward, and the recompense of his work] That is, the reward and the recompense which he bestows, and which he will pay to his faithful servants ; this he has ready at hand with him, and holds it out before him, to encourage those who trust in him, and wait for him.

11. The nursing ewes shall he gently lead] A beautiful image, expressing, with the utmost propriety as well as elegance, the tender attention of the shepherd to his flock. That the greatest care in driving the cattle in regard to the dams and their young was necessary, appears clearly from Jacob’s apology to his brother Esau, Gen. xxxiii. 13. “ The flocks and the herds giving suck to their young are with me ; and if they should be over-driven, all the flock will die.” Which is set in a still stronger light by the following remark of Sir John Chardin : “ Their flocks (says he, speaking of those who now live in the East after the patriarchal manner) feed down the places of their encampments so quick, by the great numbers that they have, that they are obliged to remove them too often ; which is very destructive to their flocks, on account of the young ones who have not strength enough to follow : ” Harmer’s Observ. i. p. 126.

16. And Lebanon is not sufficient—] The image is beautiful and uncommon ; it has been imitated by an apocryphal writer, who however comes far short of the original :—

“ For all sacrifice is too little for a sweet savour unto thee ;
And all the fat is not sufficient for thy burnt-offering.”

Judith xvi. 16.

19. —and forgeth—] For צורף, the participle, twenty-seven MSS (five ancient), and three editions, read צרף, præter. 3d person.

21. —understood it from the foundation—] The true reading seems to be ממוסדות, to answer to מראש in the foregoing line. It follows a word ending with מ ; and out of three mems concurring, it was an easy mistake to drop the middle one.

22. —as a thin veil] “ It is usual in the summer season, and upon all occasions, when a large company is to be received, to have the court sheltered from heat, or inclemency of the weather, by a velum, umbrella or veil, as I shall call it ; which, being expanded on ropes from one side of the parapet-wall to the other, may be folded or unfolded at pleasure. The Psalmist seems to allude to some covering of this kind in that beautiful expression of spreading out the heavens like a curtain :” Shaw, Trav. p. 274.

24. If he but blow upon them] The LXX, Syr. Vulg. and MS Bodl. and another, have כס without the conjunction ו.

28. And that his understanding—] Twenty-four MSS, two editions, LXX, and Vulg. read וי, with the conjunction ו.

31. They shall put forth fresh feathers.] It has been a common and popular opinion, that the eagle lives and retains his vigour to a great age ; and that, beyond the common lot of other birds, he moults in his old age, and renews his feathers, and with them his youth. “Thou shalt renew thy youth like the eagle,” says the Psalmist, ciii. 5. ; on which place St Ambrose notes, “Aquila longam ætatem ducit, dum, vetustis plumis fatiscens, nova pennarum successione juvenescit.” Phile, De Animalibus, treating of the eagle, and addressing himself to the Emperor Michael Palæologus junior, raises his compliment upon the same notion :

Τούτου συ, βασιλεῦ, τὸν πολὺν ζωὴς βίον, ἄει νεοεργῶν, καὶ νεοατηνῶν τὴν φύσιν.

Long may'st thou live, O king ; still like the eagle

Renew thy youth, and still retain thy vigour.

To this many fabulous and absurd circumstances are added by several ancient writers and commentators on Scripture : see Bochart, Hieroz. II. ii. 1. Whether the notion of the eagle's renewing his youth is in any degree well founded or not, I need not inquire ; it is enough for a poet, whether profane or sacred, to have the authority of popular opinion to support an image introduced for illustration or ornament.

CHAPTER XLI.

1. —repair to me with new sentiments] Εγκαταλείψθεις, LXX. For החרישו, be silent, they certainly read in their copy החדישו, be renewed ; which is parallel and synonymous with החליפו, recover their strength ; that is, their strength of mind, their powers of reason ; that they may overcome those prejudices by which they have been so long held enslaved to idolatry. A MS has חר upon a rasure. The same mistake seems to have been made in this word Zeph. iii. 17. : For יהריש באהבתו, “silebit in dilectione sua,” as the Vulgate renders it, which seems not consistent with what immediately follows, “exultabit super te in laude ;” LXX and Syr. read יהריש באהבתו, “renovabitur in amore suo.”

2. —the righteous man.] The Chald. and Vulg. seem to have read צדיק. But Jerom, though his translation has justum, appears to have read צדק ; for in his comment he expresses it by justum, sive justitiam. However, I think all interpreters understand it of a person. So the LXX, in MS Pachom. εκαλῶσεν αὐτον, but the other copies have αὐτην. They are divided in ascertaining this person : some explain it of Abraham ; others of Cyrus. I rather think that the former is meant ; because the character of the righteous man, or righteousness, agrees better with Abraham than with Cyrus. Besides, immediately after the description of the success given by God to Abraham and his posterity, (who, I presume, are to be taken into the account), the idolaters are introduced as greatly alarmed at this event. Abraham was called out of the east ; and his posterity were introduced into the land of Canaan, in order to destroy the idolaters of that country ; and they were established there, on purpose to stand as a barrier against idolatry, then prevailing, and threatening to overrun the whole face of the earth. Cyrus, though not properly an idolater, or worshipper of images, yet had nothing in his character to cause such an alarm among the idolaters, ver. 5—7. Further, after having just touched upon that circumstance, the Prophet with great ease returns to his former subject, and resumes Abraham and the Israelites ; and assures them, that as God had called them and chosen them for this purpose, he would uphold and support them to the utmost, and at length give them victory over all the heathen nations, their enemies ; ver. 8—16.

Ibid. —made them like the dust—] The image is strong and beautiful ; it is often made use of by the sacred poets : see Psal. i. 4. xxxv. 5. Job xxi. 18. and by Isaiah himself in other places, chap. xvii. 13. xxix. 5. But there is great difficulty in making out the construction. The LXX read קשתם, חרבם, their sword, their bow, understanding it of the sword and bow of the conquered kings ; but this is not so agreeable to the analogy of the image, as employed in other places. The Chaldee Paraphrast and Kimchi solve the difficulty by supposing an ellipsis of לפני before those words.

It must be owned that the ellipsis is hard and unusual; but I choose rather to submit to this, than, by adhering with Vitranga to the more obvious construction, to destroy entirely both the image and the sense. But the Vulgate by gladio ejus, and arcui ejus, seems to express להרבו and לקשתו; the admission of which reading may perhaps be thought preferable to Kimchi's ellipsis.

3. —he passeth in safety] The preposition seems to have been omitted in the text by mistake: LXX and Vulg. seem to have had it in their copies; עקחץ, in pace, בשלום.

4. —and made these things] A word is here lost out of the text. It is supplied by an ancient MS, אלה, these things; and by LXX, ταυτα; and by Vulg. hæc; and by Chald. אלן.

5. —and they were terrified] Three MSS have ויחרדו, adding the conjunction ו, which restores the second member of the sentence to its true poetical form.

7. —that it shall not move] Five MSS (two ancient), and the ancient versions, add the conjunction ו, reading ולא; which seems to be right.

9. —from the extremities thereof] מאציל : signifies the arm, axilla, ala; and is used like כנף, the wing, for any thing extended from the extremity of another, or joined on to it. It is here parallel and synonymous to מקצית, from the ends, in the preceding member.

15. —a threshing wain, —a corn-drag] See note on chap. xxviii. 27, 28.

19. In the wilderness I will give the cedar] The two preceding verses express God's mercy to them in their passage through the dry deserts, in supplying them with abundant water when distressed with thirst, in allusion to the Exodus: this verse expresses the relief afforded to them, fainting with heat in their journey through that hot country, destitute of shelter, by causing shady trees, and those of the tallest and most beautiful kinds, to spring up for their defence. The apocryphal Baruch, speaking of the return from Babylon, expresses God's protection of his people by the same image: "Even the woods and every sweet smelling tree shall overshadow Israel by the commandment of God:" chap. v. 8.

20. —and may consider—] The verb ישימו, without לב added, cannot signify to apply the heart, or to attend to a thing, as Houbigant has observed: he therefore reads ישימו, they shall wonder. The conjecture is ingenious: but it is much more probable that the word לב is lost out of the text; for all the ancient versions render the phrase to the same sense as if it were fully expressed, ישימו לב; and the Chaldee renders it paraphrastically, yet still retaining the very words in his paraphrase, וישוון דחלתי על לבהון, "ut ponant timorem meum in corde suo." See also ver. 22. where the same phrase is used.

21. Produce these your mighty powers] "Accedant, inquit, idola vestra, quæ putatis esse fortissima:" Hieron. Com. in loc. I prefer this to all other interpretations of this place, and to Jerom's own translation of it, which he adds immediately after, "Afferte, si quid forte habetis." The false gods are called upon to come forth and appear in person; and to give evident demonstration of their foreknowledge and power, by foretelling future events, and exerting their power in doing good or evil.

23. —and terror] The word ונרא is written imperfectly in the Hebrew text: the Masoretes supply ה at the end; and so it is read in twenty-two MSS, and four editions: that is, ונראה, and we shall see. But the true reading seems to be ונירא, and we shall fear, with י supplied, from ירא.

24. —than nought] For מאפע, read מאפס; so Chald. and Vulg. A manifest error of the text: compare chap. xl. 17. The Rabbins acknowledge no such error; but say, that the former word signifies the same with the latter, by a change of the two letters ס and ע: Sal. b. Melec in loc.

25. —he shall trample—] For יבא, Le Clerc reads יבס, from the Chaldee, who seems to read both words. "Forte legend. ויבס, vel וירמס; sequitur ס:" SECKER. See Nahum iii. 14.

27. I first to Sion—] This verse is somewhat obscure by the transposition of the parts of the sentence, and the peculiar manner in which it is divided into two parallel lines. The verb at the end of the sentence belongs to both parts; and the phrase, Behold, they are here! is parallel to the messenger of glad tidings; and stands, like it, as the accusative case to the verb. The following paraphrase will explain the form and the sense of it: "I first, by my Prophets, give notice of these events, saying, Behold they are at hand! and I give to Jerusalem a messenger of glad tidings."

28. And among the idols—] For ומאלה, I read ומאליס with the LXX, ועל גלעסוֹם עוֹשֵׂה סִדֵּים וּמֵאֵל. See Exod. xv. 11. Isa. lvii. 5.

CHAPTER XLII.

THE Prophet having opened his subject with the preparation for the return from captivity at Babylon, and intimated that a much greater deliverance was covered under the veil of that event; proceeded to vindicate the power of God, as creator and disposer of all things; and his infinite knowledge, from his prediction of future events, and in particular of that deliverance. He went still further, and pointed out the instrument by which he should effect the redemption of his people the Jews from slavery, namely, a great conqueror, whom he would call forth from the north and the east to execute his orders. In this chapter he proceeds to the greater deliverance; and at once brings forth into full view, without throwing any veil of allegory over the subject, the Messiah. "Behold, my servant, Messiah," says the Chaldee. St Matthew has applied it directly to Christ; nor can it with any justice or propriety be applied to any other person or character whatever.

1. And he shall publish judgment] Four MSS (two ancient) add the conjunction ומשפט. See Matt. xii. 18.

The word משפט, judgment, like צדקה, righteousness, is taken in a great latitude of signification. It means rule, form, order, model, plan; rule of right, or of religion; an ordinance, institution; judicial process, cause, trial, sentence, condemnation, acquittal, deliverance, mercy, &c. It certainly means in this place the law to be published by Messiah; the institution of the gospel.

4. His force shall not be abated nor broken] "Rabbi Meir ita citat locum istum, ut post ירוץ addat בורח, robore ejus, quod hodie non comparet in textu Hebræo, sed addendum videtur, ut sensus fiat planior." Capell. Crit. Sac. p. 382. For which reason I had added it in the translation, before I observed this remark of Capellus.

6. —a covenant to the people] For עם, two MSS read עולם, the covenant of the age to come, or the everlasting covenant; which seems to give a clearer and better sense.

7. To open the eyes of the blind—] In this verse the Prophet seems to set forth the spiritual redemption, under images borrowed from the temporal deliverance.

Ibid. —and from the dungeon—] The LXX, Syr. and four MSS (one ancient), add the conjunction ומבית.

10. Ye that go down upon the sea] This seems not to belong to this place; it does not well consist with what follows, “and the fulness thereof.” They that go down upon the sea, means navigators, sailors, traders, such as do business in great waters: an idea much too confined for the Prophet, who means the sea in general, as it is used by the Hebrews, for the distant nations, the islands, the dwellers on the sea-coasts all over the world. I suspect that some transcriber had the 23d verse of Psal. cvii. running in his head, יורדי הים באניות; and wrote in this place יורדי הים instead of ירעם הים, or יריע, or ירן; “let the sea roar, or shout, or exult.” But as this is so different in appearance from the present reading, I do not take the liberty of introducing it into the translation. “Conjecerem legendum יגידו, ut ver. 12.; sed non favent versiones:” SECKER.

11. Let the desert—] The most uncultivated countries, and the most rude and uncivilized people, shall confess and celebrate with thanksgiving the blessing of the knowledge of God graciously imparted to them. By the desert is meant Arabia Deserta; by the rocky country, Arabia Petraea; by the mountains, probably those celebrated ones, Paran, Horeb, Sinai, in the same country; to which also belonged Kedar, a clan of Arabians, dwelling for the most part in tents: but there were others of them who inhabited or frequented cities and villages, as may be collected from this place of the Prophet. Pietro della Valle, speaking of the people of Arabia Deserta, says, “There is a sort of Arabs of that country called Maédi, who with their herds, of buffaloes for the most part, sometimes live in the deserts and sometimes in cities; from whence they have their name, which signifies wandering, going from place to place. They have no professed homes; nor are they properly Bedaui, or Beduui, that is Deserticoli, who are the most noble among them, and never abide within walls, but always go wandering through the open country with their black tents; nor are they properly Hhadesi, as they call those who dwell in cities and lands with fixed houses: these by the latter are esteemed ignoble and base, but by both are considered as of low condition:” Viaggi, Parte III. lett. 2.

14. shall I keep silence for ever?] After מלעולם, in the copy which the LXX had before them, followed the word הלעולם, והלעולם; according to MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. and edition Complut.; which word הלעולם has been omitted in the text by an easy mistake of a transcriber, because of the similitude of the word preceding.

15. —dry deserts] Instead of איים, islands, read ציים; a very probable conjecture of Houbigant.

16. And through paths—] The LXX, Syr. Vulg. and nine MSS (two ancient), read ובנתיבות.

Ibid. —will I do for them] עשיתם: This word, so written as it is in the text, means, Thou wilt do, in the second person: the Masoretes have indeed pointed it for the first person; but the י in the last syllable is absolutely necessary to distinguish the first person: and so it is written in forty MSS, עשיתים.

Jarchi, Kimchi, Sal. b. Melec, &c. agree, that the past time is here put for the future, עשיתי for אעשה; and indeed the context necessarily requires that interpretation. Further, it is to be observed, that עשיתם is for עשיתי להם, I have done them, for I have done for them; as עשיתני is for עשיתי לי, I have made myself, for I have made for myself; Ezek. xxix. 3.: and in the celebrated passage of Jephthah's vow, Judges xi. 31. והעליתי עולה, for העליתי לו עולה, I will offer him a burnt-offering, for I will offer unto him (that is, unto JEHOVAH) a burnt-offering; by an ellipsis of the preposition, of which Buxtorff gives many other examples, Thes. Grammat. lib. ii. 17. See also note on chap. lxxv. 5. A late happy application of this grammatical remark to that much disputed passage, has perfectly cleared up a difficulty which for two thousand years had puzzled all the translators and expositors, had given occasion to dissertations without number, and caused endless disputes among the learned, on the question, whether Jephthah sacrificed his daughter, or not: in which both parties have been equally ignorant of the meaning of the place, of the state of the fact, and of the very terms of the vow; which now at last has been cleared up beyond all doubt by my very learned friend Dr Randolph, Margaret Professor of Divinity in the university of Oxford, in his sermon on Jephthah's vow; Oxford, 1766.

19. —as he, to whom I have sent my messengers.] כמלאכי אשלי, “ut ad quem nuncios meos misi;” Vulg. Chald.; almost the only interpreters who render it rightly, in consistence with the rest of the sentence, and in perfect agreement with the Hebrew idiom; according to which the ellipsis is to be thus supplied, כל אשר מלאכי אשלי.

Ibid. —as he that is perfectly instructed] See note on chap. xlv. 2.

Ibid. And deaf as the servant of JEHOVAH] For וְעוֹר, and blind, we must read וְחָרָשׁ, and deaf: αἰσος, Symmachus; and so MS. The mistake is palpable, and the correction self-evident; and admissible, though there had been no authority for it.

20. Thou hast seen indeed] The text has רֵאִיתָ רַבּוֹת, which the Masoretes in the marginal Keri have corrected to רֵאִיתָ רַבּוֹת; as indeed a hundred and seven MSS, and five editions, now have it in the text. This was probably the reading of most of the MSS in their time; which, though they approved of it, out of some superstition they would not admit into their standard text. But these wretched critics, though they perceived there was some fault, yet did not know where the fault lay, nor consequently how to amend it; and yet it was open enough to a judicious eye: “רַבּוֹת, sic veteres; et tamen forte legendum, רֵאִיתָ: vide cap. vi. 9.” SECKER. That is, רֵאִיתָ רַבּוֹת. I believe no one will doubt of admitting this as the true reading.

Ibid. —yet thou wilt not hear] For יִשְׁמַע, read תִּשְׁמַע, in the second person: so all the ancient versions, and forty MSS (four of them ancient), and perhaps five more. Two others have תִּשְׁמַעוּ, second person, plural.

21. —his own praise] For תּוֹרָה, the LXX read תּוֹרָה.

22. —are taken in the toils] For הִפְּחָה, read הִפְּחוּ, in the plural number, Hophal; as הִחְבְּאוּ, which answers to it in the following member of the sentence: Le Clerc, Houbigant. הִפְּחָה, SECKER.

24. —they have sinned] For חָטְאוּ, first person, LXX and Chald. read חָטְאוּ, in the third person.

25. —the heat of his wrath] For חֲמָה, the Bodley MS has חֲמַת, in regimine; more regularly.

CHAPTER XLIII.

1. I have called thee by thy name] קִרְאתִי בְשִׁמְךָ. “Sic versiones. Videtur ex versu septimo et reipsa legendum בְּשִׁמְךָ, [vocavi te meo nomine]; nam sæpe usurpatur hæc phrasis, nunquam altera. Nam xlv. 24. de Cyro alia res est. Sed dum Deus Jacobum Israellem vocat, Dei nomine vocat. Vide Exod. xxxi. 2.” SECKER.

3. I have given Egypt for thy ransom] This is commonly supposed to refer to the time of Senacherib's invasion; who, when he was just ready to fall upon Jerusalem, soon after his entering Judea, was providentially diverted from that design, and turned his arms against the Egyptians, and their allies the Cushean Arabians, with their neighbours the Sabeans probably joined with them, under Tirhakah. See chap. xx. and xxxvii. 9. Or, as there are some reasonable objections to this opinion, perhaps it may mean more generally, that God had often saved his people at the expense of other nations, whom he had, as it were in their stead, given up to destruction. Vitringa explains this of Shalmaneser's designs upon the kingdom of Judea, after he had destroyed that of Samaria; from which he was diverted by carrying the war against the Egyptians, Cusheans, and Sabeans; but of this, I think, he has no clear proof in history. It is not to be wondered, that many things of this kind should remain very obscure for want of the light of history, which in regard to these times is extremely deficient.

"Did not Cyrus overcome these nations? and might they not be given him for releasing the Jews? It seems to have been so from chap. xlv. 14:" SECKER.

7. Whom for my glory—] Ten MSS (three ancient), Syr. and Vulg. read לַבְּנוֹי, without the conjunction ו.

8. Bring forth the people blind—] I understand this of the Gentiles, as the verse following, not of the Jews. Their natural faculties, if they had made a proper use of them, must have led them to the knowledge of the being and attributes of the one true God; "for his eternal power and godhead, if well attended to, are clearly seen in his works," Rom. i. 20.; and would have preserved them from running into the folly and absurdity of worshipping idols. They are here challenged to produce the evidence of the power and foreknowledge of their idol-gods; and the Jews are just afterward, ver. 10. appealed to as witnesses for God in this cause: therefore these latter cannot here be meant by the people blind with eyes, and deaf with ears.

9. Who among them—] Seven MSS (three ancient), and the first edition, 1486, with Syr. and Vulg. read בָּכֶם, who among you. The present reading is preferable.

14. —the Chaldeans exulting in their ships] Babylon was very advantageously situated, both in respect to commerce and as a naval power. It was open to the Persian Gulf by the Euphrates, which was navigable by large vessels; and being joined to the Tigris above Babylon by the canal called Naharmalca, or the Royal River, supplied the city with the produce of the whole country to the north of it, as far as the Euxine and Caspian Seas: Herod. i. 194. Semiramis was the foundress of this part also of the Babylonian greatness: she improved the navigation of the Euphrates; Herod. i. 184. Strabo, lib. xvi.; and is said to have had a fleet of three thousand galleys: Huet, Hist. du Commerce, chap. xi. We are not to wonder that in later times we hear little of the commerce and naval power of Babylon; for, after the taking of the city by Cyrus, the Euphrates was not only rendered less fit for navigation, by being on that occasion diverted from its course, and left to spread over the whole country, but the Persian monarchs, residing in their own country, to prevent any invasion by sea on that part of their empire, purposely obstructed the navigation of both the rivers, by making cataracts in them; Strabo, ibid.; that is, by raising dams across the channel, and making artificial falls in them, that no vessel of any size or force could possibly come up. Alexander began to restore the navigation of the rivers by demolishing the cataracts upon the Tigris as far up as Seleucia; Arrian. lib. vii.; but he did not live to finish his great designs: those upon the Euphrates still continued. Ammianus, xxiv. 1. mentions them as subsisting in his time.

The Prophet therefore might very justly speak of the Chaldeans as glorying in their naval power in his time, though afterward they had no foundation for making any such boast.

15. The Creator of Israel] For בּוֹרֵא, creator, six MSS (two ancient) have אֱלֹהֵי, God.

20. The wild beast of the field shall glorify me—] The image is elegant, and highly poetical. God will give such an abundant miraculous supply of water to his people traversing the dry desert, in their return to their country, that even the wild beasts, the serpents, the ostriches, and other animals that haunt those arid regions, shall be sensible of the blessing; and shall break forth into thanksgiving and praises to him for the unusual refreshment, which they receive from his so plentifully watering the sandy wastes of Arabia Deserta, for the benefit of his people passing through them.

22—24. But thou hast not invoked—] The connexion is: But thou, Israel, whom I have chosen, whom I have formed for myself, to be my witness against the false gods of the nations; even thou hast revolted from me, hast neglected my worship, and hast been perpetually running after strange gods. The emphasis of this and the following parts of the sentence, on which the sense depends, seems to lie on the words Me, on My account, &c. The Jews were diligent in performing the external services of religion; in offering prayers, incense, sacrifices, oblations: but their prayers were not offered with faith; and their oblations were made more frequently to their idols than to the God of their fathers. The Hebrew idiom excludes with a general negative, in a comparative sense, one of two objects opposed to one another: thus, “I will have mercy, and not sacrifice;” Hosea vi. 6.: “For I spake not to your fathers, nor commanded them—concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices; but this thing I commanded them, saying, Obey my voice;” Jer. vii. 22, 23. And the meaning of this place of Isaiah seems to be much the same with that of Amos; who however has explained at large both parts of the comparison, and specified the false service opposed to the true:

“Have ye offered unto Me sacrifices and offerings
In the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel?
Nay, but ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch,
And Chiun, your images;
The star of your God, which you made to yourselves.”

Amos v. 25, 26.

22. Neither hast thou laboured—] כי יגעת, LXX and Vulg. read ויגעת: Houbigant. The negative is repeated, or referred to, by the conjunction ו; as in many other places. See note on chap. xxiii. 4.

28. And thy princes have profaned—] Instead of ואחלל שרי, read ויחללו שריך. So Syr. and LXX, και εμωσαν οι αρχοντες τα αγια σου, קרשי: Houbigant. οι αρχοντες σου, MSS Pachom. and 1. D. II. and Marchal.

Ibid. —to reproach.] לגדוף, in the singular number: so an ancient MS, and LXX, Syr. Vulg.

CHAPTER XLIV.

2. Jeshurun means Israel.] This name was given to that people by Moses, Dent. xxxii. 15. xxxiii. 5. and 26. The most probable account of it seems to be that in which the Jewish commentators agree; namely, that it is derived from ישר, and signifies upright. In the same manner, Israel, as a people, is called משלם, perfect, chap. xlii. 19. They were taught of God, and abundantly furnished with the means of rectitude and perfection in his service and worship.

4. —as the grass among the waters] בבין הציר, “They shall spring up in the midst of, or rather, in among, the grass.” This cannot be right: ten MSS, and two editions, have בבין, or בבן. Twenty-four MSS read it without the י, בבן; and so reads the Chaldee; the Syriac, מבין. The true reading is in all probability בבין; and the word מים, which should have followed it, is lost out of the text; but it is happily supplied by the LXX: ὡς ἀνα μέσον ὕδατος. “In every place where there is water, there is always grass; for water makes every thing grow in the East:” Sir John Chardin’s note on 1 Kings xviii. 5.; Harmer’s Observ. i. p. 54.

5. —shall be called] Passive, יקרא, κληθήσεται, Symmachus.

Ibid. And this shall inscribe his hand to JEHOVAH] Και ἕτερος ἐπιγράψει χερί (χεῖρα, Aq. Sym.) αὐτοῦ, τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰμι: “And another shall write upon his hand, I belong to God:” LXX. They seem to have read here, as before, ליהוה אני. But the repetition of the same phrase without any variation is not elegant. However, they seem to have understood it rightly as an allusion to the marks which were made, by punctures rendered indelible by fire or by staining, upon the hand or some other part of the body, signifying the state or character of the person, and to whom he belonged: the slave was marked with the name of his master; the soldier, of his commander; the idolater, with the name or ensign of his god: στίγματα ἐπιγραφομένα, ὅια τῶν στρατευομένων ἐν ταῖς χερσίν: Aetius apud Turnebum Advers. xxiv. 12. “Victuris in cute punctis milites scripti et matriculis inserti jurare solent:” Vegetius, ii. 5. And the Christians seem to have imitated this practice, by what Procopius says on this place of Isaiah: Το δὲ ΤΗ ΧΕΙΡΙ, δια το στίζειν ἰσως πολλοὺς ἐπὶ καρπῶν, ἢ βραχίωνων, ἢ τοῦ σταυροῦ το σημειῖον, ἢ τὴν Χριστοῦ προσήγοριαν: “Because many marked their wrists, or their arms, with the sign of the cross, or with the name of Christ.” See Rev. xx. 4. Spencer, De Leg. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 20.

7. —let them declare unto us.] For למו, unto them, the Chaldee reads לני, unto us. The LXX read לכם, unto you; which is preferable to the reading of the text. But למו and לנו are frequently mistaken one for the other: see chap. x. 29. Psal. lxxx. 7. lxiv. 6.

8. Fear ye not—] “ תרהו nusquam occurrit: forte תיראו, timete:” SECKER. Two MSS read תיראו.

9, 10. That every one may be ashamed, that he hath formed a god] The Bodleian MS, one of the first extant for its antiquity and authority, instead of מי at the beginning of the 10th verse has בי, which greatly clears up the construction of a very obscure passage. The LXX likewise closely connect in construction the end of ver. 9. with the beginning of ver. 10. and wholly omit the interrogative מי, which embarrasses the sentence: αἰσχυνθησονται οἱ θεοποιῦντες Θεοὺς, καὶ γυγνόντες πάντες ἀνθρώποι; agreeably to the reading of the MS above-mentioned.

11. Even the workmen themselves shall blush] I do not know that any one has ever yet interpreted these words to any tolerably good sense: וחרשים המה מאדם. The Vulgate, and our translators, have rendered them very fairly, as they are written and pointed in the text: “Fabri enim sunt ex hominibus:—And the workmen, they are of men.” Out of which the commentators have not been able to extract any thing worthy of the Prophet. I have given another explanation of the place; agreeable enough to the context, if it can be deduced from the words themselves. I presume, that אדם, rubuit, may signify erubuit, to be red through shame, as well as from any other cause; though I cannot produce any example of it in that particular sense: and the word in the text I would point מְאָדָם; or if any one should object to the irregularity of the number, I would read מאדמים. But I rather think, that the irregularity of the construction has been the cause of the obscurity, and has given occasion to the mistaken punctuation. The singular is sometimes put for the plural; see Psal. lxviii. 31.; and the participle for the future tense; see Isa. lx. 11.

12. —cutteth off—] מְעַצֵּר, participium pihel of עָצַר, to cut; still used in that sense in the Arabic. See Simonis Lex. Heb. The LXX and Syr. take the word in this form; but they render it, sharpeneth the iron. See Castell. Lex. in voce.

The sacred writers are generally large and eloquent upon the subject of idolatry: they treat it with great severity, and set forth the absurdity of it in the strongest light. But this passage of Isaiah, ver. 12—20. far exceeds any thing that ever was written upon the subject, in force of argument, energy of expression, and elegance of composition. One or two of the apocryphal writers have attempted to imitate the Prophet, but with very ill success; Wisd. xiii. 11—19. xv. 7, &c.; Baruch, chap. vi.; especially the latter, who, injudiciously dilating his matter, and introducing a number of minute circumstances, has very much weakened the force and effect of his invective. On the contrary, a heathen author, in the ludicrous way, has, in a line or two, given idolatry one of the severest strokes it ever received:—

“Olim truncus eram ficulnus, inutile lignum;
Cum faber, incertus scamnum faceretne Priapum, Maluit esse Deum.” Horat.

14. He heweth down—] For לכרת, the LXX and Vulg. read כרת, or יכרת.

16. And with part—] Twenty-three MSS, LXX, and Vulg. add the conjunction ו, ועל.

18. —their eyes are closed up] The LXX, Chald. and Vulg. for טח read טחו. See note on chap. vi. 10.

20. He feedeth on ashes] He feedeth on that which affordeth no nourishment: a proverbial expression for using ineffectual means, and bestowing labour to no purpose. In the same sense Hosea says, “Ephraim feedeth on wind,” chap. xii. 1.

22. I have made thy transgressions vanish away like a cloud, and thy sins like a vapour.] Longinus admired the sublimity of the sentiment, as well as the harmony of the numbers, in the following sentence of Demosthenes: Τοῦτο το ὑψηλίσμα τον τότε τη πολει περιστάντα κινδυνον παρελθειν εποιησεν ὥσπερ νεφος: “This decree made the danger then hanging over the city pass away like a cloud.”

24. —by myself] Thirteen MSS (six ancient), confirm the reading of the Keri, מאתי.

27. Who sayeth to the deep, Be thou wasted] Cyrus took Babylon by laying the bed of the Euphrates dry, and leading his army into the city by night through the empty channel of the river. This remarkable circumstance, in which the event so exactly corresponded with the prophecy, was also noted by Jeremiah:

“A drought shall be upon her waters, and they shall be dried up:
I will lay her sea dry;
And I will scorch up her springs.” Jer. l. 38. li. 36.

It is proper here to give some account of the means and method by which the stratagem of Cyrus was effected.

The Euphrates in the middle of summer, from the melting of the snows on the mountains of Armenia, like the Nile, overflows the country. In order to diminish the inundation, and to carry off the waters, two canals were made by Nebuchadnezzar a hundred miles above the city; the first on the eastern side, called Naharmalca, or the royal river, by which the Euphrates was let into the Tigris; the other on the western side, called Pallacopas, or Naharaga, (נהר אגם, the river of the pool), by which the redundant waters were carried into a vast lake, forty miles square, contrived not only to lessen the inundation, but for a reservoir, with sluices, to water the barren country on the Arabian side. Cyrus, by turning the whole river into the lake by the Pallacopas, laid the channel, where it ran through the city, almost dry; so that his army entered it, both above and below, by the bed of the river, the water not reaching above the middle of the thigh. By the great quantity of water let into the lake, the sluices and dams were destroyed; and being never repaired afterward, the waters spread over the whole country below, and reduced it to a morass, in which the river is lost. “Ingens modo et navigabilis, inde tenuis rivus, despectus emoritur; et nusquam manifesto exitu effluit, ut alii omnes, sed deficit.” Mela, iii. 8. Herod. i. 185. 190. Xenophon. Cyrop. vii. Arrian. vii.

28. Who sayeth to Cyrus, Thou art my shepherd] “Pastor meus es.” Vulg. The true reading seems to be רעי אתה: the word אתה has probably been dropt out of the text. The same word is lost out of the text, Psal. cxix. 57. It is supplied in LXX by the word εἰ.

Ibid. Who sayeth to Jerusalem] For ולאמר, LXX and Vulg. read האומר.

Ibid. —and to the temple] ולהיכל, as לירושלם before: the preposition is necessary; and the Vulgate seems to read so: Houbigant.

CHAPTER XLV.

1. And ungird the loins of kings] See note on chap. v.

27. Xenophon gives the following list of the nations conquered by Cyrus: the Syrians, Assyrians, Arabians, Cappadocians, both the Phrygians, Lydians, Carians, Phenicians, Babylonians. He moreover reigned over the Bactrians, Indians, Cilicians, the Sacæ, Paphlagones, and Mariandyni: Cyrop. lib. i. p. 4. edit. Hutchinson, 4to. All these kingdoms he acknowledges, in his decree for the restoration of the Jews, to have been given to him by JEHOVAH, the God of heaven; Ezra i. 2.

Ibid. That I may open before him the valves; and the gates shall not be shut.] The gates of Babylon within the city, leading from the streets to the river, were providentially left open, when Cyrus's forces entered the city in the night through the channel of the river, in the general disorder occasioned by the great feast which was then celebrated; otherwise, says Herodotus, i. 191. the Persians would have been shut up in the bed of the river, and taken as in a net, and all destroyed: And the gates of the palace were opened imprudently by the king's orders, to inquire what was the cause of the tumult without; when the two parties under Gobrias and Gatas rushed in, got possession of the palace, and slew the king: Xenoph. Cyrop. vii. p. 528.

2. —the mountains—] For הָהָרִים, a word not easily accounted for in this place, the LXX read הָהָרִים, ἡ ὄρη. Two MSS have הָהָרִים, without the ו; which is hardly distinguishable from the reading of the LXX. The divine protection which attended Cyrus, and rendered his expedition against Babylon easy and prosperous, is finely expressed by God's going before him, and making the mountains level. The image is highly poetical:

“At vos, qua veniet, tumidi subsidite montes,

Et faciles curvis vallibus este viæ.” Ovid. Amor. ii. 16.

Ibid. The valves of brass—] Abydenus, apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. ix. 41. says, that the wall of Babylon had brazen gates. And Herodotus, i. 179. more particularly: “In the wall all round there are a hundred gates, all of brass; and so in like manner are the sides and the lintels.” The gates likewise within the city, opening to the river from the several streets, were of brass; as were those also of the temple of Belus: Id. i. 180, 181.

3. I will give unto thee the treasures of darkness] Sardes and Babylon, when taken by Cyrus, were the wealthiest cities in the world. Cræsus, celebrated beyond all the kings of that age for his riches, gave up his treasures to Cyrus, with an exact account in writing of the whole, containing the particulars with which each waggon was loaded when they were carried away; and they were delivered to Cyrus at the palace of Babylon: Xenoph. Cyrop. lib. vii. p. 503. 515. 540.

Pliny gives the following account of the wealth taken by Cyrus in Asia. “Jam Cyrus, devicta Asia, pondo xxxiv millia [auri] invenerat; præter vasa aurea, aurumque factum, et in eo folia, ac platanum, vitemque. Qua victoria argenti quingenta millia talentorum reportavit; et craterem Semiramidis, cujus pondus quindecim talenta colligebat. Talentum autem Ægyptium pondo LXXX patere [l. capere] Varro tradit:” Nat. Hist. xxxiii. 15.

The gold and silver, estimated by weight in this account, being converted into pounds sterling, amount to £.126,224,000: Brerewood, De Ponderibus, cap. x.

7. Forming light, and creating darkness] It was the great principle of the Magian religion, which prevailed in Persia in the time of Cyrus, and in which probably he was educated, that there are two supreme, co-eternal, and independent Causes, always acting in opposition one to the other; one the author of all good, the other of all evil: the good Being they called Light; the evil Being, Darkness: that, when light had the ascendant, then good and happiness prevailed among men; when darkness had the superiority, then evil and misery abounded:—an opinion that contradicts the clearest evidence of our reason, which plainly leads us to the acknowledgment of one only Supreme Being, infinitely good as well as powerful. With reference to this absurd opinion held by the person to whom this prophecy is addressed, God by his Prophet, in the most significant terms, asserts his omnipotence and absolute supremacy:

“ I am JEHOVAH, and none else;
Forming light, and creating darkness;
Making peace, and creating evil:
I JEHOVAH am the author of all these things.”

Declaring, that those Powers whom the Persians held to be the original authors of good and evil to mankind, representing them by light and darkness as their proper emblems, are no other than creatures of God, the instruments which he employs in his government of the world, ordained or permitted by him in order to execute his wise and just decrees; and that there is no Power, either of good or evil, independent of the One Supreme God, infinite in power and in goodness.

There were, however, some among the Persians whose sentiments were more moderate as to this matter; who held the evil principle to be in some measure subordinate to the good; and that the former would at length be wholly subdued by the latter: See Hyde, De Relig. Vet. Pers. cap. xxii.

That this opinion prevailed among the Persians as early as the time of Cyrus, we may, I think, infer, not only from this passage of Isaiah, which has a manifest reference to it, but likewise from a passage in Xenophon's Cyropædia, where the same doctrine is applied to the human mind. Araspes, a noble young Persian, had fallen in love with the fair captive Panthea, committed to his charge by Cyrus. After all his boasting that he was superior to the assaults of that passion, he yielded so far to it, as even to threaten violence if she would not comply with his desires. Awed by the reproof of Cyrus, fearing his displeasure, and having by cool reflection recovered his reason; in his discourse with him on this subject he says, "O Cyrus, I have certainly two souls; and this piece of philosophy I have learned from that wicked sophist Love. For if I had but one soul, it would not be at the same time good and evil; it would not at the same time approve of honourable and base actions; and at once desire to do, and refuse to do, the very same things. But it is plain that I am animated by two souls; and when the good soul prevails, I do what is virtuous; and when the evil one prevails, I attempt what is vicious. But now the good soul prevails, having gotten you for her assistant, and has clearly gained the superiority:" Lib. vi. p. 424.

8. Drop down, O ye heavens—] The eighty-fifth Psalm is a very elegant ode on the same subject with this part of Isaiah's prophecies—the restoration of Judah from captivity; and is, in the most beautiful part of it, a manifest imitation of this passage of the Prophet:—

“ Verily his salvation is nigh unto them that fear him,
That glory may dwell in our land.
Mercy and truth have met together ;
Righteousness and peace have kissed each other.
Truth shall spring from the earth,
And righteousness shall look down from heaven.
Even JEHOVAH will give that which is good,
And our land shall yield her produce.

Righteousness shall go before him,
And shall direct his footsteps in the way."

Psal. lxxxv. 10-14.

These images of the dew and the rain descending from heaven and making the earth fruitful, employed by the Prophet, and some of those nearly of the same kind which are used by the Psalmist, may perhaps be primarily understood as designed to set forth in a splendid manner the happy state of God's people restored to their country, and flourishing in peace and plenty, in piety and virtue: but justice and salvation, mercy and truth, righteousness and peace, and glory dwelling in the land, cannot with any sort of propriety, in the one or the other, be interpreted as the consequences of that event; they must mean the blessings of the great redemption by Messiah.

Ibid. —let salvation produce her fruit] For ויפרו, the LXX, Vulg. and Syr. read ויפירה; and a MS has a rasure close after the letter ו, which probably was ה at first.

9. Wo unto him, that contendeth with the power that formed him] The Prophet answers or prevents the objections and cavils of the unbelieving Jews, disposed to murmur against God, and to arraign the wisdom and justice of his dispensations in regard to them; in permitting them to be oppressed by their enemies, and in promising them deliverance instead of preventing their captivity. St Paul has borrowed the image, and has applied it to the like purpose with equal force and elegance: "Nay, but, O man! who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, out of the same lump to make one vessel to honour, and another to dishonour?" Rom. ix. 20, 21.

Ibid. —and to the workman, Thou hast no hands] The Syr. renders as if he had read וְלֹא הִיְתִי פַעַל יָדַי, "Neither am I the work of thy hands;" the LXX, as if they had read, וְלֹא פָעַלְתָּ וְאֵין יָדַי לָךְ, "Neither hast thou made me; and thou hast no hands." But the fault seems to be in the transposition of the two pronouns: for וּפַעַלְךָ read וּפַעַלִּי; and for לוֹ read לָךְ. So Houbigant corrects it, reading also וּלְפַעַלִּי; which last correction seems not altogether necessary. The LXX in MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11. have it thus; αὐτὸς τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτὸς ἔργον αὐτοῦ; which favours the reading here proposed.

11. And he that formeth the things which are to come] I read ויוצר, without the ו suffixed, from the LXX, who join it in construction with the following word; ὁ ποιησας τα επερχομενα.

Ibid. Do ye question me—] “השאלוני, Chald. recte: præcedit ה; et sic forte legerunt reliqui Intt. :” SECKER.

14. The wealth of Egypt—] This seems to relate to the future admission of the Gentiles into the church of God. Compare Psal. lxxiii. 32. lxxii. 10. chap. lx. 6—9. And perhaps these particular nations may be named, by a metonymy common in all poetry, for powerful and wealthy nations in general. See note on chap. lx. 1.

Ibid. The Sabeans tall of stature—] That the Sabeans were of a more majestic appearance than common, is particularly remarked by Agatharchides, an ancient Greek historian quoted by Bochart, Phaleg. ii. 26. τα σωματα εστι των καλοικουντων αξιολογημενα. So also the LXX understand it, rendering it ανδρες υπηλοι. And the same phrase, אנשי מדה, is used for persons of extraordinary stature, Numb. xiii. 32. and 1 Chron. xx. 6.

Ibid. —and in suppliant guise—] The conjunction ו is supplied by the ancient versions, and confirmed by fifteen MSS (seven ancient), and six editions, ואליך. Three MSS (two ancient) omit the ו before אליך at the beginning of the line.

16. They are ashamed—] The reader cannot but observe the sudden transition from the solemn adoration of the secret and mysterious nature of God's counsels in regard to his people, to the spirited denunciation of the confusion of idolaters, and the final destruction of idolatry; contrasted with the salvation of Israel, not from temporal captivity, but the eternal salvation by Messiah, strongly marked by the repetition and augmentation of the phrase, to the ages of eternity. But there is not only a sudden change in the sentiment, the change is equally observable in the construction of the sentences; which from the usual short measure runs out at once into two distichs of the longer sort of verse: See Prelim. Dissert. p. xxxv. &c. There is another instance of the same kind, and very like to this, of a sudden transition in regard both to the sentiment and construction in chap. xlii. 17.

Ibid. —his adversaries, all of them.] This line, to the great diminution of the beauty of the distich, is imperfect in the present text; the subject of the proposition is not particularly expressed, as it is in the line following. The version of the LXX happily supplies the word that is lost ; οὐ ἀντιλαμβανόμενοι ἀντὶ φ : the original word was צריו.

18. —[for he formed it to be inhabited] An ancient MS has כִּי before לִשְׁבֹּת ; and so the ancient versions.

19. I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth] In opposition to the manner in which the heathen oracles gave their answers ; which were generally delivered from some deep and obscure cavern. Such was the seat of the Cumean Sybil :

“Excisum Euboicæ latus ingens rupis in antrum.”

Virg. Æn. vi. 42.

Such was that of the famous oracle at Delphi : of which, says Strabo, lib. 9. φασὶ δ' εἶναι τὸ μαντεῖον ἀντρὸν κοίλον μέγα βάθος, οὐ μάλα εὐρεσσομόνον : “The oracle is said to be a hollow cavern of considerable depth, with an opening not very wide.” And Diodorus, giving an account of the origin of this oracle, says, “that there was in that place a great chasm, or cleft, in the earth ; in which very place is now situated what is called the Adytum of the temple.” Ἀδύτῳ σπηλαιοῦ, ἣ τοῦ ἀποκρύφου μερὸς τοῦ ἱεροῦ : Hesych. “Adytum means a cavern, or the hidden part of the temple.”

Ibid. I am JEHOVAH, who speak truth, who give direct answers.] This also is said in opposition to the false and ambiguous answers given by the heathen oracles ; of which there are many noted examples—none more so than that of the answer given to Cræsus, when he marched against Cyrus ; which piece of history has some connexion with this part of Isaiah’s prophecies. Let us hear Cicero’s account of the Delphic answers in general, and of this in particular.

“Sed jam ad te venio,

O Sancte Apollo, qui umbilicum certum terrarum obsides,

Unde superstitiosa primum sæva evasit vox fera.

Tuis enim oraculis Chrysippus totum volumen implevit, partim falsis, ut ego opinor ; partim casu veris, ut fit in omni oratione sæpissime ; partim flexiloquis et obscuris, ut interpretes egeat interprete, et sors ipsa ad sortes referenda sit ; partim ambiguïs, et quæ ad dialecticum deferenda sint. Nam cum sors illa edita est opulentissimo regi Asia,

Cræsus Halym penetrans magnam pervertet opum vim :

hostium vim sese perversurum putavit : pervertit autem suam. Utrum igitur eorum accidisset, verum oraculum fuisset :” De Divinat. ii. 56.

21. —bring them near, and let them consult together] For ייעצו, let them consult, the LXX read ידעו, let them know; but an ancient MS has ייעדו, “let them come together by appointment;” which may probably be the true reading.

23. —truth is gone forth from my mouth : The word—] So the LXX distinguish the members of the sentence; preserving the elegance of the construction, and the clearness of the sense.

24. Saying, Only to JEHOVAH—] A MS omits לי, unto me; and instead of לי אמר, he said or shall say unto me, the LXX read, in the copy which they used, לאמר, saying. For יבא, he shall come, in the singular, twelve MSS (three ancient) read יבאו, plural; and a letter is erased at the end of the word in two others: and so the Alexandrian copy of the LXX, Syr. and Vulg. read it. For צדקות, plural, two MSS read צדקת, singular; and so LXX, Syr. Chald.

CHAPTER XLVI.

1. Their burthens are heavy] For נשאתיכם, your burthens, the LXX had in their copy נשאתיהם, their burthens.

2. They could not deliver their own charge] That is, their worshippers; who ought to have been borne by them. See the two next verses. The Chaldee and Syriac versions render it in effect to the same purpose, portantes se—those that bear them, meaning their worshippers; but how they can render משא in an active sense, I do not understand.

Ibid. Even they themselves—] For ונפשם, an ancient MS has כי נפשם, with more force.

3—7. Ye that have been borne by me from the birth—] The Prophet very ingeniously, and with great force, contrasts the power of God, and his tender goodness effectually exerted towards his people, with the inability of the false gods of the heathen: He like an indulgent father had carried his people in his arms, “as a man carrieth his son;” Deut. i. 31.; he had protected them, and delivered them from their distresses: whereas the idols of the heathen are forced to be carried about themselves, and removed from place to place, with great labour and fatigue, by their worshippers; nor can they answer, or deliver their votaries, when they cry unto them.

Moses, expostulating with God on the weight of the charge laid upon him as leader of his people, expresses that charge, under the same image of a parent's carrying his children, in very strong terms: "Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them? that thou shouldest say unto me, Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing father beareth the sucking child, unto the land which thou swarest unto their fathers;" Numb. xi. 12.

Pindar has treated with a just and very elegant ridicule the work of the statuary, even in comparison with his own poetry, from this circumstance of its being fixed to a certain station. "The friends of Pytheas, says the Scholiast, came to the poet, desiring him to write an ode on his victory. Pindar demanded three drachms (minæ, I suppose it should be) for the ode. No, say they, we can have a brazen statue for that money, which will be better than a poem. However, changing their minds afterwards, they came and offered him what he had demanded." This gave him the hint of the following ingenious exordium of his ode:

Οὐκ ἀνδριαντοποιος εἰμ'
 'Ὡστ' ἐλινυσσονται μ' ἐργαζέσθαι ἀγαλματ' ἐπ' αὐτας βαθυμῖδος ἑσταοίτ'. Ἀλλ' ἐπὶ πᾶσας
 Ὀλκαδὸς, ἐν τ' ἀκατῶ,
 Σποιγ' ἀπ' Αἰγίνας διαγγέλλουσ' ὅτι Λαμπωνὸς υἱὸς
 Πυθέας εὐρυσθένης
 Νικῇ Νεμείῳς παγκράτις στεφανῶν.

Nem. v.

Thus elegantly translated by Mr Francis in a note to Hor. Carin. iv. 2. 19.

"It is not mine with forming hand
 To bid a lifeless image stand
 For ever on its base:
 But fly, my verses, and proclaim
 To distant realms, with deathless fame,
 That Pytheas conquer'd in the rapid race."

Jeremiah seems to be indebted to Isaiah for most of the following passage:

"The practices of the people are altogether vanity;
 For they cut down a tree from the forest;
 The work of the artificer's hand with the axe:
 With silver and with gold it is adorned;
 With nails and with hammers it is fastened, that it may not totter.
 Like the palm-tree they stand stiff, and cannot speak;

They are carried about, for they cannot go :
 Fear them not, for they cannot do harm,
 Neither is it in them to do good." Jer. x. 3—5.

8. —shew yourselves men] התאששו. This word is rather of doubtful derivation and signification. It occurs only in this place; and some of the ancient interpreters seem to have had something different in their copies. Vulg. read התבששו, take shame to yourselves; Syr. התבוננו, consider with yourselves; LXX, στανάξετε; perhaps התאבלו, groan, or mourn, within yourselves.

11. Calling from the east the eagle] A very proper emblem for Cyrus, as in other respects, so particularly because the ensign of Cyrus was a golden eagle, ΑΕΤΟΣ χρυσεός; the very word עֵיט, which the Prophet uses here, expressed as near as may be in Greek letters. Xenoph. Cyrop. lib. vii. sub init.

Ibid. And from a land] Two MSS add the conjunction ו, ומארץ; and so LXX, Syr. Vulg.

CHAPTER XLVII.

1. Descend, and sit on the dust—] See note on chap. iii. 26. and on chap. lii. 2.

2. Take the mill, and grind the corn] It was the work of slaves to grind the corn. They used hand-mills; water-mills were not invented till a little before the time of Augustus; (see the Greek epigram of Antipater, which seems to celebrate it as a new invention: Anthol. Cephalæ, 653.); wind-mills, long after. It was not only the work of slaves, but the hardest work; and often inflicted on them as a severe punishment.

"Molendum in pistrino; vapulandum; habendæ compedes." Terent. Phormio, ii. l. 19.

"Hominem pistrino dignum!" Id. Heaut. iii. 2. 19.

But in the East it was the work of the female slaves. See Exod. xi. 5. xii. 29. (in the version of the LXX), Matt. xxiv. 41. Homer. Odys. xx. 105—108. And it is the same to this day: "Women alone are employed to grind their corn;" Shaw, Algiers and Tunis, p. 297. "They are the female slaves that are generally employed in the East at those hand-mills [for grinding corn]: it is extremely laborious, and esteemed the lowest employment in the house." Sir J. Chardin, Harmer's Observ. i. p. 153.

2. I will not suffer man to intercede] The verb should be pointed, or written, אִפְּנִיעַ, in Hiphil.

4. Our avenger—] Here a chorus breaks in upon the midst of the subject; with a change of construction, as well as sentiment, from the longer to the shorter kind of verse, for one distich only; after which the former subject and style is resumed. See note on xlv. 16.

6. I was angry with my people—] God, in the course of his providence, makes use of great conquerors and tyrants as his instruments to execute his judgments in the earth: he employs one wicked nation to scourge another. The inflictor of the punishment may perhaps be as culpable as the sufferer; and may add to his guilt by indulging his cruelty in executing God's justice. When he has fulfilled the work to which the divine vengeance has ordained him, he will become himself the object of it. See chap. x. 5—12. God charges the Babylonians, though employed by himself to chastise his people, with cruelty in regard to them. They exceeded the bounds of justice and humanity in oppressing and destroying them; and though they were really executing the righteous decree of God, yet, as far as it regarded themselves, they were only indulging their own ambition and violence. The Prophet Zechariah sets this matter in the same light: "I was but a little angry, and they helped forward the affliction;" chap. i. 15.

7. Because thou didst not—] For עַד read עַל; so two MSS, and one edition. And for אַחֲרֵיתָהּ, the latter end of it, read אַחֲרֵיתֶךָ, thy latter end: so thirteen MSS, and two editions, and Vulg.

9. On a sudden—] Instead of כְּתִמָּם, in their perfection, as our translation renders it, the LXX and Syr. read, in the copies from which they translated, פְּתָאֵם, suddenly; parallel to רִגַע, in a moment, in the preceding alternate member of the sentence. The concurrent testimony of LXX and Syr., favoured by the context, may be safely opposed to the authority of the present text.

Ibid. Notwithstanding the multitude—] בָּרַב; for this sense of the particle ב, see Numb. xiv. 11.

11. —how to deprecate] שַׁחֲרָה: so the Chaldee renders it; which is approved by Jarchi on the place, and Michaelis Epim. in Prælect. xix.: see Psal. lxxviii. 34.

Ibid. "Videtur in fine [hujus commatis] deesse verbum, ut hoc membrum prioribus respondeat:" SECKER.

In order to set in a proper light this judicious remark, it is necessary to give the reader an exact verbal translation of the whole verse:—

“And evil shall come upon thee, thou shalt not know how to deprecate it;
And mischief shall fall upon thee, thou shalt not be able to expiate it;
And destruction shall come suddenly upon thee, thou shalt not know”——

What? how to escape, to avoid it, to be delivered from it: (perhaps צאת ממנה, Jer. xi. 11.) I am persuaded that a phrase is here lost out of the text: but as the ancient versions retain no traces of it, and a wide field lies open to uncertain conjecture, I have not attempted to fill up the chasm; but have in the translation, as others have done before me, palliated and disguised the defect, which I cannot with any assurance pretend to supply.

13. What are the events—] For מאשר, read אשר; so the LXX.

15. —to his own business] לעברו. Expositors give no very good account of this word in this place. In a MS it was at first לעברו, which is probably the true reading. The sense however is pretty much the same with the common interpretation.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1. Ye that flow from the fountain of Judah] ממי, from the waters. “Perhaps ממעי, from the bowels, [so many others have conjectured], or מני [יהודה, from Judah.” SECKER. But see Michaelis in Prælect. not. 22. And we have עין יעקב, the fountain of Jacob, Deut. xxxiii. 28. and ממקור ישראל, from the fountain of Israel, Psal. lxxviii. 27. Twenty-seven MSS, and three editions, have מימי, from the days; which makes no good sense.

6.—behold, the whole is accomplished] For חזה, see, a MS has הזה, this; thou hast heard the whole of this: the Syriac has וחזית, thou hast heard, and thou hast seen, the whole. Perhaps it should be הנה, behold. In order to express the full sense, I have rendered it somewhat paraphrastically.

9. And for the sake of my praise] I read ולמען תהלתי. The word למען, though not absolutely necessary here, for it may be understood as supplied from the preceding member, yet seems to have been removed from hence to ver. 11.; where it is redundant, and where it is not repeated in LXX, Syr. and a MS. I have therefore omitted it in the latter place, and added it here.

10. I have tried thee—] For בחרתיך, I have chosen thee, a MS has בחנתיך, I have tried thee. And so perhaps read the Syriac and Chaldee interpreters: they retain the same word בחרתך; but in those languages it signifies, I have tried thee. ככסף, quasi argentum, Vulg.

11. for how would my name be blasphemed?] The word שמי, my name, is dropt out of the text: it is supplied by a MS which has שמי; and by LXX, ὅτι το ἐμὸν ὄνομα βεβηλεῖται. The Syr. and Vulg. get over the difficulty by making the verb in the first person, that I may not be blasphemed.

12. —O Jacob, my serrant] After יעקב, a MS, and the two old editions of 1486 and 1488, add the word עבדי, which is lost out of the present text; and there is a rasure in its place in another ancient MS. The Jerusalem Talmud has the same word.

Ibid. For אף אני, even I, two ancient MSS, and the ancient versions, read ואני, and I; more properly.

14. Who among you—] For בהם, among them, twenty-one MSS (nine ancient), and two editions (one of them that of the year 1488), have בכם, among you; and so the Syriac.

Ibid. He, whom JEHOVAH hath loved, will execute] 'That is, Cyrus: so Symmachus has well rendered it: 'Ὁν ὁ Κυριος ηγαπησεν, ποιήσει το θελημα αυτου.

Ibid. —on the Chaldeans] The preposition is lost; it is supplied in the edition of 1486, which has בכשדים; and so Chald. and Vulg.

16. Draw near unto me, and hear ye this] After the word קרבו, draw near, a MS adds גוים, O ye nations; which, as this and the two preceding verses are plainly addressed to the idolatrous nations, reproaching their gods as unable to predict future events, is probably genuine.

Ibid. —and hear—] A MS adds the conjunction, ושמעו; and so LXX, Syr. Vulg.

Ibid. —I have not spoken in secret] The Alexandrian copy of LXX adds here, οὐδὲ ἐν τοσση γησ σκεπτεινω, nor in a dark place of the earth, as in xlv. 19. That it stands rightly, or at least stood very early, in this place of the version of the LXX, is highly probable; because it is acknowledged by the Arabic version, and by the Coptic, MS St Germain de Prez, Paris, translated likewise from the LXX. But whether it should be inserted as of right belonging to the Hebrew text, may be doubted; for a transcriber of the Greek version might easily add it by memory from the parallel place; and it is not necessary to the sense.

Ibid. —when it began to exist] An ancient MS has היותם, they began to exist: and so another had it at first.

Ibid. I had decreed it] I take שם for a verb, not an adverb.

Ibid. And now the Lord JEHOVAH hath sent me, and his Spirit] Τις ἐστὶν ὁ ἐν τῷ Ησαϊα λεγών; καὶ νῦν Κυριὸς ἀπέστειλε με καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ· ἐν ᾧ ἀμφιῶλου ὄντος τοῦ ἔχοντος, ποτερον ὁ Πατήρ καὶ τὸ Ἅγιον Πνεῦμα ἀπέστειλαν τὸν Ἰησοῦν, ἢ ὁ Πατήρ ἀπέστειλε τὸν τε Χριστὸν καὶ τὸ Ἅγιον Πνεῦμα· τὸ δευτερον ἐστὶν ἀληθές: “Who is it that saith in Isaiah, And now the Lord hath sent me and his Spirit? in which, as the expression is ambiguous, is it the Father and the Holy Spirit who hath sent Jesus; or the Father who hath sent both Christ and the Holy Spirit? The latter is the true interpretation:” Origen. cont. Cels. lib. i. I have kept to the order of the words of the original, on purpose that the ambiguity, which Origen remarks in the version of LXX, and which is the same in the Hebrew, might still remain, and the sense which he gives to it be offered to the reader’s judgment; which is wholly excluded in our vulgar translation.

18. like the river] That is, the Euphrates.

19. —like that of the bowels thereof] כצאצאי מעי הים ויהם הרגים: “As the issue of the bowels of the sea; that is, the fishes;” Salom. b. Melec. And so likewise Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Kimchi, &c.

Ibid. Thy name] For שמו, his name, the LXX had in the copy from which they translated שמך, thy name.

20. —and make it heard—] Twenty-seven MSS (ten ancient), and one edition, prefix to the verb the conjunction ו, והשמיעו.

21. They thirsted not in the deserts—] Kimchi has a surprising observation upon this place: “If the prophecy,” says he, “relates to the return from the Babylonish captivity, as it seems to do, it is to be wondered how it comes to pass, that in the book of Ezra, in which he gives an account of their return, no mention is made that such miracles were wrought for them ; as, for instance, that God clave the rock for them in the desert.” It is really much to be wondered, that one of the most learned and judicious of the Jewish expositors of the Old Testament, having advanced so far in a large comment on Isaiah, should appear to be totally ignorant of the Prophet’s manner of writing ; of the parabolic style which prevails in the writings of all the Prophets ; and more particularly in the prophecy of Isaiah, which abounds throughout in parabolic images from the beginning to the end ; from “ Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth,” to “ the worm and the fire” in the last verse. And how came he to keep his wonderment to himself so long ? Why did he not expect that the historian should have related, how, as they passed through the desert, cedars, pines, and olive-trees, shot up at once on the side of the way to shade them ; and that, instead of briars and brambles, the acacia and the myrtle sprung up under their feet, according to God’s promises, chap. xli. 19. and lv. 13. ? These, and a multitude of the like parabolical or poetical images, were never intended to be understood literally : all that the Prophet designed in this place, and which he has executed in the most elegant manner, was an amplification and illustration of the gracious care and protection of God vouchsafed to his people in their return from Babylon, by an allusion to the miraculous Exodus from Egypt. See De S. Poesi Hebr. Præl. ix.

22. There is no peace, saith JEHOVAH, to the wicked.] See below, note on chap. lvii. 21.

CHAPTER XLIX.

1. Hearken unto me, O ye distant lands—] Hitherto the subject of the prophecy has been chiefly confined to the redemption from the captivity of Babylon, with strong intimations of a more important deliverance sometimes thrown in ; to the refutation of idolatry ; and the demonstration of the infinite power, wisdom, and foreknowledge of God. The character and office of the Messiah was exhibited in general terms at the beginning of chap. xlii. but here he is introduced in person, declaring the full extent of his commission ; which is not only to restore the Israelites, and reconcile them to their Lord and Father, from whom they had so often revolted ; but to be a light to lighten the Gentiles, to call them to the knowledge and obedience of the true God, and to bring them to be one church together with the Israelites, and to partake with them of the same common salvation procured for all by the great Redeemer and Reconciler of man to God.

2. And he hath made my mouth a sharp sword—] The servant of God, who speaks in the former part of this chapter, must be the Messiah. If any part of this character can, in any sense, belong to the Prophet, yet in some parts it must belong exclusively to Christ ; and, in all parts, to him in a much fuller and more proper sense. Isaiah's mission was to the Jews, not to the distant nations to whom the speaker in this place addresses himself. "He hath made my mouth a sharp sword," "to reprove the wicked, and to denounce unto them punishment," says Jarchi, understanding it of Isaiah : but how much better does it suit him, who is represented as having "a sharp two-edged sword going out of his mouth," Rev. i. 16. who is himself the Word of God ; which "Word is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart ;" Heb. iv. 12. This mighty agent and instrument of God, "long laid up in store with him, and sealed up among his treasures," is at last revealed, and produced by his power, and under his protection, to execute his great and holy purposes : he is compared to a polished shaft stored in his quiver for use in his due time. The polished shaft denotes the same efficacious word, which is before represented by the sharp sword. The doctrine of the gospel pierced the hearts of its hearers, "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." The metaphor of the sword and the arrow, applied to powerful speech, is bold, yet just. It has been employed by the most ingenious heathen writers, if with equal elegance, not with equal force. It is said of Pericles by Aristophanes, (see Cicero, Epist. ad Atticum, xii. 6.)—

Ὅπως ἐκφέρει, καὶ μόνος τῶν ἑητορῶν

Τὸ κεντρὸν ἐγκατέλειπε τοῖς ἀκροαμένοις. Apud Diod. lib. xii.

His powerful speech

Pierced the hearer's soul, and left behind
Deep in his bosom its keen point infixt.

Pindar is particularly fond of this metaphor, and frequently applies it to his own poetry :—

Ἐπεχε νυν σκοπῶ τοῦτον,
 Ἀγέ, Μυμέ. τινα βαλλομένην
 Ἐκ μαλθακάς αὐτὲ φρε-νος εὐκλεάς οἷστος
 Ἰέντες ;

Olymp. ii. 160.

“Come on! thy brightest shafts prepare,
 And bend, O Muse, thy sounding bow;
 Say, through what paths of liquid air
 Our arrows shall we throw?”

West.

See also ver. 149. of the same ode, and Olymp. ix. 17.; on the former of which places the Scholiast says, τροπικὸς ὁ λόγος· βέλῃ δὲ τοὺς λόγους εἰρηκε, διὰ το ὄζυ καὶ καιρίον τῶν ἐγκωμίων: “He calls his verses shafts by a metaphor, signifying the acuteness and the apposite application of his panegyric.”

This person, who is, ver. 3. called Israel, cannot in any sense be Isaiah. That name, in its original design and full import, can only belong to him who contended powerfully with God in behalf of mankind, and prevailed: Gen. xxxii. 28.

5. And now thus saith JEHOVAH] The word כה, before אמר, is dropt out of the text: it is supplied by eight MSS (two ancient), and LXX, Syr. Vulg.

Ibid. And that Israel unto him may be gathered] Five MSS (two ancient), confirm the Keri, or marginal correction of the Masoretes, לו, unto him, instead of לא, not, in the text; and so read Aquila and Chald. LXX and Arab. omit the negative. But LXX, MSS Pachom. and i. D. ii. express also the Keri לו by πρὸς αὐτόν.

6. And to restore the branches of Israel] נצירי, or נצורי, as the Masoretes correct it in the marginal reading. This word has been matter of great doubt with interpreters: the Syriac renders it the branch, taking it for the same with נצר, chap. xi. 1.: see Michaelis, Epim. in Prælect. xix.

7. The Redeemer of Israel, his Holy One] “Forte, לקדשו;” SECKER: that is, to his Holy One. The preceding word ends with a ל, which might occasion that letter’s being lost here. The Talmud of Babylon has וקדושי.

Ibid. To him, whose person is despised] “Forte, נבזה;” SECKER: or בוזי, Le Clerc: that is, instead of the active, the passive form, which seems here to be required.

9. And to those that are in darkness—] Fifteen MSS

(five ancient), and the two old editions of 1486 and 1488, add the conjunction ו at the beginning of this member: another MS had it so at first; and two others have a rasure at the place: and it is expressed by LXX, Syr. Chald. Vulg.

12. Lo! these shall come from afar] “Babylon was far, and east, מְזוּרָה; (non sic Vett.); Sinim, Pelusians, to the south:” SECKER.

Ibid. —the land of Sinim] Prof. Doederlein thought of Syene, the southern limit of Egypt; but does not abide by it. Michaelis thinks it is right; and promises to give his reasons for so thinking in the second part of his Specilegium Geographiæ Hebræorum Exteræ. See Biblioth. Oriental. Part XI. p. 176.

13. Ye mountains burst forth] Three ancient MSS are without either the ו, or the conjunction ו, before the verb: and so LXX, Syr. Vulg.

16. Behold, on the palms of my hands have I delineated thee] This is certainly an allusion to some practice, common among the Jews at that time, of making marks on their hands or arms by punctures on the skin, with some sort of sign or representation of the city or temple, to shew their affection and zeal for it. They had a method of making such punctures indelible by fire, or by staining. See note on chap. xlv. 5. It is well known, that the pilgrims at the holy sepulchre get themselves marked in this manner with what are called the ensigns of Jerusalem; Maundrell, p. 75.; where he tells us how it is performed: and this art is practised by travelling Jews all over the world at this day.

17. They that destroyed thee shall soon become thy builders—] “Auctor Vulgatæ pro בְּנֵיךָ videtur legisse בְּנֵיךָ, unde vertit, structores tui; cui et LXX fere consentiunt, qui verterunt οικοδομηθης, ædificata es, prout in Plantiniana editione habetur; in Vaticana sive Romana legitur, οικοδομηθησθης, ædificaberis. Hisce etiam Targum Jonathanis aliquatenus consentit, ubi, et ædificabunt. Confer infra Esai, cap. liv. ver. 13. ad quem locum Rabbinii quoque notarunt ex tractatu Talmudico Berachot. cap. ix. quod non legendum sit בְּנֵיךָ, id est, filii tui; sed בְּנֵיךָ, ædificatores tui. Confer not. ad librum Prec. Jud. Part II. p. 226. ut et D. Wagen-seil Sot. p. 253. n. 9. :” Breithaupt, not. ad Jarchi in loc. See also note on this place in De Sac. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xxxi.

Ibid. —shall become thine offspring] מִמֶּךָ יֵצְאוּ, shall proceed, spring, issue, from thee,—as thy children. The phrase is frequently used in this sense: see chap. xi. 1. Micah v. 2. Nahum i. 11. The accession of the Gentiles to the church of God is considered as an addition made to the number of the family and children of Sion: see ver. 21, 22. and chap. lx. 4. The common rendering, “shall go forth of thee, or depart from thee,” is very flat, after their zeal had been expressed by “shall become thy builders:” and as the opposition is kept up in one part of the sentence, one has reason to expect it in the other, which should have been parallel to it.

18. And bind them about thee, as a bride—] The end of the sentence is manifestly imperfect. Does a bride bind her children, or her new subjects, about her? Sion clothes herself with her children, as a bride clothes herself—with what? some other thing certainly. The LXX help us out in this difficulty, and supply the lost word: ὡς κακοσμου νυμφῆς כְּלִיהַ כְּלִיהַ, or כְּכִלְהַ כְּלִיהַ. The great similitude of the two words has occasioned the omission of one of them. See chap. lxi. 10.

21. —these then, where were they?] The conjunction is added before אֵלֶּה, that is, וְאֵלֶּה, in above thirty MSS (nine ancient); and so LXX, Chald. Vulg.

23. With their faces to the earth—] It is well known, that expressions of submission, homage, and reverence, always have been, and are still, carried to a great degree of extravagance in the eastern countries. When Joseph's brethren were introduced to him, “they bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth;” Gen. xlii. 6. The kings of Persia never admitted any one to their presence without exacting this act of adoration; for that was the proper term for it. “Necesse est,” says the Persian courtier to Conon, “si in conspectum veneris, venerari te regem; quod προσκυνεσθαι illi vocant:” Nepos in Conone. Alexander, intoxicated with success, affected this piece of oriental pride: “Itaque more Persarum Macedonas venerabundos ipsum salutare, prosternentes humi corpora:” Curtius, lib. viii. The insolence of eastern monarchs to conquered princes, and the submission of the latter, is astonishing. Mr Harmer, Obs. ii. 43. gives the following instance of it from D'Herbelot:—“This prince threw himself one day on the ground, and kissed the prints that his victorious enemy's horse had made there; reciting some verses in Persian, which he had composed, to this effect:—

“The mark that the foot of your horse has left upon the dust, serves me now for a crown.

The ring, which I wear as the badge of my slavery, is become my richest ornament.

While I shall have the happiness to kiss the dust of your feet, I shall think that fortune favours me with its tenderest caresses, and its sweetest kisses.”

These expressions, therefore, of the Prophet, are only general poetical images, taken from the manners of the country, to denote great respect and reverence: and such splendid poetical images, which frequently occur in the prophetical writings, were intended only as general amplifications of the subject, not as predictions to be understood and fulfilled precisely according to the letter.

24. Shall the prey seized by the terrible be rescued?] For צִרִיךָ read עִרִיךָ. A palpable mistake, like that in chap. xlii. 19. The correction is self-evident from the very terms of the sentence; from the necessity of the strict correspondence in the expressions between the question and the answer made to it; and it is apparent to the blindest and most prejudiced eye. However, if authority is also necessary, there is that of Syr. and Vulg. for it; who plainly read עִרִיךָ in the 24th as well as in the 25th verse, rendering it in the former place by the same word as in the latter.

CHAPTER L.

1. WHERE is this bill—] Husbands, through moroseness or levity of temper, often sent bills of divorcement to their wives on slight occasions, as they were permitted to do by the law of Moses, Deut. xxiv. 1. And fathers, being oppressed with debt, often sold their children; which they might do, for a time, till the year of release; Exod. xxi. 7. That this was frequently practised, appears from many passages of Scripture; and that the persons and the liberty of the children were answerable for the debts of the father. The widow, 2 Kings iv. 1. complains, “that the creditor is come to take unto him her two sons to be bondmen.” And in the parable, Matt. xviii. 25. “The lord, forasmuch as his servant had not to pay, commands him to be sold, and his wife and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made." Sir John Chardin's MS note on this place of Isaiah is as follows: "En Orient, on paye ses dettes avec ses esclaves, car ils sont des principaux meubles; et en plusieurs lieux on les paye aussi de ses enfans." But this, saith God, cannot be my case: I am not governed by any such motives; neither am I urged by any such necessity: your captivity, therefore, and your afflictions, are to be imputed to yourselves, and to your own folly and wickedness.

2. Their fish is dried up] For תבאש, stinketh, read חיבש, is dried up: so it stands in the Bodleian MS, and it is confirmed by the LXX, ξηρανθησονται.

5. Neither did I withdraw—] Eleven MSS, and the oldest edition, prefix the conjunction ו; and so also LXX and Syr.

6. And my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair] The greatest indignity that could possibly be offered. See note on chap. vii. 20.

Ibid. My face I hid not from shame and spitting] Another instance of the utmost contempt and detestation. It was ordered by the law of Moses, as a severe punishment, carrying with it a lasting disgrace: Deut. xxv. 9. Among the Medes, it was highly offensive to spit in any one's presence, Herod. i. 99.; and so likewise among the Persians, Xenophon. Cyrop. lib. i. p. 18.

"They abhor me; they flee far from me;

They forbear not to spit in my face." Job xxx. 10.

And JEHOVAH said unto Moses, "If her father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days?" Numb. xii. 14.; on which place Sir John Chardin remarks, "that spitting before any one, or spitting upon the ground in speaking of any one's actions, is through the East an expression of extreme detestation:" Harmer's Obs. ii. 509. See also, of the same notions of the Arabs in this respect, Niebuhr, Description de l'Arabie, p. 26. It so evidently appears, that in those countries spitting has ever been an expression of the utmost detestation, that the learned doubt whether in the passages of Scripture above quoted any thing more is meant than spitting (not in the face, which perhaps the words do not necessarily imply, but only) in the presence of the person affronted. But in this place it certainly means spitting in the face: so it is understood in St Luke, where our Lord plainly refers to this prophecy:—"All things that are written by the Prophets concerning the Son of Man shall be accomplished ; for he shall be delivered to the Gentiles, and shall be mocked and spitefully entreated, and spitted on, ἐμπύσθησεται," xviii. 31, 32. ; which was in fact fulfilled ; καὶ ἤρξαντο τινες ἐμπύσσειν αὐτὸν, Mark xiv. 65. xv. 19. If spitting in a person's presence was such an indignity, how much more spitting in his face ?

7. Therefore have I set my face as a flint—] The Prophet Ezekiel has expressed this with great force, in his bold and vehement manner :

"Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces,
And thy forehead strong against their foreheads :
As an adamant, harder than a rock, have I made thy forehead.

Fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks,
Though they be a rebellious house." Ezek. iii. 8, 9.

8. Who is he that will contend—] The Bodleian MS, and another, add the word הוא יריב ; מי הוא יריב, as in the like phrase in the next verse : and in the very same phrase, Job xiii. 19., and so likewise in many other places, Job xvii. 3. xli. 1. Sometimes, on the like occasions, it is מי זה, and מי הוא זה. The word has been probably lost out of the present text ; and the reading of the MSS above-mentioned seems to be genuine.

10. Let him hearken to the voice of his servant.] For שמע, pointed as the participle, the LXX and Syr. read ישמע, future or imperative : this gives a much more elegant turn and distribution to the sentence.

11. —ye who kindle a fire—] The fire of their own kindling, by the light of which they walk with security and satisfaction, is an image designed to express, in general, human devices, and mere worldly policy, exclusive of faith and trust in God ; which, though they flatter them for a while with pleasing expectations and some appearance of success, shall in the end turn to the confusion of the authors. Or, more particularly, as Vitranga explains it, it may mean the designs of the turbulent and factious Jews in the times succeeding those of Christ ; who, in pursuit of their own desperate schemes, stirred up the war against the Romans, and kindled a fire which consumed their city and nation.

Ibid. —who heap the fuel round about] "מגוזי, accendentes, Syr. forte legerunt [מאזרי מאזרי ; nam sequitur אור :"] SECKER. Lud. Capellus, in his critical notes on this place, thinks it should be מערורי, from the LXX, καταδοχυσοντες

CHAPTER LI.

4. — O ye peoples ;—O ye nations] For עַמִּי, my people, the Bodley MS, and another, read עַמִּים, ye peoples ; and for לְאֹמִי, my nation, the Bodley MS, and eight others (two of them ancient), read לְאֻמִּים, ye nations : and so the Syriac in both words. The difference is very material : for in this case the address is made, not to the Jews, but to the Gentiles, as in all reason it ought to be ; for this and the two following verses express the call of the Gentiles, the islands, or the distant lands on the coasts of the Mediterranean and other seas. It is also to be observed, that God in no other place calls his people לְאֹמִי. It has been before remarked, that transcribers frequently omitted the final ם of nouns plural, and supplied it, for brevity sake, and sometimes for want of room at the end of a line, by a small stroke thus, עַמִּי ; which mark, being effaced or overlooked, has been the occasion of many mistakes of this kind.

5. My righteousness is at hand—] The word צֶדֶק, righteousness, is used in such a great latitude of signification, for justice, truth, faithfulness, goodness, mercy, deliverance, salvation, &c., that it is not easy sometimes to give the precise meaning of it without much circumlocution : it means here the faithful completion of God's promises to deliver his people.

11. —shall they obtain, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away] Nineteen MSS, and the two oldest editions, have יְשִׁיעִי ; and forty-six MSS, and the same two editions, and agreeably to them Chald. and Syr. have וְנִסִּי : and so both words are expressed chap. xxxv. 10., of which place this is a repetition. And from comparing both together it appears, that the ן in this place is become by mistake in the present text the final ן of the preceding word.

13. —of the oppressor, as if he—] “The כ in כָּאֲשֶׁר seems clearly to have changed its situation from the end of the preceding word to the beginning of this ; or rather, to have been omitted by mistake there, because it was here. That it was there, the LXX shew by rendering ὁ καταπιεστων σου, of him that oppressed thee : And so they render this word in both its places in this verse. The Vulgate also has the pronoun in the first instance : furoris ejus qui te tribulabat :” Dr JUBB. The correction seems well founded.

I have not conformed the translation to it, because it makes very little difference in the sense.

14. He marcheth on with speed—] Cyrus, if understood of the temporal redemption from the captivity of Babylon; in the spiritual sense, the Messiah.

16. To stretch out the heavens] In the present text it is לנטע, to plant the heavens. The phrase is certainly very obscure, and in all probability is a mistake for לנטות. This latter is the word used in ver. 13. just before, in the very same sentence; and this phrase occurs frequently in Isaiah, chap. xl. 22. xlii. 5. xlv. 24. xlv. 12.; the former in no other place. It is also very remarkable, that in the Samaritan text, Numb. xxiv. 6. these two words are twice changed, by mistake, one for the other, in the same verse.

19. These two things—desolation and destruction, the famine and the sword] That is, desolation by famine, and destruction by the sword; taking the terms alternately: of which form of construction see other examples, De S. Poesi Heb. Præl. xix. and Prelim. Dissert. p. xvii. The Chaldee paraphrast, not rightly understanding this, has had recourse to the following expedient: “Two afflictions are come upon thee,—and when four shall come upon thee, depredation and destruction, and the famine and the sword—” Five MSS have הרעב without the conjunction ו; and so LXX and Syr.

Ibid. —Who shall comfort thee?] A MS, LXX, Syr. Chald. and Vulg. have it in the third person, ינחמך; which is evidently right.

20. —in the toils, drenched to the full—] “Forte מכמרה מלאים:” SECKER. The demonstrative ה, prefixed to מלאים, seems improper in this place.

21. And thou drunken, but not with wine.] Æschylus has the same expression:

Δοινοῖς ἐμμεμῆναις θυγατρὸς.

Eumen. 863.

Intoxicate with passion, not with wine.

Schultens thinks, that this circumlocution, as he calls it, “gradum adfert incomparabiliter majorem;” and that it means not simply without wine, but much more than with wine: Gram. Hebr. p. 182. See his note on Job xxx. 28.

The bold image of the cup of God’s wrath, often employed by the sacred writers, (see note on chap. i. 22.), is nowhere handled with greater force and sublimity than in this passage of Isaiah, ver. 17—23. Jerusalem is represented in person as staggering under the effects of it, destitute of that assistance which she might expect from her children; not one of them being able to support or to lead her. They, abject and amazed, lie at the head of every street, overwhelmed with the greatness of their distress; like the oryx entangled in a net, in vain struggling to rend it, and extricate himself. This is poetry of the first order, sublimity of the highest proof.

Plato had an idea something like this: "Suppose, says he, God had given to men a medicating potion inducing fear; so that the more any one should drink of it, so much the more miserable he should find himself at every draught, and become fearful of every thing both present and future; and at last, though the most courageous of men, should be totally possessed by fear: and afterward, having slept off the effects of it, should become himself again." De Leg. i. near the end. He pursues at large this hypothesis, applying it to his own purpose, which has no relation to the present subject. Homer places two vessels at the threshold of Jupiter, one of good, the other of evil: he gives to some a potion mixed of both, to others from the evil vessel only: these are completely miserable: Iliad. xxvi. 527.

23. —who oppress thee] "Videntur, LXX, Chald. Syr. Vulg. legisse מוֹנִיךְ, ut xl. 26.:" SECKER. And so it is in edit. Gersom.

Ibid. That say to thee, Bow down thy body] A very strong and most expressive description of the insolent pride of eastern conquerors; which, though it may seem greatly exaggerated, yet hardly exceeds the strict truth. An example has already been given of it in note to chap. xlix. 23. I will here add one or two more. "Joshua called for all the men of Israel; and said unto the captains of the men of war that went with him: Come near, put your feet upon the necks of these kings;" Josh. x. 24. "Adonibezek said, Threescore and ten kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table: as I have done, so hath God requited me;" Judg. i. 7. The Emperor Valerianus being through treachery taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, was treated by him as the basest and most abject slave: for the Persian monarch commanded the unhappy Roman to bow himself down, and offer him his back, on which he set his foot, in order to mount his chariot or his horse, whenever he had occasion: Lactan-tius, De Mort. Persec. cap. v. ; Aurel. Victor. Epitome, cap. xxxii.

CHAPTER LII.

2. —ascend thy lofty seat] The literal rendering here is, according to our English translation, “arise, sit:” on which a very learned person remarks, “So the old versions. But sitting is an expression of mourning in Scripture and the ancients; and doth not well agree with the rising just before.” It doth not indeed agree according to our ideas; but considered in an oriental light, it is perfectly consistent. The common manner of sitting in the eastern countries is upon the ground or floor, with the legs crossed. The people of better condition have the floors of their chambers or divans covered with carpets for this purpose; and round the chamber broad couches, raised a little above the floor, spread with mattresses handsomely covered, which are called sophas. When sitting is spoken of as a posture of more than ordinary state, it is quite of a different kind; and means sitting on high, on a chair of state or throne, for which a footstool was necessary, both in order that the person might raise himself up to it, and for supporting the legs when he was placed in it. “Chairs (saith Sir John Chardin) are never used in Persia but at the coronation of their kings. The king is seated in a chair of gold set with jewels, three feet high.—The chairs which are used by the people in the East are always so high as to make a footstool necessary. And this proves the propriety of the style of Scripture, which always joins the footstool to the throne:” (Isa. lxvi. 1. Psal. ex. 1.): Voyages, tom. ix. p. 85. 12<sup>mo</sup>. Beside the six steps to Solomon’s throne, there was a footstool of gold fastened to the seat, 2 Chron. ix. 18. which would otherwise have been too high for the king to reach, or to sit on conveniently.

When Thetis comes to wait on Vulcan to request armour for her son, she is received with great respect, and seated on a silver-studded throne, a chair of ceremony, with a footstool:—

Την μὲν ἐπειτα καθεῖσεν ἐπὶ θρόνου ἀργυροῆλης,

Καλὰ, δαιδαλεῖν ὑπο δὲ θρηγυὺς ποσσὶν ἦεν. Iliad. xviii. 389.

“High on a throne, with stars of silver graced,
And various artifice, the queen she placed;
A footstool at her feet.”

Pope.

Ο γὰρ θρόνος αὐτοῦ μόνον ἐλευθερίος ἐστὶ καθεδρὰ συν ὑποπόδιον: Athenæus, v. 4.: "A throne is nothing more than a handsome sort of chair, with a footstool."

5. And they that are lords over them—] For מְשֻׁלִּי, singular, in the text, more than a hundred and twenty MSS have מְשֻׁלִּי, plural, according to the Masoretical correction in the margin: which shews, that the Masoretes often superstitiously retained apparent mistakes in the text, even when they had sufficient evidence to authorize the introduction of the true reading.

Ibid. —make their boast of it] For יְהִלִּי, "make them to howl," five MSS (two ancient) have יְהִלִּי, "make their boast;" which is confirmed by the Chaldee paraphrast, who renders it מְשַׁבְּחִין.

6. Therefore shall my people—] The word לִכְן, occurring the second time in this verse, seems to be repeated by mistake. It has no force or emphasis as a repetition; it only embarrasses the construction and the sense. It was not in the copies from which the LXX, Syr. and Vulg. were translated; it was not in the copy of LXX from which the Arabic was translated: but in the Aldine and Complutensian editions δὲ τὰς is repeated; probably so corrected, in order to make it conformable with the Hebrew text.

Ibid. For I am He that promised] For הוּא, the Bodley MS, and another, have יְהוָה; "for I am JEHOVAH that promised:" and another ancient MS adds יְהוָה after הוּא. The addition of JEHOVAH seems to be right, in consequence of what was said in the preceding line, "My people shall know my name."

7. How beautiful—] The watchmen discover afar off, on the mountains, the messenger bringing the expected and much wished-for news of the deliverance from the Babylonish captivity. They immediately spread the joyful tidings, ver. 8. and with a loud voice proclaim that JEHOVAH is returning to Sion, to resume his residence on his holy mountain, which for some time he seemed to have deserted. This is the literal sense of the place.

"How beautiful on the mountains are the feet of the joyful messenger," is an expression highly poetical; for, how welcome is his arrival! how agreeable are the tidings which he brings!

Nahum, who is generally supposed to have lived after

Isaiah, has manifestly taken from him this very pleasing image; but the imitation does not equal the beauty of the original:—

“ Behold upon the mountains the feet of the joyful messenger,
Of him that announceth peace :
Celebrate, O Judah, thy festivals ; perform thy vows :
For no more shall pass through thee the wicked one ;
He is utterly cut off.” Nah. i. 15.

But it must at the same time be observed, that Isaiah's subject is infinitely more interesting, and more sublime, than that of Nahum : The latter denounces the destruction of the capital of the Assyrian empire, the most formidable enemy of Judah ; the ideas of the former are in their full extent evangelical : and accordingly St Paul has, with the utmost propriety, applied this passage to the preaching of the gospel, Rom. x. 15. The joyful tidings here to be proclaimed, “ Thy God, O Sion, reigneth,” are the same that John the Baptist, the messenger of Christ, and that Christ himself published, “ The kingdom of heaven is at hand.”

8. All thy watchmen—] There is a difficulty in the construction of this place, which, I think, none of the ancient versions, or modern interpreters, have cleared up to satisfaction. Rendered word for word it stands thus : “ The voice of thy watchmen : they lift up their voice.” The sense of the first member, considered as elliptical, is variously supplied by various expositors ; by none, as it seems to me, in any way that is easy and natural. I am persuaded there is a mistake in the present text, and that the true reading is כל צפיק, “ all thy watchmen ;” instead of קול צפיק. The mistake was easy from the similitude in sound of the two letters כ and ק. And in one MS the ק is upon a rasure. This correction perfectly rectifies the sense and the construction.

Ibid. —when JEHOVAH returneth to Sion.] So the Chaldee: בד יתיב שכנתיה לציון, “ when he shall bring back his presence to Sion.” God is considered as having deserted his people during the captivity ; and, at the restoration, as returning himself with them to Sion his former habitation : See Psal. lx. 1. chap. xl. 9. and note.

9. —he hath redeemed Israel] For the word ירושלם, which occurs the second time in this verse, MS Bodley, and another, read ישראל. It is upon a rasure in a third ; and left unpointed at first, as suspected, in a fourth. It was an easy mistake, by the transcriber's casting his eye on the line above ; and the propriety of the correction, both in regard to sense and elegance, is evident.

11. Depart, depart ye ; go ye out from thence] The Prophet Jeremiah seems to have had his eye on this passage of Isaiah, and to have applied it to a subject directly opposite. It is here addressed by the Prophet in the way of encouragement and exhortation to the Jews coming out of Babylon : Jeremiah has given it a different turn, and has thrown it out as a reproach of the heathen upon the Jews, when they were driven from Jerusalem into captivity :

“Depart ; ye are polluted, depart ; depart ye, forbear to touch :
Yea, they are fled, they are removed : they shall dwell here no more.” Lam. iv. 15.

Of the metrical distribution of these lines, see the Prelim. Dissertation, p. xxxi. note.

13. The subject of Isaiah's prophecy, from the fortieth chapter inclusive, has hitherto been in general the deliverance of the people of God. This includes in it three distinct parts ; which, however, have a close connexion with one another : that is, the deliverance of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon ; the deliverance of the Gentiles from their miserable state of ignorance and idolatry ; and the deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin and death. These three subjects are subordinate to one another ; and the two latter are shadowed out under the image of the former. They are covered by it as by a veil ; which however is transparent, and suffers them to appear through it. Cyrus is expressly named as the immediate agent of God in effecting the first deliverance : A greater Person is spoken of as the agent who is to effect the two latter deliverances ; called the servant, the elect, of God, in whom his soul delighteth ; Israel, in whom God will be glorified. Now these three subjects have a very near relation to one another ; for, as the agent who was to effect the two latter deliverances, that is, the Messiah, was to be born a Jew, with particular limitations of time, family, and other circumstances ; the first deliverance was necessary in the order of Providence, and according to the determinate counsel of God, to the accomplishment of the two latter deliverances ; and the second deliverance was necessary to the third, or rather was involved in it, and made an essential part of it. This being the case, Isaiah has not treated the three subjects as quite distinct and separate in a methodical and orderly manner, like a philosopher or a logician, but has taken them in their connective view: he has handled them as a prophet and a poet; he hath allegorized the former, and under the image of it has shadowed out the two latter; he has thrown them all together; has mixed one with another, has passed from this to that with rapid transitions, and has painted the whole with the strongest and boldest imagery. The restoration of the Jews from captivity, the call of the Gentiles, the redemption by Messiah, have hitherto been handled interchangeably and alternately: Babylon has hitherto been kept pretty much in sight; at the same time that strong intimations of something much greater have frequently been thrown in. But here Babylon is at once dropped; and I think hardly ever comes in sight again; unless perhaps in chap. lv. 12. and lvii. 14. The Prophet's views are almost wholly engrossed by the superior part of his subject. He introduces the Messiah as appearing at first in the lowest state of humiliation, which he had just touched upon before, chap. l. 5, 6. and obviates the offence which would be occasioned by it, by declaring the important and necessary cause of it, and foreshewing the glory which should follow it.

This seems to me to be the nature and the true design of this part of Isaiah's prophecies; and this view of them seems to afford the best method of resolving difficulties in which expositors are frequently engaged, being much divided between what is called the literal and the mystical sense—not very properly; for the mystical or spiritual sense is very often the most literal sense of all.

Abarbanel seems to have had an idea of this kind, as he is quoted by Vitringa on chap. xlix. 1. who thus represents his sentiments: “Censet Abarbanel Prophetam hic transitum facere a liberatione ex exilio Babylonico ad liberationem ex exilio Romano, (for this he takes to be the secondary sense); et, quod hic animadversu dignum est, observat liberationem ex exilio Babylonico esse אִתּוֹ וְרֵאִיָּה, signum et argumentum liberationis futuræ; atque adeo orationem Prophetæ de duabus hisce liberationibus in superioribus concionibus sæpe inter se permisceri. Verba ejus: ‘Et propterea verba, sive res, in prophetia superiore inter se permixtæ occurrunt; modo de liberatione Babylonica, modo de liberatione extrema accipiendæ, ut orationis necessitas exigit.’ Nullum hic vitium, nisi quod redemptionem veram et spirituales a Messia vero Jesu adductam non agnoscat.”

14. —were astonished at him] For עֲלִי read עֲלֵי : so Syr. Chald. and Vulg. in a MS ; and so likewise two ancient MSS.

15. So shall he sprinkle many nations] I retain the common rendering, though I am by no means satisfied with it. “יזה, frequent in the law, means only to sprinkle : but the water sprinkled is the accusative case ; the thing, on which, has עַל or אֵל. Θαυμασονται, ὃ, makes the best apodosis. הנהג would do. ינהרג is used ii. 2. Jer. xxxi. 12. li. 44. but is unlike. Kings shall shut, &c. is good ; but seems to want a first part :” SECKER. Munster translates it, “Faciēt loqui (de se);” and in his note thus explains it : “יזה proprie significat spargere et stillas disseminare : hic vero capitur pro loqui, et verbum disseminare.” This is pretty much as the Rabbins, Kimchi, and Salomo ben Melec, explain it, referring to the expression of “dropping the word.” But the same objection lies to this as to the common rendering ; it ought to be יזה (דבר) עַל גַּיִם. Bishop Chandler, Defence, p. 148. says, “that to sprinkle is used for to surprise and astonish, as people are that have much water thrown upon them. And this sense is followed by the LXX.” This is ingenious, but rather too refined. Dr DURELL conjectures that the true reading may be יחזו, they shall regard, which comes near to the θαυμασονται of the LXX ; who seem to give the best sense of any to the place.

“I find in my papers the same conjecture which Dr DURELL made from θαυμασονται in LXX. And it may be added, that יחזו is used to express “looking on any thing with admiration ;” Psal. xi. 7. and xvii. 15. and xxvii. 4. and lxiii. 2. Cant. vi. 13. It is particularly applied to “looking on God,” Exod. xxiv. 11. and Job xix. 26. Gisbert Cuper, in Observat. lib. ii. 1. though aliud agens, has some observations which shew how nearly ὀραω and θαυμαζω are allied, which (with the peculiar sense of the verb יחזו above noted) add to the probability of θαυμασονται being the version of יחזו in the text : οἱ δὲ νῦν λαοὶ Παντες ἐξ ἀνθρῶπων ὀρωσι. Hesiod. id est, cum veneratione quadam admirantur. Hinc ὀραω et θαυμαζω junxit Themistius Or. I. Εἰλα παυσσιναι οἱ ἀνθρώποι πρὸς σε μόνον ὀρωντες, καὶ σε μόνον θαυμαζόντες. Theophrastus in Charact. cap. iii. Εὐθυμῆ ὥς ἀποβλέψασιν εἰς σε οἱ ἀνθρώποι. Hence the rendering of this verse seems to be :—

So many nations shall look on him with admiration :

Kings shall stop their mouths—”

CHAPTER LIII.

2. He hath no form, nor any beauty—] Οὐκ εἶδος αὐτοῦ, ἔδε αἰσῶμα, ἡ αὐτὸς εἰς αὐτὸν ἔδε ὤψωρα, ἡ αὐτὸς ἐπιθετομένη αὐτὸν: Symmachus; the only one of the ancients that has translated it rightly.

3. —and acquainted with grief—] For וידיע, eight MSS and one edition have וידע; LXX, Syr. and Vulg. read it וידיע.

Ibid. —as one that hideth his face] For ובמסתור, four MSS (two ancient) have ובמסתרי, one MS ומסתרי. For פנים, two MSS have פניו; and so likewise LXX and Vulg. Mourners covered up the lower part of their faces, and their heads; 2 Sam. xv. 30. Ezek. xxiv. 17.; and lepers were commanded by the law, Lev. xiii. 45. to cover their upper lip. From which circumstance it seems, that Vulg. Aquila, Symmachus, and the Jewish commentators, have taken the word נגוע, stricken, in the next verse, as meaning stricken with the leprosy, ἐν ἀφῆλῳ, Sym.; ἀφῆλεσθαι, Aq.; leprosum, Vulg.

4. Surely our infirmities—] Seven MSS (two ancient), and three editions, have חלינו, in the plural number.

Ibid. —he hath carried them] Fifteen MSS (two ancient), and two editions, have the word הוא before סבלם in the text: four other MSS have it in the margin. This adds force to the sense, and elegance to the construction.

5. —by which our peace is effected] Twenty-one MSS and six editions have the word fully and regularly expressed, שלמינו; “pacificationum nostrarum.” Ar. Montan.

6. —the iniquities of us all] For עון, the ancient interpreters read עוונות, plural; and so Vulg. in MS Blanchini.

8. And his manner of life who would declare?] My learned friend Dr KENNICOTT has communicated to me the following passages from the Mishna, and the Gemara of Babylon, as leading to a satisfactory explication of this difficult place. It is said in the former, that, before any one was punished for a capital crime, proclamation was made before the prisoner by the public crier in these words: כל מי שיודע לו זכות יבא וילמד עליי, “quicunque noverit aliquid de ejus innocentia, veniat et doceat de eo.” Tract. Sanhedrim. Surenhus. Par. IV. p. 233. On which passage the Gemara of Babylon adds, that, “before the death of Jesus, this proclamation was made for forty days; but no defence could be found." On which words Lardner observes, "It is truly surprising to see such falsities, contrary to well known facts:" Testimonies, vol. i. p. 198. The report is certainly false; but this false report is founded on the supposition that there was such a custom, and so far confirms the account above given from the Mishna. The Mishna was composed in the middle of the second century, according to Prideaux; Lardner ascribes it to the year of Christ 180.

Casaubon has a quotation from Maimonides, which further confirms this account: Exercitat. in Baronii Annales, Art. lxxxvi. Ann. 34. Num. 119. "Auctor est Maimonides in Perek xiii. ejus Libri ex opere Jad, solitum fieri, ut cum Reus, sententiam mortis passus, a loco judicii exibat ducendus ad supplicium, præcederet ipsum הכרוו, זקקטק, præco; et hæc verba diceret: Ille exit occidendus morte illa, quia transgressus est transgressionem illa, in loco illo, tempore illo, et sunt ejus rei testes ille et ille. Qui noverit aliquid ad ejus innocentiam probandam, veniat, et loquatur pro eo."

Now it is plain from the history of the four Evangelists, that in the trial and condemnation of Jesus no such rule was observed, (though, according to the account of the Mishna, it must have been in practice at that time): no proclamation was made for any person to bear witness to the innocence and character of Jesus; nor did any one voluntarily step forth to give his attestation to it. And our Saviour seems to refer to such a custom, and to claim the benefit of it, by his answer to the High Priest, when he asked him of his disciples and of his doctrine: "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing. Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said;" John xviii. 20, 21. This therefore was one remarkable instance of hardship and injustice, among others, predicted by the Prophet, which our Saviour underwent in his trial and sufferings.

St Paul likewise, in similar circumstances, standing before the judgment-seat of Festus, seems to complain of the same unjust treatment; that no one was called, or would appear to vindicate his character: "My manner of life (משעונו עקד, מוטט), from my youth, which was at the first among my own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews ; which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify ; that after the straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee ;" Acts xxvi. 4, 5.

דור signifies age, duration, the time which one man or many together pass in this world ; in this place, the course, tenor, or manner of life. The verb דור signifies, according to Castell. "ordinatam vitam sive ætatem egit, ordinavit, ordine constituit." In Arabic, "curavit, administravit."

Ibid. — he was smitten to death] The LXX read לימות, εις θανατον. And so the Coptic and Sahidic versions from LXX, MSS St Germain de Prez.

"Origen, (contra Celsum, lib. i. p. 370. edit. 1733), after having quoted at large this prophecy concerning the Messiah, tells us, that having once made use of this passage in a dispute against some that were accounted wise among the Jews ; one of them replied, that the words did not mean one man, but one people, the Jews ; who were smitten of God, and dispersed among the Gentiles for their conversion : that he then urged many parts of this prophecy, to shew the absurdity of this interpretation ; and that he seemed to press them the hardest by this sentence ; απο των ανομιων τω λαω μας ηχθη εις θανατον. Now as Origen, the author of the Hexapla, must have understood Hebrew, we cannot suppose that he would have urged this last quotation as so decisive, if the Greek version had not agreed here with the Hebrew text ; nor that these wise Jews would have been at all distressed by this quotation, unless their Hebrew text had read agreeably to εις θανατον, on which the argument principally depended : for, by quoting it immediately, they would have triumphed over him, and reprobated his Greek version. This, whenever they could do it, was their constant practice, in their disputes with the Christians. Jerom, in his preface to the Psalms, says, "Nuper cum Hebræo disputans, quædam pro Domino salvatore de Psalmis testimonia protulisti : volensque ille te illudere, per sermones fere singulos asserebat, non ita haberi in Hebræo, ut tu de LXX opponebas." And Origen himself, who laboriously compared the Hebrew text with the LXX, has recorded the necessity of arguing with the Jews from such passages only as were in the LXX agreeable to the Hebrew : ινα προς Ιουδαιοις διαλεγομενοι μη προφρωμεν αυτοις τα μη κειμενα εν τοις αντιγραφαις αυτων, και ινα συγχρησωμεθα τοις φερομενοις παρ' εκεινοις. See Epist. ad Afric. p. 15. 17.

Wherefore, as Origen had carefully compared the Greek version of LXX with the Hebrew text, and speaks of the contempt with which the Jews treated all appeals to the Greek version, where it differed from their Hebrew text; and as he puzzled and confounded the learned Jews by urging upon them the reading εις θανατον in this place; it seems almost impossible not to conclude, both from Origen's argument and the silence of his Jewish adversaries, that the Hebrew text at that time actually had למרה, agreeably to the version of the LXX:” Dr KENNICOTT.

9. But with the rich man was his tomb] Among the various opinions which have been given on this passage, I have no doubt in giving my assent to that which makes the ב in במרתו radical, and renders it excelsa sua. This is mentioned by Aben Ezra, as received by some in his time; and has been long since approved by Schindler, Drusius, and many other learned Christian interpreters.

The most simple tombs or monuments of old consisted of hillocks of earth heaped up over the grave: of which we have numerous examples in our own country, generally allowed to be of very high antiquity. The Romans called a monument of this sort very properly tumulus; and the Hebrews as properly במרתו, for that is the form of the noun in the singular number; and sixteen MSS, and the two oldest editions, express the word fully in this place, במרתו. “Tumulus et collem et sepulchrum fuisse significat. Potest enim tumulus sine sepulchro interpretatione collis interdum accipi. Nam et terræ congestio super ossa tumulus dicitur:” Servius, in Æneid iii. 22. And to make the tumulus still more elevated and conspicuous, a pillar or some other ornament was often erected upon it:—

*Τυμβὸν γένεσσαντες, καὶ ἐπὶ στήλην ἐρυσσάντες,
Πηξάμεν ἀγροτάτῳ τυμβῷ εὐήρεξ ἐρετμον.* Odys. xii. 14.

“A rising tomb, the silent dead to grace,
Fast by the roarings of the main we place;
The rising tomb a lofty column bore,
And high above it rose the tapering oar.” Pope.

The tomb therefore might with great propriety be called the high place. The Hebrews might also call such a tomb במרתו, from the situation; for they generally chose to erect them on eminences. The sepulchre of Joseph of Arimathea, in which the body of Christ was laid, was upon a hill, Mount Calvary. See chap. xxii. 16. and the note there.

“It should be observed, that the word במותי is not formed from במות, the plural of במה, the feminine noun, but from במותים, the plural of a masculine noun, במות. This is noted, because these two nouns have been negligently confounded with one another, and absurdly reduced to one, by very learned men. So Buxtorff, Lex. in v. במה, represents במותי, though plainly without any pronoun suffixed, as it governs the word אריך following it, as only another form of במות; whereas the truth is, that במות and במותים are different words, and have through the whole Bible very different significations: במה, whether occurring in the singular or plural number, always signifying “a place, or places, of worship;” and במותים always signifying “heights.” Thus in Deut. xxxii. 13. Isa. lviii. 14. Amos iv. 13. and Mic. i. 3. תמותי ארץ signifies “the heights of the earth;” Isa. xiv. 14. במותי עב, “the heights of the clouds;” and in Job ix. 8. במותי ים, “the heights of the sea,” i. e. the high waves of the sea, as Virgil calls a wave “præruptus aquæ mons.” These being all the places where this word occurs without a suffix, the sense of it seems clearly determined by them. It occurs in other instances with a pronoun suffixed, which confirm this signification. Unluckily our English Bible has not distinguished the feminine noun במה from the masculine singular noun במות; and has consequently always given the signification of the latter to the former, always rendering it “a high place:” whereas the true sense of the word appears plainly to be, in the very numerous passages in which it occurs, “a place of worship,” or “a sacred court,” or “a sacred inclosure,” whether appropriated to the worship of idols or to that of the true God; for it is used of both passim. Now, as the Jewish graves are shewn, from 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. and Isa. xxii. 16. to have been in high situations; to which may be added the custom of another eastern nation from Osbeck’s Travels, who says, vol. i. p. 339. “The Chinese graves are made on the side of hills; “his heights” becomes a very easy metaphor to express his sepulchre:” Dr JUBB.

The exact completion of this prophecy will be fully shewn by adding here the several circumstances of the burial of Jesus, collected from the accounts of the Evangelists:—

“There was a rich man of Arimathea, named Joseph, a member of the Sanhedrim, and of a respectable character, who had not consented to their counsel and act: he went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus; and he laid it in his own new tomb, which had been hewn out of the rock, near to the place where Jesus was crucified; having first wound it in fine linen with spices, as the manner of the Jews was to bury the rich and great."

10. —with grief] For הָחֲלִי, the verb, the construction of which seems to be hard and inelegant in this place, Vulg. reads בְּחֲלִי, in infirmitate.

Ibid. If his soul shall make—] For תְּשִׁים, a MS has תָּשַׁם, which may be taken passively, "If his soul shall be made—," agreeably to some copies of LXX, which have δωσαι. So likewise Syr.

11. —and be satisfied—] LXX, Vulg. Syr. and a MS, add the conjunction to the verb; וַיִּשְׂבַּע.

Ibid. —shall my servant justify] Three MSS (two of them ancient), omit the word צַדִּיק; it seems to be only an imperfect repetition, by mistake, of the preceding word. It makes a solecism in this place; for, according to the constant usage of the Hebrew language, the adjective, in a phrase of this kind, ought to follow the substantive; and צַדִּיק עַבְדִּי in Hebrew would be as absurd as "shall my servant righteous justify," in English. Add to this, that it makes the hemistich too long.

12. And made intercession—] For יַפְגִּיעַ, in the future, a MS has הִפְגִּיעַ, preterite; rather better, as agreeable with the other verbs immediately preceding in the sentence.

CHAPTER LIV.

1. Shout for joy, O thou barren—] The church of God under the Old Testament, confined within the narrow bounds of the Jewish nation, and still more so in respect of the very small number of true believers, and which sometimes seemed to be deserted of God her husband—is the barren woman that did not bear, and was desolate. She is exhorted to rejoice, and to express her joy in the strongest manner, on the reconciliation of her husband, see ver. 6. and on the accession of the Gentiles to her family. The converted Gentiles are all along considered by the Prophet as a new accession of adopted children, admitted into the original church of God, and united with it. See chap. xlix. 20, 21.

4. For thou shalt forget] “Shame of thy youth; i. e. the bondage of Egypt: widowhood, the captivity of Babylon:” SECKER.

7. In a little anger—] So the Chald. and Syr. either reading רגז for רגע, or understanding the latter word as meaning the same with the former, which they both make use of. See Psal. xxx. 5. xxxv. 20. in LXX, where they render רגע by ὀργή.

8. I hid my face [for a moment] from thee] The word רגע is omitted by LXX, Syr. and two MSS. It seems to embarrass rather than to help the sentence. “Forte reponi debet pro שצף, quod potest a קצף errore scribæ originem duxisse:” SECKER.

9. —as in the days of Noah] בימי, in one word, in a MS, and some editions; and so Syr. Chald. Vulg. Sym. Theod. Abarbanel, Salomo b. Melec, and Kimchi, acknowledge that their copies vary in this place.

11, 12. Behold, I lay thy stones—] These seem to be general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of the eastern nations; and to have never been intended to be strictly scrutinized, or minutely and particularly explained, as if they had each of them some precise moral or spiritual meaning. Tobit, in his prophecy of the final restoration of Israel, describes the New Jerusalem in the same oriental manner: “For Jerusalem shall be built up with sapphires, and emeralds, and precious stones; thy walls, and towers, and battlements, with pure gold. And the streets of Jerusalem shall be paved with beryl, and carbuncle, and stones of Ophir:” Tob. xiii. 16, 17. Compare also Rev. xxi. 18—21.

15. —shall come over to thy side] For יפול, twenty-eight MSS (eight ancient) have יפל, in its more common form. For the meaning of the word in this place, see Jer. xxxvii. 13.

CHAPTER LV.

9. For as the heavens are higher—] I am persuaded that כ, the particle of comparison, is lost in this place, from the likeness of the particle כי immediately preceding it. So Houbigant, and SECKER. And their remark is confirmed by all the ancient versions, which express it; and by the following passage of Psalm ciii. 11. which is almost the same :—

כי כנבה שמים על הארץ
גבר הסדו על יראיו.

“ For as the heavens are high above the earth,
So high is his goodness over them that fear him.”

Where, by the nature of the sentence, the verb in the second line ought to be the same with that in the first : גבה, not גבר : so Archbishop Secker conjectured ; referring however to Psal. cxvii. 2.

12. The mountains and the hills—] These are highly poetical images, to express a happy state attended with joy and exultation.

“ Ipsi lætitia voces ad sidera jactant
Intonsi montes : ipsæ jam carmina rupes, Ipsa sonant arbusta.” Virg. Ecl. v.

13. Instead of the thorny bushes—] These likewise (see note on the preceding verse, and on chap. liv. 11.) are general poetical images, expressing a great and happy change for the better. The wilderness turned into a paradise, Lebanon into Carmel : the desert of the Gentiles watered with the heavenly snow and rain, which fail not to have their due effect, and becoming fruitful in piety and righteousness ; or, as the Chaldee gives the moral sense of the emblem, “ instead of the wicked shall arise the just, and instead of sinners, such as fear to sin.” Compare ch. xxxv. 1, 2. xli. 19.

Ibid. And instead of—] The conjunction ו is added, ויחנה, in forty-five MSS, and five editions ; and it is acknowledged by all the ancient versions. The Masoretes therefore might have safely received it into the text, and not have referred us for it to the margin.

CHAPTER LVI.

5. —will I give them] For לו in the singular, it is evident that we ought to read למי in the plural : so read LXX, Syr. Chald. and Vulg.

7. —shall be accepted] A word is here lost out of the text : it is supplied from the LXX, יהי, εσονται : Honbigant.

9. O all ye beasts of the field—] Here manifestly begins a new section. The Prophet, in the foregoing chapters, having comforted the faithful Jews with many great promises of God's favour to be extended to them, in the restoration of their ruined state, and of the enlargement of his church by the admission of the Gentiles; here, on a sudden, makes a transition to the more disagreeable part of the prospect; and to a sharp reproof of the wicked and unbelievers, and especially of the negligent and faithless governors and teachers, of the idolaters and hypocrites, who would still draw down his judgments upon the nation—probably having in view the destruction of their city and polity by the Chaldeans, and perhaps by the Romans. The same subject is continued in the next chapter; in which the charge of corruption and apostasy becomes more general against the whole Jewish church. Some expositors have made great difficulties in the 9th verse of this chapter, where there seems to be none. It is perfectly well explained by Jeremiah; where, having introduced God declaring his purpose of punishing his people, by giving them up as a prey to their enemies the Chaldeans, a charge to these his agents is given in words very nearly the same with those of Isaiah in this place:—

“ I have forsaken my house ; I have deserted my heritage ;
I have given up the beloved of my soul into the hands of her enemies.—

Come away, be ye gathered together, all ye beasts of the field ;

Come away to devour.”

Jer. xii. 7. 9.

Ibid. —beasts of the forest] Instead of ביער, three MSS have יער, without the preposition : which seems to be right ; and is confirmed by all the ancient versions.

10. —dumb dogs, they cannot bark] See below, note on chap. lxii. 6.

Ibid. Dreamers] חזים, εντυπνοαζομενοι, LXX. This seems to be the best authority for the meaning of this word, which occurs only in this place : but it is to be observed, that three MSS, and three editions, have חזים ; and so Vulg. seems to have read, videntes vana.

12. —let us provide wine] For אקחה, first person singular, an ancient MS has נקחה, first person plural ; and another ancient MS has אק upon a rasure. So Syr. Chald. and Vulg. render it.

CHAPTER LVII.

2. He shall go in peace] יבוא שלום : the expression is elliptical, such as the Prophet frequently uses. The same sense is expressed at large and in full terms, Gen. xv. 15. ואתה תבוא אל אבותיך בשלום, “And thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace.”

Ibid. — he shall rest in his bed ; even the perfect man] This obscure sentence is reduced to a perfectly good sense, and easy construction, by an ingenious remark of Dr DURELL. He reads ינוח על משכבו תם. Two MSS (one of them ancient) have ינוח, singular ; and so Vulg. renders it, requiescat. The verb was probably altered to make it plural, and so consistent with what follows, after the mistake had been made in the following words, by uniting משכבו and תם into one word. See Merrick's Annotations on the Psalms, Addenda : where the reader will find, that J. S. Moerlius, by the same sort of correction, and by rescuing the adjective תם, which had been swallowed up in another word in the same manner, has restored to a clear sense a passage before absolutely unintelligible :—

כי אין חרצבות למו

תם ובריא אולם :

“For no distresses happen to them ;

Perfect and firm is their strength.” Psal. lxxiii. 4.

6. Among the smooth stones of the valley—] The Jews were extremely addicted to the practice of many superstitious and idolatrous rites, which the Prophet here inveighs against with great vehemence. Of the worship of rude stones consecrated, there are many testimonies of the ancients. They were called Βαιτυλοι and Βαιτυλα ; probably from the stone which Jacob erected at Bethel, pouring oil upon the top of it. The practice was very common in different ages and places. Arnobius, lib. i. gives an account of his own practice in this respect, before he became a Christian : “Si quando conspexeram lubricatum lapidem, et ex olivi unguine sordidatum ; tanquam inesset vis præsens, adulabar, affabar, et beneficia poscebam nihil sentiente de trunco.” Clemens Alex. Strom. lib. vii. speaks of a worshipper of every smooth stone in a proverbial way, to denote one given up to superstition. And accordingly Theophrastus has marked this as one strong feature in the character of the superstitious man : Και των λιπαρων λιθων των εν ταις τριοδοις παριων, εκ της ληκυθου ελαιον καταχρειν, και επι γονατα πεσων και προσκυνησας απαλλατῆσθαι : " Passing by the anointed stones in the streets, he takes out his phial of oil, and pours it on them ; and having fallen on his knees, and made his adorations, he departs."

8. Behind the door, and the door-posts, hast thou set thy memorial] That is, the image of their tutelary gods, or something dedicated to them ; in direct opposition to the law of God, which commanded them to write upon the door-posts of their house, and upon their gates, the words of God's law ; Deut. vi. 9. xi. 20. If they chose for them such a situation as more private, it was in defiance of a particular curse denounced in the law against the man who should make a graven or a molten image, and put it in a secret place ; Deut. xxvii. 15. An ancient MS, with another, has אָדָר, without the conjunction ו.

9. And thou hast visited the king with a present of oil] That is, the king of Assyria, or Egypt. Hosea reproaches the Israelites for the same practice :—

" They make a covenant with Assyria,

And oil is carried to Egypt."

Hosea xii. 1.

It is well known, that in all parts of the East, whoever visits a great person must carry him a present. " It is counted uncivil," says Maundrell, p. 26. " to visit in this country without an offering in hand. All great men expect it as a tribute due to their character and authority ; and look upon themselves as affronted, and indeed defrauded, when the compliment is omitted." Hence שׂוּר, to visit a person, is equivalent to making him a present : and תְּשׁוּרָה signifies a present made on such occasions ; as our translators have rightly rendered it, 1 Sam. ix. 7. : on which Jarchi says, " Menachem exponit תְּשׁוּרָה quod significet oblationem sive munus, ut aliquis aspiat faciem regis, aut alicujus magnatis."

10. Thou hast said, There is no hope] In one of the MSS at Koningsberg, collated by Lilienthal, the words לא אִמְרָה are left in the text unpointed, as suspected ; and in the margin the corrector has written וְהִאֲמַרְי. Now, if we compare Jer. ii. 25. and xviii. 12. we shall find, that the subject is in both places quite the same with this of Isaiah ; and the sentiment expressed, that of a desperate resolution to continue at all hazard in their idolatrous practices, the very thing that in all reason we might expect here. Probably therefore the latter is the true reading in this place.

11. —nor revolved it—] Eight MSS (four ancient), and the two oldest editions, with another, add the conjunction ו, ולא : which is confirmed by all the ancient versions.

Ibid. —and winked] For וּמַעֲלוֹם, which makes no good sense or construction in this place, twenty-three MSS (seven ancient), and three editions, have מַעֲלָם, (to be thus pointed מַעֲלָם); μαζω, LXX; quasi non videns, Vulg.: see Psal. x. 1. The truth of this reading so confirmed admits of no doubt.

12. —my righteousness] For צְדָקָתְךָ, thy righteousness, Syr. LXX, MSS Alex. and Pachom. and I. D. II., and Marchal. and ἡ ἐ, and Arab. read צְדָקָתִי, my righteousness.

13. —let thine associates deliver thee] Thirty-nine MSS (ten ancient), and the two oldest editions, have יַצִּילוּךְ, plural.

14. Then will I say] וְאָמַר, to be pointed as the first person future: they are the words of God, as it is plain from the conclusion of the verse; my people, עַמִּי.

15. For thus saith JEHOVAH] A MS adds יְהוָה after אָמַר, and edition Prag. 1518. So LXX, Alex. and Arab. An ancient MS adds יְהוָה.

Ibid. And with the contrite—] Twelve MSS have אֵת, without the conjunction ו. “Pro וְאֵת, forte legendum וְאֵתֶּנָּה : confer Psal. cxiii. 5. et cxxxviii. 6. :” SECKER.

16. For I will not alway—] The learned have taken a great deal of pains to little purpose on the latter part of this verse, which they suppose to be very obscure. After all their labours upon it, I think the best and easiest explication of it is given in the two following elegant passages of the Psalms, which I presume are exactly parallel to it, and very clearly express the same sentiment.

“But He in his tender mercy will forgive their sin,
And will not destroy them;
Yea oftentimes will he turn away his wrath,
And will not rouse up all his indignation:
For he remembereth that they are but flesh,
A breath that passeth, and returneth not.” lxxviii. 38, 39.

“He will not always contend,
Neither will he for ever hold his wrath:
As a father yearneth towards his children,
So is JEHOVAH tenderly compassionate towards them that fear him:
For he knoweth our frame;
He remembereth that we are but dust.” ciii. 9, 13, 14.

In the former of these two passages, the second line seems to be defective both in measure and sense: I suppose the stead of מרורים, מרורים. מר is upon a rasure in the Bodleian MS. The same MS reads ביהה, in domum.

8. And thy wounds shall speedily be healed] “Et cicatrix vulneris tui cito obducetur.” Aquila’s version, as reported by Jerom; with which agrees that of the Chaldee.

Ibid. And the glory—] Sixteen MSS (five ancient), and LXX, Syr. Vulg. add the conjunction ו, וכבוד.

10. If thou bring forth thy bread—] “To draw out thy soul to the hungry,” as our translators rightly enough express the present Hebrew text, is an obscure phrase, and without example in any other place. But instead of נפשך, thy soul, eight MSS (three ancient) read לחמך, thy bread; and so the Syriac renders it. The LXX express both words, σου αρεσων εσ ης ψυχης σου, thy bread from thy soul.

11. And he shall renew thy strength] “Chaldaeus forte legit יחליף עֲצֻמָּתְךָ. Confer cap. xl. 29. 31. et xli. 1.” SECKER. Chald. has וגופך יחיי בחי עלמא, “et corpus tuum vivificabit in vita æterna.” The rest of the ancients seem not to know what to make of יחליף; and the rendering of the Vulgate, which seems to be the only proper one, ossa tua liberabit, makes no sense. I follow this excellent emendation; to favour which, it is still further to be observed, that three MSS, instead of עֲצֻמָּתְךָ, have עֲצֻמָּתְךָ, singular.

12. —to be frequented by inhabitants] To this purpose it is rendered by Syr. Sym. and Theod.

13. From doing thy pleasure] The LXX, Syr. and Chald. for עֲשׂוֹת manifestly express מַעֲשׂוֹת. So likewise a MS has it; but with the omission of the words שבת ונליך.

Ibid. And the holy feast] Twenty-eight MSS (seven ancient) add the conjunction ו, ולקדוש; and so Syr. Chald. and Vulg.

Ibid. —and from speaking vain words] It is necessary to add some epithet to make out the sense: the LXX say angry words; Chald. words of violence. If any such epithet is lost here, the safest way is to supply it by the Prophet’s own expression, ver. 9. ודבר און, vain words; that is, profane, impious, injurious, &c.

“The additional epithet seems unnecessary. The Vulg. and Syr. have it not. And the sense is good without it; two ways, first by taking ודבר for a noun, and דבר for the participle pahul, and rendering,

“From pursuing thy pleasure, and the thing resolved on:”

Or, secondly, by supposing the force of the preposition מ to be continued from the verb ממצוא to the verb ודבר immediately following, and rendering,

“From executing thy pleasure, and from speaking words concerning it.”

But the first seems the easier rendering.” Dr JUBB.

CHAPTER LIX.

THE foregoing elegant chapter contained a severe reproof of the Jews, in particular for their hypocrisy in pretending to make themselves accepted with God by fasting and outward humiliation without true repentance, while they still continued to oppress the poor, and to indulge their own passions and vices; with great promises, however, of God's favour on condition of their reformation. This chapter contains a more general reproof of their wickedness; bloodshed, violence, falsehood, injustice. At ver. 9. they are introduced as making themselves an ample confession of their sins, and deploring their wretched state in consequence of them. On this act of humiliation a promise is given, that God, in his mercy and zeal for his people, will rescue them from this miserable condition; that the Redeemer will come like a mighty hero to deliver them: he will destroy his enemies, convert both Jews and Gentiles to himself, and give them a new covenant, and a law which shall never be abolished.

As this chapter is remarkable for the beauty, strength, and variety of the images with which it abounds; so is it peculiarly distinguished by the elegance of the composition, and the exact construction of the sentences: from the first verse to the two last, it falls regularly into stanzas of four lines, (see Prel. Dissert. p. xi.), which I have endeavoured to express as nearly as possible in the form of the original.

2. His face—] For פנים, faces, I read פני, his face. So Syr. LXX, Alex. Arab. Vulg. פני, MS. “Forte legendum פני; nam נ sequitur, et loquitur Deus: confer lviii. 14.” SECKER. I rather think that the speech of God was closed with the last chapter; and that this chapter is delivered in the person of the Prophet.

3. And your tongue—] An ancient MS, and LXX and Vulg. add the conjunction.

8. Whoever goeth in them—] For בה singular, read במ plural, with LXX, Syr. Vulg. Chald. The ה is upon a rasure in MS. Or for נתיבתיהם plural, we must read נתיבתם singular, as it is in an ancient MS, to preserve the grammatical concord.

10. And we wander—] I adopt here an emendation of Houbigant, נשגה, instead of the second נגששה, the repetition of which has a poverty and inelegance extremely unworthy of the Prophet, and unlike his manner. The mistake is of long standing, being prior to all the ancient versions: it was a very easy and obvious mistake; and I have little doubt of our having recovered the true reading in this ingenious correction.

11. —and it is far distant from us.] The conjunction ו must necessarily be prefixed to the verb, as Syr. Chald. Vulg. found it in their copies, ורחקה.

15. And JEHOVAH saw it, . . . . .] This third line of the stanza appears manifestly to me to be imperfect by the loss of a phrase. The reader will perhaps more perfectly conceive my idea of the matter, if I endeavour to supply the supposed defect. I imagine it might have stood originally in this manner:

וירא יהוה [ויחר לו]
וירע בעיניו כי אין משפט:

“And JEHOVAH saw it, [and he was wroth];
And it displeased him, that there was no judgment.”

We have had already many examples of mistakes of omission: this, if it be such, is very ancient, being prior to all the versions.

17. —for his clothing תלבשה. “I cannot but think that תלבשה is an interpolation. 1. It is in no one ancient version. 2. It is redundant in the sense, as it is before expressed in בגדי. 3. It makes the hemistich just so much longer than it ought to be, if it is compared with the others adjoining. 4. It makes a form of construction in this clause less elegant than that in the others. 5. It might probably be in some margin a various reading for בגדי, and thence taken into the text. This is the more probable, as its form is such as it would be if it were in regimine, as it must be before נקם:” Dr JUBB.

18. He is mighty—] The former part of this verse, as it stands at present in the Hebrew text, seems to me to be very imperfect, and absolutely unintelligible. The learned Vitringa has taken a great deal of pains upon it, after Cocceius; who, he says, is the only one of all the interpreters, ancient or modern, who has at all understood it, and has opened the way for him. He thinks, that both of them together have clearly made out the sense: I do not expect Chald. to the same sense, וְלֹהֵשִׁיב. Our translators have expressed the sense of the present reading of the Hebrew text: "And unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob."

21. —which I make with them] For אִוְתָם, them, twenty-four MSS (four ancient) and nine editions have אִתָּם, with them.

CHAPTER LX.

THE subject of this chapter is the great increase and flourishing state of the church of God, by the conversion and accession of the heathen nations to it; which is set forth in such ample and exalted terms as plainly shew, that the full completion of this prophecy is reserved for future times. This subject is displayed in the most splendid colours, under a great variety of images highly poetical, designed to give a general idea of the glories of that perfect state of the church of God which we are taught to expect in the latter times—when the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in; and the Jews shall be converted and gathered from their dispersions; and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ.

Of the use in prophecy of general or common poetical images, in setting forth the greatness and importance of a future event universally, without descending to particulars, or too minutely explaining circumstances, I have already pretty largely treated in the xxth Prelection on the Hebrew Poetry; and have more than once observed in these Notes, that such images are not always to be applied particularly to persons and things, and were never intended to be minutely explained. I shall add here the opinion of a very learned and judicious person upon this subject: "It is, I think, a mark of right understanding, in the language of prophecy, and in the design of prophecy too, to keep to what appears the design and meaning of the prophecy in general, and what the whole of it, laid together, points out to us; and not to suffer a warm imagination to mislead us from the real intention of the spirit of prophecy, by following uncertain applications of the parts of it:" Lowman on the Revelation, note on chap. xix. 21.

4. —shall be carried at the side] For תִּאֲמָנָה, shall be nursed, LXX and Chald. read תִּנְשָׂאנָה, shall be carried. A MS has עַל צֶדֶת תִּאֲמָנָה, instead of עַל כְּתֵף תִּנְשָׂאנָה; shall be carried on the shoulder, instead of shall be nursed on the side. Another MS has both כֶּתֶף and צֶדֶד. Another MS has it thus: תִּנְשָׂאנָה : תִּצְמָנָה, with a line drawn over the first word. Sir John Chardin says, that it is the general custom in the East to carry their children astride upon the hip, with the arm round their body. His MS note on this place is as follows: “ Coutume en Orient de porter les enfans sur le coste à califourchon sur la hanche : cette façon est generale aux Indes ; les enfans se tiennent comme cela, et la personne qui les porte les embrasse et serre par le corps ; parceque sont [ni] emmaillottés, ni en robes qui les embrassent.”

“ Non brachiis occidentalium more, sed humeris, divaricatis tibiis, impositos circumferunt:” Cotovic. Iter Syr. cap. xiv. This last quotation seems to favour the reading על כֶּתֶף ; as the LXX likewise do: but upon the whole I think that על צֶדֶד תִּנְשָׂאנָה is the true reading, which the Chaldee favours; and I have accordingly followed it. See chap. lxvi. 12.

5. Then shalt thou fear—] For תִּירָא, thou shalt see, as ours, and much the greater number of the translators, ancient and modern, render it: forty MSS (ten ancient), and the old edition of 1488, have תִּירָא, thou shalt fear; the true reading, confirmed by the perfect parallelism of the sentences; the heart ruffled and dilated in the second line answering to the fear and joy expressed in the first. The Prophet Jeremiah (chap. xxxiii. 9.) has the same natural and elegant sentiment:—

“ And [this city] shall become to me a name of joy ;
A praise and an honour for all the nations of the earth ;
Which shall hear all the good that I do unto them :
And they shall fear, and they shall tremble, at all the goodness,
And at all the prosperity, that I procure unto her.”

And David, (Psal. cxxxix. 14.)

“ I will praise thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made.”

“ His tibi me rebus quædam divina voluptas Percipit atque horror.” Lucret. iii. 28.

“ Recenti mens trepidat metu,
Plenoque Bacchi pectore turbidum
Lætatur.”

Hor. Carm. ii. 19.

6. And the praise of JEHOVAH—] Thirty-three MSS and three editions have יְהוָה, in the singular number; and so read the ancient versions.

7. Unto thee shall the rams of Nebaioth minister] Vi-tringa (on the place) understands their ministering, and ascending, or going up on the altar, as offering themselves voluntarily: “Ipsi se, non expectato sacerdote alio, gloria et sanctificationi Divini nominis ultro ac libenter oblaturi.” This gives a very elegant and poetical turn to the image. It was a general notion that prevailed with sacrificers among the heathen, that the victim’s being brought without reluctance to the altar was a good omen; and the contrary a bad one. “Sabino petit aliquanto tristior; quod sacrificanti hostia aufugerat:” Sueton. Titus, cap. x. “Accessit dirum omen, profugus altaribus taurus:” Tacit. Hist. iii. 56.

8. And like doves upon the wing] Instead of אל, to, forty-two MSS have על, upon. For ארבתיהם, their windows, read אברתיהם, their wings, transposing a letter: Houbigant. The LXX render it εἰς τὸν νεύρον, with their young: they read אפרחיהם; nearer to the latter, than to the present reading.

9. —among the first—] For בראשנה, twenty-five MSS and Syr. read כבראשנה, as at the first.

13. —the place whereon I rest my feet] The temple of Jerusalem was called the house of God, and the place of his rest or residence: the visible symbolical appearance of God, called by the Jews the Shechinah, was in the most holy place, between the wings of the cherubim above the ark. This is considered as the throne of God, presiding as king over the Jewish state; and as a footstool is a necessary appendage of a throne, (see note on chap. lii. 2.), the ark is considered as the footstool of God; and is so called, Psal. xcix. 5. 1 Chron. xxviii. 2.

Ibid. The glory of Lebanon] That is, the cedar.

19. Nor by night shall the brightness of the moon enlighten thee] This line, as it stands in the present text, seems to be defective. The LXX and Chald. both express the night, which is almost necessary to answer to day in the preceding line, as well as to perfect the sense here. I therefore think that we ought, upon the authority of LXX and Chald. to read either ולילה, and by night, instead of ולנגה, and for brightness; or ולנגה בלילה, adding the word בלילה, by night.

21. —of my planting] מטעי, so with the Keri read forty-four MSS (seven ancient) and six editions; with which agree Syr. Chald. Vulg.

CHAPTER LXI.

1. The Spirit of JEHOVAH—] The LXX, Vulg. and St Luke iv. 18. and MS, and two old editions, omit the word אֲדֹנָי, the Lord; which was probably added to the text through the superstition of the Jews, to prevent the pronunciation of the word יהוה following. See Kennicott on the State of the Printed Heb. Text, i. p. 510.

Ibid. —perfect liberty] Ten MSS and one edition have פְּקֻדָּה in one word; and so the LXX and Vulg. appear to have taken it.

The proclaiming of perfect liberty to the bounden, and the year of acceptance with JEHOVAH, is a manifest allusion to the proclaiming of the year of jubilee by sound of trumpet; see Lev. xxv. 9, &c. This was a year of general release—of debts and obligations; of bond men and women; of lands and possessions, which had been sold from the families and tribes to which they belonged. Our Saviour, by applying this text to himself, Luke iv. 18, 19. a text so manifestly relating to the institution above-mentioned, plainly declares the typical design of that institution.

3. To impart [gladness] to the mourners] A word necessary to the sense is certainly lost in this place; of which the ancient versions have preserved no traces. Houbigant, by conjecture, inserts the word שִׂשׂוֹן, gladness, taken from the line next but one below, where it stands opposed to אֲבֵל, sorrow, or mourning; as the word lost here was to אֲבֵלֵי, mourners: I follow him.

Ibid. —a beautiful crown, instead of ashes] In times of mourning the Jews put on sackcloth, or coarse and sordid raiment; and spread dust and ashes on their heads: on the contrary, splendid clothing, and ointment poured on the head, were the signs of joy. “Feign thyself to be a mourner,” says Joab to the woman of Tekoah, “and put on now mourning apparel, and anoint not thyself with oil;” 2 Sam. xiv. 2. These customs are at large expressed in the book of Judith: “She pulled off the sackcloth which she had on, and put off the garments of her widowhood, and washed her body all over with water, and anointed herself with precious ointment, and braided the hair of her head, and put on a tire [mitre, marg.] upon it; and put on her garments of gladness;” chap. x. 3.

Phear, instead of apher; a paronomasia, which the Prophet often uses: a chaplet, crown, or other ornament of the head, (for so the Vulgate renders the word here, and in the 10th verse; in which last place the LXX agree in the same rendering), instead of dust and ashes, which before covered it; and the costly ointments used on occasion of festivity, instead of the ensigns of sorrow.

Ibid. —trees approved] Heb. oaks of righteousness, or truth; that is, such as by their flourishing condition should shew that they were indeed “the cion of God’s planting, and the work of his hands:” under which images, in the preceding chap. ver. 21. the true servants of God, in a highly improved state of the church, were represented: that is, says Vitringa on that place, “commendable for the strength of their faith, their durability, and firmness.”

4. And they that spring from thee] A word is lost here likewise. After ובנו, they shall build, add ממך, they that spring from thee. Four MSS have it so, (two of them ancient), and it is confirmed by chap. lviii. 12. where the sentence is the very same, this word being here added. Kimchi makes the same remark: “the word ממך is omitted here; but is found in chap. lviii. 12.”

7. Instead of your shame—] The translation of this verse, which is very confused, and probably corrupted in the Hebrew, is taken from the Syriac version; except that the latter has not expressed the word משנה, double, in the first place. Five MSS add the conjunction ו שמחה to תרינו. Syr. reads תרינו and תירשו in the second person, “ye shall rejoice, ye shall inherit.” And for להם, to them, two MSS (one of them ancient), and Syr. read לבם, to you, in the second person likewise.

The version of the LXX is imperfect in this place: the first half of the verse is entirely omitted in all the printed copies. It is supplied by MSS Pachom. and I. D. II. in the following manner:

Αντι της αισχυνης ὧμων της διπλης,

Και αντι της εντροπης αγαλλιασεται ἡ μερις αυτων·

Δια ταυτο την γην αυτων εκ δευτερα—

In which the two MSS agree, except that I. D. II. has by mistake ἡμερας for ἡμερις. And Cod. Marchal. in the margin, has pretty nearly the same supplement as from Theodotion.

8. —and iniquity] Syr. and Chald. prefix the conjunction ו, instead of the preposition ב, to עולה; which they render iniquity or oppression; and so the LXX, αδικιας.

10. As the bridegroom decketh himself with a priestly crown] An allusion to the magnificent dress of the High Priest when performing his functions; and particularly to the mitre, and crown, or plate of gold, on the front of it; Exod. xxix. 6. The bonnet or mitre of the priests also was made, as Moses expresses it, “for glory and for beauty;” Exod. xxviii. 40. It is difficult to give its full force to the Prophet’s metaphor in another language; the version of Aquila and Symmachus comes nearest to it: ὡς νυμφιον ἱερατευομενον στεφανω.

11. The Lord JEHOVAH—] “אֲדֹנִי, the Lord, makes the line longer than the preceding and following: and LXX, Alex. [and MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11.] and Arab. do not render it. Hence it seems to be interpolated:” Dr JUBB. Three MSS have it not: See note on ver. 1. of this chapter.

CHAPTER LXII.

5. For as a young man—so—] The particles of comparison are not at present in the Hebrew text; but the LXX, Syr. and Chald. seem to have read in their copies כ prefixed to the verb כי יבעל, which seems to have been omitted by mistake of a transcriber, occasioned by the repetition of the same two letters. And before the verb in the second line a MS adds כן, so; which the LXX, Syr. and Chald. seem also to have had in their copies. In the third line of this verse the same MS has in like manner וכמשוש, and two MSS and the Babylonish Talmud כמשוש, adding the כ: and in the fourth line, the Babylonish Talmud likewise adds כן, so, before the verb.

Sir John Chardin, in his note on this place, tells us, “that it is the custom in the East for youths, that were never married, always to marry virgins; and widowers, however young, to marry widows:” Harmer, Observ. ii. p. 482.

Ibid —thy restorer—] בִּנְיָהּ; see note on chap. xlix. 17.

6. O ye that proclaim—] The faithful, and in particular the priests and Levites, are exhorted by the Prophet to beseech God, with unremitted importunity, (compare Luke xviii. 1. &c.), to hasten the redemption of Sion. The image in this place is taken from the temple service; in which there was appointed a constant watch, day and night, by the Levites: and among them this service seems to have belonged particularly to the singers; see 1 Chron. ix. 33. Now the watches in the East, even to this day, are performed by a loud cry from time to time of the watchmen, to mark the time, and that very frequently, and in order to shew that they themselves are constantly attentive to their duty. Hence the watchmen are said by the Prophet, chap. lii. 8. to lift up their voice; and here they are commanded, not to keep silence: and the greatest reproach to them is, that they are dumb dogs; they cannot bark; dreamers, sluggards, loving to slumber: chap. lvi. 10. "The watchmen in the camp of the caravans go their rounds, crying one after another, 'God is One, He is merciful;' and often add, 'Take heed to yourselves:'" Tavernier, Voyage de Perse, liv. i. chap. 10. The cxxxivth Psalm gives us an example of the temple watch. The whole Psalm is nothing more than the alternate cry of two different divisions of the watch. The first watch addresses the second, reminding them of their duty; the second answers by a solemn blessing: the address and the answer seem both to be a set form, which each division proclaimed, or sung aloud, at stated intervals, to notify the time of the night:—

First Chorus.

"Come on now, bless ye JEHOVAH, all ye servants of JEHOVAH;
Ye that stand in the house of JEHOVAH in the nights;
Lift up your hands towards the sanctuary,
And bless ye JEHOVAH."

Second Chorus.

"JEHOVAH bless thee out of Sion;
He that made heaven and earth."

"Qui statis in loco custodiae domus sanctuarii JEHOVÆ, et laudatis per noctes;" says the Chaldee paraphrase on the second line. And this explains what is here particularly meant by proclaiming, or making remembrance of, the name of JEHOVAH. The form which the watch made use of on these occasions was always a short sentence, expressing some pious sentiment, of which JEHOVAH was the subject: and it is remarkable, that the custom in the East in this respect also still continues the very same; as it appears by the example above given from Tavernier.

And this observation leads to the explanation of an obscure passage in the Prophet Malachi, ii. 12.

"JEHOVAH will cut off the man that doeth this;
The watchman and the answerer, from the tabernacles of Jacob;
And him that presenteth an offering to JEHOVAH God of Hosts."

ער וענה, the master and the scholar, says our translation after Vulg.; the son and the grandson, says Syr. and Chald. as little to the purpose: Arias Montanus has given it, vigilantem et respondentem—the watchman and the answerer; that is, the Levite—and him that presenteth an offering to Jehovah; that is, the priest.

9. But they that reap the harvest shall eat it, and praise JEHOVAH—] This and the following line have reference to the law of Moses: “Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oil;—but thou must eat them before the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose;” Deut. xii. 17, 18. “And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised: three years it shall be as uncircumcised unto you; it shall not be eaten of. But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy to praise the Lord withal. And in the fifth year ye shall eat the fruit thereof:” Lev. xix. 23—25. This clearly explains the force of the expressions, “shall praise JEHOVAH,” and “shall drink it in my sacred courts.”

Five MSS (one ancient) have יאכלוהו, fully expressed: and so likewise ישתוהו is found in nineteen MSS, three of them ancient.

10. —for the people] Before the word העם, the people, two MSS insert יהוה, Jehovah; one MS adds the same word after it; and eight MSS (three ancient), instead of העם have יהוה, and so likewise one edition. But though it makes a good sense either way, I believe it to be an interpolation, as the ancient versions do not favour it. The LXX indeed read עמי, my people.

11. —Lo! thy Saviour—] So all the ancient versions render the word ישוע.

Ibid. Lo! his reward—] See note on chap. xl. 10.

CHAPTER LXIII.

THE very remarkable passage with which this chapter begins, seems to me to be in a manner detached from the rest, and to stand singly by itself; having no immediate connection with what goes before, or with what follows; otherwise than as it may pursue the general design, and stand in its proper place in the order of prophecy. It is by many learned interpreters supposed, that Judas Maccabeus and his victories make the subject of it. What claim Judas can have to so great an honour, will, I think, be very difficult to make out; or how the attributes of the great person introduced can possibly suit him. Could Judas call himself the announcer of righteousness, mighty to save? Could he talk of the day of vengeance being in his heart, and the year of his redeemed being come? or that his own arm wrought salvation for him? Besides, what were the great exploits of Judas in regard to the Idumeans! He overcame them in battle, and slew twenty thousand of them: and John Hyrcanus, his brother Simon's son and successor, who is called in to help out the accomplishment of the prophecy, gave them another defeat some time afterward, and compelled them by force to become proselytes to the Jewish religion, and to submit to circumcision; after which they were incorporated with the Jews, and became one people with them. Are these events adequate to the Prophet's lofty prediction? Was it so great an action to win a battle with considerable slaughter of the enemy; or to force a whole nation by dint of the sword into Judaism? or was the conversion of the Idumeans, however effected, and their admission into the church of God, equivalent to a most grievous judgment and destruction threatened in the severest terms?—But here is another very material circumstance to be considered, which, I presume, entirely excludes Judas Maccabeus, and even the Idumeans properly so called: The Idumea of the Prophet's time was quite a different country from that which Judas conquered; for, during the Babylonish captivity, the Nabatheans had driven the Edomites out of their country, who upon that took possession of the southern parts of Judea, and settled themselves there; that is, in the country of the whole tribe of Simeon, and in half of that of Judah: See Prideaux, ad An. 740 et 165.: And the metropolis of the Edomites, and of the country thence called Idumea, which Judas took, was Hebron, 1 Macc. v. 65. not Botsra.

I conclude, therefore, that this prophecy has not the least relation to Judas Maccabeus. It may be asked, To whom, and to what event does it relate? I can only answer, that I know of no event in history to which, from its importance and circumstances, it can be applied; unless perhaps to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish polity, which in the gospel is called the coming of Christ, and the days of vengeance; Matt. xvi. 28. Luke xxi. 22. But, though this prophecy must have its accomplishment, there is no necessity of supposing that it has been already accomplished. There are prophecies which intimate a great slaughter of the enemies of God and his people, which remain to be fulfilled: Those in Ezekiel, chap. xxxviii. and in the Revelation of St John, chap. xx. are called Gog and Magog. This prophecy of Isaiah may possibly refer to the same or the like event. We need not be at a loss to determine the person who is here introduced as stained with treading the wine-press, if we consider how St John in the Revelation has applied this image of the Prophet; Rev. xix. 13. 15, 16.: compare chap. xxxiv.

1. I who announce righteousness, and—] A MS has דְּמוֹרֵי, with the demonstrative article added, with greater force and emphasis, The announcer of righteousness. A MS has צִדְקָה, without ב prefixed; and so LXX and Vulg. And thirty-eight MSS (seven ancient) add the conjunction ו to רב; which the LXX, Syr. and Vulg. confirm.

2. Wherefore is thine apparel red—] For לְלִבְיוֹשֶׁךְ, twenty-nine MSS (nine ancient), and one edition, have לְלִבְיוֹשִׁיךְ in the plural: so LXX and Syr. And all the ancient versions read it with מ instead of the first ל. But the true reading is probably מְלִבְיוֹשֶׁךְ in the singular, as in ver. 3.

3. And I have stained—] For אֶגְאֵלְתִּי, a verb of very irregular formation, compounded, as they say, of the two forms of the preterite and future, a MS has אֶגְאֵלְהוּ, the regular future with a pleonastic pronoun added to it, according to the Hebrew idiom: “And all my raiment, I have stained it.” The necessity of the verb’s being in the past time, seems to have given occasion to the alteration made in the end of the word. The conversive ו at the beginning of the sentence affects the verb, though not joined to it; of which there are many examples:

וּמִקְרָנֵי רִמִּים עֲנִיתֵנִי

“And thou wilt hear me, (or hear thou me), from among the horns of the unicorns. Psal. xxii. 22.

5. And mine indignation—] For וְדַחַמִּי, nineteen MSS (three ancient), and four editions, have וְצִדְקָתִי, and my righteousness; from chap. lix. 16. which, I suppose, the transcriber retained in his memory.

6. And I crushed them] For וְאַשְׁכַּרְם, “and I made them drunken,” twenty-seven MSS (three ancient), and the old edition of 1488, have וַאֲשַׁבְּרֵם, “and I crushed them:” and so Syr. and Chald. The LXX have omitted this whole line.

7. The remaining part of this chapter, with the whole chapter following, contains a penitential confession and supplication of the Israelites in their present state of dispersion, in which they have so long marvellously subsisted, and still continue to subsist, as a people—cast out of their country; without any proper form of civil polity or religious worship; their temple destroyed, their city desolated and lost to them; and their whole nation scattered over the face of the earth; apparently deserted and cast off by the God of their fathers, as no longer his peculiar people.

They begin with acknowledging God's great mercies and favours to their nation, and the ungrateful returns made to them on their part; that by their disobedience they had forfeited the protection of God, and had caused him to become their adversary. And now the Prophet represents them, induced by the memory of the great things that God had done for them, as addressing their humble supplication for the renewal of his mercies: They beseech him to regard them in consideration of his former loving-kindness; they acknowledge him for their Father and Creator; they confess their wickedness and hardness of heart; they entreat his forgiveness; and deplore their present miserable condition under which they have so long suffered. It seems designed as a formulary of humiliation for the Israelites, in order to their conversion.

The whole passage is in the elegiac form, pathetic and elegant; but it has suffered much in our present copy by the mistakes of transcribers.

Ibid. —the praise of JEHOVAH] For תְּהִלֹּת, plural, twenty-nine MSS (three ancient), and two editions, have תְּהִלָּה, in the singular number: and so the Vulgate renders it; and one of the Greek versions, in the margin of Cod. Marchal. and in the text of MSS Pachom. and 1. D. II.

אֲנִי אֲנִי מִשְׁמַח עַמִּי.

8, 9. And he became their saviour in all their distress—] I have followed the translation of the LXX in the latter part of the 8th and the former part of the 9th verse; which agrees with the present text, a little differently divided, as to the members of the sentence. They read מְבַלֵּל, out of all, instead of בְּכָל, in all, which makes no difference in the sense; and צַר they understand as צָר. Καὶ ἐγένετο αὐτοῖς εἰς σωτηριαν εκ πασης θλιψεως αυτων· & πρεσβυς, & δε αγγελος—An angel of his presence means an angel of superior order, in immediate attendance upon God. So the angel of the Lord says to Zacharias, “I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God;” Luke i. 19. The presence of JEHOVAH, Exod. xxxiii. 14, 15. and the angel, Exod. xxiii. 20, 21. is JEHOVAH himself: here, an angel of his presence is opposed to JEHOVAH himself; as an angel is in the following passages of the same book of Exodus. After their idolatrous worshipping of the golden calf, “when God had said to Moses, I will send an angel before thee—I will not go up in the midst of thee—the people mourned,” Exod. xxxiii. 2—4. God afterwards comforts Moses by saying, “My presence (that is, I myself in person, and not by an angel) will go with thee,” ver. 14. αυτος προπορευσομαι σου, as the LXX render it.

The MSS and editions are much divided between the two readings of the text and margin in the common copies, לא and לו. All the ancient versions express the chetib לא.

Ibid. And he took them up, and he bare them] See the note on chap. xlv. 3.

10. And he fought against them] Twenty-six MSS (ten ancient), and the first edition, with another, add the conjunction ו, והוא.

11. How he brought them up from the sea with the shepherd of his flock; How—] For איה, how, interrogative, twice, the Syriac version reads איך, how, without interrogation; as that particle is used in the Syriac language, and sometimes in the Hebrew. See Ruth iii. 18. Eccles. ii. 16.

Ibid. Moses his servant—] For עמי, his people, two MSS (one of them ancient), and the old edition of 1488, and Syr. read עבדו, his servant. These two words have been mistaken one for the other in other places: Psal. lxxviii. 71. and lxxx. 5. for עמי and עמך, the LXX read עבדו and עבדך.

Ibid. —the shepherd of his flock] That is, Moses. The MSS and editions vary in this word: some have it רעה in the singular number; so LXX, Syr. Chald.; others רעי, plural.

14. The spirit of Jehovah conducted them] For תניחנו, caused him to rest, the LXX have ωδηγησεν αυτον, conducted them. They read תנהם: Syr. Chald. Vulg. read תניחנו, conducted him. Two MSS have the word without the י in the middle.

15. —and thy mighty power] For גבורתך, plural, thirty-two MSS (seven ancient), and seven editions, have גבורתך, singular.

Ibid. —are they restrained from us] For אלי, from (or in regard to) me, LXX and Syr. read אלינו, from us.

16. O deliver us for the sake of thy name] The present text reads, as our translation has rendered it, “Our Redeemer, thy name is from everlasting.” But instead of מעולם, from everlasting, an ancient MS has למען, for the sake of, which gives a much better sense. To shew the impropriety of the present reading, it is sufficient to observe, that the LXX and Syriac translators thought it necessary to add עלינו, upon us, to make out the sense; that is, “Thy name is upon us, or we are called by thy name, from of old.” And the LXX have rendered גאלנו in the imperative mood, ἕσθαι ἡμᾶς.

18. It is little that they have taken possession of thy holy mountain] The difficulty of the construction in this place is acknowledged on all hands. Vitringa prefers that sense as the least exceptionable, which our translation has expressed: in which however there seems to me to be a great defect; that is, the want of what in the speaker’s view must have been the principal part of the proposition, the object of the verb, the land, or it, as our translators supply it; which surely ought to have been expressed, and not to have been left to be supplied by the reader. In a word, I believe there is some mistake in the text. And here the LXX help us out: they had in their copy הר, mountain, instead of עם, people; Του οργου του αγιου σου. “Not only our enemies have taken possession of Mount Sion, and trodden down thy sanctuary; even far worse than this has befallen us: Thou hast long since utterly cast us off; and dost not consider us as thy peculiar people.”

CHAPTER LXIV.

2. —the dry fuel—] המסים. “It means dry stubble, and the root is המס,” says Rabbi Jonah, apud Sal. ben Melec in loc. Which is approved by Schultens, Orig. Hebr. p. 30.

“The fire kindling the stubble does not seem like enough to the melting of the mountains to be brought as a simile to it. Quid si sic?

That the mountains might flow down at thy presence!
As the fire of things smelted burneth,
As the fire causeth the waters to boil—

There is no doubt of the Hebrew words of the second line bearing that version :” DR JUBB.

I submit these different interpretations to the reader’s judgment. For my own part, I am inclined to think that the text is much corrupted in this place. The ancient versions have not the least traces of either of the above interpretations. The LXX and Syr. agree exactly together in rendering this line by, “As the wax melteth before the fire,” which can by no means be reconciled with the present text. Vulg. for המסים reads ימסו.

Ibid. That the nations—] For גוים, the nations, four MSS (one of them ancient) have הרים, the mountains.

4. For never have men heard—] St Paul is generally supposed to have quoted this passage of Isaiah, 1 Cor. ii. 9.; and Clemens Romanus, in his first epistle, has made the same quotation, very nearly in the same words with the apostle. But the citation is so very different both from the Hebrew text and the version of LXX, that it seems very difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile them by any literal emendation, without going beyond the bounds of temperate criticism. One clause, “neither hath it entered into the heart of man,” (which, by the way, is a phrase purely Hebrew, עלה על לב, and should seem to belong to the Prophet), is wholly left out; and another is repeated without force or propriety, viz. “nor perceived by the ear,” after “never have heard:” and the sense and expression of the apostle is far preferable to that of the Hebrew text. Under these difficulties, I am at a loss what to do better than to offer to the reader this, perhaps disagreeable, alternative: Either to consider the Hebrew text and LXX in this place as wilfully disguised and corrupted by the Jews; of which practice, in regard to other quotations in the New Testament from the Old, they lie under strong suspicions; (see Dr Owen on the Version of the Seventy, sect. vi.—ix.); or to look upon St Paul’s quotation as not made from Isaiah, but from one or other of the two apocryphal books entitled, The Ascension of Esaiiah, and The Apocalyp of Elias, in both of which this passage was found; and the apostle is by some supposed in other places to have quoted such apocryphal writings. As the first of these conclusions will perhaps not easily be admitted by many; so I must fairly warn my readers, that the second is treated by Jerom as little better than heresy. See his comment on this place of Isaiah.

The variations on this place are as follows; for שמעו, they have heard, a MSS and LXX read שמענו, we have heard: for the second לא, sixty-nine MSS and four editions have ולא; and Syr. Chald. Vulg.; and so וען, LXX, Syr. את is added before אלהים in MS Bodl. למחכי, plural, two MSS, and all the ancient versions.

5. Thou meetest with joy those—] Syr. reads פוגע אתה שש בעשי.

Ibid. Because of our deeds, for we have been rebellious.] בהם עולם ונושע. I am fully persuaded, that these words, as they stand in the present Hebrew text, are utterly unintelligible: there is no doubt of the meaning of each word separately, but put together they make no sense at all. I conclude, therefore, that the copy has suffered by mistakes of transcribers in this place. The corruption is of long standing; for the ancient interpreters were as much at a loss for the meaning as the moderns, and give nothing satisfactory. The LXX render these words by δια τῶν ἐπλανηθῆμεν: they seem to have read עליהם נפשע, without helping the sense. In this difficulty, what remains but to have recourse to conjecture? Archbishop SECKER was dissatisfied with the present reading: he proposes, הבט עלינו ונושע; “look upon us, and we shall, or that we may, be saved;” which gives a very good sense, but seems to have no sufficient foundation. Besides, the word ונושע, which is attended with great difficulties, seems to be corrupted, as well as the two preceding; and the true reading of it is, I think, given by the LXX, ונפשע, ἐπλανηθῆμεν, (so they render the verb פשע, chap. xlvi. 8. and Ezek. xxxiii. 12.), parallel to ונחטא, ἡμαρτομεν. For בהם עולם, which mean nothing, I would propose המעללינו; which I presume was first altered to במעלליהם, an easy and common mistake of the third person plural of the pronoun for the first, (see note on chap. xxxiii. 2.), and then with some further alteration to בהם עולם. The עליהם, which the LXX probably found in their copy, seems to be a remnant of במעלליהם.

This, it may be said, is imposing your sense upon the Prophet. It may be so; for perhaps these may not be the very words of the Prophet: but however it is better than to impose upon him what makes no sense at all; as they generally do who pretend to render such corrupted passages. For instance, our own translators: “In those is continuance, and we shall be saved:” In those—in whom, or what? There is no antecedent to the relative. In the ways of God, say some : with our fathers, says Vitringa, joining it in construction with the verb קצפת, thou hast been angry with them, our fathers ; and putting ונחטא, for we have sinned, in a parenthesis. But there has not been any mention of our fathers ; and the whole sentence, thus disposed, is utterly discordant from the Hebrew idiom and construction. In those is continuance : עולם means a destined, but hidden and unknown, portion of time ; but cannot mean continuation of time, or continuance, as it is here rendered. Such forced interpretations are equally conjectural with the boldest critical emendation ; and generally have this further disadvantage, that they are altogether unworthy of the sacred writers.

6. There is no one—] Twelve MSS have אין, without the conjunction ו prefixed : and so read Chald. and Vulg.

Ibid. And hast delivered us up—] For ותמוננו, hast dissolved us, LXX, Syr. Chald. had in their copies תמננו, hast delivered us up : Houbigant ; SECKER.

7. But Thou, O JEHOVAH, Thou—] For ועתה, and now, five MSS (one of them ancient), and the two oldest editions of 1486 and 1488, have ואתה, and thou ; and so Chald. seems to have read. The repetition has great force. The other word may be well spared.

Ibid. We are all of us the work of thy hands.] Three MSS (two of them ancient), and LXX, read מעשה, without the conjunction ו prefixed. And for ירך, the Bodl. and two other MSS, LXX, Syr. Vulg. read יריך, in the plural number.

CHAPTER LXV.

THIS chapter contains a defence of God's proceedings in regard to the Jews, with reference to their complaint in the chapter preceding. God is introduced declaring, that he had called the Gentiles, though they had not sought him ; and had rejected his own people, for their refusal to attend to his repeated call ; for their obstinate disobedience, their idolatrous practices, and detestable hypocrisy. That nevertheless he would not destroy them all ; but would preserve a remnant, to whom he would make good his ancient promises. Severe punishments are threatened to the apostates ; and great rewards are promised to the obedient in a future flourishing state of the church.

1. I am made known to those that asked not for me] נודרשתי, ἐμψαυχῆς ἐγγενομένου, LXX, Alex. and St Paul, Rom. x. 20.; who has however inverted the order of the phrases, ἐμψαυχῆς ἐγγενομένη, and ἐπεσθῆναι, from that which they have in LXX. נדרשתי means, “quaesitus sum cum effectu—I am sought, so as to be found:” Vitring. If this be the true meaning of the word, then שאלו, that asked, which follows, should seem to be defective, the verb wanting its object: but two MSS (one of them ancient) have שאלוני, asked me; and another MS לי שאלו, asked for me; one or other of which seems to be right. But Cocceius in Lex. and Vitringa in his translation, render נדרשתי by “I have answered;” and so the word is rendered by all the ancient versions in Ezek. xx. 3. 31. If this be right, the translation will be, “I have answered those that asked not.” I leave this to the reader’s judgment; but have followed in my translation the LXX, and St Paul, and the MSS above mentioned. בקשני is written regularly and fully in above a hundred MSS, and in the oldest edition בקשוני.

3, 4. Sacrificing in the gardens, and—] These are instances of heathenish superstition, and idolatrous practices, to which the Jews were immoderately addicted before the Babylonish captivity. The heathen worshipped their idols in groves; whereas God, in opposition to this species of idolatry, commanded his people, when they should come into the promised land, to destroy all the places wherein the Canaanites had served their gods, and in particular to burn their groves with fire; Deut. xii. 2, 3. These apostate Jews sacrificed upon altars built of bricks, in opposition to the command of God in regard to his altar, which was to be of unhewn stone; Exod. xx. 25. “—et pro uno altari, quod impolitis lapidibus Dei erat lege constructum, coctos lateres et agrorum cespites hostiarum sanguine cruentabant:” Hieron. in loc. Or it means, perhaps, that they sacrificed upon the roofs of their houses, which were always flat, and paved with brick, or tile, or plaster of terrace. An instance of this idolatrous practice we find in 2 Kings xxiii. 12. where it is said that Josiah “beat down the altars that were on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, which the kings of Judah had made.” See also Zeph. i. 5. Sir John Chardin’s MS note on this place of Isaiah is as follows: “Ainsi font tous les Gentiles, sur les lieux élevés, et sur les terrasses, appelez lateres, parceque sont faits de briq.”—“Who dwell in the sepulchres, and lodge in the caverns,” for the purposes of necromancy and divination; to obtain dreams and revelations. Another instance of heathenish superstition :—

“ Huc dona sacerdos

Cum tulit, et cæsarum ovium sub nocte silenti
Pellibus incubuit stratis, somnosque petivit ;
Multa modis simulacra videt volitantia miris,
Et varias audit voces, fruiturque deorum
Colloquio, atque imis Acheronta affatur Avernis.”

Virg. Æn. vii. 86.

“ Here in distress the Italian nations come,
Anxious to clear their doubts, and learn their doom :
First, on the fleeces of the slaughter'd sheep,
By night the sacred priest dissolves in sleep ;
When, in a train, before his slumbering eye,
Thin airy forms and wondrous visions fly :
He calls the Powers who guard the infernal floods,
And talks, inspired, familiar with the gods.” Pitt.

—“ Who eat swine's flesh,” which was expressly forbidden by the law, Lev. xi. 7. ; but among the heathen was in principal request in their sacrifices and feasts. Antiochus Epiphanes compelled the Jews to eat swine's flesh, as a full proof of their renouncing their religion, 2 Macc. vi. 18. and vii. 1.—“ And the broth of abominable meats,” for lustrations, magical arts, and other superstitious and abominable practices.

Ibid. —in the caverns.] בנצורים, a word of doubtful signification. An ancient MS has בצורים, another בצרים, in the rocks ; and Le Clerc thinks the LXX had it so in their copy. They render it by עץ תולדות.

Ibid. —in their vessels.] For בליהם, a MS had at first בבליהם : so Vulg. and Chald. ; and the preposition seems necessary to the sense.

5. —for I am holier than thou] So the Chaldee renders it. קדשתיך is the same with קדשתי ממך. In the same manner חזקתני, Jer. xx. 7. is used for חזקת ממני, thou art stronger than I.

7. —into their bosom] For על, ten MSS and five editions have אל. So again, at the end of this verse, seventeen MSS and four editions have אל.

6, 7. —their iniquities, and the iniquities of their fathers] For the pronoun affixed of the second person כם, your, twice, read הם, their, in the third person ; with LXX, and Houbigant.

8. —for the sake of my servants] It is to be observed, that one of the Königsberg MSS collated by Lilienthal points the word שֶׁבְּדָוִי, singular : that is, my servant, meaning the Messiah; and so read the LXX; which gives a very good sense.

9. —inheritor of my mountain] הרי, in the singular number; so LXX and Syr.; that is, of Mount Sion. See ver. 11. and chap. lvi. 7.; to which Sion, the pronoun feminine singular, added to the verb in the next line, refers; ירשנה, shall inherit her.

10. —Sharon, and the valley of Achor—] Two of the most fertile parts of Judea, famous for their rich pastures: the former to the west, not far from Joppa; the latter north of Jericho, near Gilgal.

11. Who set in order a table for Gad—] The disquisitions and conjectures of the learned concerning Gad and Meni are infinite and uncertain: perhaps the most probable may be, that Gad means good fortune, and Meni the moon. “But why should we be solicitous about it?” says Schmidius. “It appears sufficiently, from the circumstances, that they were false gods, either stars or some other natural object, or a mere fiction. The Holy Scriptures did not deign to explain more clearly what these objects of idolatrous worship were; but chose rather that the memory of the knowledge of them should be utterly abolished. And God be praised that they are so totally abolished, that we are now quite at a loss to know what and what sort of things they were:” Schmidius on the place, and on Judg. ii. 13. Bibl. Hallensia.

Jerom, on the place, gives an account of this idolatrous practice of the apostate Jews, of making a feast, or a lectisternium, as the Romans called it, for these pretended deities. “Est in cunctis urbibus, et maxime in Ægypto, et in Alexandria, idololatriæ vetus consuetudo, ut ultimo die anni, et mensis ejus qui extremus est, ponant mensam refertam varii generis epulis, et poculum mulso mixtum; vel præteriti anni vel futuri fertilitatem auspicantes. Hoc autem faciebant et Israelitæ, omnium simulacrorum portenta venerantes; et nequaquam altari victimas, sed hujusmodi mensæ liba fundebant.” See also Le Clerc on the place; and on lxvi. 17. and Dav. Millii Dissert. v.

The allusion to Meni, which signifies number, is obvious. If there had been the like allusion to Gad, which might have been expected, it might perhaps have helped to let us into the meaning of that word. It appears from Jeron's version of this place, that the words τῶ δαίμονι, (or δαίμονι, as some copies have it), and τῇ τυχῇ, stood in his time in the Greek version in an inverted order from that which they have in the present copies; the latter then answering to גר, the former to מני: by which some difficulty would be avoided; for it is commonly supposed that גר signifies τυχῆ. See Gen. xxx. 11. apud LXX. This matter is so far well cleared up by MSS Pachom. and 1. D. 11.; which agree in placing these two words in that order which Jerom's version supposes.

15. —shall slay you.] For ויהמיתך, shall slay thee, LXX and Chald. read ויהמיתכם, shall slay you, plural.

17. —I create new heavens, and a new earth] Concerning this image and the application of it, see De S. Poes. Hebr. Præl. ix.

18. —in the age to come, which I create] So in chap. ix. 5. ער, ἀβι, πατὴρ του μελλόντος αἰῶνος, LXX. See Bishop Chandler, Defence of Christianity, p. 136.

20. For משם, thence, LXX, Syr. Vulg. read שם, there.

21. They shall not build, and another inhabit] The reverse of the curse denounced on the disobedient, Deut. xxviii. 30. “Thou shalt build a house, and thou shalt not dwell therein; thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not gather the grapes thereof.”

22. For as the days of a tree—] It is commonly supposed that the oak, one of the most long-lived of the trees, lasts about a thousand years; being five hundred years growing to full perfection, and as many decaying; which seems to be a moderate and probable computation: See Evelyn, Sylva, B. iii. ch. 3. The present Emperor of China, in his very ingenious and sensible poem, entituled, Eloge de Moukden, a translation of which in French was published at Paris, 1770, speaks of a tree in his country which lives more than a hundred ages; and of another, which after fourscore ages is only in its prime, p. 37, 38. But his imperial majesty's commentators, in their note on the place, carry the matter much further; and quote authority which affirms, that the tree last mentioned by the Emperor, the immortal tree, after having lived ten thousand years, is still only in its prime. I suspect that the Chinese enlarge somewhat in their national chronology, as well as in that of their trees: See Chou King, Preface, by Mons. De Guignes. The Prophet's idea seems to be, that they shall live to the age of the antediluvians; which seems to be very justly expressed by the days of a tree, according to our notions.

23. My chosen shall not labour in vain] I remove בַּחִירִי from the end of the 22d to the beginning of the 23d verse, on the authority of LXX, Syr. Vulg. and a MS; contrary to the division in the Masoretic text.

Ibid. Neither shall they generate a short-lived race] לִבְהִלָּה, in festinationem, what shall soon hasten away. Εἰς καταράαν, for a curse, LXX. They seem to have read לְאֵלָה: Grotius. But Psal. lxxviii. 33. both justifies and explains the word here.

וְיָכַל בְּהַבֵּל יְמֵיהֶם
וְשָׁנוֹתָם בְּבִהְלָה:

“And he consumed their days in vanity;
And their years in haste.”

Μετα σπουδης, say the LXX. Jerom on this place of Isaiah explains it to the same purpose: “εἰς ἀνταρξῆσθαι, hoc est, ut esse desistant.”

25. —shall feed together] בְּאַחַד, as one, an ancient MS has יַחַד, together; the usual word, to the same sense, but very different in the letters. LXX, Syr. and Vulg. seem to agree with the MS.

CHAPTER LXVI.

THIS chapter is a continuation of the subject of the foregoing. The Jews valued themselves much upon their temple, and the pompous system of services performed in it, which they supposed were to be of perpetual duration; and they assumed great confidence and merit to themselves for their strict observance of all the externals of their religion. And at the very time when the judgments denounced in verses 6th and 12th of the preceding chapter were hanging over their heads, they were rebuilding, by Herod's munificence, the temple in a most magnificent manner. God admonishes them, that the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; and that a mere external worship, how diligently soever attended, when accompanied with wicked and idolatrous practices in the worshippers, would never be accepted by him. This their hypocrisy is set forth in strong colours; which brings the Prophet again to the subject of the former chapter; and he pursues it in a different manner, with more express declaration of the new economy, and of the flourishing state of the church under it. The increase of the church is to be sudden and astonishing. They that escape of the Jews, that is, that become converts to the Christian faith, are to be employed in the divine mission to the Gentiles, and are to act as priests in presenting the Gentiles as an offering to God : see Rom. xv. 16. : And both, now collected into one body, shall be witnesses of the final perdition of the obstinate and irreclaimable.

These two chapters manifestly relate to the calling of the Gentiles, the establishment of the Christian dispensation, and the reprobation of the apostate Jews, and their destruction executed by the Romans.

2. —all these things are mine] A word, absolutely necessary to the sense, is here lost out of the text ; לִי, mine : it is preserved by LXX, and Syr.

3. He that slayeth an ox, killeth a man—] These are instances of extreme wickedness joined with hypocrisy ; of the most flagitious crimes committed by those who at the same time affected great strictness in the performance of all the external services of religion. God, by the Prophet Ezekiel, upbraids the Jews with the same practices : “ When they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it ;” chap. xxiii. 39. Of the same kind was the hypocrisy of the Pharisees in our Saviour’s time ; “ who devoured widows’ houses, and for a pretence made long prayers ;” Matt. xxiii. 14.

The generality of interpreters, by departing from the literal rendering of the text, have totally lost the true sense of it, and have substituted in its place what makes no good sense at all ; for it is not easy to shew, how in any circumstances sacrifice and murder, the presenting of legal offerings and idolatrous worship, can possibly be of the same account in the sight of God.

Ibid. —that maketh an oblation, [offereth] swine’s blood] A word here likewise, necessary to complete the sense, is perhaps irrecoverably lost out of the text. The Vulg. and Chald. add the word offereth, to make out the sense ; not, as I imagine, from any different reading, (for the word wanted seems to have been lost before the time of the oldest of them, as the LXX had it not in their copy), but from mere necessity.

Le Clerc thinks, that מַעֲלָה is to be repeated from the beginning of this member ; but that is not the case in the parallel members, which have another and a different verb in the second place. “ דָּם, sic versiones : putarem tamen legendum participium aliquod, et quidem זָבַח, cum sequatur ח, nisi jam præcesserat." SECKER. Houbigant supplies אכל, eateth. After all, I think the most probable word is that which Chald. and Vulg. seem to have designed to represent; that is, מקריב.

5. Say ye to your brethren—] The Syr. reads אמרו לאחיכם; and so the LXX, edit. Comp. εἰπατε ἀδελφοῖς ὑμῶν: and MS Marchal. has ἀδελφοῖς; and so Cyril and Procopius read and explain it. It is not easy to make sense of the reading of LXX in the other editions: εἰπατε ἀδελφοὶ ἡμῶν τοῖς μισοῦσιν ὑμᾶς—but for ἡμῶν, MS 1. D. 11. also has ὑμῶν.

8. —and who hath seen] Twenty MSS (four ancient), and the two oldest editions, with two others, have ומי, adding the conjunction ו: and so read all the ancient versions.

11. —from her abundant stores] For מזון, two MSS, and the old edition of 1488, have מזי; and the latter ז is upon a rasure in three other MSS. It is remarkable, that Kimchi and Sal. ben Melec, not being able to make any thing of the word as it stands in the text, say it means the same with מזון: that is, in effect, they admit of a various reading, or an error, in the text. But, as Vitranga observes, what sense is there in sucking nourishment from the splendour of her glory? He therefore endeavours to deduce another sense from the word מזי; but, as far as it appears to me, without any authority. I am more inclined to accede to the opinion of those learned Rabbins, and to think that there is some mistake in the word; for that in truth is their opinion, though they disguise it by saying, that the corrupted word means the very same with that which they believe to be genuine. So in chap. xli. 24. they say, that אפע, a viper, means the same with אפס, nothing; instead of acknowledging that one is written by mistake instead of the other. I would propose to read in this place מזין, or מזן, (instead of מזי), from the stores; from זון, to nourish, to feed: see Gen. xlv. 23. 2 Chron. xi. 23. Psal. cxliv. 13. And this perhaps may be meant by Aquila, who renders the word by απο παντοδαπιας: with which that of the Vulgate, “ab omnimoda gloria,” and of Symmachus and Theodotion, nearly agree. The Chaldee follows a different reading, without improving the sense; מיין, from the wine.

12. —like the great river, and like the overflowing stream—] That is, the Euphrates, (it ought to have been pointed כנדר, ut fluvius ille, as The River), and the Nile.

Ibid. And ye shall suck at the breast] These two words שדל, at the breast, seem to have been omitted in the present text, from their likeness to the two words following; על צד, at the side. A very probable conjecture of Houbigant. Chald. and Vulg. have omitted the two latter words instead of the two former. See note on chap. lx. 4.

15. —shall come as a fire] For באש, in fire, the LXX had in their copy באש, as a fire; ὡς πυρ.

Ibid. To breathe forth his anger] Instead of לְהַשִּׁיב, as pointed by the Masoretes, to render, I understand it as לְהַשִּׁיב, to breathe, from נשׁב.

17. —after the rites of Achad—] The Syrians worshipped a god called Adad: Plin. Nat. Hist. xxxvii. 11. Macr. Sat. i. 23. They held him to be the highest and greatest of the gods, and to be the same with Jupiter and the Sun: and the name Adad, says Macrobius, signifies One; as likewise does the word Achad in Isaiah. Many learned men therefore have supposed, and with some probability, that the Prophet means the same pretended deity. אַחַד, in the Syrian and Chaldean dialects is חד; and perhaps by reduplication of the last letter, to express perfect unity, it may have become חַדַּח, not improperly expressed in Latin by Macrobius Adad, without the aspirate. It was also pronounced by the Syrians themselves, with a weaker aspirate, הַחַד; as in Benhadad, Hadadezer, names of their kings, which were certainly taken from their chief object of worship. This seems to me to be a probable account of this name.

But the Masoretes correct the text in this place: their marginal reading is אַחַת, which is the same word, only in the feminine form; and so read thirty MSS (six ancient) and the two oldest editions. This Le Clerc approves, and supposes it to mean Hecate, or the Moon; and he supports his hypothesis by arguments not at all improbable. See his note on the place.

Whatever the particular mode of idolatry which the Prophet refers to might be, the general sense of the place is perfectly clear. But Chald. and Syr. and after them Symmachus and Theodotion, cut off at once all these difficulties, by taking the word אַחַד in its common meaning, not as a proper name; the two latter rendering the sentence thus: οἰκιστὴν ἀλλήλων ἐν μέσῳ ἐσθιοντῶν τοῦ κρέατος τοῦ χοίρειου, one after another, in the midst of those that eat swine's flesh. I suppose they all read in their copies אַחַד אַחַד, one by one, or perhaps אַחַד אַחַד אַחַד, one after another. See a large Dissertation on this subject in Davidis Millii Dissertationes Selectæ, Dissert. vi.

18. For I know their deeds—] A word is here lost out of the present text, leaving the sense quite imperfect. The word is יודע, knowing, supplied from the Syriac. The Chald. had the same word in the copy before him, which he paraphrases by קדמי גלן, their deeds are manifest before me: and the Aldine and Complutensian editions of LXX acknowledge the same word, γνωστοι; which is verified by MS Pachom. and the Arabic version. I think there can be little doubt of its being genuine.

Ibid. And I come—] For באה, which will not accord with any thing in the sentence, I read בא, with a MS; the participle answering to יודע; with which agree LXX, Syr. Vulg. Perhaps it ought to be ובא, Syr. quando veniam: and so LXX, according to edit. Ald. and Complut. and Cod. Marchal.

19. —who draw the bow] I much suspect, that the words משכי קשה, who draw the bow, are a corruption of the word משך, Moschi, the name of a nation situated between the Euxine and Caspian Seas; and properly joined with תבלי, the Tibareni: see Bochart, Phaleg. iii. 12. The LXX have μωσχοι, without any thing of the drawers of the bow: the word being once taken for a participle, the bow was added to make sense of it. קשה, the bow, is omitted in a MS.

Ibid. —who never heard my name] For שמעי, my fame, I read with LXX and Syr. שמי, my name.

20. —and in counes] There is a sort of vehicle, much used in the East, consisting of a pair of hampers, or cradles, thrown across a camel's back, one on each side; in each of which a person is carried. They have a covering to defend them from the rain and the sun. Thevenot calls them Counies, i. p. 356. Maillet describes them as covered cages hanging on both sides of a camel. "At Aleppo," says Dr Russell, "women of inferior condition, in longer journies, are commonly stowed, one on each side of a mule, in a sort of covered cradles:" Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, p. 89. These seem to be what the Prophet means by the word צבים: See Harmer, Observ. i. p. 445.

21. —and for Levites] For ללויים, fifty-nine MSS (eight ancient) have וללויים, adding the conjunction ו, as the sense seems necessarily to require; and so read all the ancient versions. See Josh. iii. 3. and the various readings on that place in Kennicott's Bible.

24. For their worm shall not die—] These words of the Prophet are applied by our blessed Saviour, Mark ix. 44.

to express the everlasting punishment of the wicked in Gehenna, or in Hell. Gehenna, or the Valley of Hinnom, was very near to Jerusalem, to the south-east: it was the place where the idolatrous Jews celebrated that horrible rite of making their children pass through the fire—that is, of burning them in sacrifice—to Moloch. To put a stop to this abominable practice, Josiah defiled, or desecrated, the place, by filling it with human bones; 2 Kings xxiii. 10. 14.: and probably it was the custom afterwards to throw out the carcasses of animals there; and it became the common burying-place for the poorer people of Jerusalem. Our Saviour expressed the state of the blessed by sensible images; such as Paradise, Abraham's bosom, or, which is the same thing, a place to recline next to Abraham at table in the kingdom of heaven; see Matt. viii. 11.: ("Cænabat Nerva cum paucis. Veiento proximus, atque etiam in sinu recumbebat;" Plin. Epist. iv. 22.: compare John xiii. 23.); for we could not possibly have any conception of it, but by analogy from worldly objects. In like manner, he expressed the place of torment under the image of Gehenna; and the punishment of the wicked, by the worm which there preyed on the carcasses, and the fire which consumed the wretched victims:—marking however, in the strongest manner, the difference between Gehenna and the invisible place of torment; namely, that in the former the suffering is transient—the worm itself, that preys on the body, dies; and the fire, which totally consumes it, is soon extinguished;—whereas in the figurative Gehenna the instruments of punishment shall be everlasting, and the suffering without end; for there "the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

These emblematical images, expressing heaven and hell, were in use among the Jews before our Saviour's time; and in using them he complied with their notions. "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God," says the Jew to our Saviour, Luke xiv. 15. And in regard to Gehenna, the Chaldee paraphrast, as I observed before on chap. xxx. 33. renders everlasting, or continual, burnings, by "the Gehenna of everlasting fire." And before his time the Son of Sirach, vii. 17. had said, "the vengeance of the ungodly is fire and worms." So likewise the author of the book of Judith: "Wo to the nations rising up against my kindred: the Lord Almighty will take vengeance of them in the day of judgment, in putting fire and worms in their flesh," chap. xvi. 17.; manifestly referring to the same emblem.

WHEN a standard critical work, like the present, is offered to the public in a new shape, it is not an unwarrantable expectation on the part of the purchasers to be informed of the reasons of the change, and of the principles on which it has been effected. The only edition which had the benefit of the author's immediate superintendence issued from the Clarendon press, as a thick quarto volume, in the year 1784; and, in common with almost every book proceeding from an establishment celebrated for the erudition and accuracy of the correctors attached to it, that volume was a model of correctness. Having adopted it as the only safe copy to be followed, and having personally verified every Hebrew quotation which it contains, and the greater portion of those in other languages, I have scarcely discovered a single fault in the whole production. In that edition, and in one or two subsequently published in octavo, not only were the text and the notes completely separated from each other, but a large Appendix * was also subjoined, the contents of which seem to have been amassed solely for the purpose of displaying the coincidence of judgment, on many difficult points, between Dr. Blayney and Archbishop Secker;—a favourite object with every ingenuous scholar, when he is enabled to confirm his own previous reasonings or conjectures by those of some eminent man whom he may regard as his superior. Beside these disjointed materials, a copious Index was added, under the three-fold division of TEXTS, PERSONS, and THINGS or subjects generally. A second index of the same kind was framed for the Appendix.—Such was the unwieldy form which this work at first assumed, and which has been retained in each of the succeeding impressions. But though this was matter of necessity, and not of choice, in the first edition; (as will be evident on a perusal of the PRELIMINARY DISCOURSE;) yet the same plea cannot be claimed in justification of subsequent editors, who neglected to simplify the arrangement, and to dismiss the perplexing part of the paraphernalia.

* The Appendix was introduced under this title: "OBSERVATIONS AND NOTES of the late learned THOMAS SECKER, D.D., Archbishop of Canterbury, written by him in two Bibles, now deposited in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth: One of which is a folio English Bible, interleaved, containing observations in English, chiefly respecting the English translation: The other is a quarto Hebrew Bible, of the edition of MICHAELIS, Halle, 1720, the margin of which abounds with critical remarks in Latin on the Hebrew text, and other curious annotations."

In the first edition, "the parts enclosed between [erectets,] and distinguished by the initials of his name, B. B.," were the author's additional remarks on some of the Archbishop's proposed emendations. But as they all now stand under their proper texts, Dr. Blayney's observations have no distinctive mark, while those of the Archbishop are inserted as regular quotations, and have his name appended.

When, therefore, the publishers of this edition intrusted the execution of it to my care, as one of a series of volumes, consisting of original translations of all the Hebrew prophets, from Isaiah to Malachi, it was a part of their instructions that I should print the notes under that portion of the text in each page to which they severally referred, in accordance with the plan adopted in the rest of the series; inserting in their proper places the dislocated contents of the Appendix, and incorporating, under the three distinct heads of index, the matter which had originally been distributed under six. In adopting these judicious suggestions, I consider it a duty which I owe the reader, to apprise him that, in the TEXT, I have most scrupulously followed Dr. Blayney's punctuation, division of the several paragraphs, and even his peculiar mode of writing certain words, such as wo, desart, cowr, inclosure, incirclings, &c. The only exception of which I am conscious, is the word bemone,—a style of spelling which I do not remember to have seen in any old English writer. In the NOTES, while still adhering to the Doctor's exact phraseology, I have evinced less scrupulosity in amending the punctuation, and in approximating some words more closely to the usage of our modern orthography. In his mode of pointing, as well as in some of his divisions, he seems somewhat capriciously to have been at variance with himself: For instance, the word "behold," which rather frequently occurs in the text, is sometimes followed by a comma, and, in other cases of precisely similar import, is destitute of that necessary appendage: Thus, also, in his translation of the LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH, every paragraph at its commencement exhibits the usual indentation, till we arrive at chap. iii. 38, when this mark of distinction entirely ceases. In these, and in others of his peculiarities, I have copied my author, under the impression, whether erroneous or otherwise, that he may have had some good, though very recondite, reasons for such variations in his practice. Perhaps I should have erred less in the breach, than in the observance, of the rule which I thus prescribed to myself, had I uniformly printed Hexapla, instead of Hexaplar, though the latter is his own word in all the early notes.

Dr. Blayney was accustomed, whenever he conceived the sense of the original required the aid of a slight circumlocution, to insert the supplementary words between crotchets; but I have preferred the plan, pursued in the copies of our authorized version of the Holy Scriptures, of distinguishing all such words by exhibiting them in Italic characters.

Should the reader discover passages of this New Translation quoted in the notes, in phraseology different from that which is employed in the text, he must not impute such variations to the carelessness of the printer. Whether they may be deemed oversights or intentional alterations on the part of the learned author, I have in every instance respected his judgment; and have refrained from producing strict uniformity by bringing the expressions in the text, and those in the notes, into an unsanctioned correspondency.

In the note on Jeremiah xlix. 20, in page 333, a clause occurs about which at first I felt some misgivings: "It would be unnatural to speak of sheep or lambs dragging any other creatures about without violence." But though, in one of the octavo impressions, the editor has chosen to substitute the word "with," I have retained "without;" because, on reflection, I perceived a tolerable sense of the passage might be elicited, though it is not enunciated in a manner the most felicitous: For the act of tearing and rending, as the phrase is varied in the preceding sentence, "unnatural" as it would undoubtedly be to "sheep or lambs," could not be performed even by animals of the mildest and most pacific habits "without violence." It must be allowed, however, that the train of the author's argument in that note appears to favour the substitution of "with." A few similar unauthorized alterations, by preceding editors, I have studiously avoided, such as "opposition" for apposition, in page 77, &c. One of their additions I have adopted, which I have been careful distinctly to mark, by enclosing it within crotchets. In page 379, Dr. Blayney had written, "But I am inclined that it is not," &c.; where the sense of the passage evidently requires the insertion of the supplementary words, "to think."

The quotations from Greek and Roman authors, with which

Dr. Blayney illustrated and enriched the notes to his New Translation, I have faithfully preserved as printed in the first edition, with the exception of two passages. One will be found in page 88, from the Phanissæ of EURIPIDES, in which I have given the improved text and arrangement of BURTON's edition by BURGESS. The other is a passage from HOMER, which occurs in page 356, where all the copies that I had the opportunity to consult read  $\theta\epsilon\omicron\epsilon\iota\delta\eta\varsigma$ , instead of  $\theta\epsilon\omicron\epsilon\iota\delta\epsilon\varsigma$ .

I conclude this needful though prolix account of the present edition by expressing a hope, that the learned reader will not discover in it any glaring inaccuracy. I have used much diligence to insure correctness; knowing by painful experience, that if works of this description be faulty, they are worse than useless,—they are actually misleading.

TO
THE RIGHT REVEREND AND HONOURABLE
SHUTE,
LORD BISHOP OF SARUM, AND CHANCELLOR OF THE MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

---

MY LORD,

HONOURED long ago by your friendship, and distinguished of late, among the first, by your voluntary and unsolicited patronage, it would ill become me to appear in public without paying you my tribute of gratitude, and expressing my warmest acknowledgments for favours, rendered doubly obligatory by the mode of conferring them. But there will appear a peculiar propriety in the introduction of your Lordship's name at the head of this work, when it is known that it was you who first prompted the author to undertake, and afterwards encouraged him, perhaps too justly diffident of his own abilities, to persevere in it. If, therefore, there should be found any thing useful or valuable in these sheets, it must all be placed to the account of your unwearied zeal in recommending and enforcing, upon principle, the cultivation of sacred literature. It would be arrogance in me to imagine, that my weak voice could have any influence in guiding the public applause. But the world will daily receive the most substantial proofs, that your Lordship comes not behind the most illustrious of your predecessors in any of the qualifications which constitute or adorn the character of a truly Christian Bishop. That you may long live to signalize those virtues, which must necessarily tend to advance the credit of our most holy religion, confirm the happiness of your diocese, and greatly endear you both to God and man, is the unfeigned and ardent prayer of,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's most dutiful

and most devoted servant,

BENJAMIN BLAYNEY.

PRELIMINARY DISCOURSE.

---

WHEN it was first proposed to me to revise the text of Jeremiah, and to attempt a new translation of it, with notes and illustrations, after the manner of the Bishop of London's Isaiah, it appeared to me a matter of so much difficulty and importance, as justly to merit the most mature deliberation. Though sincerely disposed to pay all due deference to the authority of my friends, and earnestly desirous, at a time when I had no immediate call in the line of my profession, to find myself engaged in some worthy occupation, whereby I might have a chance of promoting the glory of God, and the spiritual good of mankind; it could not but occur to me, that, in following the plan of an author of such distinguished eminence, from a disparity of talents a most mortifying disparity might reasonably be apprehended in the execution. On the other hand, it seemed much to be regretted, that a design of such singular utility, and for which such ample materials had been lately provided, should at once be relinquished and laid aside. The learned and venerable Prelate, with whom it began, it was but too well known, had neither leisure nor health to prosecute it farther. And were it necessary to wait till another of equal qualifications should take it up, it were possible that many generations might elapse before the world might enjoy the wished-for satisfaction. But from inferior abilities some, at least, though not equal, benefit might arise; and this in particular, that, whilst the thoughts and attention of mankind were turned upon the subject, the discussion of such errors and mistakes as would be committed might gradually tend to an elucidation and discovery of the truth. And, therefore, upon these principles, when I found no other person likely to stand forth, I determined, at length, to comply with what had been recommended to me ; trusting to the candour of the public, which I had heretofore experienced ; and claiming no other indulgence, than, out of regard to my good intentions, to have my faults animadverted on with that gentleness and benignity which every liberal-minded person will be inclined to exercise towards others, because he must naturally wish to be so treated himself.

In regard, then, to the general design of this work, and the mode of its execution, I shall easily be dispensed with from entering into any minute detail, considering how fully it has been set forth and explained at large in the Bishop of London's Preliminary Dissertation. I have not had the vanity to think I could improve upon his plan ; my aim has been to keep it constantly in view, and to follow it as closely, and with such success, as I could. It is obvious how much benefit I must have derived from having travelled under the directions of so excellent a guide ; from having found the principles and rules of sacred criticism so precisely laid down and marked out for my observance ; and from having seen them so judiciously applied and reduced to practice. With my acknowledgments on this score, I ought, perhaps, to offer an apology to his Lordship, for the freedom of my comments on some few of his particular criticisms. But as I am sure he will readily acquit me of any disrespectful motive, so I am persuaded he would look upon it as an undue and undesirable act of complaisance, were I, in deference to his authority, induced to suppress what appeared to me, at least with some show of reason, to place any passage of holy Scripture in a clearer or better point of view.

As concerning the present defective state of the Hebrew text, the various kinds of mistakes that have found their way into it, and the ordinary sources of its corruption ; the probability of rectifying many of those mistakes by the help of ancient versions and manuscripts ; the history of those versions, and their absolute or comparative value ; the number of manuscripts which have been lately collated, and the antiquity, character, and authority of them respectively ;—all these points have been so thoroughly examined, and represented with so much learning, skill, and precision, in the before-mentioned Preliminary Dissertation of the Bishop of London, and in Dr. Kennicott's General Dissertation prefixed to his edition of the Hebrew Bible with the collations, that I have nothing new to offer concerning them. The reader who is desirous of entering into these matters with a clear and comprehensive view, cannot do better than consult those authors in the places referred to. He will thence be enabled to form just and reasonable expectations of what may be done by a proper use of the means above specified; and to judge, whether they have been duly and advantageously applied in the present performance towards restoring the text of Jeremiah. But he will also perceive, what he will undoubtedly find cause to lament, that cases, after all, will sometimes happen beyond the reach of any such assistance; mistakes of so early a date, as to be prior to any version or ms., either now known, or hereafter likely to fall into our hands. On those occasions we can have no resource but in conjectural criticism; a ground which requires to be trod with the nicest circumspection, lest haply we should be led astray into the wild roving of a luxuriant fancy. But in cases otherwise desperate, there is no reason why a remedy of this kind should not be tried, provided only that it be administered with all the prudence and caution that is requisite. On the contrary, I am persuaded, that we shall sometimes find instances of conjectural emendations so judiciously made, and so well supported by indirect, at least, and circumstantial evidence, as to work a conviction of their truth not inferior to that which would arise from their having been found in copies of the best note and most approved authority.

In discharging the office of a translator, I have not only endeavoured faithfully to represent the general sense of the original, but also to express each word and phrase by a corresponding one, as far as the genius of the two languages would admit; and where necessity obliged me to vary a phrase, I have usually subjoined in a note the literal rendering, in order to show the equivalence of that which was substituted in its stead. At the same time, hoping by all these means to bring the reader to a better acquaintance with the author's manner, I have been no less attentive to imitate, as far as possible, the structure and conformation of the sentences, more especially in the poetical parts of the book, where so much seems to depend upon it. But in the metrical division of the lines or verses, I fear I cannot always claim the merit of being exactly right. In some instances the case is clear, and capable of being ascertained with the greatest precision; as in the acrostic or alphabetical poems, and wherever there is a plain and evident parallelism in the construction of the sentences. But where there is neither acrostic nor parallelism, there may be, and assuredly often is, versification, if we may credit the similarity of diction, and other marks of discrimination. Nor can we have the least doubt but that this versification consisted in a rhythm, formed by a determinate number of duly-proportioned syllables, proceeding in a regular order, so as to strike the ear with a harmonious cadence. But as the genuine pronunciation of the Hebrew language has been long ago irretrievably lost, even so far as to leave nothing certain as to the number of syllables in a word, much less as to their quantity or accent, this harmony of cadence, of course, is to us no more, nor can be of the least assistance in pointing out the just measure of the verse. In those cases, therefore, where neither the initial letter, nor the constructive form or sense of the passage afforded any more probable means of distinguishing, I have adopted an appeal to the eye, instead of to the ear, upon the following principle of analogy. Having remarked a certain determinate medium in the length of those verses, whose measure was capable of being ascertained, with a variation of seldom more than a syllable or two either in excess or defect, I have divided the rest according to the like proportion, confining the variation also, with a due respect to circumstances, within the same limits: A method, it must be owned, sufficiently inaccurate and precarious, and admitted only because there appeared little chance of a better. It is therefore notified, that no one may be drawn in to lay a greater stress upon it than it deserves.

Having, by a distance of residence, been precluded a ready intercourse with some friends whose learning and judgment might have stood me in good stead, I have fewer acknowledgments to make than I could wish, for assistance lent me on this occasion. Upon the death of my truly-amiable and greatly-respected friend, Dr. David Durell, late principal of Hertford College, in Oxford, his papers, containing his manuscript remarks on the prophets, were, by the favour of his brother, Thomas Durell, Esq., of the island of Jersey, left in my hands. They are rough materials, which he had laid in for the carrying on of a work designed to be a continuation of the critical remarks already published by him on those parts of holy Scripture called the "Hagiographa;" and abound with that erudition, good sense, candour, and piety for which the author, in his life-time, was so eminently distinguished. But a long and severe illness, which followed immediately after his last publication, and terminated at length in his death, incapacitated him for any further literary attempt. Out of these remarks I have selected such as fell within the compass of my design, and seemed most satisfactory to me; and have faithfully subjoined his name to every one of them. Others there undoubtedly are, which would have done no discredit to the author's ingenuity; but as I am morally sure they would not have passed his second review without undergoing some material alteration from him, I could not think myself justified in bringing them before the public in their present indigested and imperfect state.

To the Rev. Mr. Woide, one of the principal librarians of the British Museum, and of the most respectable character for his profound literature, I am under great obligations, for having had the goodness to collate for me, through the book of Jeremiah, the manuscript copy of the Prophets of the version of the LXX., now in the British Museum, marked "I B I I.," and often quoted by the title of "ms. Pachom.," on account of its having belonged to Pachomius, a patriarch of Constantinople in the beginning of the sixteenth century. This manuscript having been pointed out and much recommended in the Bishop of London's Preliminary Dissertation, I was very desirous of applying it to my own use; and therefore, by the intervention of a common friend, took the liberty of requesting the assistance of Mr. Woide, as I was not in a situation to collate it myself. To his honour, let it be known, he not only hearkened to my request—though I was personally a stranger to him—with the most liberal complaisance, but performed it amidst a multiplicity of engagements, which might well have pleaded his excuse, with such punctuality of attention, and such cordial benevolence, as must for ever oblige me to remember him, as long as I live, with the most respectful esteem and gratitude. It is with pleasure I congratulate the public on their being about to receive, from the hands of this learned gentleman, a printed exemplar of the Alexandrian ms. of the New Testament, copied from the original with such exact imitation, as to extend and perpetuate, even to distant ages, the use of this precious relic; enriched, besides, as I am given to understand, with many excellent and valuable observations of the editor.

It may seem matter of surprise that, knowing, as I must have done, of the valuable notes of the late Archbishop Secker on the Bible, deposited, according to the directions of his will, in the library of the palace at Lambeth, I should have neglected to avail myself of them till after the greatest part of this work was printed off. But the truth is, I have no such neglect or want of curiosity to reproach myself with ; on the contrary, in the summer of the year 1782, before any part of these sheets was sent to press, I took a journey from the place of my residence to London, for no other purpose than to consult those manuscripts. Unfortunately, when I came there, I learned that the Archbishop was just gone from home ; that the mss. in question were kept under his immediate custody ; and that, if I would see them, I must necessarily wait his return ; which would have delayed me longer than the circumstances of my affairs at home would have allowed of my absence. Thus disappointed, I was obliged to go back, and to enter upon the measures for printing my book, postponing the examination of the manuscripts till a more favourable opportunity. At length, in November last, I renewed my application, and was gratified with the object of my wishes, by the permission of his Grace, the present Lord Archbishop of Canterbury ; whose goodness to me upon this occasion, as upon many others, I am bound to acknowledge with the greatest thankfulness. The principal of these observations, as they came so late, I have been obliged to insert in an appendix ; and have added some further remarks of my own, chiefly such as suggested themselves on perusing the manuscripts.*

I should still think myself guilty of a most unpardonable omission, were I not at this time to seize the opportunity of testifying my respect for the memory of another lately deceased friend ; the learned Dr. Kennicott I mean, whose name the Hebrew critic ought ever to hold in the highest veneration. I account it a singular honour and happiness to myself to have conversed familiarly with him, and to have derived much solid information and improvement from that fund of knowledge which his laborious researches enabled him to lay in, and which the friendliness of his mind disposed him freely to communicate. Of such a nature were my personal obligations to him. His public merit was more conspicuous ; being attested by his astonishing collation of near seven hundred

Hebrew and Samaritan mss. and printed editions of the most early date, anxiously sought out through all the different quarters of the globe, and examined with the nicest care: A work of which he was the first that had the penetration to discern the important utility; and which he was at length fortunate enough, after a course of twenty years of indefatigable application and industry, to bring to a happy conclusion, under the patronage of the greatest names in Europe. From this ample magazine what invaluable stores may be extracted, every day's experience tends to furnish more convincing and indubitable proofs. The various readings that are produced and applied in the notes which follow, though not all of equal importance, will, many of them, I trust, be deemed far from immaterial. But let me indulge a hope, that the time is not very far distant when the task of bringing forward these materials to their proper use will not be left, as hitherto it hath been, altogether in the hands of a few well-intentioned individuals, but will be undertaken on a more extensive plan, by a select assembly of the most learned and judicious divines, commissioned by public authority to examine into the state of the Hebrew text, to restore it, as nearly as possible, to its primitive purity, and to prepare from it a new translation of the Scriptures in our own language, for the public service. This has long been most devoutly wished by many of the best friends to religion and our established church; who, though not insensible of the merit of our present version in common use, and justly believing it to be equal to the very best that is now extant in any language, ancient or modern, sorrowfully confess that it is still far from being so perfect as it might and should be; that it often represents the errors of a faulty original with too exact a resemblance; whilst, on the other hand, it has mistaken the true sense of the Hebrew in not a few places, and sometimes substituted an interpretation so obscure and perplexed, that it becomes almost impossible to make out with it any sense at all. And if this be the case, shall we not be solicitous to obtain a remedy for such glaring imperfections? Shall we content ourselves with saying that neither the errors which have crept into the original text, nor those which deform the translation, have fallen upon any essential points either of doctrine or morals, and therefore there is no great damage to be apprehended from their continuance? The premises may be true; but are we equally sure with respect to the conclusion? Can we with certainty foresee all the mischief that may possibly and eventually result from an error, of what kind soever, wilfully retained in a book of such high and universal importance? Are we not taught to believe, that “all” and every part of “Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is,” according to the intention of the Donor, “profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness?”* But can any Scripture be profitable, except it be understood? And if not rightly understood, may not the perversion of it be proportionably dangerous? Or is it nothing, to deprive the people of that edification which they might have received, had a fair and just exposition been submitted instead of a false one? Do we not know the advantage that is commonly taken by the enemies of revelation, of triumphing in objections plausibly raised against the Divine word upon the basis of an unsound text or wrong translation? And though these objections have been refuted over and over again by the most solid argumentation of private religionists, do they not still continue to ring them in the ears of the vulgar and unlettered Christian, as if they were owned and admitted to be unanswerable? So that it seems requisite for the honour of God and his true religion, that these stumbling-blocks should be removed out of the way as soon as possible by an act of solemn and public disavowal. Influenced by these and such like considerations, His Swedish Majesty hath already set the example, by commanding a new revisal and more perfect translation of the Scriptures to be immediately begun in his dominions. And, which may more excite our wonder, we are credibly informed, that a similar work is set on foot in our own language, at the sole expense of a single nobleman of princely spirit, for the use of the English Roman Catholics. And shall the British nation, so deservedly famous throughout the world for its magnificence and public-spirited exertions, be less active and forward than others upon so glorious an occasion? Shall the church of England, ever accustomed to rank with the foremost in learning and piety, be the last to hold forth to her members those sacred writings in their utmost perfection and purity, the free use of which she has ever taught them to consider as the most invaluable of their privileges? Or will our governors, after having in their private capacities contributed so largely above all others to the means of reformation, stop short on a sudden, and refuse to give a public sanction to the application of them? Why are we to suppose it? Upon the piety and goodness of our gracious sovereign we may ever rely, with the firmest assurance, for his hearty concurrence in any measure, which may tend to advance the interests of religion, and the welfare of his subjects. And from what other quarter, and upon what grounds, is an opposition to be expected? It may be said, perhaps, that the minds of men ought not to be unsettled in religious matters; and that no one can tell what popular clamours and discontents the proposed step may occasion. To this it may be replied, that as no innovation in religion is intended, not any the least alteration in the grounds of our faith or practice, no one's rights of any kind invaded, nor any encroachment made on the spiritual liberty of a single member of the community; what pretence can there be for uneasiness or discontent? The clergy, it may be presumed, from a conviction of its rectitude, are already sufficiently disposed to approve and favour the undertaking. Nor will the more enlightened part of the laity be less ready to discern its propriety and salutary tendency. And even the lowest of the people, the most apt to startle at a departure from long-established usages, will, if the change be not greater than what is necessary, either scarcely perceive it at all, or, so far as they do, will perceive it is made for the better; that by the alteration of a few words they are enabled to see clearly what they could not before understand, and are relieved from some difficulties, which could not fail to perplex and confound the weakness of their understandings. They will naturally, I mean the conscientious and considerate part of them, inquire of their spiritual guides, or of those upon whose judgment they are used to depend, and will by them be informed, that nothing has been done but upon the most just and reasonable grounds; they will therefore not only be quiet and satisfied, but thankful to their superiors for having shown so laudable a concern for their better edification. As for the thoughtless and inconsiderate, they will probably give themselves no further trouble about the matter, than, as the manner of such men is, to applaud or condemn, without knowledge, and without significance. Such we may reasonably presume will be the disposition of men's minds in the general upon the conclusion of this weighty affair. Nor can it be said that this is arguing upon speculation only. The experiment has been already repeatedly made; new versions have been successively introduced, with the sanction of royal authority, many times since the era of the Reformation ; and the event has been known to have turned out exactly such as has been described. Why then should the present generation be supposed to be more superstitious and bigoted than those that have gone before them, or more likely to break out into disturbances and ferments, upon the offer of what is so apparently for their good ? Since then we have advantages which our forefathers were not possessed of, nay, of which it does not appear they had any conception ; why should we not do for ourselves and our posterity what they would undoubtedly have done for us, had they been found in like circumstances as we are ? Let the work of purifying and reforming what is amiss in the present edition of our Bible be fairly and honestly set about, and with that moderation and soberness of mind which the gravity of the subject requires ; and I doubt not but we may safely disregard the suggestions of a narrow and timid policy ; such as, if attended to, would equally, on all occasions, by raising imaginary fears and unreasonable alarms, discountenance and obstruct the wisest and most salutary improvements that can possibly be devised. But here let me stop ; lest the impetuosity of a warm zeal may gradually carry me farther than discretion will warrant. Though I would fain persuade, I would not be thought to dictate ; and least of all would I wish to appear in the light of an impertinent and unmannerly intruder into the province of those whose wisdom and whose station entitle them, in matters of public concern, to decide what is proper to be done, together with the most convenient season and mode of doing it. May the God of all wisdom influence and direct their councils in such a manner as will best promote his glory and the public happiness ; and may it be the care of every one of us, in the mean while, so to make use of the light already afforded us, as to accelerate the time of its increase and enlargement : For it is the voice of truth itself, which, speaking of religious advantages and their improvement, has declared, that “unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance ; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.”*

---

THE prophet Jeremiah was of the sacerdotal race, being, as he records himself, one of the priests that dwelt at Anathoth in the land of Benjamin, a city appropriated out of that tribe to the use of the priests the sons of Aaron, (Joshua xxi. 18,) and situate, as we learn from Jerome, about three miles north of Jerusalem. Some have supposed his father to have been that Hilkiah the high priest, by whom the book of the law was found in the temple in the reign of Josiah; but for this there is no better ground than his having borne the same name, which was no uncommon one among the Jews; whereas, had he been in reality the high priest, he would, doubtless, have been mentioned by that distinguishing title, and not put upon a level with priests of an ordinary and inferior class. Jeremiah appears to have been very young, when he was called to the exercise of the prophetic office; from which he modestly endeavoured to excuse himself by pleading his youth and incapacity; but being overruled by the divine authority, he set himself to discharge the duties of his function with unremitted diligence and fidelity during a period of at least forty-two years, reckoned from the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign. In the course of his ministry he met with great difficulties and opposition from his countrymen of all degrees; whose persecution and ill usage sometimes wrought so far upon his mind, as to draw from him expressions, in the bitterness of his soul, which many have thought hard to reconcile with his religious principles; but which, when duly weighed, may be found to demand our pity rather than censure. He was, in truth, a man of unblemished piety and conscientious integrity; a warm lover of his country, whose miseries he pathetically deplores; and so affectionately attached to his countrymen, notwithstanding their injurious treatment of him, that he chose rather to abide with them, and undergo all hardships in their company, than separately to enjoy a state of ease and plenty, which the favour of the king of Babylon would have secured to him. At length, after the destruction of Jerusalem, having followed the remnant of the Jews into Egypt, whither they had resolved to retire, though contrary to his advice, upon the murder of Gedaliah, whom the Chaldeans had left governor in Judea, he there continued warmly to remonstrate against their idolatrous practices, foretelling the consequences that would inevitably follow. But his freedom and zeal are said to have cost him his life; for the Jews at Tabpanhes, as tradition goes, took such offence thereat, that they stoned him to death ; which account of the manner of his exit, though not absolutely certain, is at least very likely to be true, considering the temper and disposition of the parties concerned. Their wickedness, however, did not long pass without its reward ; for, in a few years after, they were miserably destroyed by the Babylonian armies, which invaded Egypt, according to the prophet's prediction. (Chapter xliv. 27, 28.)

The idolatrous apostasy and other criminal enormities of the people of Judah, and the severe judgments which God was prepared to inflict upon them, but not without a distant prospect of future restoration and deliverance, are the principal subject-matters of the following prophecies ; excepting only chapter xlv., which relates personally to Baruch ; and the six succeeding chapters, which respect the fortunes of some particular heathen nations. It is observable, however, that, though many of these prophecies have their particular dates annexed to them, and others may be tolerably well guessed at from certain internal marks and circumstances, there appears a strange disorder in the arrangement, not easy to be accounted for on any principle of regular design. There is, indeed, a variation between the Hebrew copies and those of the LXX. version, in the arrangement of those particular prophecies concerning the heathen nations ; which in the Hebrew are disposed all together, and, as I conceive, in their proper order of time with respect to each other, at the end of the book ; intentionally, as it should seem, not to interrupt the course of Jewish history ; whilst the authors of the LXX. have inserted them, with some difference of order among themselves, though, perhaps, no very material one, after verse 13 of chapter xxv. But the disorder complained of lies not here ; it is common to both the Hebrew and Greek arrangements ; and consists in the preposterous jumbling together of the prophecies of the reigns of Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, in the seventeen chapters which follow the twentieth according to the Hebrew copies ; so that without any apparent reason many of the latter reign precede those of the former ; and in the same reign the last delivered are put first, and the first last. As such an unnatural disposition could not have been the result of judgment, nor scarcely of inattention, in the compiler of these prophecies ; it follows that the original order has most probably, by some accident or other, been disturbed. To restore which, as it may be of some use to the reader, I shall venture to transpose the chapters, where it appears needful, without altering the numerals, and shall assign the motives of every such transposition in the particular place where it is made.

The following historical sketch of the times in which Jeremiah lived is given with a view to throw light upon his prophecies in general, and may help to explain sundry circumstances and allusions that are found therein.

In the reign of Manasseh every species of impiety and moral corruption had been carried to the highest pitch under the encouragement of royal example. And so thoroughly tainted were the minds of men by this corrupt influence, as to baffle all the endeavours of the good Josiah to bring about a reformation. This well-disposed prince, having, in the eighteenth year of his reign, accidentally met with the book of the law, was stricken with horror at the danger to which he found himself and his kingdom exposed by the violations of it. He therefore immediately set about removing all the abominations that were in the land, and engaged his subjects to join with him in a solemn covenant to be more dutifully observant of the Divine commands for the time to come. But though the king's heart was right, and his zeal fervent and sincere, it was all hypocrisy and dissimulation on the part of the people; their hearts were incorrigibly turned the wrong way; and God, who saw clearly the real bent of their dispositions, was not to be diverted from his designs of vengeance. He began with depriving them by a sudden stroke of their excellent prince, under whose government they had enjoyed much happiness and tranquillity, of which they were altogether unworthy. He was slain in a battle with Pharaoh Necho, king of Egypt, whom Josiah had gone out to oppose on his march against the Babylonian dominions, being himself in alliance with the king of Babylon; and his death, however fatal to his kingdom, was, as to his own particular, a merciful disposition of providence, that his eyes might not see all the evil that was coming upon his land. The twelve first chapters of this book seem to contain all the prophecies delivered in this reign.

Josiah being dead, his sons who succeeded him were not of a character to impede or delay the execution of God's judgments. It is said in general of them all, that they did that which was evil in the sight of Jehovah. The first that mounted the throne was Shallum, or Jehoahaz, the second son, by designation of the people. But his elevation was not of a long continuance. Pharaoh Necho, having defeated the Babylonian forces, and taken Carchemish, on his return deposed Jehoahaz, after a reign of three months, and, putting him in chains, carried him to Egypt, from whence he never returned. In this short reign Jeremiah does not appear to have had any revelation.

Pharaoh Necho made use of his victory to reduce all Syria under his subjection; and having imposed a fine upon the kingdom of Judah of one hundred talents of silver and one talent of gold, he received the money from Jehoiakim, the eldest son of Josiah, whom he appointed king in his brother's stead. Jehoiakim was one of the worst and wickedest of all the kings of Judah; a man totally destitute of all regard for religion, and unjust, rapacious, cruel, and tyrannical in his government. In the beginning of his reign he put Urijah, a prophet of God, to death, for having prophesied, as was his duty to do, of the impending calamities of Judah and Jerusalem. And having either built for himself a new palace, or enlarged the old one that belonged to the kings of Judah, by a strain of authority not less mean than wicked he withheld from the workmen the wages they had earned in building it. In short, he set no bounds to his evil inclinations and passions; and his people, freed from the wholesome disciline which had restrained them in his father's time, were not behindhand with him in giving way to every sort of licentious extravagance. Three years he reigned without molestation or disturbance from abroad. But towards the latter end of his third year, Nebuchadnezzar being associated in the government by his father, Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, was sent into Syria to recover the dismembered provinces of the Babylonish empire. In the fourth year of Jehoiakim he beat the Egyptian army at the river Euphrates, retook Carchemish, and, having subdued all the intermediate country, he appeared before Jerusalem, of which he soon made himself master. Jehoiakim was at first loaded with chains, with an intention of sending him to Babylon.* He was, however, released upon his submission, and again suffered to reign on taking an oath to be a true servant of the king of Babylon. But numbers of his people were sent captives to Babylon, together with several children of the blood royal, and of the first families of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar proposed to breed up in his own court, in order to employ them afterwards in the affairs of his empire. At the same time many of the sacred vessels were taken away, and deposited in the temple of Belus at Babylon; so that from this date the desolation of Judah may fairly be reckoned to have had its beginning.

After the king of Babylon's departure, Jehoiakim continued to pay him homage and tribute for three years. In the mean time both he and his people persisted in their evil courses, undismayed by the mischiefs which had already befallen them, and making light of the threatenings, which God by the ministry of his prophets repeatedly denounced against them. At length Jehoiakim refused to pay any longer the tribute assigned him, and broke out into open revolt. To chastise him, the king of Babylon, not being at leisure to come in person, directed his vassals of the neighbouring provinces, the Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, to join with the Chaldean troops that were on the frontiers, and to ravage the land of Judah. They did so for three years together, and carried off abundance of people from the open country, who were sent to Babylon. Jehoiakim, in some attempt, as it should seem, made by him to check these depredations, was himself slain without the gates of Jerusalem; and his dead body having been dragged along the ground with the greatest ignominy, was suffered to remain without burial in the open fields. The prophecies of this reign are continued on from chapters xiii. to xx. inclusively, to which we must add chapters xxii., xxiii., xxv., xxvi., xxxv., and xxxvi., together with xlv., xlvi., xlvii., and most probably xlviii., and as far as to verse 34 of chapter xlix.

Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim, a youth of eighteen years old, succeeded his father in the throne, and followed his evil example, as far as the shortness of his reign would admit. From the beginning of it, Jerusalem was closely blocked up by the Babylonian generals. At the end of three months Nebuchadnezzar joined his army in person, and upon his arrival Jeconiah surrendered himself, and his city, at discretion. He was transported directly to Babylon, with his mother, his family, and friends, and with them all the inhabitants of the land of any note or account. The treasures also of the temple, and of the king's house, and all the golden vessels which Solomon had provided for the temple-service, were at this time carried away. We read of no prophecy that Jeremiah actually delivered in this king's reign; but the fate of Jeconiah, his being carried into captivity, and continuing an exile till the time of his death, was early foretold in his father's reign, as may be particularly seen in chapter xxii.

The last king of Judah was Zedekiah, the youngest son of Josiah, whom Nebuchadnezzar made king, and exacted from him a solemn oath of allegiance and fidelity. He was not perhaps quite so bad a man as his brother Jehoiakim; but his reign was a wicked one, and completed the misfortunes of his country. His subjects seem to have but little respected him, whilst they considered him in no other light than as the lieutenant or viceroy of the king of Babylon, whose sovereignty they detested, and were continually urging him to throw off the yoke. Nor had he been long in possession of the kingdom, before he received ambassadors from the kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyrus, and Sidon, soliciting him to join in a confederacy against the Babylonish power. But he was wise enough at this time to hearken to the prophet Jeremiah's advice, and to reject their propositions; and for some years continued to send regularly his presents and ambassadors to Babylon, in token of his obedience. But the iniquities of his people were now ripe for punishment, and their idolatries, as the prophet Ezekiel describes them, (chap viii.,) were become so enormously profligate, that the stroke of vengeance could no longer be suspended. Zedekiah, therefore, was at last prevailed on by evil counsel, and the promise of assistance from Egypt, to break his oath, and renounce his allegiance; by which he drew upon himself the arms of the king of Babylon, who invaded Judah, took most of its cities, and invested Jerusalem. The Egyptians made a show of coming to his relief; and the Chaldean army, informed of their approach, broke off the siege, and advanced to meet them; having first sent off the captives that were in their camp. This produced a signal instance of the double-dealing of the Jews. For in the first moments of terror they had affected to return to God, and in compliance with his law had proclaimed the year of release to their Hebrew bondservants, and let them go free. But on the retreat of the Chaldeans, when they believed the danger was over, and not likely to return, they repented of their good deed, and compelled those whom they had discharged to return to their former servitude. The Egyptians, however, durst not abide the encounter of the enemy, but faced about, and returned to their own land, leaving the people of Judah exposed to the implacable resentment of the king of Babylon. The siege was immediately renewed with vigour, and the city taken according to the circumstantial account which is given of it in chapter lii. The prophecies, which were delivered in the reign of Zedekiah, are contained in chapters xxi. and xxiv., xxvii. to xxxiv., and xxxvii. to xxxix., inclusively, together with the six last verses of chapter xlix., and chapters l. and li., concerning the fall of Babylon.

The subsequent transactions of the murder of Gedaliah, of the retreat of the Jews that remained into Egypt, and of their ill-behaviour there, are so particularly related in chapters xl.—xliv., that it were needless here to repeat them. But it may be of use to observe, that, in the second year after the taking of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar laid siege to Tyre; and, in the course of that siege, which lasted thirteen years, he sent part of his forces against the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Philistines, and other neighbouring nations, to desolate and lay waste the country, as the prophets of God had foretold. At the same time Nebuzaradan, the Babylonish general, again entered the land of Judah, and carried off a few miserable gleanings of inhabitants that were found there. In the next year after the taking of Tyre, the king of Babylon invaded Egypt, which he plundered and ravaged from one end to the other; and, on this occasion, all the Jews that had fled into that kingdom for refuge were almost entirely cut off, or made prisoners. Such was the state of affairs in general, till, in the course of time, and precisely at the period which had been foretold, the Babylonian monarchy was itself overturned by the prevailing power of the Medes and Persians; and the Jewish nation once more returned to their own land.

It may be expected, that something should be said concerning the discriminating style and genius of this prophet's writing. But, instead of offering an opinion of my own, which in point of judgment may be questionable, the public in general will perhaps be better gratified, if I present them with the translation of a character already drawn by a very superior hand, to which I doubt not every reader of discernment will heartily subscribe. "Jeremiah," says this admirable critic, "is by no means wanting either in elegance or sublimity; although, generally speaking, inferior to Isaiah in both. Jerome has objected to him a certain rusticity in his diction, of which I must confess I do not discover the smallest trace. His thoughts indeed are somewhat less elevated, and he is commonly more large and diffuse in his sentences; but the reason of this may be, that he is mostly taken up with the gentler passions of grief and pity, for the expression of which he has a peculiar talent. This is most evident in the Lamentations, where those passions altogether predominate; but it is often visible also in his Prophecies, in the former part of the book more especially, which is principally poetical; the middle are for the most part historical; but the last part, consisting of six chapters, is entirely poetical; and contains several oracles distinctly marked, in which this prophet falls very little short of the lofty style of Isaiah. But of the whole book of Jeremiah it is hardly the one half which I look upon as poetical."—LOWTH de sacrâ Poesi Hebræorum, Prælec. xxi.

CHAP. I. Verse 1. The words of Jeremiah—This chapter forms an entire section by itself: It contains the call of Jeremiah, and the commission given him by God; the purport of which is explained by two symbolical images. God encourages him to proceed in the execution of it, by assuring him of protection and support.

Verse 5. I knew thee—That is, “I had thee in my view,” or, “approved thee as a fit and proper object;” in the same sense as it is said, “Known unto God are all his works, from the foundation of the world:” (Acts xv. 18 :) He contemplated the plan of them, and approved it in his mind, before he created and brought them into being. Agreeably to this premeditated purpose concerning him, God proceeded, at an early period, to set him apart, or separate him from the rest of mankind, to be employed in that peculiar office to which now, in the fulness of time, he appointed him. Exactly in this manner St. Paul says of himself, Gal. i. 15, 16, that God separated him from his mother’s womb, and afterwards called him to preach the gospel of his Son unto the Gentiles.

- 8 Be not thou afraid because of them ; for I will be with thee
- 9 to protect thee, said JEHOVAH. And JEHOVAH put forth his hand, and touched my mouth. And JEHOVAH said unto me,
- 10 Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth. See, I have given thee power this day over nations and over kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to overthrow ; and to build, and to plant.
- 11 And the word of JEHOVAH came unto me, saying, What seest thou, Jeremiah ? And I said, I see a rod of an almond-
- 12 tree. And JEHOVAH said unto me, Thou hast rightly seen :
- 13 for I am intent upon my word to perform it. And the word of JEHOVAH came unto me a second time, saying, What seest thou ? And I said, I see a pot that sendeth forth steam ; and

Verse 10. And to build—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, read ולבנות, and so likewise four mss., one of which is the ancient Bodleian, No. 1.*

Verse 11. A rod of an almond tree—The almond tree is one of the first trees that blossom in the spring, and from that circumstance is supposed to have received its name, שקד, as being intent and, as it were, on the watch to seize the first opportunity ; which is the proper sense of the Hebrew verb שקד ; so that here is, at once, an allusion to the property of the almond tree, and in the original, a Paranomasia ; which makes it more striking there than it can be in a translation.

“Prima omnium floret amygdala. (Plin. lib. xvi., cap. 42.)”—SECKER.

Verse 13. Its face turned from the north—It is very manifest that מִפְּנֵי צָפוֹן must signify “from the north,” or, “from the face of the north,” as it is expressed in the margin of our Bible, and not “towards the north,” as it is improperly rendered in the text. From the next verse it appears that the evil was to come from the north ; and therefore the steam, which was designed for an emblem of that evil, must have issued from that quarter too. The pot denoted the empire of the Babylonians and Chaldeans, lying to the north of Judea, and pouring forth its multitudes like a thick vapour to overspread the land.

Verse 14. Shall pour forth—רָפְתָה, literally, “shall be opened ;” that is, shall pass freely out, as having the door open.

Verse 15. Shall set every one his throne—To set up a throne in or over entering in of the gates of Jerusalem, and upon all the walls 16 thereof round about, and over all the cities of Judah. And I will pronounce my judgments against them for all their wickedness; in that they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, and worshipped the work of their own 17 hands. And as for thee, thou shalt gird up thy loins, and shalt arise, and shalt speak unto them all that I shall command thee; be not thou afraid of them, lest I should suffer thee to 18 be crushed before them. For I, behold, I have made thee this day like a fortified city, and like a pillar of iron, and like a wall of brass, against all this land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the 19 people of the land: And they shall make war against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee: for I will be with thee, said JEHOVAH, to protect thee.

any place denotes taking full possession of it, and exercising authority and dominion there. See chap. xliii. 10; xlix. 38.

Verse 16. And I will pronounce my judgments against them—Or, “And I will discourse my judgments with them,” וידברתי משפטי אותם; a phrase that implies all the several steps of a judicial process, in which the rules of law are applied and brought home to the particular case in hand. Thus it is said of Zedekiah, that the king of Babylon “discoursed judgments with him,” וידבר אתי משפטים, (chap. xxxix. 5; lii. 9;) that is, he had him arraigned, tried, convicted, and condemned, according to the laws of the empire, for the high treason which he had committed. Compare, also, chapters iv. 12; xii. 1. משפט may be the singular or plural noun with the affix י, “my rule,” or, “my rules of judgment;” meaning that system of just laws which God had established for the regulation of his people’s conduct, and guarded by suitable sanctions and penalties. In 2 Kings xxv. 6, we read משפט in the singular number; in the places above cited, משפטים in the plural. The LXX. render, Kai λαλησω προς αυτους μετα κρισεως; but with this variation in ms. Pachom.: Kai λαλησω μετα κρισεως μου προς αυτους.

Verse 17. Lest I should suffer thee to be crushed before them—There is no threat implied here, as the generality of commentators are inclined to ‘suppose. The particle פן points out the danger which might possibly alarm the prophet’s fears,—that of being overborne by the opposition he was likely to meet with. He therefore receives special assurances of God’s immediate protection and support. אחרך is in the conjugation Hiphil, which, indeed, commonly imports, “to make” or “cause to be broken or dismayed.” But God is often said to make or cause to be done what he only permits and suffers.

Verse 18. And like a wall—The LXX., Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, all render in the singular number, “a wall.” And fifty-two mss., with twelve printed editions, read either לחמת or לחומת.

CHAPTER II.

- 1 THE word of Jehovah came also unto me, saying;
 2 Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying;

THUS saith JEHOVAH, I have called to mind in thy behalf
 The kindness shown thee in thy youth, the love of thy espousals,

When thou wentest under my conduct through the wilderness,

Through a land that was not cultivated.

CHAP. II.—THAT some of the following prophecies are in metre, is as obvious as that others are not; there being evidently to be discerned in the one, and not in the other, those characteristic marks of metrical composition, more especially the corresponding or parallel lines or verses, and the relation of the sentences and parts of sentences to each other, which Bishop Lowth has described and treated of at large in his Preliminary Dissertation on Isaiah. It has been already noticed, (page 18,) that the same judicious critic has pronounced nearly one half of the book of Jeremiah to be poetical. And, as the same reasons will hold good for attending to this peculiar form of construction in all parts of the sacred writings where it occurs, I have endeavoured to point it out, after the Bishop's example, to the reader's notice, by distributing the lines according to their due measure, as far as my judgment would carry me; in which I hope to be serviceable on the whole, though I may sometimes, and perhaps not seldom, be mistaken.

The prophecy begun in this chapter is continued to the end of the fifth verse of the next chapter. In it God professeth to retain the same kindness and favourable disposition towards Israel which he had manifested in their earlier days. He expostulateth with them on their ungrateful returns for his past goodness, and sheweth that it was not want of affection in him, but their own extreme and unparalleled wickedness and disloyalty, which had already subjected, and would still subject, them to calamities and misery. He concludes with a pathetic address, exhorting them to return to him, with an implied promise of acceptance; and laments the necessity he was under, through their continued obstinacy, of giving them further marks of his displeasure. This prophecy may not improbably have been delivered soon after the beginning of the prophet's mission.

Verse 2. I have called to mind in thy behalf the kindness, &c.—Our English version, now in use, and most of the ancient interpreters, seem to have considered חסד נעוריו אהבת כלולתו as the regard and affection which the Israelites bore to God in the infancy of their constitution, when they first became his covenanted people, and followed his guidance in the wilderness of Sinai. But that they had very little merit of this kind to boast of, is evident from their history at this period, as recorded by Moses, and alluded to by other sacred writers. See Deut ix. 5, &c.; Psalm lxxviii. 8, &c.; Ezek. xx. 5–26. The kindness was all shown on the part of God, and

- 3 Israel is a hallowed thing unto JEHOVAH,
The first-fruits of his increase :
All that devour him shall be guilty of a trespass,
Evil shall come unto them, said JEHOVAH.
- 4 Hear ye the word of JEHOVAH, O house of Jacob,
And all the families of the house of Israel.
- 5 Thus saith JEHOVAH ;
What wrongdealing did your fathers find in me,
That they went far from me,
And walked after vanity, and became vain ?
- 6 And they said not, Where is JEHOVAH,
Who brought us up out of the land of Egypt,
Who led us through the wilderness,
Through a land of wide waste, and a pit, was perfectly gratuitous, as the word חסד properly signifies ; and it was his affection for them, and not theirs for him, that led him to espouse them, that is, to engage in a special contract with them to be their God, and to take them for his peculiar people. And thus the words are explained in the margin of our ancient English Bible (1583, folio) to be “ that grace and favour which I shewed thee from the beginning, when I did first choose thee to be my people, and married thee to myself.” And by God’s remembering for them, or calling to mind in their behalf, this lovingkindness and affection, is implied, that he still continued to retain the same cordial regard for them, whenever they were disposed to turn to him, and to avail themselves of his good-will. So it is said, Psalm cvi. 45 : רִיכַר לָהֶם בְּרִיתוֹ, “ And he remembered for them his covenant.” See also Isaiah lxiii. 11 ; Ezek. xvi. 60.

Verse 3. Israel is a hallowed thing unto Jehovah—These words I consider as spoken in those ancient times when God, out of his special favour to Israel, appropriated them unto himself as the first-fruits of mankind, and forbade any to molest them, under pain of being considered and treated as sacrilegious invaders of sacred property. And therefore נֶאֱמַר יְהוָה is rendered, “ said Jehovah,” and not “ saith.”

His increase—Fourteen mss. and two editions read תְּבוּאָתָהּ for תְּבוּאָתוֹ in the text, and seven mss. give it as a marginal keri; but הָ is in use for the masculine affix as well as ו, and seems often to be purposely introduced for the sake of distinguishing between two masculine pronouns in the same period which refer to different antecedents ; as in the present instance הָ refers to יְהוָה, and the ו, in אֲכַלְיוּ, to יִשְׂרָאֵל.

Verse 6. Through a land of wide waste, and a pit—By the words בְּאֶרֶץ עֲרֵבָה וַיְשׁוּחָה it was undoubtedly meant to characterize the wilderness by some of its most unfavourable circumstances in point of nature and appearance. But to call it simply, “ a land of deserts,” seems not to help forward our idea of it. The proper sense of עֲרֵבָה seems to be derived from the verb עָרַב, “ to mix or mingle together ;” and to be that of an extensive plain or open country, in which no one had an exclusive right

Through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death,
 Through a land which no man passed through,
 And where no human being dwelt?
 7 I brought you also unto a land of fruitful field, of property, but the pasturage and sheepwalks were all promiscuous, and in common. Hence I apprehend the whole country of Arabia to have been denominated, being mostly occupied in that manner. Such also I suppose to be the plains mentioned in Scripture, and called from their adjacency, "the plains of Mamre," of Moab, of Jordan, of Jericho, &c., as being unappropriated, and of course uncultivated, lands in the neighbourhood of those places. Accordingly, to such land we usually give the name of "the waste." Now the wilderness, through which the Israelites passed in their way out of Egypt, was to a vast extent a land of waste of this kind, totally unoccupied and unfit for the purpose of cultivation, and therefore absolutely incapable of subsisting without a miracle such a numerous people, as for many years took up their abode in it. To this is added וַיְשׁוּחָה, which our translators have rendered, "and of pits;" but why they supposed the wilderness to be called "a land of pits," I do not well conceive. The LXX. have rendered the whole passage in so lax a manner, that nothing can be collected from thence. The Chaldee and Syriac seem to have read שׁוּחָה, "desolation," or to have considered whatever word they found as having that import. But if וַיְשׁוּחָה be the true reading, as all the collated mss. agree in representing it, it undoubtedly signifies "a pit," and may perhaps allude to the enclosure of the wilderness within craggy and high mountains, in respect of which Pharaoh is introduced as saying of the Israelites, "The wilderness hath shut them in," (Exod. xiv. 3,) or, "closed upon them." So that if we render the words in question, "through a land of wide waste and a pit," we may understand by it a country incapable of providing for the people's subsistence from being a wide uncultivated waste; but into which when they were once entered, they were fairly shut up as in a pit, where they and their families must have inevitably perished, if they had not had the assistance of providence to support them by the way, and finally to extricate them out of it.

And the shadow of death—This image was undoubtedly borrowed from those dusky caverns and holes among the rocks, which the Jews ordinarily chose for their burying places; where death seemed to hover continually, casting over them his broad shadow. Sometimes, indeed, I believe nothing more is intended by it, than to denote a dreariness and gloom like that which reigns in those dismal mansions. But in other places it respects the perils and dangers of the situation. Thus—"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil;" (Psalm xxiii. 4;) and again, Psalm xlv. 19. But over and above the foregoing allusions, "the land of the shadow of death" here seems to intend "the grave" itself, which the wilderness actually proved to all the individuals of the children of Israel that entered into it, Caleb and Joshua only excepted, whose lives were preserved by a special providence.

Verse 7. A land of fruitful field—The article shows הַכְּרִמָּה to be designed

- To eat the fruit thereof, and the good thereof;
 But when ye were come in, ye defiled my land,
 And mine heritage ye made an abomination.
- 8 The priests said not, Where is JEHOVAH?
 And they that were versed in the law knew me not;
 The pastors also rebelled against me;
 And the prophets prophesied in the name of Baal,
 And walked after things that could not profit.
- 9 Therefore I will yet plead with you, saith JEHOVAH,
 And with your children's children will I plead.
- 10 For pass over unto the countries of Chittim, and see;
 And send ye to Kedar, and inform yourselves well;
 And take notice, if there hath been such a thing as this.
- 11 Hath a nation changed Gods, even those that were no Gods?
 But my people hath changed their glory for that which cannot profit.
- 12 The heavens are astonished at this, and horribly afraid,
 They are shocked exceedingly, saith JEHOVAH.

for an appellative; and "a land of fruitful field" is well contrasted with "a land of waste."

"הכרמל—Rectè se habet. Alioqui legi posset כרם, cum sequatur ל. Confer Num. xvi. 14."—SECKER.

Verse 9. I will yet plead with you—That is, "I will maintain by arguments the equity of my proceedings, and the injustice of yours."

Verse 10. The countries of Chittim—By צִיִּים it is certain that the Hebrews did not mean the same as we do by "islands;" that is, lands encompassed with water all around; and therefore we ought not so to render this Hebrew word. It sometimes signifies only "a country" or region, as Isaiah xx. 6; but usually perhaps distant ones, and such as had a line of sea coast. See chapter xlvii. 4. BOCHART (Phaleg, lib. iii. cap. 5) has made it appear with much probability, that the countries peopled by Chittim, the grandson of Japhet, are Italy and the adjacent provinces of Europe, which lie along the Mediterranean sea. And as these were to the west of Judea, and Kedar in Arabia to the east, the plain purport of this passage is, "Look about you to the west and to the east."

Chittim, Kedar—West, East."—SECKER.

Verse 11.—Hath a nation changed Gods?—Fifty-five mss. and ten editions of the Hebrew read הַהִמְיָר. One ms., for אֱלֹהִים reads אֱלֹהֵי, "its gods." The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, all agree in joining the affix; but the two former express the subject and verb in the plural number, as if they had read, הַהִמְיָר בָּגִים אֱלֹהֵתָם. But the present reading is unexceptionable.

Verse 12. The heavens are astonished, &c.—The verbs here may be either the third person plural of the preter tense, or the second person plural of the imperative. The LXX. prefer the former.

"וְרָחֵל-הָרִבִּי, Syn. videtur legisse רחב, nec mulè."—SECKER. The

- 13 For my people have done two wicked things:
 Me they have forsaken, a fountain of living waters;
 And they have hewed out for themselves broken cisterns,
 Which will not hold water.
- 14 Is Israel a slave? Or if a child of the household, Wherefore is he exposed to spoil?
- 15 Against him lions shall roar;
 They have lifted up the voice,
 And have made his land a desolation;
 His cities are burned so as to be without an inhabitant.

LXX. render, καὶ ἐρριξεν ἐπὶ πλεον σφοδρα. They therefore must have read הרבו; and, I think, rightly. הרבה signifies "to do a thing much or often." And as קראו מלאו (chapter iv. 5) signifies, "proclaim fully;" so ושערו הרבו מאד, if taken together, will exactly correspond with the Greek. But if construed imperatively, the verse may be thus divided and rendered:—

Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this,
 And shudder very exceedingly, saith JEHOVAH.

The preter tense would have been ישערו, because of the ו conversive.

Verse 13. Broken cisterns—בארות נשברים. The text here appears to be corrupt. The LXX. and Chaldee omit בארת, and, I should suppose, read בארות נשברות, which would be right: For בארות, a feminine noun, requires the adjective or participle of the same gender. Three mss. omit בארת; one substitutes ברות instead of it; and, for נשברים, two mss. read נשברות, an easy corruption of נשברים.

Verse 14. Or if a child of the household—One ms. reads ואם with the conjunction. ילד בית answers to the Latin word filius-familias, and stands opposed to a slave. The same distinction is made, Gal. iv. 7; and an inference drawn from it in a similar manner: "Wherefore thou art no more a servant, (a slave,) but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." As Christians now, so the Israelites heretofore were the children of God's household; and, if so, they seemed entitled to his peculiar care and protection.

Verse 15. Against him lions shall roar—Lions, in the figurative style of prophecy, denote powerful princes and conquerors. See chap. i. 17. Such were Pharaoh Necho, king of Egypt, and Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon; whose successive hostilities against the kingdom of Judah seem here to be foretold. Fifty-six mss. and six editions read כפירים at large.

Are burned—Twenty mss. and two editions confirm the reading of the Masora, נצתו for נצתה. Three mss. read נתצו, "are broken down;" and this accords with the word used by the LXX., κατεσκαφησαν. See chap. iv. 26. It may be observed, that the verbs נתנו, וישיתו, and נצתו, or נתצו, express the time past; but the context shows that they must be understood of the future. Nor is it unusual for the prophets thus to speak of events foreseen by them, as if they had them already accomplished in their view.

- 16 The sons also of Noph and Tahpanhes shall bruise the crown of thy head.
- 17 Shall not this be done unto thee,
Because thou hast forsaken JEHOVAH thy God,
At the time that he led thee in the way?
- 18 And now, what hast thou to do in the way of Egypt,
To drink the waters of Sihor?
Or what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria,
To drink the waters of the river Euphrates?
- 19 Thine adversity shall chasten thee, and bring thee to a sense of thy backslidings;
Know also and perceive, that it is a thing evil and bitter,
That thou hast forsaken JEHOVAH thy God,
And that the fear of me is not with thee,
Saith the Lord JEHOVAH of hosts.
- 20 Surely of a long time thou hast broken thy yoke,

Verse 16. The sons also of Noph, &c.—This, no doubt, alludes to the severe blow which the nation received in a capital part, when the good king Josiah was defeated by the Egyptians, and slain in battle; or when, afterwards, upon the deposition of Jehoahaz, the glory of the monarchy was debased, by its being changed into a tributary and dependent kingdom. (2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34.) Noph and Tahpanhes were two principal cities of Egypt, otherwise called Memphis, and Daphnæ Pelusiaceæ. Forty-one MSS. and six editions read וַתִּחַפְּנֶה, according to the Masoretic emendation for וַתִּחַפְּנֶה.

“רעוך קרקע”—Rectè se habet vulgata lectio. Confer Deut. xxxiii. 20.—SECKER.

“Have broken—When did the Egyptians this? Their victory over Josiah was long after. Perhaps it should be, ‘shall break.’”—SECKER.

Verse 18. To drink the waters of Sihor—At verse 13 it is said, that the people had “forsaken JEHOVAH, a fountain of living waters;” by a like figure they are here reproved for proceeding, after the manner of the Egyptians and Assyrians, to drink the waters of their rivers; that is, to have recourse for help to the gods on whom those nations placed their dependence. Sihor, or Shichor, is a name given to the Nile. See Bishop Lowth’s note on Isaiah xxiii. 3. And נהר denotes the river Euphrates, by way of eminence, often with the article ה prefixed, and sometimes without it, as Psalm lxxx. 12; Isaiah vii. 20; Micah vii. 12.

Verse 19. Thine adversity—So רעתם signifies, verse 27; and רעתך, being considered in the same light here, becomes a proper subject for both תיסרך and תוכיחך, and affords a sense perfectly well suited to the context.

“תוכיחך potest punctari תוכיחך ut sit Enallage numeri; vel potest esse 3 pl. fœm. irreg. ut תבשחו, cap. xlix. 11. Vide et Buxtorf. Thes. i. 13, 31.”—SECKER. But there is no irregularity at all if רעתך be the subject of תוכיחך.

Thou hast burst thy bands, and hast said, I will not be in subjection :

For upon every high hill,
And under every green tree,
Will I prostitute myself, playing the harlot.

- 21 And though I had planted thee a vine of Sorek,
Altogether a seed of a genuine quality ;
Yet how do I find thee changed !

Depart, O vine of spurious growth.

- 22 For though thou wash thee with nitre,
And take unto thee much soap,
Thine iniquity is marked with a blot before me,
Saith the Lord JEHOVAH.

Verse 20. Thou hast broken thy yoke, thou hast burst thy bands—The LXX. and Vulgate appear to have read שברת and נהקת, instead of שברתי and נהקתי; and the context plainly shows that to have been the right reading; for, doubtless, it was not God that relaxed the discipline, but it was the people themselves that, like an unruly beast, “broke the yoke, and burst the bands,” spurning and casting off all manner of restraint. See chap. v. 5. One ms. reads שברת.

I will not be under subjection—The Masoretes propose to read לא אעבור, “I will not transgress,” after the Chaldee; and are followed by fifteen mss. and six editions. Also, nineteen mss. and one edition read לא אעבר; but the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate confirm the received reading of the text; which is clearly preferable.

Will I prostitute myself—For את צעה I propose to read את צעה, in one word, considering it as the first person future in Hithpael, from צעה, the sense of which may be deduced from the Arabic verb سَجَل, inclinatus fuit, submisit se. Accordingly, the LXX. here render διαχυθησομαι. And the Vulgate, which reads את צעה in two words, adheres, notwithstanding, to the above-mentioned sense of צעה, and renders, tu prosternebaris. This verb will be further considered in a note on chap. xlviii. 12.

Verse 21. A vine of Sorek—See Bishop Lowth’s note on Isaiah v. 2.

How do I find thee changed—Literally, “How art thou changed to me?” πῶς ἐστράφης μοι; LXX., ms. Pachom.

Depart, O vine of spurious growth—This passage has occasioned great perplexity; but it does not seem to have occurred to any interpreter that סור is the imperative feminine of סור, and signifies, “depart,” “get thee gone;” being addressed by God to the house of Israel under the character of a vine; which is discarded for having adulterated the good qualities of its original stock. נכריה properly signifies “strange,” of a different nature from the stock whence it was taken. Compare the beautiful allegory in Isaiah v. 1–7.

Verse 22. Nitre—This is not the same that we call “nitre,” or “salt-petre,” but a native salt of a different kind, distinguished among naturalists by the name of “natrum,” or the nitre of the ancients. It is found in

- 23 How canst thou say, I am not polluted, abundance in Egypt, and in many parts of Asia, where it is called "soap-earth," because it is dissolved in water, and used like soap in washing.

"Eandem vocem retinet Syr. quæ notat 'maculas vel cicatrices imprimere.' Vide Deut. xxxii. 34; Job. xiv. 17."—SECKER.

Verse 23. Thy ways—The LXX., Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, all render "thy ways," דרכיך, "thy courses," or modes of proceeding. "See thy ways in the valley;" that is, See how thou hast prostituted thyself, and practised the grossest idolatry in the valley; alluding to those idolatrous acts which were practised in the valley of Hinnom. See chap. vii. 31; Isaiah lvii. 5, 6.

Verse 24. A fleet dromedary that hath taken to company with her—מִשְׁרַכָּה דְרָבִיָּה, participem fecit viarum suarum. The sense of מִשְׁרַכָּה may be deduced from the Arabic verb شَرِكَ, consortem, participem fecit. These words have been very improperly joined with the preceding verse. It is manifest that בְּכֶרֶה קֵלָה must (for, according to the rules of syntax, פֶּרֶה, which is masculine, cannot) be the subject of the feminine verb שִׁאֲפָהּ, and the antecedent of the feminine pronouns which follow. The impossibility of restraining one of those fleet animals, when hurried away by the impetuous call of nature, is represented as a parallel to that unbridled lust and eagerness with which the people of Judah ran after the gratification of their passion for idolatry, which is called "spiritual whoredom."

In the desire of her soul—בְּאֶרֶץ נַפְשָׁהּ. Forty-two mss. and six editions read, with the Masoretes, נַפְשָׁהּ.

When her heat is over—בְּהִדְשָׁהּ. Our English versions, both ancient and modern, render, "in her month," which in the margin of the ancient Bible is explained, "when she is with foal." But בְּהִדְשָׁהּ, from the verb הִדִּישׁ "to renew," may be literally translated, "in her renewal," that is, when the heat is abated, and she begins to come about again to the same state as before the fit came on. The LXX. seem so to have understood it, ἐν τῇ ταπεινωσσει αὐτῆς, "when she is humbled." And perhaps it was designed to insinuate to God's people by way of reproach, that they were less governable than even the brute beast, which, after having followed the bent of appetite for a little time, would cool again, and return quietly home to her owners; but the idolatrous fit seemed never to abate, nor to suffer the people to return to their duty; or else it may mean, that when their affairs took a new turn, and became adverse, then would be the time when they, being humbled, would again have recourse to the true God, who alone could save them.

- 25 Keep back thy foot from being unshod,
And thy throat from thirst.
But thou hast said, It is past remedy. No ;
For I have loved strangers,
And after them will I go.
- 26 As a thief is ashamed when he is taken :
So have the house of Israel been put to shame,
They, their kings, and their princes,
And their priests, and their prophets :
- 27 Who say to a piece of wood, 'Thou art my father ;
And to a stone, 'Thou hast brought me forth ;
Surely they have turned unto me the back, and not the face ;
But in the time of their trouble they will say, Arise, and save us.
- 28 But where are thy gods, whom thou hast made for thyself ?
Let them arise, if they can save thee in the time of thy trouble :
For according to the number of thy cities
Have been thy gods, O Judah.
- 29 To what end will ye enter into controversy with me ?
All of you have rebelled against me, saith JEHOVAH.
- 30 In vain have I smitten your children ;
They have not received instruction.
Your own sword hath devoured your prophets,
Like a destroying lion.

Verse 25. Keep back thy foot from being unshod—This is generally understood to be an advice to abstain from wearing out the shoes by running after idols incessantly, and from thirsting after their worship. But I rather take it to be a warning to beware of the consequences of pursuing the courses they were addicted to; as if it had been said, Take care that thou dost not expose thyself by thy wicked ways to the wretched condition of going into captivity unshod, as the manner is represented, Isaiah xx. 4, and of serving thine enemies in hunger, and in thirst, and in want of the necessaries of life. (Deut. xxviii. 48.) Forty mss. and five editions read, with the Masora, וגרונך.

Verse 26. And their princes—Fifteen mss. add the conjunction ו, and read, ושריהם; and so do the LXX. and Syriac.

Verse 27. Thou hast brought me forth—The Masoretes propose to read אַתָּה יִלְדַּתְנִי, “Thou hast brought us forth.” But the received reading of the text seems preferable, as it is in uniformity with אָבִי, “my father.”

Verse 30. Your own sword—The LXX. and Syriac read simply “the sword,” without the pronoun. But all the collated mss., with the Chaldee and Vulgate, read חֶרְבָּנֶם. The meaning is, that they were so far from turning God's chastisements to their own improvement, that on the contrary they put their prophets to death, who in God's name exhorted them to repentance. See 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21 ; xxxvi. 16 ; Neh. ix. 26 ; Matt. xxiii. 30-37 ; Acts vii. 52.

Verse 31. Behold ye the cause of Jehovah—דבר here is not to be rendered “the word,” but “the cause” or “case” of Jehovah, respecting the controversy spoken of verse 29. ראו is therefore used with great propriety, taking דבר in this sense ; but it would have been a kind of Catachresis to say, “See the word of Jehovah.”

A land of darkness—The Vulgate, and some other interpreters, have rendered מאפליה, ארץ מאפליה, terra serotina, “a land backward or late in producing its fruits ;” from the sense ascribed to אפילה, Exodus ix. 32, “late” or “backward grain.” But I prefer “a land of darkness ;” as darkness is often used to denote calamity and distress. See chapter xiii. 16 ; Isaiah v. 30 ; viii. 22. The meaning of the passage is, Have I been wanting to you, whilst ye were under my guidance, in providing you with good things ? Or have I brought you into the gloom of trouble and distress ? Some have supposed מאפליה to have had the sacred name of יה added augendi significationem causâ ; but I am apt to think either, that the original reading was מאפל ; or that מאפליה is an adjective from the substantive מאפל.

We are our own masters—So רדנו may be rendered ; and in this sense the passage will be found to correspond with what is said, verse 20, “Thou hast broken thy yoke, and burst thy bands, and hast said, I will not be in subjection.”

“רדנו—Recessimus,’ Vulg. ; ‘Migravimus,’ Chald. ; ‘Descendimus,’ Syr. ; quasi legissent ירדנו, scil. a monte Domini, cui tergum obverterant ; verse 27. Præcedit י. Forte, ‘Regnamus, felices sumus absque te.’ Confer 1 Cor. iv. 8 ; Psalm. xii. 4.”—SECKER.

Verse 33. Hæc I taught calamities thy ways—The Masoretes for למדת adopt למדה, which is countenanced by the LXX., Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, and by fifteen mss. and four editions. Nevertheless I prefer the received reading of the text, which implies, that God had directed calamities where to find them, in return for their having addressed themselves to idolatrous pursuits.

“הרעות—Forte legendum הרעות, ‘vicinas,’ scil. gentes.”—SECKER.
But in this sense, I think, it would have been רעותך.

Verse 34. Also in thy skirts is found blood—The LXX. and Syriac seem to have read בכפך “in thy hands,” instead of בכנפך. But all the collated mss. concur in the latter ; and כנפך may signify both the “skirts” of a garment, and the "outskirts" or "borders" of a city or country; both which senses are here intended, the former being the metaphorical, the latter the literal, sense. For דם the LXX. read דמים; and in one ms. there is an erasure of two letters after דם. The plural verb נמצאו, and the plural affix in מצאתים, require דמים. In the law, "the blood" is said to be "the life" of an animal; (Gen. ix. 4; Levit. xvii. 14; Deut. xii. 23;) so that נפשות here seems to be added exegetically of דמים or דם. And, in like manner, it is obvious that, Gen. ix. 5, את־דמכם אדרש should not be rendered, "the blood of your lives;" but "Your blood, even your lives, will I require."

In a digged hole—Thus the LXX., and indeed all the ancient versions, represent the sense of במחצרות, except that the LXX. rather read במחצרות in the plural number, εν διορυγμασι. So likewise our ancient English version, "I have not found it in holes." The meaning of which is this: In the law it is commanded, (Lev. xvii. 13,) that the blood of animals killed in hunting should be covered with dust; in order, no doubt, to create an horror at the sight of blood. In allusion to this command, it is urged against Jerusalem, (Ezek. xxiv. 7,) that she had not only shed blood in the midst of her, but that "she had set it upon the top of a rock, and poured it not upon the ground to cover it with dust;" that is, she had seemed to glory in the crime, by doing it in the most open and audacious manner, so as to challenge God's vengeance. In like manner it is said here, that God had not discovered the blood that was shed in holes under ground, but that it was sprinkled upon every oak, before which their inhuman sacrifices had been performed.

Upon every oak—So the LXX. and Syriac rightly render אלה, according to its proper sense in this place. See the note preceding.

Verse 36. Thy ways—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate read דרכיך, and so do three mss., two of them ancient.

By means of Egypt also—The people of Judah seem to have courted the assistance of foreign nations by a sinful compliance with their idolatrous customs. But this measure, it is observed, had already failed them, and they had been disappointed in their expectations from Assyria in the time of king Ahaz, who, as we read, (2 Chron. xxviii. 16–21,) called upon the king of Assyria to help him in his need; but he distressed him only, instead of helping him. In the same manner also, it is here prophesied, they would be served by the Egyptians; whose alliance would only disappoint them, and make them ashamed of having trusted to so ineffectual a support; and it turned out accordingly. See chapter xxxvii. 7, 8.

 And she depart from him, and become another man's ;

Verse 37. With thy hands upon thy head—To cover the head was a mark of great affliction. See chapter xiv. 3 ; 2 Sam. xiii. 19 ; xv. 30.

CHAPTER III. Verse 1. Whilst thou sayest—In the copies of the LXX. now extant, there is no word in the Greek that answers to לִאמֹר. But that this was not always the case, may be learned from Jerome, who here expresses himself thus : “ Vulgò dicitur (pro quo LXX. tantum dicitur translulerunt) Si,” &c. But לִאמֹר is a gerund, dicendo, and requires to be constructed with the words that follow, וְאָתָּה נֹכֵחַ רַעִים רַבִּים, thus : “ In saying,” or, “ Whilst thou sayest, or acknowledgedst, that the law of God (Deut. xxiv. 1–4) forbids a man to take to his wife again, whom he had divorced, and who had gone from him, and engaged herself to another ; even thou hast gone from me, and hast had an unlawful commerce with many lovers ; and, of course, hast placed thyself in such a predicament, as to have no reason to expect that I should take to thee again upon any consideration. Yet, after all this, I give thee liberty to return to me, saith JEHOVAH.” The Vulgate subjoins, et ego suscipiam te, “ and I will take thee again.” Which words, though not to be found in any copy of the Hebrew text, nor in any other of the ancient versions, are clearly implied. It is observable, that not only the letter of the law is here set forth in the prohibition, “ He shall not return unto her,” or take her again ; but the reason of it is specified, “ lest the land be defiled,” or caused to sin, by the encouragement which such facility in the husband might afford to vice and licentiousness. But, in the present instance, God assumes the authority of a supreme Lawgiver, that of dispensing with his own laws, whenever the good intention of them can be better answered by a different mode of proceeding. We may likewise remark, how well this merciful declaration tallies with what was before declared at the very beginning of this prophecy, (chapter ii. 2,) that God was inclined to remember in favour of his people that tenderness and affection which he bore them in former days, when he at first espoused them, or took them into covenant with him.

“ לִאמֹר—Fortè deest introductio solennis.”—SECKER.

- 2 Lift up thine eyes upon the open plains, and see ;
Where hast thou not been defiled in the highways ?
Thou hast sat waiting in them like an Arabian in the desert ;
And hast polluted the land by thy whoredoms and by thy wickedness.
- 3 And although the showers have been withholden,
And there hath been no latter rain ;
Yet thou hast had a harlot's forehead,
Thou hast resolved not to be ashamed.

Verse 2. In the highways—So עֲלֵי-דֶרֶבִּים signifies, chapter vi. 16. And these words I connect with those that go before, as they bespeak the flagrancy of the crime, committed not in a private, retired corner, which would argue some regard to decency at least ; but with the most consummate impudence “in the public ways,” in the face of the whole world, setting all authority, divine and human, at defiance, and corrupting others by the vile example. See Ezek. xvi. 24, 25, 31.

Like an Arabian in the desert—Mr. Harmer has cited from a ms. of Sir John Chardin the following lively description of the attention and eagerness of the Arabs in watching for passengers, whom they may spoil :—“Thus the Arabs wait for caravans with the most violent avidity, looking about them on all sides, raising themselves up on their horses, running here and there to see if they cannot perceive any smoke, or dust, or tracks on the ground, or any other marks of people passing along.”—HARMER'S Observations, vol. i. chapter ii, observation 7.

Verse 3. And although the showers have been withholden—The general import of this passage is, That though God had begun in some degree to chastise his people, (as he threatened, Lev. xxvi. 19 ; Deut. xxviii. 23,) with a view to their reformation, his chastisement had not produced the desired effect ; for they continued as abandoned as before, without showing the least sign of shame or remorse. By “the showers” we are to understand what is otherwise called “the former” or “first rain,” being the first that falls in autumn after a long summer's drought, which is usually terminated in Judea and the neighbouring countries by heavy showers that last for some days. In Judea, according to Dr. Shaw, who, as Mr. Harmer well observes, must have learnt it by inquiries from the inhabitants of the country, the beginning of November is the time of the first descent of rain ; though in other parts of Syria it happens sooner. “The latter rain” is that which generally comes about the middle of April ; after which it seldom or never rains during the whole summer. And, therefore, when at the prayer of Samuel the Lord sent thunder and rain in the time of wheat harvest, as we read, 1 Sam. xii. 17, 18, such an unusual phenomenon, happening immediately according to the prophet's prediction, was justly considered as an authentic sign of his having spoken by the divine authority. But we are not to conclude, as some have done, that between the former and latter rains there was no more rain during the whole winter. The fact is otherwise ; for besides what are sometimes called “the second rains,” which commonly succeed “the first” after an interval of fine weather for a number of days, the winter months are more or less indiscriminately wet, as may be collected from sundry passages in Scripture, as well as from the accounts of travellers, who have been in those parts. However, the former and latter, or, as we may call them, the autumnal and vernal, rains are particularly distinguished, because that on the regular returns of these the plentiful harvests essentially depend; the former being absolutely requisite for seed-time; and the latter for filling the ears of corn before the harvest comes on. I say, the former for seed-time; for Mr. Harmer very justly reproves those who suppose the former rain not to come till after sowing, to make the seed take root; for the Arabs of Barbary, he says, break up their grounds after the first rains, in order to sow wheat; and the sowing of barley, &c., is still later; and at Aleppo, too, the ploughing does not commence till after the rainy season is come. And we may fairly presume the case to be the same in Judea, since after the long dry weather the parched ground would naturally require some previous moistening, before it could be put in fit order for receiving the seed. But not only the crops of grain must suffer by the suspension or failure of either the first or latter rains, or of both; but by the uncommon lengthening of the summer drought the pasturage would fail for the cattle, and the fountains and reservoirs, or cisterns of waters, from whence the people of that country had their chief or only supply, would be exhausted and dried up; so that there would be at least as much danger of perishing by thirst as by famine. See HARMER'S Observations, vol. i. chap. i., "concerning the weather in the Holy Land."

Verse 4. Wilt thou not from henceforward call upon me—קראת must needs be wrong. Twenty-one mss. and three editions read according to the marginal correction in Van der Hooght's edition קראת. But I rather think that by a transposition of letters we should read הקראי, which is favoured by the Chaldee and Syriac versions, by one ms. which reads קראי, and another that reads קרא. One ms. reads את קראת, which would amount to the same sense, קראת being the feminine participle present.

Verse 5. Shall displeasure be held in view for ever?—Both הינטיר and ישמר are passive verbs in the third person singular of the future, taken impersonally. נטר signifies to "keep the eye fixed" on an object, as upon a mark of displeasure, with a settled design of avenging; see verse 12; and שמר, to "note" or "mark" faults, with a like view to punishment. See TAYLOR'S Hebrew Concordance on both these words.

Behold, thou hast spoken and done—All the ancient versions appear to have read דברת instead of דברתי, and so do twenty-eight mss., (two of them ancient,) and five editions either in the text or margin. God had by his prophets endeavoured to dissuade his people from going on with their evil courses, but his arguments had no weight with them ; they continued to do as they had said or resolved ; they carried their wicked thoughts into execution, in spite of all that was urged to the contrary.

And hast prevailed—For והוכלי it is obvious we should read והוכלי, as well as והעשי. It properly signifies, “Thou hast carried thy point in the contest.” See chapter xx. 7.

“והוכלי”—‘And hast prevailed.’—SECKER.

Verse 6. Here begins an entire new section or distinct prophecy, which is continued to the end of the sixth chapter. The charge of hypocrisy upon Judah, at the tenth verse of this chapter, points out the date of this prophecy to have been in the reign of Josiah, and some time after his eighteenth year, when the people, under the influence of their good king, were professedly engaged in measures of reformation ; which, however, are here declared to have been insincere.

This prophecy consists of two distinct parts. The first part contains a complaint against Judah for having exceeded the guilt of her sister Israel, whom God had already cast off for her idolatrous apostasy. (Verses 6–12.) The prophet is hereupon sent to announce to Israel the promise of pardon upon her repentance, and the hopes of a glorious restoration in after-times, which are plainly marked out to be the times of the gospel, when the Gentiles themselves were to become a part of the church. (Verses 12–21.) The children of Israel, confessing and bewailing their sins, have the same comfortable assurances as before repeated to them. (Verse 22—chapter iv. 2.)

In the second part, which begins chapter iv. 3, and is prefaced with an address to the people of Judah and Jerusalem, exhorting them to prevent the divine judgments by a timely repentance, the Babylonian invasion is clearly and fully foretold, with all the miseries which it would be attended with ; and the universal and incorrigible depravity of the people is represented at large, and pointed out as the justly provoking cause of the national ruin.

Verse 7. Saw it—והראה. Nineteen mss. and three editions read with the Masoretes והרא, omitting the ה ; which, however, may be the pronoun affix, “it.”

Verse 9. And it came to pass—Four mss., two of them ancient, and one edition, read ויהי. By מקל זנותה I take to be meant, that she was not through the wantonness of her prostitution, that she polluted the land, and committed adultery with stone and with wood.

 10 And also after all this, her faithless sister Judah returned not to me with her whole heart, but feignedly, said JEHOVAH.
 11 Therefore said JEHOVAH unto me, Revolted Israel hath justified
 12 fied herself more than faithless Judah. Go and proclaim these words towards the north, and say,

RETURN, O revolted Israel, saith JEHOVAH,

I will not look down upon you with a lowering brow ;

For I am merciful, saith JEHOVAH,

I will not keep displeasure in view for ever.

13 Only acknowledge thine iniquity,

That thou hast rebelled against JEHOVAH thy God ;

And hast been liberal of thy ways to strangers,

Under every green tree ;

And ye have not hearkened unto my voice, saith JEHOVAH.

14 Return, O revolted children, saith JEHOVAH,

For I have been a husband among you :

nice in the choice of the objects, but was ready to prostitute herself to all that came in her way ; that is, she eagerly fell in with all kinds of idolatrous worship indiscriminately, descending so low as to images of wood and stone.

Verse 11. Hath justified herself—צדקה נפשה ; “Hath appeared righteous in comparison with Judah.” A phrase of the like sort occurs, Luke xviii. 14 ; where the humble penitent publican is said to have gone down to his house justified rather than the proud presumptuous pharisee.

Verse 12. Towards the north—Assyria and Media, where the ten tribes of Israel were disposed of by their conqueror, who carried them into captivity, lay to the north of Judea.

I will not look down upon you with a lowering brow—לֹא יֵאָפֵיל פְּנֵי בְנֵי—Literally, “I will not let my countenance fall upon you.” So when Cain was wroth, it is said, that “his countenance fell,” וַיִּפֹּל פָּנָיו. (Genesis iv. 5.) On the contrary, “the lifting up of the countenance upon” any person denotes favour and good-will towards him. See Num. vi. 26.

I will not keep displeasure in view for ever—לֹא אֶטּוֹר לְעֵינַי. See verse 5.

Verse 14. For I have been a husband among you—The covenant between God and his people is often represented as a marriage contract ; see note on chapter ii. 2. When therefore God says here, that he had been, or had acted the part of, a husband among them, he means to remind them, that he had fulfilled the covenant on his part, by protecting and blessing them, as he had promised when he engaged to be their God. And, therefore, as they had never any reason to complain of him, he urges them to return to their duty, and promises, in that case, to be still kinder to them than

- And I will take you one out of a city, and two out of a tribe,
 And I will bring you to Sion.
 15 And I will give you rulers after mine own heart,
 And they shall rule you with knowledge and discretion.
 16 And it shall be, when ye shall have multiplied and increased in the land,
 In those days, saith JEHOVAH,
 They shall no more say, The ark of the covenant of
 JEHOVAH,
 Nor shall it be the delight of their heart,
 Nor shall they remember it, nor shall they care about it, before. See the words, יִאֲנֵכִי בְעֵלְתִּי בֹם, chapter xxxi. 32, and the note there.

And I will take you one out of a city, &c.—This, undoubtedly, relates to their call into the Christian church, into which they were brought, not all at a time, nor in a national capacity, but severally as individuals, here and there one. So it is said, “And ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye sons of Israel.” (Isaiah xxvii. 12.)

Verse 15. “דַּעַת וְהִשְׁבִּיל—Non scientiâ, sed scienter pascent. Confer cap. x. 21; Isaiah lvi. 11.”—SECKER.

Verse 16. They shall no more say, The ark of the covenant—Here God comforts the Jews with an assurance, that, though upon their return to him they might not find themselves in possession of exactly the same privileges as they had before, they should be no losers, but should receive ample indemnification, so as to leave them no just cause of regret. The ark of the covenant was the visible seat of God’s residence among his people; it was, therefore, the object of their boast; but after the destruction of the first temple they had it no more. But, to compensate this loss, they are told in the next verse, that “Jerusalem should be called the throne of JEHOVAH;” to which not the Jews only, but “all nations, should resort.” By Jerusalem is probably meant the Christian church. See Gal. iv. 26; Rev. xxi. 2, 3. The greater privileges of this latter would, of course, supersede all boast on account of those which had belonged to the Jewish church at any time.

Nor shall it be the delight of their heart—Literally, “Nor shall it ascend upon, or near, the heart;” וְלֹא יַעֲלֶה עַל־לֵב. That the import of the phrase is such as I have represented, may be seen by comparing several passages of Scripture, where it occurs. See afterwards chapter vii. 31; xliv. 21. What value the Israelites set upon the ark, how much they were attached to it, appears from their concern when it fell into the hands of the Philistines; (1 Sam. iv. 11–22; vii. 2;) the joy on its being brought into the city of David; (2 Sam. vi. ;) and the public festivals and gladness on its being placed in the temple by Solomon. (1 Kings viii.)

Nor shall they remember it—They shall forget the less, in contemplation of the greater, benefit. So Isaiah lxi. 17. God says, that when he creates Nor shall it be made any more.

17 At that time shall Jerusalem be called the throne of
JEHOVAH ;

And all nations shall resort to it in the name of JEHOVAH ;

And they shall not walk any more after the lusting of their evil heart.

a new heaven and a new earth, the former should not be remembered, nor held in any esteem, namely, because of the greater glory of the latter.

Nor shall they care for it—פָּקַד signifies to look after a thing which has been long lost or neglected, with a wish or design to recover or restore it. In this sense God is said to have “visited” his people, Exodus iii. 16 ; Luke i. 68. He once again began to concern himself about them. And so it is said of the people, Isaiah xxvi. 16 : “O JEHOVAH, in trouble we have visited thee ;” that is, We, who before neglected thee, in our affliction have turned our thoughts and attention towards thee.

Nor shall it be made any more—Commentators have mightily perplexed themselves about these words ; but, surely, in the most literal rendering they have a plain and obvious meaning. The ark, once lost, was never to be made again : And for a good reason, which immediately follows ; because, instead of the ark, Jerusalem itself was to become the seat of God’s residence.

“God directs the Jews, Isaiah xliii. 18, 19, not to remember the former things, when he was going to do a greater new thing. And lxv. 17 says, he creates a new heaven and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. The same words as here. And, Jeremiah, xxiii. 7, says, ‘They shall say no more, The Lord liveth,’ &c. So that this is a smaller blessing effaced by a greater. It doth not appear what the last words, וְלֹא יֵעָשֶׂה עוֹד, mean ; יֵעָשֶׂה signifies, ‘it shall be offered,’ (Num. xxviii. 15, 24,) but with a noun preceding. And it is no where put thus absolutely, without any thing determinate to refer to. R. Isaac understands it, that the Gentiles should not dare to come near the temple where JEHOVAH was, but only to Jerusalem ; p. 227, &c. The Chaldee translates the two last clauses, ‘They shall not be moved, nor make war בִּיה (I suppose, ‘for it,’ that is, the ark) any more.’ לַעֲשׂוֹת הַשְׁבֵּת is to ‘celebrate the sabbath.’ (Exodus xxxi. 16.) I doubt whether יִפְקֹדוּ can signify merely ‘going to see ;’ perhaps recensebunt, ‘reckon it up’ among the things belonging to the house of God. But, however this be, forgetting the ark of the covenant seems to refer to the making of the new covenant, chapter xxxi. 31, different from that at coming out of Egypt. Some may think that this was to comfort the Jews for not having the ark after the captivity. It may seem, from verse 12, to relate to Israel in opposition to Judah. But, verse 18, it is said, ‘They shall return together.’ It is commonly understood of a yet future return.”—SECKER.

Verse 17. And all nations shall resort to it in the name of JEHOVAH—After these words we find in the Hebrew, לִירוּשָׁלַם, “to Jerusalem ;” but no such word is found in the LXX., Syriac, or Arabic versions. And it is certainly a redundancy, the same being already expressed in אֱלֹהֵיהֶם ; so that it seems to have been an interpolation from the margin, where it had most probably been placed by some annotator to point out the antecedent of אֱלֹהִים.

“לֹא-לְשִׁמְךָ—Compare Ezekiel xxxvi. 22: ‘I do not this for your sakes, but לְשִׁמְךָ-קִדְשִׁי.’ Compare also Matt. xviii. 20: συνηγμενοι εις το εμον ονομα.” —SECKER.

Verse 18. Shall the house of Judah go unto the house of Israel—The re-union of Israel and Judah, and their joint participation of the blessings of the Messiah’s kingdom, is elsewhere foretold; see chapter xxiii. 6; xxx. 3-9; Isaiah xi. 12, 13; Ezek. xxxvii. 21, 22; Hosea i. 11; Rom. xi. 26. And that in the latter days they shall actually return from their several dispersions, to dwell as a nation in their own land, is declared in such express terms by most of the ancient prophets, that there cannot be a doubt, I think, of its being literally accomplished in due time.

Verse 19. The glory of hosts of nations—The land of promise is styled, צִבִּי לְכָל-אֲרָצוֹת, “a glory among all lands,” Ezek. xx. 6. And the phrase here used seems to be of the like import, צִבִּי צְבָאוֹת הוֹיָה, “the glory of hosts, or multitudes, of nations,” that which they esteem glorious. The Paronomasia is a figure the Hebrew writers much delight in. But by “the land of desire,” and “the glory of hosts of nations,” the Christian church, and the privileges of the go-pel-covenant, seem here to be figuratively designed. And the conditions of adoption into the former, and of enjoying the latter, are expressly stated by Christ and his apostles to be the same as are here prescribed, namely, the profession of a true faith in God, and uniform obedience for the time to come. “Thou shalt call me, My father; and thou shalt not turn aside from following me.”

“Or, the heritage of the glory of the hosts of nations, that is, the Lord of hosts. LXX. See LOWTH.”—SECKER. צִבִּי צְבָאוֹת may perhaps be a repetition of the same substantive in the genitive plural, in which case it forms a superlative, according to the Hebrew idiom. See BUXTORF. Thes. lib. ii. cap. 3. The heritage of the glory of glories of nations, is the inheritance of that which is held most glorious by nations.

Verse 20. Surely as a wicked woman breaketh her faith—מַרְעָה seems to be the feminine of מַרְע, “an evil doer,” or “wicked person,” and is thus to be joined with אִשָּׁה. All the ancient versions express כִּי, the particle of comparison, before בְּנִדָּה; but the ellipsis is also very frequent.

21 A voice hath been heard upon the plains,
Weeping and supplications of the children of Israel ;
Because they have perverted their way,
They have forgotten JEHOVAH their God.

22 Return, O revolted children,
I will heal your apostasies.—
Behold we come unto thee,
For thou art JEHOVAH our God.

23 Surely hills are lies, the tumult of mountains ;
Surely in JEHOVAH our God is the salvation of Israel.

24 But that thing of shame hath devoured the substance of our fathers from our youth ;

Verse 21. A voice hath been heard upon the plains—Why שפיים or שפיים is interpreted “plains” rather than “high places,” may be seen at large in the note on chapter iv. 11. The people are here represented as assembled together on a great plain, confessing and bewailing their idolatries, and the evils thereby occasioned. All the ancient versions seem to have read בכי ותחנוני.

Verse 22. I will heal your apostasies—For ארפא twenty-nine mss., (nine of them accounted ancient,) and three editions, read ארפא, besides five mss., in which the ה is upon a rasure. The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate read the same; and it is further justified by Hosea xiv. 5. “I will heal your apostasies” means, I will take away the guilt of them.

Behold we come unto thee—What follows to the end of the chapter is spoken in the name of the Israelites, accepting the divine invitation, acknowledging the vanity of their misplaced trust, and professing the deepest contrition and shame for their misbehaviour.

Verse 23. Surely hills are lies, the tumult of mountains—Instead of לְשָׁקֶר, both the Syriac and Vulgate seem to have read גִּבְעוֹת. This will render the passage clear and consistent with the context. The people acknowledge that the hills, the places sacred to idolatrous worship, and the tumultuous rites with which that worship was accompanied, (see 1 Kings xviii. 26, 28,) were mere impostures, deceiving and disappointing those that trusted in them; whereas JEHOVAH was indeed the author of salvation to his people.

“מגבעות—οι βουνοι, LXX. Vulg., Syr. Unde expeditur sententia—‘The hills, the multitude of mountains are a lie.’”—SECKER.

Verse 34. That thing of shame—הבשת, meaning the idol whom they worshipped, called by the same name, chapter xi. 13; Hosea ix. 10; and with good reason, because, in return for all the expense and pains bestowed upon it, it only frustrated the hopes of its votaries, and, as it follows in the next verse, left them mortified with disappointment, and overwhelmed with disgrace, for having deserted the service of a Being that could have saved them, in pursuit of so vile and worthless an object.

The substance—עֲבָדָה properly signifies “labour” and “toil;” but is here put by metonymy for “the substance” acquired by toil.

- Their sheep, and their oxen,
 Their sons, and their daughters.
 25 We shall lie down in our shame,
 And our ignominy will overwhelm us ;
 Because we have sinned against JEHOVAH our God,
 We and our fathers from our youth even until this day,
 And have not obeyed the voice of JEHOVAH our God.

CHAPTER IV.

- 1 IF thou wilt turn again, O Israel,
 Saith JEHOVAH, unto me shalt thou return ;
 And if thou wilt put away thine abominations,
 From before me shalt thou not be removed :
 2 But thou shalt swear, As JEHOVAH liveth,
 In truth, in judgment, and in righteousness ;
 And the nations shall bless themselves in him,
 And in him shall they glory.
 3 SURELY thus saith Jehovah
 To the men of Judah and to Jerusalem ;

CHAPTER IV. THE two first verses of this chapter ought not to have been separated from the foregoing ; being spoken in reply to the confession of the people of Israel, and concluding that part of the prophecy which respected them.

Verse 1. Unto me shalt thou return—The meaning is, that upon their conversion they should be accepted, and received again into the bosom of God's church, from which they had before apostatized.

From before me shalt thou not be removed—Ten MSS., (four of them ancient,) together with the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, read אֵל for אֱלֹהִים. And the parallelism of the lines seems to require it so.

Verse 2. But thou shalt swear, As JEHOVAH liveth—This is as much as to say, Thou shalt be of the number of those that worship the true God. For an oath is one of the most solemn acts of religious invocation ; and, therefore, God's people are expressly charged to swear by his name, and by no other. (Deut. vi. 13 ; x. 20 ; Josh. xxiii. 7.) And to "swear by JEHOVAH" is used as synonymous with the profession of his true religion, Isaiah xix. 18. The words which follow regard the propriety of the performance of this religious act ; that the matter be strictly true, and the occasion great and important ; either a case of judgment, or judicial decision, where, as the apostle says, "an oath for confirmation is an end of all strife ;" Heb. vi. 16 ; or of righteousness, where some of the great and valuable purposes of truth and moral goodness are to be served ; as we see it frequently applied by St. Paul in his gospel ministry. (Rom. i. 9 ; ix. 1 ; 2 Cor. xi. 31 ; xii. 19 ; Gal. i. 20, &c., &c.)

Break up your ground in tillage,
And sow not among thorns.

- 4 Be ye circumcised unto JEHOVAH,
And take away the foreskins of your hearts,
O ye men of Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem ;
Lest my wrath go forth like fire,
And it be kindled that none can quench it,
Because of the evil of your doings.

- 5 Declare ye in Judah,
And in Jerusalem publish ye, and say ;
Sound ye the trumpet in the land,
Proclaim throughout, and say,
Gather together, and let us enter into the fortified cities.

- 6 Set up a standard in Sion,
Retire in a body, make no stand ;
For I am about to bring evil from the north,
Even a great destruction.

- 7 A lion is gone up from his thicket,
And a destroyer of nations is on his way ;
He is gone forth from his place to make thy land a desolation ;

Verse 3. Break up your ground in tillage—נִירָו לְכֶם נִיר. The same words occur, Hosea x. 12. נִיר primarily signifies “a light,” or “lamp;” hence it is applied to denote ploughing, or tillage, the ground being turned up to the light, and cleared from the weeds and thorns that overshadowed it. The metaphor, then, may be easily understood: “Clear away all corrupt habits and practices, which, if suffered to grow, will choke and destroy every good seed or virtuous principle which may be sown in your hearts.” See Matt. xiii. 7.

Verse 4. Be ye circumcised—Circumcision, as well as baptism, had a moral import, and denoted the obligation of putting away all sinful lusts of the flesh, every irregular and inordinate affection and appetite. Compare Deut. x. 16 ; xxx. 6 ; Rom. ii. 29 ; Col. ii. 11.

Verse 5. Sound ye—Twenty-eight mss., (six of them ancient,) and four editions, with the LXX., Syriac, and Chaldee versions, confirm the Masoretic reading, תִּקְעוּ, without the conjunction ו.

Proclaim throughout—מֵלֵא signifies “to do a thing fully or completely;” so that מֵלֵא קָרָא taken together may signify, “Proclaim fully,” or “everywhere, throughout the land.”

“מֵלֵא—Fortè, Confirmate. Confer 1 Reg. i. 14. Fortè, cum sequatur ו, legendum מֵלֵא. Confer cap. xii. 6.”—SECKER.

Verse 6. A standard—The LXX. render נֶס “flight;” but it certainly means a standard set up for the purpose of drawing people together.

“Retire—‘Hasten.’ Compare chap. vi. 1 ; Exodus ix. 19 ; Isaiah x. 31.”—SECKER.

Thy cities shall be ruined, so as to be without inhabitant.

- 8 For this cause gird on sackcloth, lament, and wail,
Because the fierce anger of JEHOVAH is not turned away from him.

- 9 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith JEHOVAH,
The heart of the king shall fail, and the heart of the princes ;
And the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder.

- 10 Then said I, Alas ! O Lord JEHOVAH !
Surely thou hast altogether deceived this people and Jerusalem,

Verse 7. Shall be ruined—The word in the original is רָצִינָה; but its authenticity is much to be questioned, as נָצַח, from whence it should be derived, does not seem capable of a sense suitable to this place. One ms. reads רָצִינָה; in another the ' is upon a rasure; and two mss. read רָצִינָה. I should think the true reading may have been רָצִינָה, from רָצַח, which verb is used, verse 26, and frequently elsewhere, by this prophet, in the sense here required. The LXX. render by a word exactly of the same import, καθαιρεθησονται. Or it may have been רָצִינָה, which is the word used by the Syriac and Chaldee. By the "lion" is undoubtedly meant Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. See chap. i. 17.

Verse 8. Is not turned away from him—Here כִּמְנוּ is ambiguous, as it may signify either "from him," or "from us." I think it rather means that God's anger was not gone from him, but still continued to burn fiercely within him. So שָׁב is used, as I apprehend, Isaiah v. 25; anger being represented as an accidental quality in God, coming and going according as the provocation is present or removed. The LXX. and Syriac render, "from you;" the Chaldee and Vulgate, "from us."

"Verse 10. Surely thou hast greatly deceived, &c.—אֶבֶן is never used interrogatively; הֲשֵׂא הֲשֵׂא must therefore mean, 'Thou hast permitted to be deceived.' But then לֹאמַר must not mean, as it most naturally should, by God's saying, but, by the false prophets saying; who yet are not mentioned here. The Chaldee expresses them; the Syriac puts it, 'I have deceived this people, and have said.' But this changes the reading; and Jeremiah could not have said it; nor could he well have believed, nor doth he say here that he believed, others who had said it. He must surely know the contrary from Isaiah. He complains of the false prophets, (chap. v. 12, &c.), and charges one with being such; (chap. xxviii. 15;) yet pleads what they had prophesied, (chap. xiv. 13,) as if he had some belief of it. There God sets him right, but not here."—SECKER. The difficulties above stated may, I think, admit of the following solution. If we examine the force of אֶבֶן, we shall find that it does not positively affirm, but, as it were, draws an inference from appearances. Thus, when Jacob awaked from his heavenly vision, he infers, אֶבֶן, "Surely the Lord is in this place." (Gen. xxviii. 16.) Again, Moses, on the Israelite's reproaching him with

Saying, Ye shall have peace ;
Although the sword penetrateth to the very quick.

11 At that time shall it be said concerning this people, and concerning Jerusalem ;
A wind that scorseth the plains in the wilderness having killed the Egyptian, infers that the matter was become public : “ Surely this thing is known.” (Exodus ii. 14.) And so Agag, when brought to Samuel, says, “ Surely the bitterness of death is past.” (1 Sam. xv. 32.) In like manner Jeremiah does not charge God absolutely, but states, from appearances, that God’s promise was not likely to be fulfilled ; hoping, no doubt, that God would set him right. This is accordingly done in the answer ; in which God does not deny the promise, whensoever made, but plainly intimates what he elsewhere expressly declares, (chap. xviii. 9, 10,) that all such promises on his part are only conditionally to be performed : For he still insists that, instead of peace, he should visit his people with very sore calamities ; but that it was their own wickedness that would occasion their sufferings, since he was ready to deal otherwise by them, if their behaviour would admit of it. Compare, especially, verses 14, 18.

Verse 11. As the wind that scorseth—Of the malignancy of the south wind blowing over the deserts of Arabia, travellers have given dreadful accounts ; the effect of this wind is not only to render the air extremely hot and scorching, but to fill it with poisonous and suffocating vapours. It sometimes becomes a whirlwind, raising up large quantities of sand, so as to darken the air, and, not seldom, to bury, underneath, the unfortunate traveller. The most violent storms that Judea was subject to came from that quarter. See Bishop Lowth’s note on Isaiah xxi. 1, and Mr. Harmer’s citation from MAILLET’S Memoirs, chap. i. obs. 16.

The plains in the wilderness—I know not why our translators have constantly rendered שפִּיִּם, or שפִּיִּם, “ high places.” Taking all the texts together where the word occurs, we shall find this sense very little countenanced by the ancient versions ; and it is still less by etymology. The verbs שָׁפָה and שָׁפָה, both in Syriac and Chaldee, signify, “ to render smooth,” by shaving, filing, or rubbing, &c. In Hebrew, וּשְׁפִי, (Job xxxiii. 21,) being applied to the bones of an emaciated body, is rendered by the Vulgate, nudabuntur, “ shall be left bare.” And עַל הַר נִשְׁפָּה, (Isaiah xiii. 2,) which our English translators have rendered, “ upon the high mountain,” the LXX. have translated, ἐπὶ ὄρους πεδιῶν, “ upon a mountain with a plain surface,” clear from trees that might intercept the view of the signal placed on it. Hence, I conceive that שפִּיִּם, or שפִּיִּם, may more properly be understood to denote “ open plains,” in contradistinction to woodland. מִדְבָּר sometimes signifies no more than an extensive tract of waste, uncultivated common, appropriated to pasturage ; and as this may consist of both open down and woodland, שפִּיִּם בַּמִּדְבָּר may denote the former, and, I think, evidently does so, chap. xii. 12. But by מִדְבָּר is sometimes meant the great desert lying to the south of Judea ; and as that was the place chiefly annoyed by the hot scorching wind above mentioned, I am inclined to think that שפִּיִּם בַּמִּדְבָּר here mean the unsheltered plains of that desert.

Shall come toward the daughter of my people, not to winnow, nor to cleanse ;

12 A full wind for a curse shall come at my bidding ;
Now even I will proceed judicially with them.

13 Behold, like clouds shall he come up,

Shall come toward the daughter of my people—The verb יבוא, which follows in the next verse, is equally subservient to the nominative רוח צה here, as to רוח מלא there ; I have, therefore, expressed it in both places, because the nature of the English language will not admit of such an elongation of the verb, though the Hebrew may.

Verse 12. A full wind for a curse shall come—Our translators, with the Vulgate, have rendered מאלה, “from these” (high places, שפיס); but if the scorching wind be, as before observed, the south wind, blowing over the plains in the desert, then, coming from those plains, it would come from the south. But it is expressly said, (verse 6,) that the evil should come from the north ; consequently, though the calamity coming upon Jerusalem might be compared to such a malignant wind, it would not have been said to come from that quarter. Grotius, Michaëlis, and others render, with the Syriac, מאלה, “stronger than these,” namely, stronger than those winds which serve for the before-mentioned purposes of winnowing and cleansing. But I hardly think this construction justifiable ; I am more inclined to construe אלה, “a curse ;” but not rendering מאלה, as some have done, plenus maledictione, because I question whether מלא is ever followed by כ in this manner. But, as in the preceding verse, the end for which the wind should come is expressed negatively, “not to winnow nor cleanse ;” so here, מאלה seems to denote, positively, its mischievous purpose : It shall come “for a curse.” That the particle כ has this force, see Ezek. xlviii. 29.

“מאלה—Omittunt LXX.; et potuit oriri ex voce præcedente. Paraphrasticè Chald. Legendum putat Lud. Cap. מאלה, ‘maledictione.’ Sed non construitur (ni fallor) מלא cum כ, nisi ut notetur locus unde aliquid impletur ; ut Isai. ii. 6.”—SECKER.

At my bidding—לי, “by,” or “through me,” or, “according to my direction,” “disposition,” or “appointment.” So Isaiah, xxix. 2, ויהיה לי, כאריאל, “But it shall become, through me,” (or, according to my appointment,) “as Ariel.” See also chap. xv. 8 ; xxii. 6 ; xxxi. 38. And that the wind spoken of was of God’s appointment, coming, not to him, but from him, for a judicial purpose, is apparent from the words that follow.

“לי ‘to me,’ or, ‘for me,’ ‘at my command.’ Or לי may be pleonastical, as chap. v. 5.”—SECKER.

Now even I will proceed judicially with them—גם אני is emphatical, and seems to have an eye to the charge brought by Jeremiah, (verse 10.) of God’s having promised his people peace ; instead of which, God declares that even he himself, who was supposed to have made the promise, would, notwithstanding, proceed, in a judicial way, to punish them for their wickedness. See note on chap. i. 16.

Verse 13. Shall he come up—That is, the person designed by the lion, and

- And as a whirlwind his chariots ;
 Swifter than eagles are his horses,
 Woe unto us ! for we are laid waste.
- 14 Cleanse thy heart from wickedness,
 O Jerusalem, that thou mayest be saved.
 How long shall there harbour within thee
 The devices of thine iniquity !
- 15 For a voice declareth from Dan,
 And publisheth iniquity from mount Ephraim.
- 16 Proclaim ye unto the nations, Behold !
 Publish ye concerning Jerusalem,
 That watchers are coming from a far country,
 And they shall lift up their voice against the cities of Judah.
- 17 Like keepers of fields are they round about her,
 Because she hath rebelled against me, saith יְהוָה.

the destroyer of nations, (verse 7,) namely, the king of Babylon. Compare Isaiah v. 26-28.

Verse 14. The devices of thine iniquity—For מַחֲשָׁבוֹת, the ancient Bodleian ms. and four more read מַחֲשַׁבָּת, in the singular number, which, indeed, agrees better with חֲלִין. But all the ancient versions render both the nominative and the verb in the plural; and therefore I am more inclined to think that חֲלִין is used in the singular, according to an Hebrew idiom, which admits of a verb in the singular joined with a plural subject taken distributively. Buxtorf. Thes. Gram., lib. ii. cap. 10.

Verse 15. For a voice declareth from Dan, &c.—In respect to the sense of this verse, I think differently from the generality of interpreters, who conceive אֶן to mean the calamitous invasion of the Chaldean army, the news of which reached Jerusalem first from Dan, and afterwards from Mount Ephraim, in the order of their march thitherward; others have supposed an allusion to the idolatry set up by Jeroboam in Bethel, a city of Ephraim, and in Dan, which proved the ruin of the kingdom of Israel in the end. But I rather think that אֶן simply and properly denotes the iniquity or idolatry of Judah, as in the preceding verse, which is hereby intimated not to have been a secret or unknown transaction, but as public and notorious as if it had been proclaimed upon the frontiers. Dan and Ephraim were tribes bordering upon the kingdom of Judah, northwards; and as the crime was thus public, for this reason, as it should seem, it is directed, in the next verse, that the neighbouring nations should be made acquainted with its punishment also, for the sake of example.

Verse 16. Watchers—By “watchers” are meant besiegers, placing sentinels round the city, to prevent any from coming in or going out; and keeping the place in continual alarm, by shouts of war.

“הִנֵּה—Sic Versiones. Fortè tamen legendum הִנֵּה; nisi alibi הִנֵּה cum imperativo conjungatur.”—SECKER.

“Publish ye—Or, Publish it: watchers come against Jerusalem.”—SECKER.

Verse 17. Like keepers of fields—Mr. Harmer cites from Sir John

- 18 Thy way and thy doings have brought a curse upon thee ;
Such is thy calamity ; for it is bitterness ; for it is a plague even unto thy heart.
- 19 My bowels, my bowels are pained, the walls of my heart ;
My heart is troubled within me ; I cannot be silent ;
Because I have heard the sound of the trumpet,
My soul the alarm of war.

Chardin's ms. the following remark on this place :—" As in the east pulse, roots, &c., grow in open and unenclosed fields, when they begin to be fit to gather they place guards,—if near a great road, more ; if distant, fewer ;—who place themselves in a round about these grounds, as is practised in Arabia." (Chap. v. observ. 15.)

Verse 18. Such is thy calamity ; for it is bitterness, &c.—In the preceding line, אִלָּה is rendered "a curse;" and such the evil or calamity brought upon Jerusalem by her wickedness is here proved to be, as being attended with all those bitter and afflictive effects which the nature of a curse implies.

Verse 19. My bowels, my bowels are pained—For אוֹחֹלָה, the Masoretes read אוֹחִילָה, with the concurrence of eighteen mss. and five editions, besides the Babylonian and Jerusalem Talmud. This, however, can hardly be right, as it is the future Hiphil of יָחַל, "to wait" or "hope for;" a sense which by no means suits this place. But the mss. exhibit other various readings: Two mss. read אִחֹלָה; twenty-two mss. and seven editions, אִחֹלָה; two mss., אוֹחֹלָה; four, אִחִילָה. In one ms. הוּ is upon a rasure; and one reads אִחֹלָה. From these variations the probability of an error may be concluded; and I am inclined to think that it lies principally in the first letter, which, by a mistake frequently made between the characteristics, is put for ה. So אִנְגְּלָתִי, Isaiah lxiii. 3, is an evident mistake for הַגְּבִלָתִי; and הִאֲדָרֶשׁ, Ezek. xiv. 3, for הִהֲדָרֶשׁ. See also אִסָּף for הִסָּף, chap. viii. 13; and אִשְׁכִּיחַ for הִשְׁכִּיחַ, chap. xxv. 3. The true reading in this place I take to be הִחִילוּ, leaving the ה final to be prefixed as an article to קִירוֹת. Nor is this founded on mere conjecture only; for it seems evidently to have been the reading from which the Syriac and Chaldee versions were made, saving only that they seem to have read לִי after the verb. It is also plain, that the LXX., though they render the verb in the first person singular, found a Vau between that and the noun which follows, reading it καὶ τὰ αὐτῆς κίρτια. But אִחִיל וְהִקִּירוֹת, the initial א being changed, as before proposed, becomes, by a different combination of the letters, הִחִילוּ וְהִקִּירוֹת. By "the walls of the heart," is undoubtedly meant the pericardium, a membrane which sits loose about the heart, surrounding and guarding it like a wall. So that the passion of grief, we may observe, is here described as progressive in a climax. It first affects the bowels, next proceeds to the pericardium, approaching nearer to the heart. It then reaches the very heart itself, where becoming too big to be contained, it breaks forth in outward expression.

I have heard—The received reading of the text is שָׁמַעְתִּי, for which the Masoretes substitute שָׁמַעַת, with the concurrence of the ancient versions,

- 20 Destruction is come upon the heels of destruction ;
Surely the whole land is spoiled :
On a sudden have my tents been spoiled,
My curtains in an instant.
- 21 How long shall I see the standard ?
Shall I hear the sound of the trumpet ?
- 22 Surely my people is foolish,
Me have they not known ;
Infatuated children are they,
And they are without understanding :
They are well skilled to do evil,
But for doing good they have no knowledge.
- 23 I beheld the earth, and, lo ! disorder and confusion ;
The heavens also, and there was no light.
- 24 I beheld the mountains, and, lo ! they trembled ;
And all the hills shook.
- 25 I beheld, and, lo ! there was not a man ;
And all the fowls of the heavens were fled.
- 26 I beheld, and, lo ! the fruitful field was become the desert ;

sixteen mss. and three editions, besides the Jerusalem Talmud. But the former, nevertheless, seems, in my opinion, to be more genuine, as the parallelism of the lines is thereby rendered more complete ; the words, “ I have heard,” in the one, exactly corresponding with, “ my soul hath heard,” in the other.

“ Verse 22. לֹא־יֵדְעוּ—Οι γινόμενοι, LXX. ; legerunt יָדְעוּ ut Ezech. xvii. 13.”—SECKER.

Verses 23–26. I beheld the earth—The images, under which the prophet represents the approaching desolation as foreseen by him, are such as are familiar to the Hebrew poets on the like occasions. (See Lowth De Sacra Poesi Heb. Præl. ix., and his note on Isaiah xiii. 10.) But the assemblage is finely made, so as to delineate all together a most striking and interesting picture of a ruined country, and to justify what has been before observed of the author's happy talent for pathetic description. The earth is brought back, as it were, to its primitive state of chaos and confusion ; the cheerful light of the heavens is withdrawn, and succeeded by a dismal gloom ; the mountains tremble, and the hills shake, under dreadful apprehensions of the Almighty's displeasure ; a frightful solitude reigns all around ; not a vestige to be seen of any of the human race ; even the birds themselves have deserted the fields, unable to find any longer in them their usual food. The face of the country in the once most fertile parts of it, now overgrown with briars and thorns, assumes the dreary wildness of the desert. The cities and villages are either thrown down and demolished by the hand of the enemy, or crumble into ruins of their own accord, for want of being inhabited.

And all its cities were thrown down,
Before the presence of JEHOVAH,
Before the fierce heat of his anger.

- 27 For thus saith JEHOVAH,
The whole land shall become a desolation,
And I will not make an end.
- 28 For this cause shall the earth mourn,
And the heavens shall be covered with blackness ;
Because I have spoken, and I do not repent ;
I have purposed, and will not recede from it.
- 29 At the shout of the horseman, and of the archer,
Every city fleeth ;
They are gone into thick woods,
And they have climbed up upon the rocks :
Every city is forsaken,
And there is not a man dwelling in them.
- 30 And against spoiling what wilt thou do ?
Though thou clothest thyself in scarlet,
Though thou adornest thyself with ornaments of gold,
Though thou distendest thy eyes with paint,
In vain shalt thou set forth thy beauty ;
Thy paramours have rejected thee,
They seek thy life.

“גתצו—Εμπειπισμεναι, LXX. In fine addunt ηφανισθησαν, et sequens כ omittunt ; pro quo fortè legerunt כלו. Confer Job iv. 9.”—SECKER.

Verse 27. And I will not make an end—That is, I will not desist from giving such marks of my indignation. See chap. v. 10, 18.

Verse 28. Because I have spoken, and I do not repent—I have followed the order of the words, as represented by the LXX. ; which is undoubtedly their natural order.

Verse 30. And against spoiling—Twenty-two MSS. (seven of them ancient) and three editions read ואת, according to the Masoretic emendation, for ואתי. שדור cannot be the participle, as it is represented in the ancient versions ; because, if a participle, it should be feminine שדורה. I take it to be the infinitive verb used as a noun, and governed by the preposition את. “What wilt thou do, or how wilt thou guard thyself against spoiling ?” The same kind of expression occurs, chap. v. 31 ; only the ל is used instead of את.

Distendest thy eyes with paint—This alludes to the custom of the eastern ladies, who, esteeming large eyes beautiful, make use of stibium, a sort of black paint, which is laid upon the eyelids with a pencil, and, being of an astringent quality, partly contracts the eyelids, and partly by the contrast of colour tends to enlarge the appearance of the white part of the eyes. See Bishop LOWTH'S note on Isaiah iii. 16. The verb, קרע, properly signifies to

- 31 Surely I have heard the cry as of a woman in travail,
 Distress as of one that bringeth forth a first child,
 The cry of the daughter of Sion;
 She sobbeth, she spreadeth out her hands,
Saying, Wo now unto me !
 For my soul fainteth because of murderers.

CHAPTER V.

- 1 RUN ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem,
 And see now and know, and seek in her broad places,
 If ye can find a single man,
 If there be one that doeth justice,
 That seeketh truth ; that I may pardon her.
- 2 But though they say, As JEHOVAH liveth,
 Surely they will swear falsely.
- 3 O JEHOVAH, are not thine eyes towards the truth ?
 Thou hast smitten them, but they have not grieved ;

“rend” or “tear,” and may denote the use of this process to excess, so as it were to tear open the eyes by way of enlarging them.

Dr. Durell has remarked, that the Ethiopians to this day paint their eyebrows with antimony mixed with moist soot. See LUDOLPHI Hist. Æthiop. lib. vii. cap. 7.

Verse 31. She spreadeth out her hands—Spreading out the hands is the gesture of one displaying the helplessness of her condition, and imploring the aid of others. See Lam. i. 17.

*Ingemit, et duplices tendens ad sidera palmas,
 Talia voce refert—*

VIRGIL. Æn. i. 97.

CHAP. V. Verse 1. Her broad places—רחובותיה mean, no doubt, the market places, and other spacious areas in the city, where citizens used to meet for doing business with each other.

Verse 2. Surely—Ten MSS., (four of them ancient,) and the first printed edition of the whole Bible in Hebrew, read לכן instead of לבן; the same is also found in the notes of the celebrated edition known by the name of “Minchath-shai.” See DR. KENNICOTT’S Dissert. Gen. § 62. In three other MSS. the ל is upon a rasure. לבן is frequently used by this prophet; and is, I doubt not, the true reading here. לבן, however, is sometimes used for “nevertheless;” a sense not unsuitable to this place. See chap. xvi. 14.

Verse 3. Are not thine eyes towards the truth?—The eyes, turned upon or towards an object, denote not only a diligent inspection and nice discernment of it, but also an earnest expectation or looking after it. The phrase may here be taken in both senses, that God both seeth and discerneth the truth, and also expects it from others, especially from those who call upon his name in attestation of it.

Thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction ;

They have made their faces harder than a rock,
They have refused to return.

4 Then said I,
Surely these are the meaner sort, who have acted foolishly,
Because they have not known the way of JEHOVAH,
The judgment of their God.

5 I will get me unto the great ones,
And I will speak unto them ;
For these have known the way of JEHOVAH,
The judgment of their God.
But these have in like manner broken the yoke,
They have burst the bands.

6 Therefore a lion from the forest shall slay them,
A wolf of the plains shall spoil them,

But they have refused—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate read ומאנו with the conjunction ו in both places of this verse, where we find only מאנו in the Hebrew. In the first instance the ו seems requisite, in order to support the antithesis ; and there is a trace of it in one ms., which, by an evident mistake in the omission of the מ, reads ומאנו, instead of ומאנו. But in the second instance the Asyndeton seems more according to the prophet's style. Perhaps the omission of the ו in the latter place may have caught the transcriber's eye whilst hē was writing the former.

Verse 4. The meaner sort—So רלים properly signifies, and these are properly opposed to הגדלים in the next verse. The misconduct was not chargeable upon the lower orders of men only, who might have erred through ignorance ; the great ones, who had better opportunities of knowing what was right, and what was wrong, were alike sharers in the offence.

Have acted foolishly—נואלו. Perhaps we ought rather to read by transposition נואלו ; for “acting foolishly” or “unadvisedly” seems to be the sense here required ; but נואלו from נאל imports to be “fixed” or “resolved upon” a thing simply, without discrimination of good or bad choice. The ancient Bodleian ms., N<sup>o</sup>. 1, and nine more, with three old editions, read נואלו. Thirteen mss. and three editions do the like, Isaiah xix. 13. Twelve mss., besides one in the margin, and the oldest printed edition, read נואלנו for נואלנו ; Numb. xii. 11. ונאלו is found in the text, chap. l. 36 ; where sixteen mss. and two editions have substituted ונואלו. It is possible, that, as some of the most ancient copies read the word without the ו in the middle, the mistake may have been owing to ignorant transcribers, who, thinking to express the word at large, have unskillfully inserted the ו in the wrong place.

Verse 6. A wolf of the plains—In the margin of our Bibles, ערבות is rendered “deserts ;” and those wide and extensive plains, or uninclosed commons, seem to be meant, which were used only for sheep-walks and

- A leopard shall watch over their cities ;
 Every one that goeth out of them shall be torn in pieces ;
 Because their rebellions are multiplied,
 Their apostasies are increased.
- 7 How can I pardon thee for this ?
 Thy children have forsaken me,
 And sworn by them that are no gods :
 When I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery,
 And assembled themselves in the harlot's house.
- 8 They were libidinous as stallion horses,
 Every one neighed after his neighbour's wife.
- 9 For these things shall I not visit ? saith JEHOVAH ;
 And shall not my soul avenge itself of such a nation as this ?
- 10 Go ye up upon her walls, and destroy,
 And make ye not an end ;
 Take away her branches,
 For they belong not to JEHOVAH.
- 11 For they have dealt very unfaithfully with me, pasturage, and are of course most likely to be infested with wolves. See note on chap. ii. 6. The wild beasts here spoken of are the king of Babylon and his troops. See chapter iv. 7.

Verse 7. Can I pardon—Twenty-eight mss. and four editions read, in conformity with the Masora, אסלח for אסלח.

The harlot's house—That is, the idol's temple; as adultery means idolatry.

Verse 8. They were libidinous as stallion horses—The general sense of the words is here given; the subject admits not of a more particular explanation: מוֹיָנִים may be rendered armati, armis instructi; being the participle in Hophal, from יָוִן or יִוֵן, which in Chaldee and Syriac signify, armat. This will sufficiently express what is meant by equi admissarii, in which all the ancient versions agree. מַשְׁכִּים is the participle present of מָשַךְ protrahere, extrahere. מַשְׁכִּים הֵיוּ, protrahentes erant.

Verse 10. Her branches—הַנְּשִׁיחוֹת is thus rendered, Isaiah xviii. 5. And by "her branches" may be understood the lesser cities of Judah, which are as it were branches of the capital; and which were of course destined to share in her fate. See verse 17; chapter iv. 16. Or else the individuals of the city may be so called; as a city is sometimes considered in the light of a parent, with respect to the citizens, who are called her children or offspring. Compare chapter xi. 16. Hence also we may see what is intended by the direction given in the preceding line, "And make ye not an end;" that is, Cease not to destroy, till ye have cut off both root and branches. See chapter iv. 27. The address is here made to the enemies that were to be brought against Jerusalem and Judah, verse 15.

The house of Israel, and the house of Judah, saith
JEHOVAH.

- 12 They have denied JEHOVAH,
And have said, It is not HE;
Neither shall calamity come upon us,
And the sword and famine shall we not see:
13 But the prophets shall be as wind;
And they have no authority to say,
Thus shall it be done unto them.

Verse 12. And have said, It is not He—לֹא-הוּא—"Not He;" that is, Either he hath not spoken, or, He will not do as the prophets have threatened in his name. Or, they argued like the wicked, who denied God's moral government of the world, Psalm xciv. 7:

For they said, Jehovah will not see,
Neither will the God of Jacob regard.

"לֹא-הוּא"—Οὐκ ἐστι (fortè, ἐσται) ταῦτα, LXX. Vel legerunt יהיה, 'erit,' quæ vox extat Eccles. xi. 3. Vel intellexerunt יהיא idem esse quod Chald. יהי. Rectè, ni fallor."—SECKER. It seems to me, that הוּא is used to denote a person or being answering to a certain particular character or description, ο αὐτος. Sometimes the character is expressed in words that immediately follow, as, 2 Sam. vii. 28: אַתָּה הוּא הָאֱלֹהִים, "Thou art HE, the God." And, Neh. ix. 7: "Thou art HE, O JEHOVAH, the God, who didst choose," &c. So also, I think, we should render Isaiah lii. 6, thus:—

Therefore my people shall know my name,
Therefore in that day they shall know that I am HE that said, Behold me!

That is, that I am He that manifested myself unto them, namely, in time past. Compare Isaiah lxxv. 1.

But in other cases the character is to be collected from the general tenor of the context; as, chap. xiv. 12; Deut. xxxii. 39; Isaiah xli. 4; xliii. 10, 13; xlvi. 4; xlviii. 12, &c. Accordingly, here we might render according to the general form, "And have said, He is not HE;" but rather, to avoid the seeming identity of the proposition, "He is no such Being;" for it does not appear that they meant to deny the absolute existence of God, but his existing under the particular character of one that would punish them severely for their wickedness.

Verse 13. As wind—"That passeth away, and cometh not again." Psalm lxxviii. 39. Such seems to be the meaning of those who represented the prophets to be "like wind;" they insinuated thereby, that after the sound of their words was once gone over, they should never hear any thing more of them.

And they have no authority to say—Literally, "And the word is not in them;" meaning the word of prophecy, denouncing such and such calamities against the people.

- 14 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH God of hosts ;
Because ye have spoken this word,
Behold I will make my words in thy mouth as fire,
And this people as wood, that it may devour them.
- 15 Behold I will bring against you a nation from far,
O house of Israel, saith JEHOVAH ;
It is a strong nation,
It is a nation of great antiquity ;
A nation whose language thou shalt not know,
Neither shalt thou understand what they speak.
- 16 Their quiver is as an open sepulchre ;
All of them are mighty men.
- 17 And they shall consume thy harvest, and thy bread,
They shall consume thy sons, and thy daughters,
They shall consume thy sheep, and thy oxen,
They shall consume thy vine, and thy fig-tree,
They shall impoverish thy fortified cities,
In which thou trustedst, with the sword.
- 18 And also in those days, saith JEHOVAH,
I will not make a finishing with you.
- 19 And it shall be, when ye shall say,
Wherefore hath JEHOVAH our God done all these things unto us ?
Then shalt thou say unto them,
Like as ye have forsaken me,
And have served strange gods in your land ;
So shall ye serve strangers
In a land that is not yours.

Verse 14. As wood—The ancient Bodleian MS., N<sup>o</sup>. 1, and three more, read לַעֲצֵי, with the ל prefixed. The Vulgate and Chaldee seem to have done so too.

Verse 15. A nation from far—This was threatened, in case of disobedience, by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 49. Compare Isaiah v. 26. The antiquity of the Babylonish nation was very great, having been founded by Nimrod. (Genesis x. 10.)

Verse 17. They shall consume thy sons, and thy daughters—All the ancient versions so interpret in this place ; and with them our old English translation. It agrees with the prediction of Moses, Deut. xxviii. 32, 41 ; and with that of Ezekiel, xxiv. 21. But we must read יֹאכֵל instead of יֹאכְלוּ, in conformity with the rest of the verse.

Verse 18. I will not make a finishing with you—He means, that he had not yet done with them, but had still more evils in reserve for them. See verse 10 ; chapter iv. 27.

Verse 19. Strange gods—Literally, “ gods of the stranger.” So, chapter

- 20 Declare ye this in the house of Jacob,
And publish it in Judah, saying ;
- 21 Hear ye now this,
O foolish people, and without understanding ;
Who have eyes, yet they will not see ;
Who have ears, yet they will not hear.
- 22 Will ye not fear me ? saith JEHOVAH ;
Will ye not tremble at my presence ?
Who have appointed the sand a bound to the sea,
A perpetual ordinance, and it shall not go beyond it ;
Though it toss itself about, yet shall it not prevail ;
Though the waves thereof roar, yet shall they not go beyond it.
- 23 But this people hath a revolting and rebellious heart ;
They have revolted, and are gone.
- 24 Neither have they said in their heart,
Let us now fear JEHOVAH our God,
Who giveth rain, both the former and the latter, in its season ;
A sufficiency of the appointed things of harvest he secureth to us.
- 25 Your iniquities have turned aside these things ;
And your sins have withholden that which is good from you.
- 26 For among my people are found wicked men, viii. 19, הבלי נכר, "strange vanities," or idols. And בני נכר, "strange children," or, "sons of the stranger," Psalm xviii. 44; Ezek. xlv. 7.

Verse 22. It shall not go beyond it—Here all the ancient versions consider יעברנהו as singular; the same word occurs the last in the verse, and there all the ancient versions, except the LXX., render as if they read at large יעברונהו; and it is so represented in two mss. The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate likewise appear to have read ויתבעש and יוכל, instead of ויתבעשו and יוכלו; and the syntax seems to require the verbs in the singular, the subject being ים, "the sea." The final ו in both these words was probably a mistake of the transcriber, occasioned by finding the same letter at the beginning of the words next in succession.

Verse 24. Both the former—I have followed the received reading, ויורה; although the Masoretes read יורה without the conjunction, and so do all the ancient versions, twelve mss., and three editions.

A sufficiency of the appointed things of harvest—שבעת, read with the sin instead of the schin, signifies "fulness" or "sufficiency;" and so both the LXX. and Vulgate render it. הקות signifies, not only "set times," but whatever is regularly assigned or appointed by divine providence; and, in this place, the ordinary and regulated productions of harvest.

Who lie on the watch like the cowering of fowlers ;
They have set a trap, that they may catch men.

- 27 As a trap cage is full of birds,
So are their houses full of fraud :
Therefore are they grown great and rich,
28 They are waxen fat, and shine.
Though they have gone beyond the claims of the wicked ;
They have not maintained the cause,
The cause of the orphan, so as to make it prosper ;
And the right of the poor have they not vindicated.

Verse 26. Who lie on the watch like the cowering of fowlers—The LXX. and Syriac totally omit the words ישור כשך, and render יקושים “snares,” instead of “fowlers.” But the translation of the Vulgate, insidiantes quasi aucupes, at once points out an emendation of the text, and facilitates the explanation of it. For ישור it is probable the original reading was ישורי, which coming from שור, “to look out for prey,” answers to the word insidiantes of the Vulgate. שך is derived from שכך, “to sink down,” or cower, as fowlers do when they lay their snares. So that כשך יקושים may literally be rendered, “according to the cowering of fowlers,” the close posture in which they lie in order to conceal themselves.

Verse 27. As a trap cage is full of birds—כלב comes from כלב, “a dog ;” and this name was undoubtedly given to the trap-cage, because it served the same purpose as a dog in assisting to catch game. That sort of trap-cage also seems to be alluded to, in which tame birds are put to hop and fly about as a decoy to others.

Verse 28. They are waxen fat, and shine—These words are passed over in the LXX. and Syriac. But Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, the Chaldee, and Vulgate acknowledge them, as do all the collated mss. The Chaldee and Vulgate add the conjunction ו before עשתי.

Though they have gone beyond the claims of the wicked—דברירע seem to signify “the claims of the wicked man,” or, in the phrase of our law, his “declaration” or “count ;” in which the plaintiff states the nature of his case, the quantity of damage sustained by him, and the extent of that redress which he sues for. These words, however, are omitted by the LXX., who connect דין immediately with עברו, and render καὶ παρεβησαν κτησιν. The Syriac hath also done the same. But in this omission they miss of the very scope of the passage ; the design of which is to oppose עברו דברירע to דין יתום, “the suit of the orphan,” and to אביונים, “the right of the poor ;” and to observe the undue partiality shown in the distribution of justice by those who were concerned in it ; they even went beyond the terms of the wicked man’s declaration, procuring him more than he demanded ; but in supporting the just suit of the orphan, and asserting the legal rights of the poor, they were not equally zealous and successful. The particle גם is used in this sense, Neh. vi. 1, and in other places.

So as to make it prosper—This is the true sense of the verb ויצליחו, which is in the conjugation Hiphil.

- 29 For these things shall I not visit? saith JEHOVAH;
Shall not my soul avenge itself of such a nation as this?
- 30 An astonishing and horrible thing hath been wrought in the land.
- 31 The prophets have prophesied falsely;
And the priests have concurred with them;
And my people have liked it should be so;
And what will ye do in regard to the consequences thereof?

CHAPTER VI.

- 1 RETIRE in a body, O ye sons of Benjamin, out of the midst of Jerusalem,

Verse 31. And the priests have concurred with them—Literally, “have descended upon their hands;” that is, either, They have joined hands with them, or, have fallen with the weight of their authority upon the measures introduced by the others. All the ancient versions have concurred in the general interpretation of these words. The Masoretes have, indeed, pointed ירדו as if it were the future of ירה, “to bear rule;” but the context evidently requires the preter tense, ירדו, descenderunt, from ירד.

My people have liked it should be so—See Isaiah xxx. 10.

And what will ye do in regard to the consequences thereof?—“How will ye guard against or prevent them?” The form of expression is similar to that used before, chap. iv. 30: “And against spoiling what wilt, or canst, thou do?” namely, to ward it off, or secure thyself from it.

“על־ידיהם—על־יד, Prov. xiii. 11, seems to signify, ‘by the hand,’ by the means of labour; which agrees well with the English translation here. Schultens, on Job i. 14, interprets על־ידיהם ‘after their usual manner;’ and confirms that sense by this place, and Ezra iii. 10; 2 Chron. xxix. 27; where על־ידי seems to mean, ‘after the manner of.’ Mudge in HEATH on Job, interprets על־יד, ‘by the direction;’ and consequently על־ידיהם, ‘according to their own direction or pleasure.’”—SECKER. Rather, “The priests have gone down according to their direction;” that is, the direction of the prophets; or followed their lead. Compare the note on chap. xxxiii. 13.

“אֶהְבֵּוּ כֵן—Eadem phrasis occurrit, Ainos iv. 5. Confer et hinc cap. xiv. 10.”—SECKER.

CHAP. VI. Verse 1. Retire in a body, O ye sons of Benjamin—Jerusalem was in the lot of the tribe of Benjamin; (Josh. xviii. 28;) on which account the inhabitants are addressed by the name of the children of Benjamin; and are directed to leave the city, which God was about to destroy, and to take refuge in the mountains. Tekoa, according to Jerome, was a little town about twelve miles from Jerusalem; and Beth-haccerem (probably so called from the vineyards round about it) another little town on the same side, but nearer Jerusalem; and both of them in the mountainous

And in Tekoa sound ye the trumpet,
Also upon Beth-haccerem light up a fire-beacon ;
For evil is seen coming onwards from the north,
Even a great destruction.

- 2 The habitation, even the delightful one, have I doomed to destruction,
The daughter of Sion.

parts of Judah, south of the capital. See D'ANVILLE'S Map of ancient Palestine.

"Gather yourselves to flee—"Hasten." See chap. iv. 6."—SECKER.

Verse 2. The habitation, even the delightful one—Jerusalem is in like manner called simply "the habitation," נוה, Isaiah xxvii. 10. And it seems entitled to the name by way of eminence, as the chief residence both of Israel, and of the God of Israel. Accordingly, speaking of the very desolation here intended, the psalmist says, "They have devoured Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling place," נוהו. (Psalm lxxix. 7.) It is also called God's habitation, Exodus xv. 13; 2 Sam. xv. 25, &c. And with respect to the epithet annexed, "the delightful one," Jerusalem is frequently spoken of in terms that show it to have been, in a very eminent degree, the object of delight both with God and with man. It was the city which God chose, (1 Kings viii. 44,) the object of his desire, (Psalm cxxxii. 13, 14,) and of his especial love. (Psalm lxxxvii. 2.) And how fond the Jews themselves were of it, appears from the expressions of rapture with which they spoke of it, Psalm xlviii. 2; l. 2; cxxii. 6; and from the grief with which they bemoaned its fall, Psalm cxxxvii; Lam. i. and ii.

"נאות sunt pascua. Si נוה idem notat, repetendo præcedentem ל, potest legi להנוה המענגה, 'pascuo amæno.' Vide verse 3."—SECKER. נוה undoubtedly signifies "a sheep-cote or fold;" chap. xxiii. 3; Isaiah lxxv. 10; Ezek. xxxiv. 14; and from the Syriac it seems probable, that for הנוה we should read להנוה. If then we can suppose the two first letters of המענגה to be a mistaken repetition of the two preceding ones, and read להנוה מענגה, the sense will be such as from the context might be expected—

Unto a pleasant sheepfold have I likened the daughter of Sion.

Have I doomed to destruction—דמית. This word cannot bear the sense in this place which our translators have given it, because wherever it signifies "to liken," it requires a preposition to precede the noun which denotes the object of comparison. Nor does it appear from the context in what particular the daughter of Sion was likened to a comely and delicate woman; supposing the terms would admit of that construction. I have, therefore, adopted the other sense of דמית, "I have destroyed," which goes directly to the point; the persons by whom, and the manner in which, this destruction was to be accomplished, being immediately subjoined in the words that follow. It properly means, "I have doomed, or decreed, her destruction;" for with God to decree and to do is one and the same thing; the past and future being contemplated alike in the divine mind, and both equally certain as to the accomplishment.

- 3 The shepherds with their flocks shall come to her,
And they shall pitch their tents against her round about,
And shall feed each in his quarter.
- 4 Declare ye war against her ;
Arise, and let us go up at noonday :
Alas for us ! for the day is upon the decline,
For the shadows of the evening are lengthened :
- 5 Arise, and let us go up in the night,
And let us destroy her palaces.
- 6 For thus hath JEHOVAH of hosts said,
Cut down her timber,
And raise a mount against Jerusalem :
She is a city ripe for visitation ;
Every kind of oppression is in the midst of her.
- 7 As a fountain causeth its waters to issue forth,
So hath she caused her wickedness to go abroad :
Rapine and spoil are heard in the midst of her ;
Sickness and smiting are continually before my face.

Verse 3. And they shall pitch—The LXX. and Syriac seem to have read ותקעו, the Chaldee יחקעו, and one of them at least was in all probability the true reading ; as was also ורעו, the reading of the LXX., Syriac, and Chaldee, and of two mss., for רעו. The shepherds and their flocks were, no doubt, the Babylonian chiefs with their troops besieging Jerusalem.

“רעו איש את-ידו—‘They shall eat up each his part.’”—SECKER.

Verse 4. Arise, and let us go up at noonday—The alacrity and eagerness with which the Chaldeans undertake and execute the commission with which they were charged, is described in this and the following verse in a beautiful vein of poetry. Though it was late in the day before they received their orders, they are for beginning their march immediately ; and though it was night before they got to the place, they are unwilling to put off the assault till morning.

Verse 6. Her timber—That is, to be employed in the siege. See Deut. xx. 19 ; where the same word עצה is used as here. Two mss. read עציה ; but the singular number is equally expressive.

Ripe for visitation—הפקד is the infinitive in Niphal, and היא העיר the הפקד may literally be rendered, “She is the city to be visited ;” that is, a proper object of punishment ; the reason of which follows in the next words.

Every kind of oppression is in the midst of her—For כלה עשק read כל העשק.

Verse 7. As a fountain—The Masoretes read ביר for ביר, and so do eleven mss. and four editions. But Houbigant conjectures it should rather be באר, which in the pronunciation resembles ביר. But both in Chaldee and Arabic ביר signifies “a fountain.”

Sickness and smiting—חלי ומוכה. These two words are an Hendiadys, and signify, “sickness occasioned by blows.”

- 8 Be thou reformed, O Jerusalem,
 Lest my soul be alienated from thee ;
 Lest I make thee a desolation,
 A land not inhabited.
 Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts ;
 They shall thoroughly glean as a vine the reliques of Israel ;
- 9 Turn again thine hand, like a grapegatherer, unto the baskets.
- 10 To whom shall I speak,
 And give warning, so that they shall hear ?
 Behold their ear is uncircumcised,
 So that they cannot hearken ;
 Behold the word of JEHOVAH hath been among them a thing of nought,
 They take no delight in it.
- 11 Therefore the wrath of JEHOVAH, with which I am filled,
 I am weary of refraining to pour forth
 Upon the children in the street,
 And upon the cabal of young men together :
 Yea also the husband with the wife shall be taken,
 The aged with him that is full of days.
- 12 And their houses shall devolve to others,
 The lands and women likewise ;

Verse 9. Turn again thine hand unto the baskets—That is, Take them again into thine hand, and begin the work of gathering, or gleaning, anew. The address is from God to the Chaldeans, exhorting them, like a grapegatherer, to return again after the first time, and pick up those few inhabitants that were left before, like the grape-gleanings, and to carry them also into captivity. The Chaldeans did so, as may be seen, chapter lii. 28–30.

Verse 11. Therefore the wrath of JEHOVAH, with which I am filled—אֵת הַמַּחַד appears to me to be the accusative case in the order of syntax following the verb שָׁפַךְ, with an ellipsis of the relative אֲשֶׁר before מִלְאָתִי.

The children in the street—That it was the custom for children to be playing in the streets, see Zech. viii. 5, and compare chapter ix. 21. It is also natural for young men to associate in private parties, and there to concert their plans of operation together. סוּר signifies properly such a private consultation or cabal.

The aged with him that is full of days—From hence it appears that זָקֵן means only a man that has passed a certain time of life, which may be considered as his zenith, so as from thenceforth to be upon the decline. In contradistinction to whom is placed one who is arrived at what is esteemed the full period of human life ; in respect to which the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, David, and Job, are said to have died “full of years” or “days.” See the same distinction made, Isaiah lxx. 20.

- Because I will stretch forth my hand
 Against the inhabitants of the land, saith JEHOVAH.
 13 For from the least of them even unto the greatest of them,
 Every one is wholly addicted to his lust;
 And from the prophet even unto the priest,
 Every one practiseth falsehood.
 14 And they have healed the wound of the daughter of my people superficially,
 Saying, Peace, peace; when there was no peace.
 15 Were they ashamed because they had committed abomination?
 Nay, they were not at all ashamed;
 Nay, they knew not how to blush:
 Therefore shall they fall one after another,
 In the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith
 JEHOVAH.

Verse 13. Is wholly addicted to his lust—בָּצַע I take to signify “evil concupiscence” or “lust” in general, in the same extensive sense as πλεονεξία is used by the writers of the New Testament for any irregular or inordinate desire, which impels to sinful action. See chapter xxii. 17; li. 13; Psalm cxix. 36; Isaiah lvi. 11; lvii. 17, &c., &c.

Verse 14. Of the daughter of my people—The LXX. read only, “of my people,” συντριμμα του λαου μου; and בַּת is totally omitted in fifteen mss. and nine editions; in four mss. it is erased; and in one ms. it is upon a rasure. But it is expressed in all the other ancient versions, as it appears also in the parallel passage, chapter viii. 11.

Verse 15. Were they ashamed—הוֹבִישׁוּ. Seventeen mss. and one edition here read הוֹבִישׁוּ. In the parallel passage, chapter viii. 12, the reading of the text in Van der Hooght’s edition is הוֹבִישׁוּ; but twenty-four mss. and three editions read there הוֹבִישׁוּ; sixteen mss. and two editions הוֹבִישׁוּ; one ms. הוֹבִישׁוּ. The true reading I take to be הוֹבִישׁוּ, instead of which some transcriber, mistaking the interrogative particle ה for the characteristic of the conjugation Hiphil, inserted ו and י conformably to such mistake.

“הוֹבִישׁוּ. Nulla interrogationis nota apud LXX., Syr., Chald., Vulg. Deest aliquando ה. Vide NOLD. Alioqui הוֹבִישׁוּ legi poterat. Sed legitur ut hūc, cap. viii. 12.”—SECKER.

To blush—For הוֹבִישׁוּ we should read here, as in the parallel passage, הוֹבִישׁוּ. This is also the reading of eight mss., one of which is the ancient Bodleian, N°. 1. הוֹבִישׁוּ is in Hiphil, and signifies to “cause” or “put to shame;” which is not the sense here required.

Shall they fall one after another—Literally, “They shall fall upon, or after, the fallen.”

Of their visitation—In the parallel passage, chapter viii. 12, the reading of the text is פְּקֻדָּתָם; it is so here in six mss. and according to the LXX. and Vulgate versions.

16 Thus hath JEHOVAH said ;
 Stand ye by the side of the ways, and look,
 And ask concerning the paths of old time,
 Which is the best way, and walk ye in it ;
 So shall ye find a restoration of your souls.
 But they said, We will not walk in it.

Verse 16. A restoration—I cannot find what connexion the verb הָרְגִיעַ, from whence comes the noun מְרִיגֵעַ, has with “rest,” that is, the cessation of motion and activity. The root רָגַע seems to imply quite the contrary. The Arabic verb رَجَعَ signifies, rediit, reversus est ; correspondently with which הָרְגִיעַ in Hiphil would signify, to “cause to return, bring back, restore.” And it seems to me, that, wherever this verb and its conjugates occur in the Hebrew text, the idea of “restoring” or “causing to return” will be found more suitable than that of “rest.” Accordingly I have rendered לַנְּפִשָּׁכֶם מְרִיגֵעַ, “a restoration of your souls,” or “lives ;” which were indeed forfeited and lost in consequence of their former sins, but which God promises should be restored and preserved to them on condition of their amendment.

The same word in effect may likewise be rendered in the same manner, Isaiah xxviii. 12 : וְזֹאת הַמְּרִיגָה, “And this the restoration ;” that is, the means of restoring you to God’s favour, which ye had lost all claim to. Again, Isaiah xxxiv. 14, the idea of “rest” would be very ill applied to הָרְגִיעָה. For would it not be a very unmeaning tautology to say, that “there the screech owl should rest, and find herself a resting place ?” Whereas it might with great propriety be said,

There shall the screech owl cause to return,
 And shall find unto herself, a place of rest.

For here “shall cause to return,” and “shall find” forms a kind of Hendiadys, and imports, “shall recover,” or “shall find again” what had been once quitted or lost ; an idiom very similar to that by which “to return and to do” means to do a thing over again. Almost the same phrase occurs, Deut. xxviii. 65 : לֹא תִרְגַּע וְלֹא יִהְיֶה מְנוּחָ לְכַף־רַגְלְךָ, literally, “Thou shalt not cause to return, nor shall there be, a resting place unto the sole of thy foot ;” that is, Thou shalt never regain such a resting place. Again, Isaiah li. 4, after saying,

For a law from me shall proceed, how fitly does it follow in the next hemistich,

And my judgment will I restore (אֶרְגִּיעַ) for a light unto the Gentiles.

By “my judgment” is clearly meant that rule of moral conduct which God originally impressed upon the hearts and consciences of all men ; but which, having been darkened and almost obliterated by human depravity, God was pleased to “restore” to them again by a new promulgation in the gospel. And I wish it may be considered whether the following translation of Prov. xii. 19, does not recommend itself :—

- 17 And I will set over you watchmen ;
Hearken ye to the sound of the trumpet.
But they said, We will not hearken.
- 18 Wherefore hear, O nations, and know, O congregation ;
That which is among them hear, O earth.
- 19 Behold, I am about to bring evil upon this people,
The fruit of their own imaginations ;
Because to my words they have not hearkened,
And as for my law, they have even rejected it.
- 20 To what purpose shall frankincense be brought unto me from Saba ?
Or the rich aromatic reed from a far country ?
Your burntofferings are not acceptable,
Nor are your sacrifices pleasant unto me.

The lip of truth shall be established for a witness,
But a lying tongue is a witness which I shall reject.

עֵד־אֱרִיכָה—"I shall cause him to return," whenever he offers himself as a witness. As it is undoubtedly the part of a wise and upright judge to turn back, and not to admit the evidence of, one who is notorious for falsehood. Other instances occur in this book, all serving to confirm the same general idea, as will be hereafter remarked in the notes on chapter xxxi. 2; xlvii. 6; xlix. 19; l. 34, 44.

Verse 17. And I will set over you watchmen—Our translators have supplied the word "saying" after "watchmen;" but it is not wanting. God declares his intention of sending watchmen, to give timely warning to his people; and, at the same time, exhorts them to pay due attention to the warning so given them by sound of trumpet, as the manner of watchmen was in making public proclamation of the enemy's approach. By "watchmen" are meant God's prophets. See Ezek. iii. 17; xxxiii. 2-9; Isaiah lviii. 1. These were accordingly sent, and did give warning; but the people were as good as their word,—they did not hearken. See chap. xxv. 3-7.

Verse 18. Wherefore hear, O nations, &c.—The connecting of שמעי הארץ with the words preceding is recommended by the parallelism thereby established; for, by "the congregation" is meant the congregation of Israel,—God's people; and these, joined with the heathen nations, are just equivalent to "the earth."

Verse 19. Their own imaginations—For מַחֲשַׁבֹּתָם, which is in the singular number, thirty-one mss., four editions, and the margin of Van der Hooght's Bible read מַחֲשַׁבוֹתָם, in the plural; and this is agreeable to the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate. The LXX. seem to have read מְשׁוֹבוֹתָם, ἀποστροφῆς αὐτῶν.

Verse 20. The rich aromatic reed—The calamus aromaticus is a reed of a very fragrant smell, which, when cut down, dried, and powdered, becomes an ingredient in the richest perfumes. It is spoken of, Isaiah xliii. 24, as being costly, and applied to sacred uses. THEOPHRASTUS, (Hist. Plant. lib. ix. cap. 7,) and PLINY, after him, (Hist. Nat. lib. xii. sect. 48,) say,

- 21 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH,
Behold I am about to lay stumbling blocks before this
people,
And the fathers and the sons shall stumble at them ;
Together shall the inhabitant and his companion perish.
- 22 Thus saith JEHOVAH ;
Behold, a people is coming from the north country,
And a great nation shall be roused from the extremities of the earth ;
- 23 The bow and the spear shall they take in hand ;
It is a cruel one, and they will shew no mercy ;
Their voice shall roar as the sea ;
And upon horses shall they ride,
In orderly array, as men for battle,
Against thee, O daughter of Sion.

that this reed, and that of the very best sort, too, grew in Syria, near Mount Libanus. But, had this been the case, I hardly suppose the Jews would have taken the trouble of fetching it from "a far country," when they could have procured it in their own neighbourhood. It is most probable that this reed, as well as the frankincense, came to them from Saba, where it grew, as we are informed by Strabo, (lib. xvi. page 778,) and by Diod. Sic. (lib. iii. p. 125, edit. Rhodomanni.) Pliny also, in the place above cited, speaks of it as a native of Arabia ; and DIONYSIUS, in his Περιγησις, enumerates it among the fragrant productions of that country :

Ἄλλο δὲ τοι καὶ θαῦμα μεγ' ἐξοχὸν ἐλλαχ' ἐκείνῃ·
Αἰ κηῳεσσα θυοῖς, ὑπο λάρον ὁδῶδεν
Ἡ θυοῦ, ἡ συμυρῆς, ἡ εὐοδμοῦ καλαμοῖο
Ἡ καὶ θεσπεσίῳ πεπαινομένου λιβανοῖο,
Ἡ κασίης·——

(Vers. 935, &c.)

Saba, we know, was situate towards the southern extremity of the peninsula of Arabia ; so that it was indeed, with respect to Judea, "a far country," as it is also said to be, Joel iii. 8. And our Saviour, speaking of its queen, whom he calls "the queen of the south," says that she came ἐκ τῶν περατῶν τῆς γῆς, "from the extreme parts of the earth." (Matt. xii. 42.)

Verse 21. Together shall the inhabitant and his companion perish—"The hemistichs seem to require that יחדו should be thus connected."—Dr. DURELL. Twenty MSS. and four editions read, with the Masora, יחדו ; but the ancient versions agree with the present reading, which seems preferable.

Verse 22. A great nation from the extremities of the earth—See chap. l. 41, 42 ; Isaiah v. 26–30.

Verse 23. In orderly array—עריי. This seems to be the participle Pahul, used adverbially, as in Latin, ordinatè from ordinatus ; or, at least, it must, I think, be considered so, chap. l. 42 ; although here it may be the participle

- 24 We have heard the report thereof;
Our hands are waxed feeble;
Trouble hath taken hold of us,
The pain as of a woman in travail.
- 25 Go ye not forth into the field,
Neither walk ye in the highway:
Because the sword is with the enemy,
Terror on every side.
- 26 O daughter of my people, gird on sackcloth,
And roll thyself in ashes;
Make thee wailing as for a darling child,
Most bitter lamentation:
For suddenly shall the spoiler come upon us.
- 27 I have appointed thee to make an assay among my people as to the gold thereof;

in agreement with גוי in the preceding verse, as well as אֶכְזָרִי הוּא, which are also in the singular number, whilst the intermediate verbs are all plural in regard to the plural sense of the subject.

Verse 25. Go ye not forth—The Masoretes here read תִּצְאוּ and תֵּלְכוּ, and all the ancient versions concur in the same; thirteen mss. and two editions countenance תִּצְאוּ, and seventeen mss. and two editions read תֵּלְכוּ.

“כִּי חֶרֶב לְאִיִּב מִגֹּר מִסָּבִיב”—Perhaps, ‘For the sword of the enemy is a terror on every side.’—SECKER.

Verse 26. Gird on sackcloth—As the wearing of sackcloth girt round the body next the flesh (see 2 Kings vi. 30) is often mentioned in Scripture, as usual in times of mourning and lamentation, and appears, according to our notions, a very harsh kind of discipline; it may not be amiss to take notice, once for all, what kind of sackcloth is meant. Mr. Harmer cites Sir John Chardin’s mss. to show that the sacks used by travellers in the east for carrying their necessities with them were made of coarse wool, guarded with leather; and then proceeds to infer, with great probability, that “if the sacks were woollen, the sackcloth with which the eastern people were wont to clothe themselves at particular times means coarse woollen cloth, such as they made sacks of, and neither hair-cloth, nor rough harsh cloth of hemp, as we may have been ready to imagine; for it is the same Hebrew word which signifies ‘sacks’ that is translated ‘sackcloth.’ And as the people of very remote antiquity commonly wore no linen, there was not that affectation in what they put on in times of humiliation as we in the west may perhaps have apprehended: They only put on very coarse mean woollen garments, instead of those that were finer, but of the same general nature.”—(HARMER’S Observ. chap. v. obs. 4.) Sitting or lying down in ashes was another custom observed on the like occasions. See Esther iv. 3; Job ii. 8; xlii. 6; Isaiah lviii. 5; Jonah iii. 6, &c.

Verse 27. I have appointed thee to make an assay, &c.—The images of

- Thou shalt know, when thou shalt have proved, their way.
- 28 They are all of them the dross of revolvers,
 Passing with a fraudulent currency ;
 Brass and iron all of them,
 Instruments of adulteration are they.
- 29 The bellows are burned by the fire,

“a tower” and “a fortress,” which our translators have here introduced, seem very foreign to this place. The LXX. and Vulgate have rendered בֹּהֵן, δοκιμαστής, probatorem, which signifies an “assayer,” or “trier,” from בִּהַן, “to try;” but as the word is בֹּהֵן, and not בִּוְהֵן, perhaps it may rather mean the “office,” or “business,” of assaying, being either the infinitive of the verb, which implies the action itself, and not the agent; or a noun immediately formed from thence. As for מְבַצֵּר, Dr. Durell has suggested, that it is a compound of the preposition ב, and בָּצָר, “gold;” and proposes to render, “I have appointed thee to try my people beyond (or more than) gold.” But כ has sometimes the force of de, “concerning,” or “in regard to;” and the ו which now precedes הָרַע, where it is not at all necessary, but rather unsuitable, as it would act with a conversive force, I think may be joined to מְבַצֵּר, reading מְבַצְרוֹ, and rendering thus, “I have appointed thee the office of an assay-master among my people, as to the gold thereof;” that is, to try what is in them of genuine worth and excellence, which, like pure gold, will stand the utmost test. How well this agrees with the following context is obvious enough.

Verse 28. The dross of revolvers—For כַּרִי, which can afford no good sense, twenty-one mss. and one edition read שָׂרִי; and the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate accordingly interpret “princes,” or “chief of revolvers.” But I think, from considering the context, and comparing a passage nearly parallel to this, (Ezek. xxii. 18–20,) it is almost certain that we should read סָגִי, “the dross,” or “alloy,” that is found in the fine metals. The wicked are frequently designed by this comparison. (Psalm cxix. 119; Prov. xxv. 4; Isaiah i. 22, 25.)

Passing with a fraudulent currency—הֹלְכֵי רֵכֶל. The verb רָכַל signifies “to go about buying and selling to advantage;” but רֵכֶל, which I take to be an adverb, joined with הֹלֵךְ, is constantly used in a bad sense. Our translators have rendered these words, “tale-bearers,” or persons “walking with slanders;” but I can see no reason, in any of the passages where they occur, to consider them as signifying any thing else than what we understand by the word “sharpers;” persons that go about practising imposition wherever they can make advantage of it. So that, having in view the metaphor of “dross,” or impure alloy, I think we may fairly render הֹלְכֵי רֵכֶל in this place, as expressed in the version.

Instruments of adulteration—Forty-five mss. (of which seven are ancient) and six editions read מְשַׁחֲתִים, “adulterating,” which seems right; for brass and iron are the baser metals used to adulterate the pure silver. The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate seem, however, to have read מְשַׁחֲתִים, the passive participle in Hophal, “corrupted,” or “adulterated;” and so do three mss.

Verse 29. By the fire—For מֵאֵשׁתָם, the Masoretes, with twenty-one

 The refiner hath melted in vain,
 For the bad are not separated.
- 30 Reprobated silver call ye them ;
 For JEHOVAH hath reprobated them.

mss., three old editions, and the LXX. and Vulgate versions, divide and read כִּי אֵשׁ הָיָה.

The lead is entirely spent—Before the use of quicksilver was known, the refiners used lead to separate the silver from the other substances mixed with it ; so we learn from PLINY, (Nat. Hist. lib. xxxiii. sect. 31.) “ Excoqui (argentum) non potest, nisi cum plumbo nigro, aut cum vendi plumbi.”

The refiner hath melted—For צוֹרֵף we should read, by transposition, צוֹרֵף ; so the ancient versions all agree ; and nine mss. read צוֹרֵף, where the Cholem is sunk ; and one, צוֹרֵף, where it is expressed at large.

The bad are not separated—By רָעִים “the bad,” are meant, according to the metaphor, the base ingredients ; that is, the bad principles and habits which prevail so much, and adhere so closely, that all the endeavours and pains used by the refiner to purge them away, and get clear of them, are frustrated and prove ineffectual ; so that, as it follows in the next verse, nothing remains but to throw them aside, as a metal disallowed and cried down by authority ; counterfeiting silver, but not capable of being brought to the sterling standard.

“ Malitiæ enim eorum non sunt consumptæ.” Vulg. ; legerunt נִחְזְקוּ. Rectè. Vide Ezech. xxii. 20–22.”—SECKER. But the sense of נִחְזְקוּ in Ezekiel is totally different from that here : There, the wicked were to be “melted away,” or “dissolved,” in the fire of God’s wrath ; but here the refiner, after exerting his utmost skill, cannot effect his design, which was to “separate,” or “pluck away,” the bad from the good.

CHAP. VII. A new prophecy begins with this chapter, and is continued on to the end of chapter x. The date is not precisely marked, but the probability is, that it was delivered not long after the preceding one, and, as it should seem, on the following occasion. Besides the prophets who were commissioned to announce the approaching calamities of Judah and Jerusalem, there were others who took upon themselves to flatter the people with opposite predictions. They taught them to look upon such threats as groundless, since God, they said, would have too much regard for his own honour, to suffer his temple to be profaned, and the seat of his holiness to be given up into the hand of strangers. Jeremiah is therefore commanded openly to reprove the falsehood of these assertions, and to show, by an example in point, that the sanctity of the place would afford no security to the guilty ; but that God would assuredly do by his house at Jerusalem what he had done unto Shiloh ; and cast the people of Judah out of his sight, as he had already cast off the people of Israel, for their wickedness. (Verses 1–16.) God justifies the severity of his proceedings by a representation of the people’s impiety. (Verses 17–20.) The prophet declares their sacrifices to be of no acceptance, whilst they continued deaf to the

CHAPTER VII.

- 1 THE word which came to Jeremiah from JEHOVAH, saying;
 2 Stand in the gate of the house of JEHOVAH, and there shalt thou proclaim this word, and shalt say,

HEAR ye the word of JEHOVAH, all Judah,
 Ye that enter in at these gates, to worship JEHOVAH.

- 3 Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel,
 Amend your ways and your doings,
 And I will dwell among you in this place.
 4 Trust ye not in those that speak falsehood, saying,
 The temple of JEHOVAH, the temple of JEHOVAH, the temple of JEHOVAH are these.
 5 For if ye will thoroughly amend your ways and your doings, calls of God's messengers. (Verses 21-28.) He specifies the gross idolatries with which they were defiled; and pronounces a heavy sentence of divine vengeance both on the dead and on the living. (Verse 29—viii. 3.)

Verses 1, 2. The word which came, &c.—These two verses are omitted in the LXX., except the words, "Hear ye the word of JEHOVAH, all Judah." But the whole is acknowledged by the other versions, and by all the collated mss., with a few slight variations.

Verse 3. And I will dwell among you—So the Vulgate renders וְאֶשְׁכֵּנָה אִתְּכֶם, and rightly, as I think, especially as the temple was in view, the place of God's residence. See Exod. xxv. 8; xxix. 45; 1 Kings vi. 13; Ezek. xliii. 7, 9; Zech. ii. 10, 11.

Verse 4. In those that speak falsehood—דַּבְּרֵי I conceive to be the participle in this place; of which similar instances occur, Psalm v. 6; xxviii. 3; lxiii. 11, &c. The Targum intimates, that the reason of the repetition of the words "The temple of JEHOVAH," three times, was because every Jew was obliged to visit the temple thrice a year. Perhaps we may rather represent to ourselves the speakers as standing before the temple, and pointing to the different parts of the building in front and on each wing, and saying severally of them, What you see here is the temple of JEHOVAH. Just as our Saviour's disciples, immediately after their Lord had been foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem, came to him, and with similar notions in their heads, (as from our Saviour's reply may be collected,) pointed out to him the magnificent buildings of the temple. (Matt. xxiv. 1, 2.)

"הֵמָּה"—These, namely, οἰκοδομαί, 'buildings,' used of the temple, Matt. xxiv. 1; Mark xiii. 1, 2. Perhaps three parts of the temple. The Syriac translates the last clause, 'Ye are the temple of God, if ye,' &c., verse 5. St. Paul οἱ ἅλλοις Christians 'the temple of God.' And R. Alsceh on Hag. ii. 5, in L'Empereur on Daniel, p. 188, makes God call the Jews so. But I see no authority in the Old Testament for it; else the third repetition here might be taken for God's words, 'The people are my temple; and if they keep themselves undefiled, they shall stand.'"—SECKER.

- If ye will altogether do justice between a man and his neighbour ;
- 6 The stranger, fatherless, and widow shall ye not oppress ;
Neither shed innocent blood in this place ;
And after strange gods ye shall not go to your own hurt :
- 7 Then will I dwell with you in this place,
In the land which I gave to your fathers,
From everlasting to everlasting.
- 8 Behold ye place your confidence
In those that speak falsehood to no profit.
- 9 What ? whilst ye steal, murder, and commit adultery,
And swear falsely, and burn incense to Baal,
And walk after strange gods,
Whom ye have not known ;
- 10 Will ye then come, and stand before me,
In this house which is called by my name,
And say, Deliver us, that we may practise all these abominations ?
- 11 A den of robbers is this house become,
Which is called by my name, in your eyes ?
Even I, behold, I have seen, saith JEHOVAH.
- 12 But go now to my place which was in Shiloh,
Where I caused my name to dwell in former time,
And see what I have done to it
Because of the wickedness of my people Israel.

Verse 10. Deliver us—So I think it best to render נצלתנו as the imperative singular in Pihel, with the affix of the first person plural. God reproves the impiety of those who were for making him an accomplice in their wicked deeds by desiring his patronage and protection for the authors of them ; and who were for considering his house as an asylum and refuge for the worst of criminals.

Verse 11. Even I, behold, I have seen, saith JEHOVAH—In these words God declares that the wicked actions of men do not pass unnoticed by him ; but that he sees them with the eye of a vigilant and just Governor, who will not permit such misconduct to pass off with impunity, whatever miscreants may think of him. (Psalm xciv. 7-9.)

Verse 12. But go now to my place which was in Shiloh—Shiloh was the place, where, upon the first coming of the Israelites into Canaan, the tabernacle, in which was the ark of God's presence, was set up, by divine appointment, no doubt ; and there it continued for a long period of time, until the days of Samuel. It was during this residence, that the Israelites received that signal defeat from the Philistines, when the ark of God was taken, as related, 1 Sam. iv. 10, 11 ; the pathetic description of which disaster made by the Psalmist, Psalm lxxviii. 60-64, has caused it to be

- 13 And now because ye have done all these works, saith
 JEHOVAH,
 And I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking, but ye hearkened not ;
 And I have called unto you, but ye answered not :
 14 Therefore will I do to the house, which is called by my name,
 In which ye place your confidence,
 And to the place which I gave to you and to your fathers,
 According to what I have done to Shiloh.
 15 And I will cast you out from my presence,
 As I have cast out all your brethren,
 The whole seed of Ephraim.
- 16 And as for thee, pray not for this people,
 Neither lift up in their behalf a cry or a supplication,
 Neither intercede with me ;
 For I will not hear thee.
- 17 Seest thou not what these are doing
 In the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem ?
 18 The sons gather wood,
 And the fathers kindle the fire,
 And the women knead dough,
 To make cakes for the regency of the heavens, generally believed, that an allusion to it was likewise designed upon this occasion. But a due consideration of the context will, I think, lead us rather to conclude in favour of a more recent event, the vestiges of which were still fresh to be seen. Shiloh was in the tribe of Ephraim ; and this place, once so favoured and sanctified by God's particular residence, had shared the fate of the rest of the kingdom of Israel, and was become a scene of misery and ruin. This they might literally "go and see" at present ; and this, says God, "have I done because of the wickedness of my people Israel." In which words, Israel, meaning the ten tribes, is acknowledged to have been God's people no less than Judah ; and Shiloh, it is observed, had once enjoyed the same privileges, which now belonged to the temple at Jerusalem. But as God spared not Shiloh, but made it the victim of his wrath ; so he says he would do to Jerusalem and her temple ; and would cast off Judah for their wickedness from being his people, in like manner as he had already cast off their brethren, whom he distinguishes by the name of the children of Ephraim.

Verse 15. All your brethren—The LXX. have omitted כל before אחיהם, and it is also omitted in one ms. of good note. But all the other ancient versions, and the rest of the collated mss., retain it.

Verse 18. For the regency of the heavens—Our translators here render למלכת השמים, "for the queen of heaven," after the Vulgate ; by which,

- And to pour out libations to strange gods,
 So as to vex me.
- 19 Do they vex me? saith JEHOVAH;
 Do they not vex themselves to the confusion of their own faces?
- 20 Therefore thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH;
 Behold, my anger and my fury shall be poured forth on this place,
 Upon man, and upon beast,
 And upon the trees of the field,
 And upon the fruit of the ground;
 And it shall burn, and not be quenched.
- 21 Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel;

no doubt, they meant the moon; but the other versions render, "the host of heaven," or something to that effect, including at least all the principal of the heavenly bodies—the sun, moon, and planets. And this sense may, I think, in some sort be applied to מלכה or מלכות, supposing it to stand by a common metonymy, the office for those that bear it. For it is a term nearly synonymous to ממשלה, which signifies "dominion, rule, or superiority" of some kind; and this latter word is used concerning the chief luminaries in the heavens, which God is said to have made לממשלה to "rule" or "preside" there by day and by night. (Gen. i. 16; Psalm cxxxvi. 8, 9.) So that למלכה may not improperly be rendered "the regency," or hierarchy of the heavens. But it must be noticed also, that nineteen mss., some of which are of the greatest antiquity, and perhaps two more, together with two editions, one of which is the first printed Bible, the other the celebrated Complutensian, read למלאכה; and as מלאך properly signifies "a delegated agent," מלאכה or מלאכה, may, by a like metonymy as before, denote the very same heavenly bodies, which, under the divine commission, perform certain stated functions in the heavens. And this sense would perfectly correspond with the term frequently used to denote the sun, moon, and stars, namely, "the host of heaven," because they move regularly in their respective spheres, as a marshalled army, punctually obeying the orders of their almighty Sovereign and Commander. See chapter xliv. 17-19.

"למלכה השמים"—'To the queen of heaven,' English version. Some think the sun so called; for הוה, one of his names, is feminine; and שמש sometimes, though oftener masculine. As ירח, the common name of the moon, is masculine, and לבנה, the other, feminine. And in the old northern languages, the sun is constantly feminine, and the moon masculine. Some take it for the moon, which Greek authors say the easterns called βαλτις and βααλτις. Others take מלכה for מלאכה, as Syriac, and understand it of the host of heaven, as the LXX. do here, putting σπαρατα, but βασιλισσα, Jer. xliv. In both places the Chaldee expresses the stars, which seems to agree best with chapter xix. 13. Perhaps, the frame of nature."—SECKER.

Add your burntofferings unto your sacrifices,
And eat ye flesh.

22 For I spake not with your fathers, nor commanded them,
In the day I brought them out of the land of Egypt,
For the sake of burnt offering and sacrifice :

23 But this was the matter I commanded them,
Saying, Hearken ye unto my voice ;
So will I be unto you a God,
And ye shall be unto me a people ;
And ye shall walk in all the way which I shall command
you,
That it may go well with you.

24 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear,
But pursued measures according to the imagination of their
evil heart,
And drew backward, and not forward.

Verse 21. Add your burntofferings, &c.—The import of these words is plainly this, that they were left at full liberty to take both their burntofferings and their sacrifices, that is, the beasts designed for those purposes, and to eat their flesh as common food ; for that God did not desire to have any thing to do with them.

Verse 22. I brought them out—The Masora here reads הוציא, which is extremely proper ; ninety-five mss. and five editions confirm this reading, besides four mss. which have a letter erased at the end of הוציא, and two which read הוציא.

For the sake of burnt offering—על־דבר and על־דברי, signify, “for the sake” of any thing, or out of regard to it ; as על of itself has the force of the Latin preposition, propter. And hence the true sense of this passage may fairly be deduced. For God certainly did speak unto the people when he brought them out of Egypt, and gave them many positive ordinances concerning burntofferings and sacrifices. But it is as certain, that God did not command these things purely on their own account, but as a means to some other more valuable end. Moral goodness and religious obedience were the scope he aimed at, the supreme object of his desire and delight. And in this light the words may be understood positively, (and not in a comparative sense, as is generally supposed,) not only here, but elsewhere ; as, “Thou desirest not sacrifice, else would I give it ; thou delightest not in burnt offering ;” (Psalm li. 16 ;) and again, “I desired mercy, and not sacrifice ;” (Hos. vi. 6 ;) and, “Hath JEHOVAH delight in burntofferings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of JEHOVAH ?” (1 Sam. xv. 22.) The latter is the immediate object of his satisfaction, and gives him real pleasure ; the former he esteems not, nor regards in the least, for their own sake, but so far only as they are instances of religious faith and obedience.

Verse 24. And drew backward—The metaphor is taken from refractory

- 25 From the day that your fathers came out of the land of Egypt,
Even unto this day,
I have also sent unto you all my servants the prophets,
Daily rising early and sending.
- 26 But they have not hearkened unto me,
Nor have they inclined their ear;
But they have hardened their neck,
They have acted more wickedly than their fathers.
- 27 And when thou shalt speak all these things unto them,
They will not hearken unto thee;
And when thou shalt call unto them,
They will make thee no answer.
- 28 Therefore shalt thou say unto them, This is the nation,
Which have not hearkened unto the voice of JEHOVAH their God;
Neither have they admitted correction;
Truth hath failed, and is cut off from their mouth.
- 29 Shave off thy Nazarite locks, and cast them away, oxen, which, when put to the yoke, pull back their necks, and will not draw as they are directed. See Hosea iv. 16.

Verse 25. Even unto this day—The LXX. and Syriac prefix the conjunction ו before ער; and six MSS. also read וער.

“Join the first part of this verse with verse 24, then render, ‘And I have sent unto you,’ &c.”—SECKER.

Verse 26. But they have not hearkened unto me—All the MSS. read לִי, and the ancient versions agree in it; for which reason I make no alteration. But I cannot help suggesting, that לִי, “these,” may not improbably have been the original and true reading; some such word being wanting to distinguish the generation of which the prophet was speaking from their fathers; in which case we might render,

But neither have these hearkened,
Nor inclined, &c.

Verse 29. Shave off thy Nazarite locks, and cast them away—נִזְרִי literally signifies no more than “thy separation,” or “thy Nazariteship;” but is here put for the hair of the head, which was the sign of that state of separation. For a Nazarite was one who, by a special vow, had separated himself, or set himself apart for a time, from all worldly connexions, to attend upon the service of God only. (Numb. vi. 2.) Under these circumstances he was to let the hair of his head grow; (verse 5;) and when the days of his vow were fulfilled, he was then to shave his head at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, (verse 18;) in a solemn and public manner, to notify that he was no longer in his former state of separation. But the shaving of

- And set up a lamentation upon the open plains ;
 Because JEHOVAH hath rejected his people,
 And hath turned adrift the generation of his wrath.
 30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith
 JEHOVAH ;
 They have set their abominations in the house,
 Which is called by my name, to pollute it.
 31 And they have erected the high places of Topheth,
 Which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom,
 To burn their sons and their daughters in the fire ;

the head was also, as we frequently find, a concomitant sign of great mourning and affliction. See Bishop Lowth's note on Isaiah xv. 2 ; and also chap. xvi. 6 ; xlviii. 37 ; Job i. 20. Both these customs are probably alluded to in the passage before us. But the question is, to whom these words are addressed. The verbs גוי, השליכי, and שאי, are all feminine ; but there is not a feminine subject expressed throughout the whole chapter, to which they can be applied ; nor any ground of authority, that I can find, for supplying, "O Jerusalem," as our translators with some others have done. Houbigant therefore conjectures, that for גוי and שאי we should read גו, or גו, and שא ; and השליכי, "cast it away," with the affix, instead of השליכי ; for which last word we actually find השליכי in three MSS. Admitting these emendations, which the text seems absolutely to require, the words may then be considered as a call to mourning addressed to the prophet himself, who was a Nazarite in virtue of his office, and most pathetically complied with the tenor of the command ; or, which I am rather inclined to think, they are a continuation of the divine message, which the prophet was in the preceding verse directed to deliver to the Jewish nation ; a nation notorious for their disobedience to the voice of God ; and, therefore, enjoined to regard themselves no longer as his peculiar people, but to lament grievously, as they had reason, the unhappy change they were about to experience in his entire rejection of them.

The open plains—שפיים. See note on chap. iv. 11. Perhaps the waste country may be here alluded to, through which the Jews had to pass in their journeying to the place of their captivity, after God had cast them off. Compare chapter iii. 21.

His people—One MS. expresses את עמי, and another עמי after יהוה. The 'parallelism of the hemistichs affords an argument in favour of this reading. See Bishop Lowth's Preliminary Dissertation, p. xxxvii. &c.

The generation of his wrath—This is easily understood to signify a race of men obnoxious to God's wrath ; in the same sense the apostle speaks of "the children of wrath." (Eph. ii. 3.)

Verse 30. Have set their abominations in the house—This has reference to what was done by Manassch. (2 Kings xxi. 4, 5, 7 ; xxiii. 4 ; and compare chapters xxiii. 11 ; xxxii. 34.)

Verse 31. The high places of Topheth—The valley of Hinnom, or of the son of Hinnom, was near Jerusalem, and was the scene of those horrid sacrifices which the Israelites, in imitation of their idolatrous neighbours,

- Which I commanded not,
 Nor was it acceptable unto me.
- 32 Therefore behold the days are coming, saith JEHOVAH,
 That it shall no more be called Topheth,
 Or the valley of the son of Hinnom ;
 But the valley of slaughter :
 And they shall bury in Topheth, till there be no room left.
- 33 And the carcases of this people shall be for meat
 To the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the earth ;
 And none shall scare them away.
- 34 And I will cause to cease from the cities of Judah,
 And from the streets of Jerusalem,
 The voice of joy, and the voice of mirth,
 The voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride ;
 For the land shall become a desolation.

CHAPTER VIII.

- 1 AT that time, saith JEHOVAH, shall they cast forth
 The bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of the princes thereof,

made of their children to Moloch. Topheth was the particular spot in the valley where the fires were made, into which the poor innocent victims were thrown ; and is supposed to have derived its name from the drums and tabrets, that were beaten in order to drown the children's cries. "The high places," בָּמוֹת, were, in all probability, artificial mounts or tumuli, thrown up about the place for the purpose of performing some of the rites with which these sacrifices were accompanied ; or from which the persons assembled might command a view of the dreadful spectacle.

Which I commanded not, nor was it acceptable unto me—God shows a particular solicitude to vindicate himself and his religion from having any thing to do, either by way of command or goodliking, with a worship so cruel, and so shocking to all our ideas of divine goodness and benevolence. "No such thing," he says, "was to be found among the ordinances which he had prescribed, nor was it what he could find in his heart to accept ;" literally, "it came not over his heart ;" or gained no admission there. See note on chapter iii. 16. Indeed this was speaking by a figure which implies more than is expressed ; for he had strictly prohibited any such practices in his code of laws, and expressed the utmost abhorrence and detestation of them. "Thou shalt not do so unto JEHOVAH thy God ; for every abomination to JEHOVAH, which he hateth, have they done unto their gods ; for even their sons and their daughters they have burned in the fire to their gods." (Deut. xii. 31.)

CHAP. VIII. Verses 1–3. These three first verses ought not to have been separated from those of the preceding chapter.

Verse 1. Shall they cast forth—יִצְאֹוּ. The Masoretes properly reject

And the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets,
And the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves ;

2 And they shall leave them exposed to the sun, and to the moon,

And to all the host of heaven, which they have loved,
And which they have served, and after which they have gone,

And which they have sought, and to which they have bowed
down :

They shall not be gathered, nor shall they be buried ;

They shall be as dung upon the face of the ground.

3 And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the remnant,
Those that are left of this evil family in all places,
Whither I have driven them, saith JEHOVAH of hosts.

4 THOU shalt also say unto them, Thus saith JEHOVAH ;

the initial י. Nineteen MSS., with the first printed Bible, and the margin of another old edition, read also יוציא. Twenty MSS. read יוציא, which appears to be a transposition of the two first letters. Two MSS. read יציא.

We learn from JOSEPHUS, (Ant. lib. vii. cap. ult.) that king Solomon laid up vast treasures in his father's sepulchre, which remained untouched till the pontificate of Hyrcanus, who on a public emergency opened one of the cells, and took out at once three thousand talents of silver. And afterwards Herod the Great opened another cell, out of which he also took considerable wealth. Whether the Chaldeans had any notion of this particular deposit, or whether they were tempted by a prevailing custom of burying valuable things together with the bodies of the deceased, doth not appear. But it is here foretold, that at the taking of Jerusalem the lawless soldiery should break open the monuments of the great, and scatter the bones abroad, without concerning themselves to cover them again. And that this was no uncommon practice at the sacking of cities, may be learned from HORACE, Epod. xvi. 13 :—

Quæque carent ventis et solibus ossa Quirini, (Nefas videre) dissipabit insoleus.

Verse 3. Those that are left—הנשארים. This word I consider as standing in apposition to the preceding word, השאירה, and exegetic of it; and not governed by it in the genitive case, as represented in our English version, “the residue of those that are left,” which is a mere tautology, “the remainder of those that remain.” הנשארים appears a second time in the text, after המקמות; but it is omitted in the Bodleian MS., N<sup>o</sup>. 1, and in the LXX. and Syriac versions. In the Vulgate it is likewise expressed but once; but the omission is there in the first instance.

Verse 4. In that part of the prophecy which follows next, the difference of

- Shall they that fall not rise again ?
 Or he that turneth away, shall he not return ?
- 5 Why then hath this people revolted,
 Jerusalem with a perpetual apostasy ?
 They have taken fast hold of deceit,
 They have refused to return.
- 6 I have hearkened with attention,
 They will not speak aright ;
 No one repenteth of his wickedness,
 Saying, What have I done ?
 Every one that turneth away runneth on full speed,
 As a horse rushing to the battle.

speakers requires to be attended to ; the transitions being quick and sudden, but full of life and energy. The prophet at first, in the name of God, reproves the people's incorrigibility ; he charges their wise ones with folly, and threatens them with grievous calamities. (Verses 4-13.) In the three next verses he seems to apostrophize his countrymen in his own person, and as one of the people that dwelt in the open towns, advising those that were in the like situation to retire with him into some of the fortified cities, and there wait the event with patience ; since there was nothing but terror abroad, and the noise of the enemy, who had already begun to ravage the country. (Verses 14-16.) God speaks, verse 17, and threatens to bring foes against them that should be irresistible. The prophet appears again in his own person, commiserating the daughter of his people, who is heard bewailing her forlorn case in a distant land ; whilst the voice of God, like that of conscience, breaks in upon her complaints, and shows her that all this ruin is brought upon her by her own infidelities. (Verses 18-20.) The prophet once more resumes his discourse ; he regrets that no remedy can be found to close up the wounds of his country, and pathetically weeps over the number of her slain. (Verse 21—ix. 1.)

Shall they that fall not rise again ?—The verbs in this verse, both plural and singular, are used indefinitely, having no determinate subject. The meaning of this verse, taken in connexion with the two next, seems to be, that since reformation and amendment were not things in their own nature impossible, the people were inexcusable in persisting in their revolt, without showing the least disposition to return to their allegiance ; whilst God, on his part, was ready to have received them on their repentance.

Verse 6. On full speed—For במרוצתם, the Masoretes read במרוצתם ; so do nineteen mss., with the oldest edition of the whole Bible, and another in the margin. Eight read במרוצתם. On the other hand, three mss., and the first printed copy of the prophetic books, read במרוצותם. But, read whichever we will, the word, I am persuaded, ought to be divided into two, במרוצו הם, or במרוץ הם ; and for כלה שב we should read כל השב and render, "Every one that turneth away is at the top of his speed," or "runneth on full speed," in cursu suo absolutus est. See instances of two words improperly united, verse 18, and chapter vi. 29.

"שובב מרצותם—Εκ του δρομου αυτου. LXX. Fortè legerunt, "שובב מרצותם."
 —SECKER.

- 7 Even the stork in the heavens knoweth her stated times,
And the turtle dove, and the crane, and the swallow observe the season of their coming :
But my people have not discerned the judgment of JEHOVAH.
- 8 How will ye say, We are wise,
And the law of JEHOVAH is among us ?
Surely the false pen of scribes
Hath converted these into falsehood.
- 9 The wise ones are confounded,
They are dismayed and ensnared ;
Behold, they have spurned at the word of JEHOVAH ;
And as for wisdom, what is there in them ?
- 10 Therefore will I give their wives unto others,
Their fields to those that shall enter into possession ;
Because from the least even unto the greatest,
Every one is wholly addicted to his lust ;
From the prophet even unto the priest,
Every one practiseth falsehood.

Verse 7. And the crane—Fourteen MSS. and five editions read, with the Masora, ורסיס. See Bishop Lowth's note on Isaiah xxxviii. 14.

The judgment of JEHOVAH—His law, or system of laws ; that rule of moral conduct which God prescribed for their observance ; and which he furnished them with the means of knowing as certainly as those birds of passage are taught, by what we call "natural instinct," all that is convenient for them. See Isaiah i. 3.

Verse 8. Surely the false pen of scribes hath converted these into falsehood—The nature of the English language, which usually requires the nominative to precede the verb, will not easily admit the hemistichs to proceed here in the same order as in the original. הנה should not be rendered "behold," but "these ;" namely, the light of natural understanding, and the assistance of a revealed law ; on both which the Jews valued themselves. But these advantages, they are told, were, in a great measure, lost to them, through the false glosses of those that took upon them to expound the sacred text. These are understood to have been called scribes, "writers," from their usually delivering their instructions in writing. And hence, the propagation of error by their means is ascribed to their "false pen."

Verse 10. Their fields to those that shall enter into possession—ירש properly signifies, to possess that which was the property of others, and therefore implies a dispossession of the former owners. One MS., with the LXX. and Syriac, place the conjunction ו before שריותיהם.

From the prophet—Twelve MSS. and two editions, with the LXX. and Syriac, read וימנבית with the conjunction, as in the parallel place, chap. vi. 13. Also, six MSS. and one edition read כלל for בלל, in the first instance ; and, in the second, seven MSS., and two more in the margin, do the same.

- 11 And they have healed the wound of the daughter of my people superficially, Saying, Peace, peace; when there was no peace.
- 12 Were they ashamed because they had committed abomination?
Nay, they were not ashamed,
Neither knew they how to blush:
Therefore shall they fall one after another,
In the time of their visitation shall they be cast down, saith
JEHOVAH.
- 13 I will utterly consume them, saith JEHOVAH;
There shall be no grapes on the vine,
Nor shall there be figs on the fig-tree;
Even the leaf is withered;
For I have appointed these to pass away from them.
- 14 Wherefore do we sit still?
Assemble yourselves, and let us enter into the fortified cities;
And let us wait in silence there, since JEHOVAH our God hath silenced us,
And hath given us water of hemlock to drink.
Because we have sinned against JEHOVAH,

Verse 11. And they have healed—Four MSS. and the oldest edition of the Bible read here וִירְפּוּ, as chap. vi. 14.

Verse 12—Were they ashamed, &c—See the note on chap. vi. 15.

Verse 13. I will utterly consume them—אֶסְפֵּם אֹתָם. I take אֶסְפֵּם to be one of those words where the א has been put, by mistake, for the characteristic ה, of which instances have been already given in the note on chap. iv. 19. We should therefore read הֶסְפֵּם the infinitive Hiphil, from סָפַח; from whence אֶסְפֵּם, the first person future of the same conjugation. The failing of grapes on the vine, and of figs on the fig-tree, and the withering of the leaf, I conceive metaphorically to signify, that the nation should be deprived of all their real advantages, and also of what was ornamental, by a severe dispensation of God's providence.

Verse 14. Let us wait in silence—דָּמָם implies forbearing to act, as well as to speak. The prophet, therefore, hereby seems to advise not to take measures of resistance, as they would be ineffectually employed against what God had determined.

Hemlock—So our translators have rendered רָשָׁע, Hosea x. 4; Amos vi. 12. And it is evident from Deut. xxix. 18, that some herb or plant is meant by it of a malignant or nauseous kind, at least; being there joined with wormwood, and in the margin of our Bibles explained to be “a poisonous herb.” In like manner see chap. ix. 15; xxiii. 15. In Psalm lxix. 21, which is justly considered as a prophecy of our Saviour's sufferings, it

- 15 We look for peace, and there is no good,
For a time of healing, and behold terror.
- 16 From Dan is heard the snorting of his horses,
At the sound of the neighing of his steeds the whole land
trembleth ;
They are come also, and have eaten up the land, and all that is in it ;
The city and those that dwelt in it.
- 17 Surely, behold, I am about to send against you serpents, Basilisks, which cannot be charmed ;
And they shall bite you, saith JEHOVAH.

is said, "They gave me רָאשׁ to eat;" which the LXX. have rendered χολην, "gall." And, accordingly, it is recorded in the history, (Matt. xxvii. 34,) "They gave him vinegar to drink, mingled with gall," οξος μετα χολης. But in the parallel passage, Mark xv. 23, it is said to be εσμυρνισμενον οινον, "wine mingled with myrrh;" a very bitter ingredient. From whence I am induced to think that χολη, and perhaps רָאשׁ, may be used as a general name for whatever is exceedingly bitter; and, consequently, where the sense requires it, may be put specially for any bitter herb or plant, the infusion of which may be called מִי־רָאשׁ.

Verse 15. We look for peace—All the ancient versions have rendered קוּה by a verb in the first person plural of the preter tense, both here and chap. xiv. 19; but this is clearly no literal version; for קוּה is the infinitive mood, which is often changed into, or used for, a noun; so that קוּה לְשָׁלוֹם literally signifies "a looking for peace." But as the preceding words כִּי הִטָּאֲנוּ לִיהוּה ought, I am persuaded, to be taken in connexion with the following context, rather than with that which goes before them, we may from thence be justified in supplying לָנוּ לְשָׁלוֹם to קוּה, and so render, "We look for peace," est nobis expectatio pacis; and the whole sentence will express the state of anxiety and terror into which the people were fallen in consequence of their sins. See the parallel passage, chap. xiv. 19.

Verse 16. From Dan—Grotius observes, after Jerome, that Nebuchadnezzar, having subdued Phenicia, passed through the tribe of Dan in his way to Jerusalem. When the enemy, therefore, was advanced so near, it was time for the people of Judah to take the alarm, and to provide for their own security.

His steeds—אֲבִירָיו. This word is used for "war-horses," Judges v. 22; chap. xlvii. 3. See also note on chap. l. 11.

Verse 17. Which cannot be charmed—That some persons possessed the faculty of rendering serpents harmless, is a fact too well attested by historians and travellers to admit of contradiction; but by what means this effect was produced, is not quite so clear. The Scripture word לָהֵשׁ seems to be used in conformity to the vulgar opinion, ascribing it to the power of certain cabalistical words and incantations muttered through the teeth. But this, we have reason to believe, was, in general, no other than a mist cast over the eyes of the common people, by those who were in possession

- 18 Sorrow is upon me past my remedying,
My heart within me is faint.
- 19 Behold the voice of the daughter of my people from a far

Is not her king in her ?

And by their foreign vanities ?)

of physical discoveries, in order to procure more veneration and respect. PLINY speaks of certain herbs which, being carried about, prevented the bite of serpents. (Hist. Nat. lib. xx. sect. 15 ; lib. xxii. sect. 25.) Others tell surprising, but not altogether incredible, stories of the affinity and influence of musical sounds. See BOCHART, De Sacr. Animal. par. ii. lib. 3. cap. 6 ; SHAW'S Travels, page 429 ; and Sir John Chardin's ms. cited by Harmer, chap. viii. obs. 14. In this same ms. the author remarks, that "those that know how to tame serpents by their charms, are wont, commonly, to break out their teeth ;" and supposes this to be alluded to, Psalm lviii. 6 : "Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth." But whatever were the methods commonly practised, the enemies of the Jews are here compared to such serpents as were not to be mollified nor disarmed by any of those means : "They shall bite you, saith JEHOVAH."

Verse 18. Past my remedying—מְבִלִי גִיּוֹרִי. This I take to be an improper junction of two words, מְבִלִי גִיּוֹרִי, which are so distinguished in four mss. and one edition ; another manuscript also reads מְבִלִי גִיּוֹרִי. The first of these words, מְבִלִי, is a negative particle ; and גִּיּוֹרִי, or, written at full length, גִּיּוֹרִי, is a verb in the infinitive mood, from גָּוַר, "to heal," with the affix י. The LXX. and Arabic versions favour this emendation.

"Kalinsky, on Nahum and Habakkuk, thinks the lamentation of Jeremiah for Josiah begins here, and ends with the next chapter. Acta Erudit. 1749, page 467."—SECKER.

Verse 19. Behold the voice, &c.—The prophet anticipates in his imagination the captivity of his countrymen in Babylon, "a far country ;" and represents them there as asking, with a mixture of grief and astonishment, if there was no such being as JEHOVAH, who presided in Sion, that he so neglected his people, and suffered them to continue in such a wretched plight. Upon this complaint of theirs God justly breaks in with a question on his part, and demands why, if they acknowledged such a protector as himself, they had deserted his service, and, by going over to idols, with which they had no natural connexion, had forfeited all title to his favour. The people then proceed with their complaint in the next verse, setting forth that, though much time had elapsed, they nevertheless seemed to be still as far from deliverance as ever.

"מֵאַרְצָא מְרֹחָקִים," "from a far country."—SECKER.

And by their foreign vanities—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, add the conjunction וְ, and read וְהַבְּלִי.

- 21 Upon account of the wound of the daughter of my people am I heartbroken ;
I mourn ; astonishment hath taken hold on me.
- 22 Is there no balm in Gilead ?
Is there no physician there ?
Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people restored ?

CHAPTER IX.

- 1 Oh that my head were waters,
And mine eyes a fountain of tears,
That I might weep day and night
For the slain of the daughter of my people !

Verse 22. Is there no balm in Gilead ?—"Balm," or "balsam," is used with us as a common name for many of those oily resinous substances which flow spontaneously, or by incision, from certain trees or plants, and are of considerable use in medicine and surgery ; it serves, therefore, very properly to express the Hebrew word צִי, which the LXX. have rendered ρητυη, and the ancients have interpreted "resin," indiscriminately. But Kimchi, and some of the moderns, have understood by צִי that particular species heretofore properly called balsamum, or opobalsamum, and now distinguished by the name of balsamum Judaicum, or "balm of Gilead ;" being that which is so much celebrated by Pliny, Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, Tacitus, Justin, and others, for its costliness, its medicinal virtues, and for being the product of Judea only, and of a particular spot there ; and which Josephus attributes to the neighbourhood of Jericho ; but says, that the tree was according to tradition originally brought by the queen of Sheba to king Solomon out of Arabia Felix, the country that now principally supplies the demand for that valuable drug. See JOSEPH. Ant. lib. iv. cap. 6 ; lib. viii. cap. 6 ; De Bell. Jud. lib. i. cap. 6. ; edit. Hudson. On the other hand, Bochart strongly contends, that צִי could not possibly mean that balsam, as Gilead was very far from the spot which produced it, and none of the trees grew on that side of the Jordan ; and besides, צִי is spoken of as brought from Gilead (Gen. xxxvii. 25) long before the balsam-tree had been planted in any part of Judea. He therefore considers it as no other than the resin drawn from the terebinthus, or turpentine-tree, which abounds sufficiently in those parts. BOCHART, De Sacr. Animal. par. i. lib. 2. cap. 51. And this, for all that appears, may have been the case ; the resin or balm of the terebinthus being well known to have healing virtues ; which is at least sufficient to answer the design of the prophet's question on this occasion ; which was metaphorically to ask, if there were no salutary means within reach, or none that knew how to apply them for the relief of his country from those miseries with which it was afflicted.

CHAP. IX. Verse 1. Oh that my head—All the Hebrew mss. and the generality of printed copies reckon this as the twenty-third verse of chapter

- 2      On that I had in the wilderness a traveller's lodge,
 That I might leave my people, and go from them !
 Because they are all of them adulterers,
 An assembly of perfidious dealers.
- 3      And they have bent their tongue like a bow ;
 By falsehood, and not according to truth, they are become mighty in the land ;
 Surely from wickedness to wickedness have they proceeded ;
 And me have they not known, saith JEHOVAH.
- 4      Be upon your guard each man against his companion ;
 And place no confidence in any brother :
 For every brother will surely supplant ;

viii., to which it properly belongs, being a continuation of the prophet's sympathetic wailing over his wretched country.

Verse 2. Oh that I had in the wilderness—These words are not spoken, like the former, by the prophet in his own person, but as coming immediately from the mouth of God ; as appears from the close of verse 3 : “ And me have they not known, saith JEHOVAH.” God wishes himself in a situation not to see the corrupt and profligate manners of his people, which are set forth at large, and for which he renews his denunciations of vengeance against them, verses 2–16. He summons the mourning women to bewail the calamities of the nation, verses 17–22 ; forbids setting any value on personal endowments, except the knowledge of God and his attributes only, verses 23, 24 ; and shows the punishment of the circumjacent nations, circumcised and uncircumcised, to be near at hand.

A traveller's lodge—Travellers in the east are not, nor ever were, accommodated at inns on the road, after the manner of the European nations. In some places, indeed, there are large public buildings provided for their reception, which they call “caravanseras :” but these afford merely a covering, being absolutely without furniture ; and the traveller must carry his own provisions and necessaries along with him, or he will not find any. Nor are even these empty mansions always to be met with ; so that if the weary traveller at night comes into a town, where there is no caravansera, or πανδοχείον, as it is called, Luke x. 34, he must take up his lodging in the street, unless some charitable inhabitant will be pleased to receive him into his house ; as we find, Judges xix. 15. And if he passes through the desert, it is well for him if he can light upon a cave, or a hut, which some one before him may have erected for a temporary shelter. And this last is what I conceive to be here meant by מלון ארחים ; a solitary, and not very comfortable, situation ; but yet preferable to the chagrin of living continually in the society of men of profligate manners.

Verse 3. Like a bow ; by falsehood—Instead of קשתם שקר I propose to read קשת משקר. The LXX., Chaldee, and Vulgate, do not acknowledge the affix pronoun after קשת ; and the ellipsis of ב, the particle of similitude, which is wanting before it, is very frequent ; although it may very possibly have been dropped by accident here, on account of the similar sound of the following ק. All the ancient versions express it.

- And every companion will go about to overreach.
- 5 And they will impose every one upon his companion ;
And the truth will they not speak ;
They have habituated their tongue to speak falsehood ;
They have wearied themselves in practising iniquity.
- 6 Thy habitation is in the midst of deceit ;
Through deceit have they refused to know me, saith
JEHOVAH.
- 7 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts,
Behold I will melt them and try them ;
For how else can I act with respect to the daughter of my people ?
- 8 Their tongue is the arrow of a murderer,
In whose mouth the word is treachery ;
He will profess peace towards his companion,
But inwardly will he resolve to fall upon him by surprise.
- 9 For these things shall I not visit ? saith JEHOVAH ;
Shall not my soul avenge itself of such a nation as this ?
- 10 Upon the mountains will I bring up weeping and wailing,

Verse 4. Will go about to overreach—רָכִיל יִהְיֶה. See the note on chapter vi. 28.

Verse 6. Through deceit have they refused to know me, saith JEHOVAH—The knowledge of God, which is true religion, is incompatible with the habitual practice of any wickedness. And therefore it is natural enough for those that are resolved at all events to abide in their evil courses, to endeavour, if possible, to divest themselves of all religious principles, which, if insufficient to restrain, will be sure at least to be very troublesome to them. For this cause they are ready to “say unto God, Depart from us ; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.” (Job xxi. 14.)

“הָעֵוָה נִלְאָו : שִׁבְחָךְ—ηδικησαν, και ου διελιπον του επιστρεψαι. τοκος. LXX. Fortè legerunt, חָךְ, הָעוּ וְלֹא לֹא שׁוּב.”—SECKER. From the Greek it seems probable, that the true reading may have been הָעוּ וְלֹא נִלְאָו ; the negative וְלֹא having been lost through the similarity of the three first letters of נִלְאָו. Thus the sense and metre will be equally restored, and we may render, “They have practised iniquity, and not been weary.”

Verse 7. Behold I will melt them and try them—In these words God professes his intention of making use of the furnace of affliction, to try if he can by such means purge and purify the manners of his people ; since all other had proved ineffectual for their amendment.

Verse 8. The arrow of a murderer—The Masoretes here read שְׁחוּט, which is also the reading of twenty-nine, perhaps thirty-one, mss., and three editions. But I prefer שׁוּחַט, the received reading of the text.

To fall upon him by surprise—אֲרָבִי. Insidiari ei.

“רָבַר בִּי, פִּי, Fortè, רָבַר בִּי.”—SECKER.

“אֲרָבִי, יֵשׁוּט—εχθραν. LXX. ; fortè legerunt ei.”—SECKER.

And upon the pastures of the plain lamentation ;
 Because they are burned up, so that no man passeth through,
 And they hear not the voice of cattle ;
 Both the fowls of the heavens and the beasts are fled, are gone.

11 And I will reduce Jerusalem into heaps, a den of dragons ;
 And the cities of Judah will I make a desolation without inhabitant.

12 Who is the wise man, that can understand this ?
 And to whom the mouth of Jehovah hath spoken, so that he can declare it ?

Wherefore is the land destroyed,
 Burnt up like a desert, so that no man passeth through it ?

13 Even JEHOVAH hath said,
 Because they have forsaken my law,
 Which I set before them ;
 And have not hearkened unto my voice,
 Neither have walked according to it ;

14 But they have gone after the imaginations of their own heart,
 And after the deities which they learned from their fathers :

Verse 10. The pastures of the plain—מִדְבָּר is used for the plain or campaign country, as opposed to the mountains. See Isaiah lxiii. 13 ; Lam. iv. 19 ; Joel i. 19 ; ii. 22. It properly signifies a thinly inhabited country, used chiefly for sheepwalks ; from the Chaldee signification of the word רִבֵּד, “to lead,” as a shepherd doth his sheep.

Are fled, are gone—The Syriac and Vulgate add the conjunction before וילכו, as if they had read וילכו.

Verse 12. Who is the wise man ? &c.—In this style of interrogation the prophet indirectly declares himself to be the person qualified by divine inspiration to answer the question proposed in the latter part of the verse ; which he accordingly does in the verses that follow.

Verse 14. The deities which they learned from their fathers—The Vulgate seems to point out אשר למדו מאבותם as the true reading ; but whether we follow that, or read as the text stands at present, the sense is the same.

As the heathen nations had their superior gods, dii majores, and others of a subordinate rank, so, it has been observed by some learned writers, the Israelites seem in early times to have distinguished between the terms אלהים and בעלים, the former of which they appropriated to JEHOVAH, the supreme God, the Maker of heaven and earth ; and whilst they pretended to admit of no other gods, אלהים, but him, none of the same rank and order, they were willing to think themselves free to pay an inferior worship to the tutelary gods of other nations, whom they styled בעלים, “lords,” “deities,” or “demons,” of a middle rank between the divine nature and the human. But that this evasion availed them little, appears from the frequent and severe rebukes they received from time to time. St. Paul

- 15 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel ;
Behold I will feed them with wormwood,
And I will give them water of hemlock to drink.
- 16 And I will scatter them among nations,
Whom they have not known, they nor their fathers ;
And I will send after them the sword,
Until I shall have made an end of them.

- 17 THUS saith JEHOVAH of hosts,
Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, and let them come ;

takes notice of the same kind of distinction made among the Heathen, who had their θεοι and κυριοι πολλοι, "gods many and lords many;" but admonishes Christians that "to them there was but one God, the Father, and one Lord Jesus Christ," to whom alone they might address themselves, as the single Mediator between God and men; and for this reason,—"because he," and none but he, "ever liveth to make intercession for them." 1 Cor. viii. 5, 6; 1 Tim. ii. 5; Heb. vii. 25.

Verse 15. Behold I will feed them—The LXX. omit את העם הזה, which is certainly a redundancy in the text, and appears to have been a marginal gloss crept into it. All the other versions retain these words, but omit the affix, reading מאכלים instead of מאכלים העם. One MS. omits העם.

Water of hemlock—See note on chapter viii. 14.

Verse 16. And I will send after them the sword—So it was threatened by Moses in case of disobedience, Lev. xxvi. 33. Compare chapter xlv. 27; Ezekiel v. 12.

Verse 17. The mourning women—It was an ancient custom of the Hebrews at funerals, and on other like occasions, to make use of hired mourners, whose profession it was to exhibit in public all the signs and gestures of immoderate and frantic grief, and by their loud outcries and doleful songs to excite and stir up a real passion of sorrow in others. Women were chiefly employed in this office; and Jerome in his comment upon this verse says, that the practice was continued in Judea down to his days. Hic enim nos usque hodie manet in Judæa; ut mulieres sparsis crinibus, nudatisque pectoribus, voce modulatæ omnes ad fletum excitent. And in JOSEPHUS, De Bell. Jud. lib. iii. cap. 8, (edit. Hudson,) we find, that on a false report of that historian's death, many of his friends hired musical persons, οι θρηνων εγγρχον αυτοις, to take the lead in their lamentations. As it required, therefore, a degree of skill to discharge this office, for that reason these "mourning women," מקינות, are also called דחכמות, "the skilful ones." Frequent allusions to this custom are to be met with in Scripture, particularly 2 Chron. xxxv. 25, where "the singing men and singing women" are said to have made it a constant rule, after king Josiah's death, to commemorate that excellent prince in all their future dirges or lamentations, as one in whom the public in general had sustained an irreparable loss. Such also were the "mourners that go about the streets," mentioned, Eccles. xii. 5, and those whom Amos calls יודעי נהי, "skilful of lamentation;" Amos

- And send to the skilful ones, and let them come ;
 18 And let them haste and begin a lamentation over us ;
 That our eyes may let fall tears,
 And our eyelids pour forth waters.
 19 Surely a voice of lamentation hath been heard from Sion ;
 How are we spoiled ! we are greatly confounded !
 Because we have abandoned the land,
 Because they have thrown down our habitations.
 20 Therefore hear, O ye women, the word of JEHOVAH,
 And let your ear receive the word of his mouth ;
 And teach your daughters a lamentation,
 And every one her companion a mournful dirge.

v. 16. And such I presume were “the minstrels, and the people making a noise,” οχλον θορυβουμενον, whom our Saviour found in the house of the ruler of the synagogue, whose daughter was just dead, Matt. ix. 23. St. Mark calls them “those that wept and wailed greatly ;” κλαιοντας και αλαλαζοντας πολλα, Mark v. 38. Nor was this practice peculiar to the Jews. In HOMER we find Hector’s corpse thus attended, Iliad. Ω. 719 :—

Οι δ’ ἐπει εισαγαγον κλυτα δωματα, τον μιν επεϊτα
 Τρητοις εν λεχεεσσι θεσαν, παρα δ’ εισαν αιιδους, Θρηνων εξαρχους, οϊτε στονοεσσαν αιιδην
 Οι μιν αρ’ εθρηνεον, επι δε στεναχοντο γυναικες.

So likewise in the Phænissæ of EURIPIDES, verse 1504 :—

Τινα δε προσφδον,
 Η τινα μουσοπολον στοναχαν επι
 Δακρυνσι, δακρυσιν, ω δομος, ω δομος, Ανακαλεσομαι ;

The Romans called these mourning women præficæ, concerning whom we find the following lines in a fragment of Lucilius, lib. xxii :—

Mercede quæ conductæ fient alieno in funere præficæ, Multo et capillos scindunt et clamant magis.

But STATIUS, in Epicedio patris, speaks of them as of foreign growth :—

Ut Pharios aliæ fictâ pietate dolores Mygdoniosque colunt, et non sua funera plorant.

See also LOWTH, De Sacra Poesi Hebr. Prælect. xxii.

Verse 19. They have thrown down our habitations—Our present English translation would require that we should read השליכונו instead of השליכו, and in one mss., indeed, we find השליכנו. The LXX. render απεῤῥριψαμεν, as if they had read השלכנו. But the present reading of the text needs no alteration ; השליכו being the third person plural, in Hiphil, used according to the Hebrew idiom indefinitely, and as it were impersonally, without a nominative expressed ; so that, “They have thrown down our habitations,” is in effect the same as, “Our habitations are thrown down ;” in which manner the words are rendered by the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate.

- 21 For death hath climbed up through our windows,
It hath entered into our palaces;
It hath at once cut off the children from the street,
And destroyed the young men from the broad places.
- 22 The carcases of men also shall fall as dung on the face of the field,
And as the handful behind the reaper, when there is none to gather.
- 23 Thus saith JEHOVAH;
Let not the wise glory in his wisdom,

“השליכו—Either, ‘Our dwellings are cast down;’ or, ‘They have cast down our dwellings.’”—SECKER.

Verse 21. It hath at once cut off, and destroyed—דבר, signifies not only “to speak,” but also “to destroy;” see 2 Chron. xxii. 10. Taken in this latter sense, and detached from the place where it now stands at the beginning of the next verse, it connects well with this, and completes the sentence. In the present editions of the LXX. and in the Syriac it is totally omitted; but is found in those of Aquila, Symmachus, the Chaldee, and Vulgate, where it is rendered imperatively, “speak,” or “prophesy.” Theodotion, however, expresses it by θαρατφ, and the Hexaplar represents the LXX. as doing the same; which is verified by the ms. Pachom. The passage may literally be translated, “In cutting off (or, Whilst it cut off) the children from the street, it hath destroyed,” &c.; which amounts exactly to the sense expressed in the version I have given. As the children used to play in the streets, (see the note on chapter vi. 11,) so the open areas of the towns, such as the exchange, the market-places, &c., (as רחבות have been already explained in note on chapter v. 1,) were the customary places of resort for the young men; but death, it is here said, entering into the houses, effectually cut off both the children and young men from their usual haunts.

Verse 22. And the carcases, &c.—At the beginning of this verse, besides דבר, we read in the Hebrew text, כה נאס־יהרה. But these words are not to be found in the LXX.; and there is good reason to believe them to be spurious; as they serve only to perplex the sense, which goes on clear and smooth without them. They seem to have been inserted first into the margin by some one who misunderstood the sense of דבר, and thought some addition necessary to introduce the words that follow. In time they found their way into the text.

And as the handful behind the reaper—This alludes to the manner of reaping corn in the field, where the reaper, as soon as he has cut what he can hold in his hand, lets it fall, and passes on; but is usually followed by another, who gathers what is cut, and binds it into sheaves. But here it is said, that there would be none to gather; and consequently the corn, after being cut, would lie neglected and rot on the ground; which renders the simile a very apt one.

- Nor let the mighty glory in his might,
 Nor let the rich glory in his riches :
 24 But let him that glorieth glory in this,
 In understanding and knowing me,
 That I am JEHOVAH, exercising loving kindness,
 Judgment, and faithfulness upon earth :
 For in these do I delight, saith JEHOVAH.
 25 Behold the days are coming, saith JEHOVAH,
 That I will punish all the circumcision with the uncircumcision ;
 26 Egypt, and Judah, and Edom,

Verse 23. Nor let the rich—Forty-four MSS. and seven editions read נאם, instead of נא; and all the ancient versions express the conjunction. To glory in wisdom, might, or riches, is to depend on them as the means of procuring security and happiness.

Verse 24. Exercising lovingkindness, judgment, and faithfulness—Security and happiness, if to be had at all, must come from God. They are his gift, and bestowed by him on one or other of these accounts; either as a matter of “gratuitous favour,” which is the proper sense of חסד; or as a matter of right or “judgment,” משפט; as when God in the character of a righteous judge distributeth rewards to the well-deserving; or, lastly, as a matter of “faithfulness,” in regard to his word and promises. So צדקה often signifies; and God’s salvation is also often said to be extended to his people on this very account, to fulfil the promises made to their fathers.

For in these do I delight—אלה is here ambiguous, and may either denote those attributes, or those persons who place their confidence in those known or acknowledged attributes of the Deity; which is having a right faith in him. And this latter I take to be in reality intended here; but I have retained the ambiguity in the version, so that those who are of a different opinion may follow their own sense.

I am inclined to think this verse may better be translated thus:—

But let him that glorieth glory in this,
 In understanding and knowing me, that I am JEHOVAH;
 In practising benevolence, judgment, and righteousness upon earth;
 For in these things do I delight, saith JEHOVAH.

Compare Micah vi. 8.

Verse 25. The circumcision with the uncircumcision—מול and ערלה are here used as περιτομή and ακροβυστία in the New Testament, the abstract for the concrete. See Rom. iii. 30.

“מול בערלה—Περιτετμενους ακροβυστίας αυτων LXX.; ‘qui circumcisa (fortè, circumcisa) qui) habet præputium,’ Vulg. גור בעורלות, ‘circumcisa in, vel cum,’ &c., Syr. Nusquam alibi cum ב construitur מול. Ακροβυστία pro incircumcisis apud Paulum sæpius.”—SECKER. Query. Whether instead of בערלה it might not have been כערלה; and then we might render, “I will punish the circumcised in like manner, or, as well, as the uncircumcised.”

And the children of Ammon, and Moab,
And all those that have their coast insulated,

Verse 26. All those that have their coast insulated—By this circumlocution the Arabians are generally supposed to be designed; and thus much, I think, may fairly be concluded from the connexion in which these words stand with the context in chapter xlix. 32. But concerning the precise meaning of the words קְצוּצֵי פָאָה, interpreters differ very greatly. Some represent them as signifying persons cut off from other people by being thrust into a remote corner; in which light the translators of our Bible appear to have considered them, when they rendered in the text, “all that are in the utmost corners;” and in the margin, “cut off into corners.” But all the ancient versions understand them as expressing the peculiar manner in which the Arabians cut the hair of their heads or beards. Dr. Durell professes himself to have been of this opinion in a note as follows: “The marginal reading, ‘and all having the corners’ of their hair ‘polled,’ ought doubtless to be received into the text; for the Arabs, who are meant by this periphrasis, cut their hair short, particularly about the crown of the head; and in respect to their beard, they left only a tuft of hair growing about their chins; a practice which was forbidden the Jews, Lev. xix. 27. Herodotus, speaking of this nation, says; Τὸν τριχὼν τὴν κορυφὴν κείρεσθαι φασί, καταπερ αὐτὸν τὸν Διονύσου κεκαρθᾶν κείρονται δὲ υποτροχαλὰ, περιξυροντες τοὺς κροταφοὺς. (Lib. iii. cap. 8.)” Dr. DURELL.

But the words, I am persuaded, have a respect to the peninsular form of the country, surrounded on all sides by the sea, excepting only the isthmus to the north; and thus these people were “insulated” or “cut off” as to their “coast” or “quarter” from any other land. HORACE speaks of lands thus cut off or parted by the sea: (Odorum, lib. i. 3. 21):—

*Neguequam Deus abscedit
Prudens Oceano dissociabili Terras.*

And VIRGIL of the insular situation of Britain: (Ecl. i. 67):—

Et penitus toto divisos orbe Britannos.

Where we may observe, that the words penitus divisos mark the total separation all around; but קְצוּצֵי פָאָה need only be understood of a partial one.

But I cannot help offering a conjecture here with respect to the words, הַיִּשְׁבִּים בַּמִּדְבָּר, that they are not exegetic, as they appear at present, of קְצוּצֵי פָאָה, the inhabitants of the peninsula of Arabia properly so called; but respect a distinct people, namely, those Arabians that dwelt above in the great desert between Mesopotamia and Palestine. This distinction we find made, chapter xxv. 23, 24, and therefore, I am inclined to think, we ought to read הַיִּשְׁבִּים, with the conjunction ו prefixed: “And those that dwell in the wilderness.” See also the notes on chapter xlviii. 45; xlix. 28.

In one MS. we find עַל before הַגִּיִּם. There it is certainly misplaced. But perhaps יַעַל ought to have come in before הַיִּשְׁבִּים. See [the preceding part of this] note.

Those that dwell in the wilderness :
 For all the nations are uncircumcised,
 And all the house of Israel, uncircumcised in heart.

CHAPTER X.

- 1 HEAR ye the word which JEHOVAH hath spoken ;
- 2 Unto you, O house of Israel, thus hath JEHOVAH said ;
 Unto the way of the heathen conform ye not ;
 Neither be ye dismayed at the signs of the heavens,
 Although the heathen be dismayed at them.
- 3 For the institutions of the peoples are vanity itself ;
 For they cut down trees out of the forest,
 The manufacture of him that worketh with a sharp tool.
- 4 With silver and with gold they decorate,

And all the house of Israel, uncircumcised in heart—So I think these words should be pointed, in order to express the prophet's meaning, which was, that not only the heathen nations were uncircumcised, but the house of Israel, also, uncircumcised, if not in flesh, at least in heart ; which was the uncircumcision that rendered them obnoxious in God's sight.

CHAP. X. THE beginning of this chapter to the end of verse 16 contains an earnest dissuasive against the practice of heathen idolatry, setting forth the vanity of idols in comparison with the true God. And this, no doubt, was designed by way of precaution to the Jews against the time of their removal out of their own land, to dwell amongst idolaters, as is predicted, verses 17, 18. Jerusalem lamenteth the completion of her ruin ; and humbly supplicateth the intervention of God's mercy, verse 19, to the end.

Verse 2. The signs of the heavens—The Chaldeans, among whom the Jews were destined to live in captivity, were particularly addicted to astrology, and attributed to the heavenly bodies a considerable influence over human affairs. This naturally tended to beget a religious dread and awe of those objects, from whence so much good or evil was supposed to be derived. The sun, moon, and planets are said indeed to have been created and set in the firmament “for signs,” Gen. i. 14. But hereby is meant, that they should serve as natural marks serving to distinguish, by their periodical revolutions and appearances, the various times and seasons ; which, however, is a very different use from that of prognosticating future events, or causing any alteration in the fortunes of men.

Verse 3. Of him that worketh with a sharp tool—כַּעֲצֵר is sometimes interpreted “an axe,” and sometimes “a plane.” But it seems rather to be a general name for any cutting instrument, from עָצַר, which signifies secuit in Arabic, as Bishop Lowth observes in a note on Isaiah xlv. 12. Here I suppose it to mean that tool with which the carver shapes his block into due form, before he proceeds to decorate it with gold and silver, in order to be set up as an object of worship. Compare Isaiah xl. 19, 20 ; xli. 7 ; xlv. 12, &c.

- With nails and with hammers they fasten them,
That they may not totter.
- 5 As the palm-tree are these for stiffness,
And they cannot speak ;
They must altogether be carried,
For they cannot walk :
Fear ye them not, for they cannot hurt ;
And also to do good is not in their power.
- 6 There is none like thee, O JEHOVAH,
Great art thou, and great is thy name in might.
- 7 Who will not fear thee, O king of nations,
When he shall approach unto thee ?
Forasmuch as among all the wisest of the nations,
And in all their kingdoms, there is none like thee.

Verse 4. They fasten them, that they may not totter—The plural affix in יְהוּקִים has reference to עֵץ in the preceding verse, which, though singular in form, is often plural in sense ; and here “timber,” or “trees,” cut down and wrought into images, may be properly considered as the antecedent. But for יִפְקוּ we must then read יִפְקֶה, with the LXX., Syriac, and Arabic.

Verse 5. They must altogether be carried—Nine MSS. read by transposition יִשְׂאוּ for יִשְׂאוּ, besides three editions, in which it is so found among the various readings collected in them. One MS. also reads יִשְׂאוּ with the mark of a letter erased at the end ; and another had at first יִשְׂאוּ.

For they cannot hurt—See Isaiah xli. 23.

Verse 6. Perhaps the former part of this verse should be connected with the preceding verse thus :—

Fear ye them not, for they cannot hurt ;
And also to do good is not in their power :
So that there is none like thee, O JEHOVAH.

Verse 7. When he shall approach unto thee—Dr. Durell has the following note on this passage :—“All the ancient versions seem to have considered the words כִּי לֹךְ יֵאָתֶה, as an elliptical phrase, and supply a substantive, namely, ‘honour, glory,’ or ‘kingdom,’ except Theodotion, who very properly reads as in the Hebrew, οτι σοι αυηκεν. The phrase is, indeed, elliptical ; but ‘fear’ is obviously understood from the preceding words : Or יֵאָתֶה may be a substantive, signifying ‘submission’ or ‘acquiescence,’ with the ellipsis of the verb substantive ; which may seem more agreeable to the Hebrew idiom. I find Taylor proposes this sense.”—DR. DURELL.

It seems, however, to me more natural and suitable to the context, to consider יֵאָתֶה as the third person future from יָאָתָה, “to come” or “approach unto” God in the way of worship and supplication. So the verb is used chapter iii. 22.

Among all the wisest of the nations—בְּכָל־הַחֲכָמִי הַגּוֹיִם. These words may signify, either all those nations which were most distinguished for the cultivation and improvement of their rational faculties ; or else those sage individuals among them, from whose learning and philosophy some better notions of God and religion might have been expected, than from the rude and illiterate vulgar. And yet the fact was, that all their boasted wisdom and knowledge had failed of leading them to an object of worship, in any degree corresponding with the infinite perfections and majesty of the divine nature.

“חבכי—Codex MS. unus Kennicotti legit מלכי, page 512.”—SECKER. Three of the collated MSS., besides one in the margin, read מלכי.

Verse 8. But they, when they approach—ובאחה. It can hardly be doubted that for ובאחה we should, by a slight alteration, read ובהחה; אחה, or אהיה, being the infinitive of אהה, the verb used just before in the preceding verse. See the last note but one. The contrast is thus strongly marked between the true God and the objects of heathen superstition. The servants of the former, when they approached him in their devotions, could not help being impressed with a reverential awe of a Being so transcendently glorious. But those who drew near to worship the latter, manifested the greatest stupidity in not discovering, what was so obvious to common apprehension, the gross unworthiness of the objects to whom their adorations were addressed.

The very wood itself being a rebuker of vanities—The true meaning and force of this passage seems to have escaped the notice of all the commentators. מוסר properly signifies “rectifying” or “correcting” a false notion by just reproof; and by “vanities” are meant “idols,” so called from their being of no real use or advantage to those who had recourse to their assistance. And this unprofitableness of the idol, the very dull and senseless matter, says the prophet, out of which it was formed, is capable of demonstrating. But the “rebuke,” strictly speaking, is not directed to the idol, but to those who had not sense to perceive, that all the efforts of human art could never change an inanimate log of wood into an animated being, possessed of power and intelligence far surpassing the person from whom its origin was derived. There is, therefore, an energy and pointedness in this short sentence, at least equal, in my opinion, to whatever has been said upon the same subject by the most spirited writer, whether sacred or profane. Not even the keen railery of the Roman satirist in those celebrated lines, Olim truncus eram ficulneus, &c. (HOR. SAT. lib. i. sat. viii. 1,) though in a more ludicrous style, cuts with greater severity.

“מוסר—Confer Prov. xix. 27. Qu. Annon legendum מוסר, ‘fundamentum’ idolorum lignum est; cui superinducuntur argentum, aurum, vestes? Sed nulla suffragatur versio.”—SECKER.

Verse 9. And gold from Uphaz—For מואופ, the Syriac, Chaldee, and Theodotion render “from Ophir;” but whether they read in their copies מואופ, or supposed אופר and אופו to be the same name, though a little varied in the spelling, which in proper names is not uncommon ; or whether Uphaz be the name of some other place famous for its mart of gold, is not very easy to determine. One or other of these, however, I think more likely to have been the case, than that אֹזֶז denoted gold of any particular species or quality ; which latter seems to have been the opinion of Jerome, who says that אֹזֶז was one of the seven names by which gold was distinguished among the Hebrews. That פֶּז may have been such, I am not at all inclined to dispute ; as it may signify very properly gold of the most compact kind, and consequently having the least mixture of alloy. And supposing it to be so, it may account, with some degree of probability, for the corruption of אֹזֶז or אֹפִיר into אֹזֶז ; the former being accounted the country from whence the finest gold was imported, which had also the name of פֶּז given it for its quality ; and so from a jumble of both together the word אֹזֶז may have proceeded. Perhaps the text might have been originally, וְהָיָה כִּי־אֹפִיר וְפֶז, “And gold from Ophir, even the finest gold.” This would render both the metre and the parallelism of the lines more perfect ; and at the same time, the similarity of the last word וְפֶז to the three letters immediately preceding, would easily account for the mistake of a transcriber.

Blue and purple is their clothing—The splendour and magnificence of dress seems among the ancients to have consisted very much in the richness of the colours ; the art of dying which to perfection was esteemed a matter of great skill, being known and practised by very few. The excellency of the Tyrian purple is celebrated by both sacred and profane authors. And the blue, which from many passages of Scripture we find to have been in great request, was also imported from remote countries as an article of elegant and expensive luxury. See Ezek. xxvii. 7, 24.

The work of the skilful all of them—If in the preceding verse the insignificance of the idols was argued from the vile and perishable matter out of which they were composed, the same is inferred in this from their being indebted to the art and labour of man for all their costly ornaments, their splendid outward show. In short, “the whole of them,” says the prophet, internal and external, “is the work of skilful men.” And so says the prophet Hosea, xiii. 2, “the work of craftsmen entirely.” Upon what ground, then, could the thing formed pretend to a nature more excellent than its former ?

Verse 10. He is truly God—אֱמִתִּי is here used adverbially. The margin of our Bible renders, “a God of truth ;” but in that case אֱלֹהִים should have been in statu regiminis, אֱלֹהֵי. See chapter xiv. 13.

Verse 11. In this manner shall ye speak unto them—This verse is omitted

The Gods, which have not made the heavens and the earth, Shall perish from off the earth, and from under these heavens.

- 12 He hath made the earth by his power,
Establishing the world by his wisdom ;
By his understanding also hath he spread out the heavens.
- 13 When he exerteth his voice, there is a tumult of waters in the heavens,
And he maketh clouds to rise from the extremity of the earth ;
He produceth lightnings with rain,
And bringeth the wind forth out of his magazines.
- 14 Every man cometh a brute by acknowledging,
Every goldsmith is put to shame by graving,
When they have set up false objects of worship,
And such as have no breath in them.

in one ms., and, to speak my mind freely, I cannot help questioning the authenticity of it, not only on account of the singularity of its being written in Chaldee, at a time too, when the people, not having left their own land, had not yet begun to make use of that dialect ; but also because it breaks in upon and interrupts the course of the argument, which, it is manifest, would proceed more regularly and smoothly without it. It seems probable to me, that some public teacher during the captivity, deducing it by direct inference from the prophet's words, had it inserted in the margin, and perhaps usually read together with this section of the prophecy in the assemblies of the people, in order that the common people might have their answer always ready, whenever they were molested on the point of religion, or importuned to join in the idolatrous worship of the Chaldeans. The LXX. and Syriac interpreters seem to have been conscious of the interruption given to the sense by the interpolation of this verse, having added a word answerable to יהיה at the beginning of verse 12, for a subject of the verbs. But no trace of such a word appears in any of the Hebrew copies.

Verse 13. From the extremity of the earth—Twenty-five mss. and four editions read, with the Masora, הארץ ; and four mss. have a letter erased before ארץ. By “the extremity of the earth,” is here meant the horizon.

מקצה ארץ.—See note on chap. li. 16.

Verse 14. Every man cometh a brute by acknowledging—Both מדת and מפסל I take to be verbs in the infinitive mood, with the particle מ prefixed. In our English Bible נכר is also considered as a noun with the affix, “his molten image ;” but this the LXX., Syriac, and Chaldee have more rightly represented as a verb ; and נכך signifies, not only “to pour out melted metal,” as the founder doth, but “to anoint” or “consecrate” a person to an office by pouring oil upon him. See Psalm ii. 6. And both here, and Isaiah xlv. 10, it signifies “to set up” or “dedicate” an image for religious worship. The last-cited passage, with the verse that follows it, I look upon to be so nearly parallel in sense to the verse under consideration,

15 Vanity are these, the work of those that greatly err :
In the time of their visitation they shall perish.

16 Not like these is the portion of Jacob ;
For he is the former of the universe,
And Israel is the rod of his inheritance ;
JEHOVAH of hosts is his name.

17 GATHER up thine effects out of the land,
O thou that dwellest in a fortress.

that they seem to throw light mutually upon each other. And as Bishop Lowth, in his annotations upon Isaiah xlv. 10, 11, hath observed, that some part of these verses has never yet been interpreted to any tolerably good sense, and it is my chance not entirely to coincide with that learned prelate in his interpretation of them, I shall beg leave to offer, with all due deference, what appears to me a more suitable translation of them :—

- 10 Who hath formed a God ?
Or set up a graven image, that profiteth not ?
11 Behold, all that are connected with it shall be ashamed ;
And the artificers, they above all men ;
They shall assemble all of them ; they shall stand forth ;
They shall fear, they shall be ashamed at the same time.

That is, while they stand before the image they have set up, and worship it with a religious dread, the glaring absurdity of their conduct shall tend to their shame and disgrace.

“מַדַּעַת—Perhaps ‘for want of knowledge.’ See Lowth, and Noldius on יֵצֵא.”—SECKER.

Verse 15. Of those that greatly err—תַּעֲתִיעִים. The reduplication of תַּעֲתִיעִים, the participle in Kal, from תָּעָה, “to err,” seems emphatically to imply a multiplication of errors ; or persons more than simply gone astray.

Verse 16. The portion of Jacob—Upon the principles of heathen theology every nation was committed to the care and superintendency of its own tutelary God ; who might with propriety be styled its “portion,” on account of the peculiar relation that subsisted between them. “The portion of Jacob,” therefore, is the same as the God of Jacob ; he who had taken upon himself the guardianship and protection of that family. But he was distinguished from all the rest ; who, as before observed, were falsehood and vanity, all of them, having no other existence than as lifeless images, the work of deluded men ; whereas he was the Creator of the universe, of all that exists ; and that there might be no room to mistake the Being intended, he is further characterized as he who had made choice of Israel for the special object of his concern, had marked him out for his own possession, as with a measuring-rod ; and to whom the name of “JEHOVAH” belonged.

Verse 17. Gather up thine effects out of the land—The person here addressed under a female character, most probably means the same as the daughter of Sion, that is, the community of citizens resident in Jerusalem, justly styled “a fortress,” or “strong-hold,” for so it was. These are

- 18 For thus saith JEHOVAH ;
Behold I will smite with slings the inhabitants of the land at this time,
And I will distress them, so that they shall be taken.
- 19 Wo is me because of my bruise !
My wound is painful ; but I said,
Surely this is an affliction, yet have I borne it.
- 20 My tent is laid waste, and all my cords are broken ;
My children are gone forth from me, and are not ;
There is none to pitch my tent any more,
Or to set up my curtains.
- 21 Because the pastors are become brutish,
And JEHOVAH have they not sought ;
Therefore they have not prospered,
And all their flock is dispersed.

required to collect together all their goods for packing, like persons about to change their place of abode ; and the reason assigned in the next verse shows that hereby is meant a preparing of themselves to go into captivity ; because the enemy is represented as driving the inhabitants of the country before him with slings, from one post to another, till—being reduced at last to the utmost distress, in a place no longer tenable—they are taken and carried away into servitude in a foreign land ; the usual fate of prisoners of war in those days. See Ezek. xii. 3. Hence, also, we see the connexion and ground of the foregoing exhortations against idolatrous conformity ; forasmuch as the people would soon be found in such circumstances as would minister frequent temptations to such a practice.

O thou that dwellest—For יושבת the Masoretes rightly read יושבת, which is conformable to eight mss. and one edition ; besides sixteen mss. and the first printed Bible, which read ישובת.

Verse 18. At this time—בפעם הזאת. This implies, that though they had been often saved by God's providence from hostile attacks, they would, however, on this occasion, find it otherwise.

Verse 19. Wo is me, &c.—In this and the following verses the prophet seems, by anticipation, to suggest motives of patience and consolation to his country, in regard to the evils that were coming upon her. These he puts into her own mouth, and makes her observe, first, that her affliction, though great, was such as, by experience, she found to be tolerable ; secondly, that she had less reason to complain of what she suffered, as it was no other than might have been expected from the misconduct of those who had the direction of her affairs ; and, lastly, that she was not without hope in the mercy of God, who, upon the humble supplication of his people, might be moved to mitigate their chastisement, and to turn his hand against the Heathen that oppressed them.

Yet I have borne it—ואשאנו. The ו conversive requires the time past.

- 22 Hark a noise ! behold, it advanceth,
Even a great commotion from the north country ;
To make the cities of Judah a desolation,
A dwelling place for dragons.
- 23 I know JEHOVAH, that his way is not like that of men,
Not like a human being doth he proceed and order his going.
- 24 Correct me, O JEHOVAH, only with moderation ;
Not in thine anger, lest thou crush me to atoms.

Verse 22. Hark a noise ! behold, it advanceth—שמיעה signifies something “audible,” or “to be heard,” “a bruit,” or “noise ;” which is explained, in the following hemistich, to be that of the tumultuary invasion of the Chaldeans from the north, of which notice had been repeatedly given. See chap. i. 15 ; iv. 6 ; v. 15 ; vi. 22. Perhaps the same thing is meant by the words קול המלחמה גדולה, chap. xi. 16. Our English translation cannot be right, which makes קול the subject of באה, though of a different gender. But קול שמיעה is an independent member of the sentence, and should be rendered by itself, “Hark a noise !” or, more literally, “The voice or sound of a noise !” So קול is frequently used to denote a thing to be already within hearing ; as Cant. ii. 8 ; Isaiah xl. 3 ; lxvi. 6. The subject of באה is the pronoun substitute of שמיעה, not expressed, but virtually contained in the verb.

Verse 23. I know JEHOVAH, that his way is not like that of men—Dr. Durell hath thus explained this passage :—“The meaning of this verse, according to our English version, seems to be, that all events are under the direction of God’s providence, which man cannot counteract. But I think the text may admit of another sense, rather more connected with the context, thus, ‘I know, with respect to JEHOVAH, that his way is not like that of a mortal ; that he doth not walk nor direct his step like a man.’ This construction is justified by the most common of all Hebrew idioms ; and ל is often used as a particle of comparison. See Noldius. The sense here proposed is parallel to several other passages of Scripture, and is adopted by the Syriac version. And upon the ground of this sentiment it is, that the daughter of Sion (whom I here suppose to be the speaker) builds her confidence of mercy in God’s chastisements.”—Dr. DURELL.

In this verse Archbishop Secker coincides with the explanation given [in the preceding note] by Dr. Durell.

Verse 24. Only with moderation—In the preceding verse the speaker, having professed a satisfactory belief that she had not to do with such a weak, peevish, and vindictive being as man, here humbly entreats Almighty God to deal out his corrections in such a moderate degree, as to show that he aimed at the amendment, and not the destruction, of the offender. נשפט properly signifies that “calm and dispassionate judgment” which stands opposed to the hasty sallies of anger and furious revenge. And though the latter cannot actually exist in God, it is sometimes, however, nominally attributed to him, whenever the effects of his displeasure are so violent as to stop nothing short of utter ruin ; although such a proceeding may be justifiable upon the most solid principles of reason and equity. As, therefore, to punish with anger implies an unrelenting rigour and severity; so to correct with judgment admits the use of such moderation as is consistent with the sinner's personal safety, whilst it promotes his reformation.

Verse 25. They have devoured Jacob, and consumed him—The LXX. and one ms. omit ויאכלהו, and, I think, rightly. There appears no elegance in the repetition of אכלו; and, besides, it is not conformable to the Hebrew syntax, which would have required the future tense after the ו conversive, ויאכלהו, or ויאכלהו, as we find ויכלהו. The interpolation doubtless arose from the similarity of the following verb, ויכלהו. In the parallel place, Psalm lxxix. 7, both ויאכלהו and ויכלהו are omitted; and so likewise they are here in one ms.

CHAP. XI. THE prophecy contained in this and the following chapter may not improbably be assigned to the reign of Josiah; only, to the latter end of it, when the people (who, in the eighteenth year of that prince, had solemnly engaged to perform the obligations of the divine covenant) may, in course of time, be supposed to have relapsed into their former disregard and neglect. The prophet is, therefore, sent to recall them to their duty, by proclaiming anew the terms of the covenant, and rebuking them sharply for their hereditary disobedience. (Verses 1-8.) He denounceth evil against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem for their idolatrous apostasy; (verses 9-17;) and, being informed of the conspiracy of the men of Anathoth against his life, by divine revelation, he prayeth against them, and is authorized to foretell their utter destruction.

Verse 2. And thou shalt speak—The Chaldee and Vulgate with the generality of interpreters construe ודברתם as the second person plural, "And ye shall speak." But it will not, I think, be easy to find who the persons were, that are thus addressed in the plural number. שמעו indeed is plural, though the Syriac read שמע instead of it. But the word or message which came from God to Jeremiah, may well be conceived to contain a general precept of obedience to the people of Judah at large; and afterwards a particular injunction to Jeremiah. But the people, though intended in the first instance, could not be required to speak unto them-

3 Jerusalem ; and thou shalt say unto them, Cursed is the man
 4 who will not hearken to the words of this covenant, which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the iron furnace, saying, Hearken ye unto my voice, and do all which I command you:
 so shall ye be unto me a people, and I will be unto you a God:
 5 That I may perform the oath which I swear unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as at this day. Then answered I and said, So be it, O JEHOVAH.
 6 And JEHOVAH said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear 7 ye the words of this covenant, and do them. For I earnestly admonished your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, and all along unto this day, rising up early 8 and admonishing, saying, Hearken ye unto my voice. But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but went every one after the lusts of his wicked heart : therefore have I brought selves. Nor do we meet with any trace of others joined in commission with Jeremiah, to whom it might be said, “And ye shall speak ;” besides the manifest impropriety of it being followed immediately after with וְאַתָּה, “And thou shalt say.” Accordingly the LXX. render, Kai λαλησεις, as if they, as well as the Syriac, had read וְבָרַתָּה. But וְבָרַתָּה I conceive still to be the true reading, and to be the second person singular, with the affix ב; so that, after a general command given to the people to obey the words of the covenant, the prophet is particularly ordered to speak or rehearse “them,” the words of the covenant, before the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to enforce the obedience required by pronouncing a curse against the disobeyers.

Verse 4. And do all which I command you—The LXX. and Vulgate appear to have read אֶת־כָּל אֲשֶׁר, which is undoubtedly the true reading. אֶת־ is omitted in one MS., but in eighteen MSS. and four editions is written אֶת־; the ׀ having probably been added by mistake from a transient glance cast on the last syllable of וְעִשְׂתֶּם. One MS. reads כָּל for כָּל־; and the first כ, perhaps, was added after the prior corruption of אֶת־, being then deemed necessary.

Verse 7. And all along unto this day—Thirty-five MSS. and four editions read וְעַד with the conjunction, instead of עַד.

Verse 8. Therefore have I brought—It is of the nature of a covenant to denounce penalties against the presumptuous transgressor of it. And the sanctions of the Mosaic covenant may be seen scattered through different parts of the law, but particularly Lev. xxvi. 14, &c.; Deut. xi. 26-28; xxvii.; xxviii.; xxx. 15, &c. Our English translators have rendered וְאַתָּה in the future tense; but it has the signification of the preter because of the Vau conversive. And there is no impropriety in saying, that God had already brought upon the people the evils, which he had not only resolved on, but had begun in some measure to carry into execution.

upon them all the denunciations of this covenant, which I commanded them to perform; but they performed not.

- 9      ALSO JEHOVAH said unto me,
A combination hath been found among the men of Judah and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.
- 10     They are turned again unto the iniquities of their forefathers,
Who refused to hearken unto my words;
These also have gone after strange gods to serve them:
The house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant,
Which I entered into with their fathers.
- 11     Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH;
Behold I am about to bring upon them a calamity,
From which they shall not be able to extricate themselves;
And though they cry unto me, yet will I not hear them.
- 12     And the cities of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall go,
And shall cry unto the gods unto whom they burn incense;
But they shall not save them at all in the time of their calamity.
- 13     For according to the number of thy cities have been thy gods, O Judah;
And according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem ye have set up altars to a thing of shame,
Altars for burning incense to Baal.
- 14     Therefore pray thou not for this people,
Neither lift up in their behalf a cry or a supplication;

Verse 9. קָשָׁר—"Treason," namely, against the sovereign majesty of JEHOVAH.

Verse 10. The iniquities—Thirty mss. and five editions read עוֹנוֹת at large; and all the ancient versions express the plural number.

Verse 11. Upon them—For אֵלֵיהֶם eight mss. and the oldest edition of the Bible read עֲלֵיהֶם; which seems preferable.

Verse 13. According to the number of thy cities. See chapter ii. 28.

To a thing of shame—See note on chapter iii. 24.

"לְבִשָּׁה מוֹבָהוֹת"—Desunt in LXX. Extant verò apud Aq., Sym., Theod., Syr., Chald., Vulg. Suspiciarier potius tres ultimas voces hujus versús assutas esse.—SECKER. לְבִשָּׁה might signify, "for shame," or a shameful business; which would be explained by the words that follow. So likewise הַבִּשָּׁה, chapter iii. 24, and לְבִשָּׁה, Hosea ix. 10, may both be understood of the idolatrous worship, which was matter of shame to all who had any part in it. See the note on chapter x. 14.

For I will not hear in the time that they cry unto me,
In the time of their calamity.

15 What hath my beloved to do in my house whilst she practiseth wickedness?

Shall vows and holy flesh be allowed to come from thee?

When thou art malignant, shalt thou then rejoice?

16 An olive tree, green, fair, of goodly fruit,

JEHOVAH had called thy name:

With the noise of loud clamour hath he kindled a fire mounting upwards,

Even to consume the branches thereof.

Verse 14. In the time of their calamity—Thirteen mss. and two editions read בעת for בעד; and all the ancient versions seem to have done the same.

Verse 15. What hath my beloved, &c.—ידידים, ידידות or ידודות, and ידורים, seem to be all nouns of exactly the same import, signifying “loves,” amores, in the abstract, but most probably of familiar use as an endearing appellation between married people, speaking to or of each other. See chapter xii. 7. God is frequently said to have espoused his people, in regard of the special covenant that subsisted between them; and, chapter ii. 2, he tells them, he had not forgotten “the kindness he had for them in their youth, the love of their espousals.” But when his spouse acted a disloyal part, he might then think fit to disclaim any further correspondence with her.

But the remainder of the verse seems so intricate and perplexed, as greatly to need some critical assistance. For, first, it is not easy to construe הרבים המזמחה together, as the Syriac and Vulgate have done, who render, “many wickednesses,” or much “wickedness,” both in defiance of grammar; or as our English translators, “lewdness with many;” which the words will as little bear. But here the LXX. step in to our aid, who appear instead of הרבים to have read נדרים, “vows,” and to have prefixed the ה as a particle of interrogation, detaching it from the end of the preceding word המזמחה, and rendering, Μη ευχα. It is obvious how much this reading tends to clear up all difficulties, and affords a sense that speaks altogether for itself. “Shall vows and holy flesh,” that is, sacrifices, “pass from thee with acceptance to me?” Compare chap. vi. 20; Isaiah i. 11–13; Prov. xv. 8; Amos v. 22.

In the subsequent part of the verse רעהי seems to be an improper combination of two words, רעה, of which the former may be the second person singular of the preter in Kal, from רוע, to be “evil” or “malignantly disposed.” The verb, I think, occurs in this sense, Deut. xv. 9; xxviii. 54, 56; and perhaps in other places, where it is thought to be in Hiphil. כי is a particle of interrogation. See Noldius. The question then implies negatively, “When, instead of a due return of love, thou showest malignancy or ill-will, shalt thou then carry it off triumphantly?”

“Τι ἡγαπημεν—διαφευξῇ; LXX. Videntur legisse עשהה, או, הנדרים, או, הרבים, עשוהה, et non legisse כי, cui præcedit יך.”—SECKER. Perhaps for כי רעהי we should read בי רעה, “When thou art malignant towards me.”

Verse 16. With the noise of loud clamour—The words קול המלה or המולה

- 17 For JEHOVAH of hosts, who planted thee,
Hath pronounced evil against thee,
In prosecution of the evil of the house of Israel, and of the house of Judah,
Which they have wrought unto themselves,
In provoking me to anger by burning incense to Baal.
- 18 JEHOVAH also acquainted me, and I knew ;
Then didst thou shew me their proceedings.
- 19 For I was like a tame lamb that is led to slaughter ;
And knew not that they had laid plots against me, saying, occur, Ezekiel i. 24, and are there explained to be בקול מחנה, "like the voice of an host." Here, as it has been remarked, chapter x. 22, they signify the confused murmur of the Chaldean army, coming to desolate Jerusalem and its dependencies with fire and sword. See Homer's description of the advance of an Asiatic army, composed, as was that of Nebuchadnezzar, of various nations. Iliad. Δ. 433-438.

Mounting upwards—עליה is generally considered as the preposition עלי with the affix ה. But this may justly be questioned, as it must be referred to the same antecedent, as רליווי, and, therefore, should have been עליו. But I rather take עליה to be the feminine participle present of עלה, the third radical admitting a change into ו, and so in agreement with אש to signify, "a fire mounting or spreading upwards." In ורעו also I conceive רעו to be the infinitive of רעה, according to a common anomaly, and to denote either the design for which the fire was kindled, or the effect of its increasing violence, so as to consume the tree, both the trunk and its branches.

Verse 17. In prosecution of the evil of the house, &c.—בגלל properly signifies "devolving," or "rolling on," that is, prosecuting or pushing forwards into effect the evil or mischief which the house of Israel and Judah had been the means of bringing upon themselves by provoking God to anger.

In provoking me—One ms. reads להבעיסו, "in provoking Him to anger." But all the versions agree in the pronoun of the first person. And God, being the speaker, may be admitted to speak of himself in the first or third person indiscriminately.

להם—Fortè redundat.—SECKER.

Verse 19. Like a tame lamb—There is no conjunction to be found before אלוה, and therefore it cannot signify, "or an ox," as in our English version. All the ancient versions represent it as an epithet of כבש. The Vulgate renders it mansuetus ; and אלוה may be either the participle Pahul of אלף, "to teach," or "habituate ;" or a participial adjective from that source. In Arabic الف signifies mansuefactus fuit. See CASTELLI Lexicon.

כבש אלוה—'A quiet lamb.' See LOWTH.—SECKER.

tunes, seem in these words willing to throw the blame upon him, as if he was the promoter and efficient cause of the evils which he predicted, and to suppose that by cutting him off they might have a chance of escaping them. This is the most probable meaning of their proverbial saying, "Let us destroy the tree by intercepting that which supplies it with nourishment;" לְחַסֵּי, "its food." Upon the same principles Ahab charges Elijah with "troubling Israel;" (1 Kings xviii. 17;) and professes to hate Micaiah, as if it had been the effect of that prophet's ill-will, that "he did not prophesy good concerning him, but evil." (1 Kings xxii. 8.)

Verse 21. That seek thy life—The LXX. read נִשְׁכַּח, "my life;" but this is unsupported by any other authority.

Verse 22. For this cause thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts—These words are omitted by the LXX.; and indeed they seem to be quite superfluous, so as to favour a suspicion, that they may have been repeated from the beginning of the preceding verse by the mistake of a transcriber.

The young men—The LXX. and the Chaldee render, "their young men."

Verse 23. Upon the men of Anathoth—The ancient Bodleian ms. and three others for לָא read לְע.

CHAP. XII. EMBOLDENED, as it should seem, by the success of his prayers against the men of Anathoth, the prophet ventures freely, though with professions of confidence in the divine justice, to expostulate with God concerning the prosperity of wicked men in general; whose punishment he solicits, attesting the mischiefs that were continually brought upon the

Yet let me expostulate with thee concerning judgments.

Wherefore doth the way of wicked men prosper?

At ease are all they who deal very perfidiously.

2 Thou hast planted them, they have also taken root;

They advance in growth, they have borne fruit;

Thou art near in their mouth,

But art far from their reins.

3 But thou, O JEHOVAH, hast known me;

Thou canst discern by trial my heart to be with thee;

land by their unrestrained wickedness. (Verses 1-4.) In reply he is forewarned to expect, that, in proportion to the power of his enemies, his own personal grievances would naturally increase; whilst the distractions of the state and the unkindness of his kinsfolk precluded him all hopes either of public or of private redress. (Verses 5, 6.) But God expressly challenges the national calamities as the result of his own special determination and judgment. He had discarded his people for their malicious behaviour towards him, and they were therefore given up to the outrage and devastation of fierce and merciless invaders. (Verses 7-13.) At last he promises them a restoration in future, with a retaliation in kind upon their heathen neighbours who had oppressed them; but with this reservation, that such of these as would come over to his established worship, he would receive and incorporate into his church; but the unbelieving part should be utterly extirpated.

Verse 1. Yet let me expostulate with thee concerning judgments—משפטים אורר אותך. This phrase, or nearly the same, has occurred twice before, chapter i. 16; iv. 12; and does again, chapter lii. 9, where it evidently signifies, to “arraign” a criminal, and bring him to a trial for a violation of the laws. Here it must signify a similar, though respectful, inquiry into certain measures of God’s providence, how far they correspond with those principles of justice and equity, which we conceive God to have established as the common measure of his own actions as well as ours. This is the only way in which a good and pious man can, with any propriety, be said to “speak judgments with God,” or bring his action against him.

“Πως δὲ σεο, Κρονίδη, τόλμα νουὸς ἀνδρὸς ἀλιτρουῦ

Ἐν ταύτῃ μοῖρᾳ τὸν τε δίκαιον εἶχειν.

THEOG. v. 377, 378.”—SECKER.

Verse 2. Thou art near in their mouth, but art far from their reins—By מכליותיהם, as it is written in fifty-seven mss. and eight editions, we are to understand the secret thoughts and affections of the heart. So the “reins” are frequently used in Scripture language: See chapter xi. 20; xvii. 10; Psalm vii. 9; xvi. 7; Rev. ii. 23. Compare Isaiah xxix. 13.

Verse 3. My heart to be with thee—Here the marginal translation of our Bibles merits the preference, “with thee.” For the prophet contrasts the affections of his own heart, which he says were “with God,” or set upon him, with the dispositions of those of whom he had said, that God was far from their reins or inward parts.

Draw them out as sheep for slaughter,
And set them apart as for the day of execution.

- 4 How long shall the land mourn,
And the grass of every field wither,
Through the wickedness of them that dwell therein?
The beasts are consumed, and the birds,
Because they have said, He will not see our latter end.

- 5 If thou hast run with footmen, and they have wearied thee,
Then how wilt thou chafe thyself with horses?

Verse 4. Because they have said, He will not see our latter end—That is, he will not concern himself about rewarding or punishing us hereafter. אחרית, which is expressly rendered by our translators “a reward,” Prov. xxiv. 14, 20, properly signifies the final result or consequence of our actions, according to which only it can be determined, whether they have been advantageous to us or otherwise. See chapter xvii. 11; Num. xxiii. 10; xxiv. 20; Prov. xix. 20; xxiii. 18; and more particularly, Psalm xxxvii. 37, 38, where the different end, אחרית, of the good man and of the wicked is precisely distinguished; to the good man it is peace, but to the wicked it is utter destruction. But the inference which bad men are apt to draw from God’s past forbearance is, that he is totally regardless and indifferent as to the moral conduct of mankind. Hence promising to themselves the same impunity in future, which they have hitherto experienced, they are led to a free indulgence of all their wicked inclinations. Accordingly, the psalmist complaining, as the prophet does here, of the prosperity of the wicked, represents their behaviour and their principles in terms exactly similar. Psalm xciv. 5-7:—

They break in pieces thy people, O JEHOVAH,
And thine heritage do they afflict;
The widow and the stranger do they murder,
And the fatherless they put to death:
For they have said, JEHOVAH will not see,
Neither will the God of Jacob regard.

Verse 5. Then how wilt thou chafe thyself with horses—תתחרה does not properly signify “contending,” as it has been commonly rendered; but the effect of contending, being “chafed” or “heated;” as if it had been more fully expressed, “Then how wilt thou be heated, when thou runnest with horses?” And the plain meaning of the metaphor is, “If in contending with men of thine own rank thou hast suffered already some inconvenience; how much more molestation hast thou room to expect, when it cometh to thy lot to contend, as in the course of thy prophetic mission thou unavoidably wilt, with persons far more considerable in station and power?” The leading men of the state, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, are meant, whom Jeremiah appears to have offended by the freedom of his opposition, and by whom he was persecuted almost unto death.

“Ἰππεις οὖν εἰς πεδῖον ἀγῶνιζωνας πρὸς πᾶσιν ἀγωνίας. ARR. Epict. lib. ii. cap. 13.”—SECKER.

Ἀγωνίας seems perfectly to express the sense of the Hebrew verb תתחרה.

“בִּזְעָה—Putat Cler. legendum לֹא בִזְעָה.”—SECKER.

In the swelling of Jordan—The ravages of war and hostile invasion are often represented in Scripture under the image of a river rising rapidly above its banks, and carrying all before it. To these inundations the river Jordan was very subject ; and on such occasions, as we are told, (MAUNDRELL's Travels, page 81,) several sorts of wild beasts, which are wont to harbour among the trees and bushes by the river side, are forced out of their covert, and infest the neighbouring plains. This circumstance is particularly alluded to by the prophet, (chapter xlix. 19,) and seems likewise to have been here in his view. For among all the dire effects incident to a country from the approach of a foreign enemy, this is not one of the least formidable, that evil-minded persons within the state are emboldened to throw off all legal restraints, and, taking advantage of the general confusion, openly commit the most daring outrages on their fellow-citizens ; not only with impunity, but often under a pretence of zeal for the public welfare. Silent leges inter arma, is a well-known adage ; and the prophet found it verified to his cost, when even the authority of the king himself, as we learn from the following history, (chapter xxxviii. 4, 5,) was insufficient to protect him from the malice of his persecutors.

Verse 6. Rely not upon them, that they will speak friendly unto thee—That is, Their former behaviour plainly shows, that thou canst not reasonably depend upon them for that countenance and support which a man naturally looks for from that quarter, against the hostilities of strangers.

Verse 7. The beloved of my soul—יְדִידוֹת is more properly written in forty-six mss. and nine editions יְדִידוֹת. See the first paragraph of the note on chapter xi. 15.

Verse 9. As the ravenous bird Tseboa—BOCHART (De Sacr. Animal. par. i. lib. 3. cap. 11.) hath undeniably proved, that צִבּוּעַ frequently signifies that fierce wild beast called the “hyæna ;” but not exclusively ; for the same author admits in another part of his work a species of serpents to be designed by the same name, and that both these animals are so called from the various colours with which their bodies are marked. See par. ii. lib. 3. cap 7. But this learned man has not, I think, so incontrovertibly maintained his opinion, that the hyæna is here intended ; because in order to make good his assertion, he is obliged to construe עֵשׂ, “ a beast,” instead of “ a bird of prey.” And why not, says he, since the verb עָשָׂה, or עֵשׂ, belongs not to birds only, but to any animal that rushes on its prey ? I must confess I see no better reason to the contrary ; nor does the nature of language require a better, than that common use, the supreme arbiter in the case, hath restricted it to birds only ; for it does not any where appear, as far as I know, to be used for a beast of prey, which is usually designed by a different word. “ But to show,” continues Bochart, “ that the name of עֵשׂ belongs not to birds only, צִפּוֹר, ‘ a bird,’ is sometimes added to it διακριτικῶς, as Ezekiel xxxix. 4 : ‘ I will give thee unto the ravenous birds, לְעֵשׂ צִפּוֹר ;’ every עֵשׂ not being a bird, but beasts of the ravenous and carnivorous kind being included in that name.” This, however, shows nothing at all, being a mere circular fallacy ; for without previously admitting the truth of the conclusion, that the name עֵשׂ belongs not to birds only, it does not appear that צִפּוֹר is added diacritically, and not rather pleonastically, or in some other manner.* But what seems more probable is, that it is צִבְרֵעַ, and not עֵשׂ, which is of ambiguous use, and may signify a species of bird so called from its variegated plumes, as we have already seen it attributed to a species of serpent, as well as to the hyæna, for a similar reason. And here I shall beg leave to borrow the words of Bochart, which follow those above-cited, as much to the purpose : “ Nor is it a new thing,” says he, “ that the same name should belong in common to a ravenous bird and a carnivorous beast. In Greek, as every one knows, κῆρυξ signifies a species of ‘ hawk ;’ αἰγῶν, a species of ‘ eagle ;’ and ἰκτινός, ‘ a kite.’ Yet Oppian enumerates among the different wolves, κῆρυκα, αἰγῶνα, and ἰκτινον. On the other hand, the Greeks call a ‘ kite’ λουπη, from the similarity of disposition. And why a species of monedula (Anglicè, ‘ a jackdaw’) is called λαῖκος, is owing to its rapacity.” Now these reasons, though they may not prove, as I think they do not, that עֵשׂ is a generic name for a ravenous beast as well as a ravenous bird, since the

* From a view of the passage, Ezekiel xxxix. 4, I am inclined to think, that לְעֵשׂ there is not a noun, but the infinitive verb with the ל prefixed ; for if לְעֵשׂ צִפּוֹר signified “ to the ravenous birds,” we ought to read afterwards וְלַחַיִּית, “ and to the beasts ;” but the words seem more properly to be rendered, “ I have given thee to be fallen upon by (literally, ‘ to the falling upon of’) the birds of every kind, and the beasts of the field, for devouring ;” that is, I have given or appointed thee to be fallen upon and devoured by them.

- 11 They have made it a desolation ;
 Through me it mourneth being desolate ;
 The whole land is made desolate,
 Yet there is no man that layeth it to heart.
- 12 Upon all the plains in the wilderness are the spoilers come ;

instances adduced are of specific names only in the lowest degree ; yet may well serve to evince by analogy, that צבוע may denote a species of bird (of the eagle or falcon kind, perhaps, some of which are known to have beautifully speckled or spotted feathers) as well as the hyæna, and the serpent so called ; and accordingly the generic name דעיס, "the bird of prey," may be added in order to give it its proper discrimination.

It may further be observed in confirmation that דעיס צבוע means a "ravenous bird," and not a beast, in this place, that in the subsequent part of the verse the birds of prey are called upon to come in a body, distinctly from the beasts of the field, whose attendance is likewise particularly required. This I am sensible might be looked upon as a kind of begging the question, were not the point in a manner determined not only by the text of Ezekiel just now cited ; but also by another, (Isaiah xviii. 6,) where both beasts and birds are found joined together in a manner exactly parallel. Now if דעיס be admitted in the second instance in this verse to signify a "bird of prey," it is most likely that it bears the same sense in the first instance also. And, indeed, the context furnishes a good presumption of its so doing. God in the preceding verse had set forth, that his heritage or people had acted towards him as a lion, a particular kind of wild beast ; in this he is supposed to liken their behaviour to that of a bird of prey equally fierce and rapacious : Hence he calls in return upon other ravenous creatures, birds as well as beasts, meaning the Chaldeans and Babylonians, to come forward and avenge his cause, by falling upon this ungrateful race and devouring them.

As there is no determining with certainty the particular species of bird to which the name צבוע is given, the Hebrew name is therefore left in the version.

Verse 11. They have made it a desolation—I know not how שמה can admit of being rendered passively ερηθη, according to the Roman, or ερηνηθη, according to the Alexandrian, ms. of the LXX. All the other versions seem either to have read שמה, or to have supposed שמה to have been written contractedly for it.

Verse 12. Upon all the plains in the wilderness—By שפים במדבר the same I apprehend is meant as by נאות מדבר, chapter ix. 10, namely, the smooth plots of greensward in the waste, or uncultivated country, which afford pasturage to the cattle. See notes on chapter iv. 11, and chapter ix. 10.

Verse 13. And shall not be benefited—Twenty mss. and two editions read ולא instead of לא before יועלו; the Syriac and Vulgate also prefix the conjunction.

Verse 14. Thus saith JEHOVAH—Two mss. read בי כה, “Surely thus:” And this seems to have been the reading in the copies used by the LXX., who have expressed בי by ου.

“שכני—Negligunt pronomen LXX., Chald. הרעים reddit Syr. ‘pastoribus.’ non est pronomen, sed nota numeri pluralis. Vide Buxtorf. Thes. lib. i. cap. 9.”—SECKER. Perhaps הרעים ought here to be rendered “pastors,” or “shepherds,” and the verse to be translated thus:—

Thus saith JEHOVAH;
With respect to all my neighbours,
The pastors who molest the inheritance,
Which I have caused my people Israel to inherit.

Compare verse 10.

Verse 16. Then shall they be built in the midst of my people—The acceptance of the believing Gentiles is here clearly intimated, and their union with the church of God, the middle wall of partition being thrown down. See, concerning the actual accomplishment of this prophecy, Ephes. ii. 13–22.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 THUS said JEHOVAH unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, but put it not in water.
 2 And I got the girdle according to the word of JEHOVAH,
 3 and I put it upon my loins. And the word of JEHOVAH
 4 came unto me a second time, saying, Take the girdle which thou hast gotten, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to 5 Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock. So I

CHAPTER XIII. THIS chapter contains a single and distinct prophecy, which under two symbols, a linen girdle left to rot, and all vessels being filled with wine, foretells the utter destruction that was destined to fall upon the whole Jewish nation, including the individuals of every rank and denomination. (Verses 1-14.) An exhortation to humiliation and repentance is subjoined, (verses 15-21,) and the cause of all the evils is assigned in the general corruption and profligacy of manners that prevailed without prospect of amendment. (Verses 22 to the end.) The particular mention of the joint downfall of the king and queen, verse 18, seems to justify the opinion which ascribes this prophecy to the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, whose fate with that of his queen is in like manner noticed together, chapter xxii. 18.

Verse 1. But put it not in water—God explains at verse 11 what was meant by the symbol of the girdle or sash worn about the loins, namely, his people Israel, whom he purchased and redeemed of old, and attached to himself by a special covenant; that as a girdle serveth for an ornament to the wearer, so they should be subservient to the honour and glory of his name. But it is added, “they would not hearken,” or conform to his intentions; therefore, being polluted with the guilt of their disobedience, they were in that state, and on that very account, to be carried into captivity; conformably to which the prophet was directed not to put the girdle in water, that is, not to wash it, but to leave it in that filthiness which it had contracted in the wearing.

Verse 4. Go to Euphrates—In the margin of our ancient English Bibles it is remarked, that “because this river Perath or Euphrates was far from Jerusalem, it is evident that this was a vision.” And the generality of the best commentators seem to have been of this opinion. Nor indeed is it very credible, that the prophet should have been sent twice upon a journey of such considerable length and difficulty, to a very great loss of his time, when every purpose would have been answered altogether as well, if the transaction had been represented in vision. The same supposition of a vision must be admitted in other cases also, particularly chapter xxv. 15-29; for it would be a downright absurdity to believe, that Jeremiah actually went round with a cup in his hand to all those kings and nations there enumerated, and made them drink of its contents. And yet the prophet makes no more distinction in this latter case, than in that now before us, between mental and bodily action. The reason of which in both cases

- went and hid it near Euphrates, as JEHOVAH had com-6 manded me. And it came to pass after many days, that JEHOVAH said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take from thence the girdle, which I commanded thee to hide 7 there. And I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hidden it; and, behold, the girdle was marred, so that it was good for no-8 thing. And the word of JEHOVAH came unto me, saying,
 9 Thus saith JEHOVAH;
 After this manner will I mar the excellency of Judah,
 And the excellency of Jerusalem exceedingly;
 10 This wicked people,
 Who refuse to hearken to my words,
 Who walk after the lust of their own heart,
 And have gone after strange gods,
 To serve them, and to bow down to them;
 And they shall be as this girdle,
 Which is good for nothing.
 11 For as the girdle cleaveth unto the loins of a man;

most probably was, that as to the matter in hand it made no difference, whether the performances related were visionary or real; for either way they served equally to represent the events, which it was God's pleasure to make known. In like manner St. Paul, who says of himself, that he was caught up once into the third heaven, and another time into paradise, where he heard things beyond the power of utterance, was at the same time himself left in a state of uncertainty, whether he was in the body, or out of the body; but though he could not decide this point, he was not in the least degree doubtful of the truth of what was then revealed to him. (2 Cor. xii. 2-4.) Bochart, however, supposes, that Jeremiah's journeys and all the transactions were real; but that by פרתה is to be understood אפרתה, "Ephrata," a town not far distant from Jerusalem; and supports his conjecture by saying, that the elision of the first letter or syllable א is not uncommon; and that when the Euphrates is meant, the word נהר, "river," always precedes. But, supposing that to be the case, the symbolical representation would not be near so perfect, as wanting that allusion to the place of the captivity of the Jews, which is to be found in the river Euphrates, emphatically called, "The rivers of Babylon," Psalm cxxxvii. 1.

Verse 9. Exceedingly—הרב is probably the adjective רב used adverbially with the article ה, to denote the superlative degree; see Psalm li. 4, where הרב is adopted by the Masoretes instead of הרבה, and is the reading found in twenty-seven mss. and three editions.

הרב—Perhaps this should have been הרבה, the gerund of רבה in Hiphil, signifying "to do a thing much." See note on chapter ii. 12, page 26; also Psalm li. 4. ה follows immediately.

So caused I to cleave unto me
 The whole house of Israel,
 And the whole house of Judah, saith JEHOVAH;
 To be unto me a people,
 And a name, and a praise, and a glory;
 But they hearkened not.

- 12      THOU shalt also speak unto them this word,
 Thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of Israel;
 Every vessel shall be filled with wine.
 And they will say unto thee, Do we not know assuredly
 That every vessel shall be filled with wine?
 13      Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith JEHOVAH,
 Behold I will fill all the inhabitants of this land,
 And the kings that sit in David's stead upon his throne,
 And the priests, and the prophets,
 And all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness:
 14      And I will dash them one against another,
 And the fathers and the children together, saith JEHOVAH;
 I will not pity, neither will I spare,
 Neither will I shew mercy so as not to destroy them.
- 15      Hear ye, and attend; be not lifted up;
 Surely JEHOVAH hath spoken:
 16      Give ye glory unto JEHOVAH your God,
 Before it grows dark,

Verse 12. And they will say unto thee, Do we not know, &c.—This answer, which God foretells would be made by the people to the foregoing denunciation, seems to imply that by a wilful mistake they would put a literal construction upon his words, as if he had meant to tell them of a plentiful vintage that was coming on, which would fill all their wine vessels; and of this they claim to be as good judges as he from the promising appearance of the vineyards. “Do you tell us this as a piece of news, or a supernatural discovery? Is it not evident to us as well as to you?” But the prophet is directed to deal more plainly with them, and to tell them that the wine he meant was not such as would exhilarate, but such as would intoxicate; being no other than what would be poured out of the wine cup of God's fury to the subversion of all ranks and orders of men among them. Compare chapter xxv. 15–29; and see Bishop Lowth's notes on Isaiah i. 22; li. 21.

Verse 13. In David's stead—This is evidently the literal construction of לִדָּוִד, the particle ל signifying vice, loco, “in the stead of.” See Noldius.

Verse 16. Before it grows dark—יִחְשֶׁךְ. Twenty-three mss. and three editions read יִחְשֶׁךְ, according to which our English translators have ren-

And before your feet stumble upon the mountains of gloominess ;

And when ye look for light,

It there be turned into the shadow of death, even gross darkness.

17 But if ye will not hear it, whilst ye are in secure places ;

dered, "before he cause the darkness." But the more general reading is יחשך, the future in Kal of חשך, which signifies "to be or grow dark." This seems rather preferable, and is conformable to the version of the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, "before it grows dark ;" that is, before the time of darkness or distress comes on ; darkness being a common emblem of distress and misery.

The mountains of gloominess—By הרי נשף I imagine those caverns and holes in the mountains are meant, which the Jews were wont to make use of for burying-places ; the gloomy shade of which probably gave rise to that expression we meet with both here and elsewhere, "the shadow of death." The prophet Isaiah makes use of much the same images, Isaiah lix. 9, 10, where he represents the people as thus complaining of the wretchedness of their situation :—

We look for light, but behold darkness !
For brightness, but we walk in obscurity.
We grope for the wall like the blind,
Even as those that are eyeless do we grope :
We stumble at midday, as in the dusk,
In desolate places, like the dead.

Our translators seem rightly to have derived אשמים, in the last of these lines, from אשם, "to make desolate ;" and the "desolate places" probably intend the same as "the dark mountains," those solitary and gloomy mansions, at which when "the dead" arrive, they may, by a poetical image, be supposed to stumble because of the darkness, and to fall so as never to rise more. Compare Psalm xlv. 20 ; cxliii. 3.

It there be turned, &c.—The Masoretes for ישיה substitute ישיה ; and so it is found in sixteen mss. and four editions. This variation affords ground to suspect a mistake in the text ; but it is probable that the true reading was neither ישיה nor ישיה, but ישיה, the future in Niphal, which the sense seems to require ; and is indeed only a transposition of the י and י in ישיה. The LXX. render ושמיה, και εκει, and none of the ancient versions express more than one verb.

Verse 17. Whilst ye are in secure places—במסתרם. סתר in Hiphil signifies "to secure" or "protect" from danger or evil ; (Psalm xvii. 8 ; xxxi. 21 ; lxiv. 2, &c.) and both מסתר and סתר being nouns, denote a "place of security." See Deut. xxxii. 38 ; Psalm xxxi. 21 ; lxi. 5 ; cxix. 114 ; Isaiah iv. 6 ; Jer. xlix. 10. All the ancient versions, and the modern ones, as far as I know, are agreed in connecting במסתרם with the words that follow ; but it seems evident to me that the best sense arises from joining it with the preceding context ; the prophet telling the people, that if they would not take warning in time, whilst they were still secure and

My soul shall mourn from forth of its body, and shall weep sorely,

And mine eye shall run down with tears,

Because the flock of JEHOVAH is carried into captivity.

18 Say to the king and to the queen, Humble yourselves, sit ye down ;

For he will cause to fall from your heads the diadem of your glory.

19 The cities of the south are shut up, and none openeth ;

The captivity of Judah is fully effected, the captivity of one and all.

unhurt, and had it in their power to prevent the threatened evils by a sincere repentance, all he could do for them would be to sympathize with them, and bewail the calamities they brought upon their own heads.

From forth of its body—The LXX., Chaldee, and Vulgate, seem to have taken גוה for גאה, and our English translators have accordingly rendered it “pride.” None seem to have perceived that גוה is a compound of גו, “a body,” and the affix pronoun ה; and that the meaning is no other than that the soul should show its internal grief “from the face of its body,” מפני גוה, that is, “by the outward signs of bodily weeping;” which answers to the parallel line, “And mine eye shall run down with tears.”

Verse 18. Humble yourselves, sit ye down—That sitting was a posture of humiliation under circumstances of affliction and distress, see Judges xx. 26 ; Job ii. 8 ; Isaiah iii. 26 ; see Bishop Lowth’s note on the last-cited passage ; and see HARMER’S Observations, chap. vi. obs. 25.

He will cause to fall from your heads—יורד can neither have מראשיתכם nor עטרת for its subject, for obvious grammatical reasons. I apprehend it to be written contractedly for יורד, the third person singular of the future in Hiphil, whose subject is יהוה, found in the preceding context. ראש may be supposed to have a plural with a feminine termination, ראשות, as well as a masculine, ראשים ; in which case ראשות seems to signify the “bolsters,” “pillows,” or “cushions,” on which the head rested in lying down, and upon which the regal ornaments were laid. See Gen. xxviii. 11, 18 ; 1 Sam. xix. 13, 16 ; xxvi. 7, 11, 12, 16 ; 1 Kings xix. 6. Twenty-eight mss. and six editions read at large, מראשותיכם.

“מראשותיכם, ‘from your heads.’ ‘Multæ voces habent duplicem terminationem pluralem.’ (Buxtorf. Thes. lib. i. cap. 10, in fine.)”—SECKER.

Verse 19. The cities of the south—Judah, lying south in respect of Chaldea, which, in the next verse, is characterized by the name of “the north ;” the “cities of the south” may mean the cities of Judah in general ; or they may mean those cities in particular which lay in the southern parts of Judah, at the greatest distance from the enemy ; which yet were subjected to the common calamity, as well as those which were nearer at hand. And this suits rather better with the sense of the next line. By their being “shut up,” is meant that they were uninhabited ; and, of course, the gates were kept shut, and not opened for the admission of passengers to and fro.

- 20 Lift up your eyes, and see those that are coming from the north ;
Where is the flock that was given thee, the sheep of thy glory ?
- 21 What wilt thou say, when visitation shall come upon thee ?
Seeing it is thou that teachest them to be rulers in chief over thee ;
Shall not pangs seize thee, like as a woman in travail ?

The captivity of Judah is fully effected, the captivity of one and all— הגלת יהודה כלה הגלת שלומים. It is hardly possible to admit of the translation given of these words, either by the ancient or modern interpreters, although they seem not to deviate widely from their general sense. הגלת is generally considered as the third person singular of the preter in Hophal, from גלה. But this, in the masculine, is הגלה; in the feminine, הגלתה. Nor can כלה in any wise agree with יהודה, either as the feminine of כל, or as having the feminine affix ה; because יהודה is masculine. But הגלת is the noun גלה in regimine with the article prefixed, and כלה is a verb which properly signifies, “is fully wrought,” or “brought about.” As for שלומים, or שלמים, as it stands in twenty mss. and five editions, I cannot conceive it to be used adverbially, or in any wise like it. שלם signifies, “full,” “complete,” “entire;” so that I apprehend שלמים may very fairly be taken for the integral parts which constitute the whole taken together, and not some without the other.

Verse 20. Where is the flock that was given thee—Nations and cities are often spoken of under the figure of distinct female personages, as “the daughter of Judah,” “the daughter of Sion, or Jerusalem,” “the daughter of Tyre, Egypt, Edom, Babylon,” &c. The single female, then, that is here addressed, must be the daughter of Judah; who is asked, with a sarcastical sneer, what was become of all the numerous multitudes which God had given her formerly, constituting, like flocks of sheep, the national wealth and glory.

Verse 21. Seeing it is thou that teachest, &c.—Thirty-one mss. and seven editions read למדה; but למדתי seems as likely to have been the true reading, if the י be taken as paragogic to the feminine participle Benoni; of which frequent instances occur. See chap. xxii. 23; li. 13; and Buxtorf. Thes. Gram. lib. i. cap. 13; Annot. ad particip. præsens. Some have understood the alliances contracted heretofore with the Assyrians by Ahaz, and the conduct of Hezekiah towards the ambassadors of the king of Babylon, to be here alluded to, as having paved or prepared the way for the future invasion of the country by the Chaldeans. But I rather think that the irreligious and wicked manners of the people are principally designed; which put them out of the protection of Almighty God, and rendered them an easy conquest to any enemy that came against them. Thus they taught their enemies to oppress and to be lords over them; against whom, but for their own faults, they might have maintained their security and independence.

A woman in travail—For לדה all the ancient versions seem to have read

- 22 And when thou shalt say in thine heart, Wherefore have these things befallen me ?
 For the abundance of thine iniquity thy skirts are uncovered, thy heels are left bare.
- 23 Can a Cushite change his skin, or a leopard his spots ?
 Then may ye prevail with them to do good who have learned to do evil.

ילדה, or, יולדה, the ' having been, in all probability, since lost by accident. Six mss. still retain the ' in לידה, though transposed out of its proper place ; unless we should think ללדה a more likely reading, which word occurs, Isaiah xxxvii. 3.

Verse 22. Have these things befallen me—For קראני, twenty-one mss. and two editions read קראוני.

Thy skirts are uncovered, thy heels are left bare—This is a periphrasis for “being forced into captivity ;” it being the barbarous custom of conquerors in ancient times to treat their captives with such indignities, in conducting them to the place of their intended residence. See Isaiah iii. 17 ; xx. 4 ; xlvii. 2, 3 ; Nahum iii. 5. חמס implies, “stripping,” or, “tearing off by violence.”

Verse 23. A Cushite—It has been a matter of great dispute among the learned, whether the Cushites were Ethiopians or Arabians. BOCHART, among many others, is thoroughly persuaded that the latter are always designed in Scripture by that appellation. (Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 2.) I am much inclined to be of his opinion ; not hereby supposing that all the Arabians are so denominated, but principally those who bordered upon Egypt, along the banks of the Red Sea, and whom we find closely connected with the Egyptians. (Chapter xlvi. 9 ; Isaiah xx. 3–5 ; xxxvii. 9.) And this situation is, I think, indisputably confirmed by 2 Chron. xxi. 16, where God is said to have “stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines and of the Arabians that were on the confines of the Cushites.” Here we find a distinction between the Arabians properly so called, and the Cushites. But, by the “Arabians,” who joined with the Philistines, it is most natural to understand those of Arabia Petræa, who, together with the Philistines, were on the confines of the Cushites, the people inhabiting along the western coasts of the Red Sea ; but could not, in any wise, be said to be contiguous to the Ethiopians, since the whole length of Egypt lay between them. But the text now before us is principally insisted on, (by those who hold the Cushites to have been Ethiopians,) as alluding to the sable skins of the natives of Ethiopia. It is probable, however, that the Cushites that lay along the Red Sea, if not altogether black, were of a much more swarthy complexion than the Jews, as approaching so much nearer to the sun, and, from their manner of living, being exposed so much more to the rays of it. Our ingenious traveller, SANDYS, speaking of the Moors that now inhabit Egypt, and who, he says, were descended of the Arabians, (meaning, no doubt, the Cushites we are speaking of,) expressly describes them to be “tawny of complexion.”—SANDYS'S Travels, book ii.

Then may ye prevail with them—This is clearly the sense of תוכלו.

- 24 I have therefore scattered them as the stubble passing before the wind of the desert.
- 25 This is thy lot, thy measured portion from me, saith
JEHOVAH,
Who hast forgotten me, and hast trusted in falsehood :
- 26 Therefore have I uncovered thy skirts before thee,
That thy shame may be seen, thine adulteries, and thy neighings.
- 27 Thou hast devised thy whoredom upon the hills,
In the fields I have seen thine abominations :
Wo unto thee, O Jerusalem ! thou wilt not be clean ;
How much longer yet shall it be before thou wilt ?

See chapter xx. 7 ; xxxviii. 22. And, by rendering thus, we find the proper antecedent of אַפִּיצָם, in the next line.

Verse 24. The wind of the desert—"The most vehement storms to which Judea was subject, came from the great desert country to the south of it." See Bishop Lowth's note on Isaiah xxi. 1.

Verse 26. Therefore have I also uncovered, &c.—Mr. Lowth, on verse 22, observes, that it was the usual punishment inflicted on lewd women to strip them naked, and expose them to the eyes of the world. This was a way of publishing their faults to their utter disgrace ; as was the avowed design of God in the present instance.

Verse 27. Thou hast devised thy whoredom—זָמַת I take not to be a noun, but a verb, from זָמַם. It is hereby designed to reproach Jerusalem with having practised her idolatry in such a deliberate manner, as showed it to proceed from a steady attachment, which at the same time she was at no pains to disguise, having chosen the most public places for the scene of her wickedness. Seven MSS. and two editions read זָמַתֶּךָ in the plural.

"Appear, thine adulteries and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom. I have seen thine abominations on the hills in the fields." So the old versions."—SECKER.

Thou wilt not be clean—Our English version supposes an interrogation here : "Wilt thou not be made clean ?" But all the ancient versions understand the words לֹא תִטְהָרִי as simply declarative of the cause for which the woe was pronounced. The LXX. render, οτι ουκ εκαθαρισθης. The Syriac also expresses the causal particle.

How much longer yet shall it be before thou wilt ?—In the margin of our English Bible the words are literally translated, "After when yet ?" But this is manifestly an elliptical form of speech, and requires to be supplied by a repetition of the foregoing words, לֹא תִטְהָרִי. "After what time yet wilt thou not be clean ?" that is, How much longer shall it be before thou wilt ?

"לֹא תִטְהָרִי אַחֲרֵי מָתִי עַד"—Puto legendum יַאֲחֲרֵי, et ejusmodi phrasin esse, cujus est יוֹמָלָא אַחֲרֵי Num. xiv. 24, et alibi."—SECKER.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 THE WORD OF JEHOVAH WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH.

2 BECAUSE of the drought Judah mourneth,

CHAP. XIV. I CANNOT find any mark, internal or external, whereby to ascertain the date of the prophecy delivered in this and the following chapter. Some have imagined, that the mention made of false prophets and their predictions at verse 13 of this chapter, according with what is said, chapter xxiii. 9-32, is a proof that both prophecies belonged nearly to the same period of time; and the latter of them was undoubtedly delivered in the reign of Jehioakim, as we shall see hereafter. But from this circumstance of agreement nothing can with certainty be inferred, because we find the like mention made of false prophets, both in preceding times, (see chapter v. 31,) and in those that are subsequent. (Chapter xxvii. 14, &c.) As for what is said of the drought, and of the calamities of sword and famine, it is evidently spoken prophetically of what should happen in future, without limitation of distance. Nothing therefore appearing to the contrary, the presumption is in favour of the order in which these chapters are found at present; and we are justified in admitting, that this prophecy may have been delivered in the beginning of Jehoiakim's reign, not long after the foregoing, since the subject-matter will equally fall in with this season as with any other.

The six first verses of this chapter foretell great distress that should be occasioned in Judah by means of a long drought. The prophet in the name of the people makes a confession of sins, and supplicates the divine mercy. (Verses 7-9.) God declareth his resolution to punish, and will not be entreated. (Verses 10-12.) Jeremiah complains of false prophets, who amuse the people with contrary predictions; God disclaimeth them, and threatens both them, and the people who listened to them, with sword and famine. (Verses 13-18.) The prophet renews his supplications in the people's name and behalf. (Verses 19 to the end of the chapter.)

Verse 2. Because of the drought—על־דברי הבצרות. These words are usually taken in connexion with the preceding; but I have detached them for the following reasons: First, because the word of JEHOVAH in the prophecy which follows comprehends other matters, and not the drought singly; secondly, על־דברי more properly signifies "because," or "by means of," and thus specifies the direct and immediate cause of the mourning of Judah; and, thirdly, the hemistichs are hereby better distinguished.

The word הבצרות, which our English translators have rendered "the dearth," is derived from בצר, which is used in the same sense as עצר, to "withhold" or "restrain;" so that it might indeed signify a withholding of provisions, or making a scarcity of them; but, from the context, it is obvious, that a withholding of rain, or "a drought," is rather intended; as בצרה is also rendered, chapter xvii. 8, and as all the ancient versions have here represented. The plural number is adopted, most probably to denote that the usual showers were withholden, not for one season only, but for a continued succession of them; as was the case in the reign of king Ahab, (1 Kings xvii. 1,) when, according to the reckoning of St. James, (chapter

- And the gates thereof languish ;
 They are in deep mourning for the land ;
 And the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.
- 3 The nobles also have sent their younger ones for water ;
 They came to the pits ; they found no water ;
 They returned with their vessels empty ;
 They were ashamed and confounded,
 They covered their heads.
- 4 Because the ground is crumbled to dust,
 Forasmuch as there hath been no rain in the land,
 The husbandmen were ashamed ;
 They covered their heads.
- 5 When the hind also had calved in the fields,
 Then it was deserted, because there was no grass.

v. 17,) "it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months." At what time the great drought, here mentioned, took place, we find not among the records of history. Some intimations of a like kind are given, chapter iii. 3 ; see the note there. That it was a calamity incident to the land of Israel, and applied as a punishment for sin, may be seen from comparing Deut. xi. 17 ; xxviii. 23 : 1 Kings viii. 35.

The gates thereof languish ; they are in deep mourning—The gates of cities being places of public resort, where the courts of justice were held, and other common business transacted, seem here to be put for the persons that meet there ; in like manner as when we say, "The court is in mourning," we mean the persons that attend the court or king's palace. So that by this passage we are to understand, that all the persons who appear in public are dejected, and put on black, or mourning, on account of the national distress.

Verse 3. Their younger ones—Six mss. at present, one of which is the ancient Bodleian one, N<sup>o</sup>. 1, and four others, as they stood originally, confirm the Masoretic reading צעיריהם ; as do also the oldest printed Bible, and one other edition in its marginal notes. Four other mss. read צעיריהם. The LXX. render τὸς νεωτέρους αὐτῶν, "the younger members of their family," or their children. For we find, that in the simplicity of ancient times the children of considerable persons, particularly the daughters, were employed in the menial offices of drawing water for the use of the family and of the flocks. (Genesis xxiv. 13, 15 ; xxix. 6–10 ; Exodus ii. 16.) In like manner HOMER describes the daughter of king Alcinous going in person with her maids to the river to wash the clothes of the family. (Odyss. z. 50, &c.)

They covered their heads—See note on chapter ii. 37. Two mss. omit the conjunction ו in ויהפּוּ, as in the next verse ; and the use of the Asyndeton seems not only more elegant, but more conformable to grammatical rule in this place ; for the ו would regularly have a converse force.

Verse 5. When the hind also had calved in the fields, then it was deserted—The LXX. and Theodotion render as if they had read, אילנות בשדה ילדו, ויעזבו. And, indeed, as the text stands at present, we are obliged to have

6 And the wild asses stood on the plains,
They snuffed up the wind like dragons;
Their eyes were wasted,
Because there was no herbage.

7 Though our iniquities have testified against us,
O JEHOVAH, do thou act with a regard to thine own name; recourse to the sense of the preceding words, rather than the words themselves, for a subject of יעזוב, "it was then deserted;" it, namely, what she had just calved, was deserted. But if we could suppose a mistake in the word בשרה, and by the slightest alteration imaginable substitute בשרה, it would clear up every difficulty, and the sense of the passage would be highly improved. בשרה signifies "her own flesh," one of her own kind, a part of herself, in whose preservation she is interested by the strongest impulse of nature; yet even this is abandoned through dire necessity. Near relations are called one's own flesh. "He is our brother and our flesh." (Gen. xxxvii. 27.) Much more may the offspring of a female be called "her own flesh." I submit this, however, as a mere conjecture only; as the corruption, if one, must have been of a date prior to the oldest versions; and there is no trace to be met with of any thing like the alteration proposed. But of the substitution of the ו and ר for each other by mistake we have numberless instances; and perhaps there is no mistake more easy to be fallen into.

Verse 6. The plains—שפיים. See note on chapter iv. 11, 12.

They snuffed up the wind like dragons—They sucked in the air for want of water to cool their internal heat. BOCHART (De Sac. Animal. par. i. lib. 3, cap. 16) observes, that the comparison to dragons or great serpents is very just; for Ælian (cap. ii. 19) describes these animals as standing daily for some hours with the head erect, and the mouth wide open towards the sky, and by the force of their breath, σινοει αγγυ, as by an attractive charm, drawing to them not only the air, but the very birds as they fly along. Varro thus speaks of the ox:—

*Et bos suspiciens cælum (mirabile visu!)
Naribus aërium patulis decerpsit odorem.*

And is imitated by VIRGIL, Georg. i. 375.

————— *bucula cælum
Suspiciens patulis captavit naribus auras.*

The same author, Bochart, adds, that, "the eyes of the wild asses are properly noticed, as being by nature extremely sharp-sighted." But, for want of nourishment these must fail and be exhausted.

Verse 7. Do thou act with a regard to thine own name—That is, Deal not with us according to our deservings, but so as not to give occasion to strangers to speak evil of thy name, to question thy power, wisdom, or goodness. So God says, (Ezek. xx. 9, 14, 22, 44,) that, amidst the various provocations he had received, he had still acted uniformly upon this principle.

For our apostasies have been many ;
We have sinned against thee.

8 O thou hope of Israel,
His saviour in time of distress,
Wherefore wilt thou be as a stranger in the land ?
And as a traveller that turneth in for a night's lodging ?

9 Wherefore wilt thou be as one in a deep sleep ?
As a man that hath no power to save ?
Seeing thou art in the midst of us, O JEHOVAH,
And we are called by thy name,
Desert us not.

10 Thus hath JEHOVAH said concerning this people,
They have so loved to wander,
Their feet have they not refrained,
When JEHOVAH bruised them not :
Now will he call their iniquity to remembrance,
And will take account of their sins.

11 Therefore said JEHOVAH unto me,
Pray not for this people in a friendly manner.

12 When they fast, I will not hearken to their cry ;
And when they offer a burnt offering or a meat offering, I will not accept them ;

Verse 8. As a stranger, and as a traveller—That is, as one who, having no permanent interest in the land, is little concerned for its welfare.

Verse 9. As one in a deep sleep—נדרם is a word that occurs no where else in the Hebrew, nor is acknowledged by the kindred dialects. The LXX. seem to have preserved the true reading, νύκτωρ, somno obrutus. In one MS. the ה is upon a rasure. Of God it is said, Psalm cxxi. 3, 4, that he is a guardian and protector, that never slumbereth nor sleepeth.

“ נדרם—נדרם, LXX. alibi semel sic reddunt ; νύκτωρ semel ; et הלוך σπνός sapè.”—SECKER.

“ Verse 10. וְכֵן אֲהֲבִי—‘This they love ; (see chapter v. 31 ; Amos iv. 5:) they restrain not their feet from wandering.’”—SECKER.

Their feet—Four MSS. read וְרַגְלֵיהֶם with the conjunction ; “and their feet have they not refrained.”

When JEHOVAH bruised them not—All the ancient versions, as well as our English one, consider רצם as formed from רצה, to “accept” or “delight in.” But it seems rather to belong to the verb רץ, to “bruise” or “crush.”

Verse 11. In a friendly manner—טובה denotes a kind, benevolent, and friendly disposition in the prophet, inducing him to wish and promote the welfare of the people as far as it lay in his power. And such seems to be the general sense of לְטוֹבָה in the Old Testament.

But by sword, and by famine, and by pestilence,
I will make an end of them.

- 13 Then said I, 'Alas ! O Lord JEHOVAH !
Behold the prophets say unto them,
Ye shall not see the sword,
Neither shall famine come unto you ;
But peace will I assuredly give you in this place.
- 14 Then said JEHOVAH unto me ;
The prophets prophesy falsely in my name :
I have not sent them, nor commissioned them,
Neither have I spoken unto them ;
A false vision, and divination, and vanity,
And the guile of their own heart, do these prophesy unto
you.
- 15 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH ;
As concerning the prophets who prophesy in my name,
Though I have not sent them, but they say of themselves,
Sword and famine shall not be in this land ;
By sword and by famine shall those prophets be consumed.
- 16 And the people, to whom these prophesy,
Shall be cast forth in the streets of Jerusalem
By means of the famine and the sword ;
And they shall have none to bury them ;
They, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters ;
And I will pour upon them their own wickedness.
- 17 And thou shalt say unto them this word ;
Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day,
And let them not cease ;

Verse 13. Assuredly—אמת is here also used adverbially, as chap. x. 10.

Verse 14. And vanity—For ואלול, the Masoretes read ואליל, which is confirmed by sixteen mss. and three editions.

And the guile—For ותרמות the Masoretes read ותרומית, and so do thirteen mss. and four editions, with the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate. But the LXX. render in the plural number, και προκτρεσεις.

“ וקסם ואלול—Videtur vel prima vox mendosa esse, vel aliquid deesse.”—SECKER. It appears to me, that חזון שקר signifies “an imaginary vision or revelation,” which was not real ; קסם, “something supposed to be discovered by the art of divination ;” ואלול or אליל, “the oracular response of an idol ;” but תרמות לבם, “the fraudulent suggestion of a man’s own heart,” which he knew to be false, but uttered with an intent to deceive.

Verse 16. I will pour upon them their own wickedness—That is, by metonymy, the ill effects and consequences of it.

- Because a great hurt hath she received,
 The virgin daughter of my people,
 A blow that is exceedingly painful.
- 18 If I go out into the fields,
 Then behold those that are slain by the sword !
 And when I enter the city,
 Then behold those that pine with famine !
 Yet both the prophet and also the priest
 Go trafficking about the city, and take no knowledge.
- 19 Hast thou altogether rejected Judah ?
 Hath thy soul abhorred Sion ?
 Wherefore hast thou smitten us, and we have no remedy ?
 We look for peace, and there is no good,
 For a time of healing, and behold terror ?
- 20 We acknowledge, O JEHOVAH, our wickedness,
 And the iniquity of our fathers ;
 For we have sinned against thee.
- 21 Spurn us not for thy name's sake,
 Dishonour not the throne of thy glory ;
 Call to mind, annul not thy covenant with us.
- 22 Are there among the vanities of the heathen any that can cause rain ?

Verse 18. Go trafficking about the city—The meaning is, they go about with their false doctrines and lying predictions, as pedlars do with their wares, seeking their own gain. St. Paul characterizes such sort of teachers in much the same terms : Περιπατούντες εν πανουργία, (και) δολουντες τον λογον του Θεου. (2 Cor. iv. 2.) And St. Peter says of them, Εν πλεονεξία πλαστοις λογοις υμας εμπορευσονται. (2 Peter ii. 3.)

And take no knowledge—They pay no regard to the miseries in which their country is involved, but act as if they were totally insensible of them. See the verb ידע used in this sense, Isaiah i. 3 ; lviii. 3.

Verse 19. We look for peace—Here the construction is more marked by the preceding words יאמין לנו כרפא, than it is, chapter viii. 15 ; for the translation might proceed thus : “ A looking for peace,” &c. or, more at large, “ Wherefore is there to us a looking for peace ? ” &c. See note on chapter viii. 15.

Verse 20. And the iniquity of our fathers—The Syriac and Chaldee read ויעני, and it is not improbable that the conjunction may have been lost in the preceding. But if there be no conjunction, then I conceive that ויעני may be considered as a verb, and construed thus : “ We acknowledge, O JEHOVAH, that we have wrought wickedly the iniquity of our fathers ; ” that is, have practised over again the same wickedness, of which our fathers set the example.

Or can the heavens give showers?
 Art not thou He, O JEHOVAH our God?
 And we have looked up to thee,
 Because thou hast done all these things.

CHAPTER XV.

- 1      THEN said JEHOVAH unto me;
         Though Moses or Samuel should stand before me,
         My soul would not be moved in favour of this people;
         Send them away from before me, and let them depart.
- 2      And it shall be, when they shall say unto thee, Whither shall we depart?
         Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith JEHOVAH;
         They that are for death, unto death;
         And they that are for the sword, unto the sword;
         And they that are for famine, unto famine;
         And they that are for captivity, unto captivity.
- 3      And I will commission against them four species, saith
         JEHOVAH;
         The sword to slay, and the dogs to drag about,
         And the birds of the heavens, and the beasts of the earth,
         To devour and to destroy.

CHAP. XV. To the supplications at the close of the preceding chapter God replies by declaring, that not even the intercession of his favoured servants, Moses and Samuel, should divert him from executing his purpose of vengeance against Judah, which is denounced in terms of great severity. (Verses 1-9.) At verse 10, Jeremiah breaks out into a passionate exclamation on account of the odium and persecution that was brought upon him. God reproves him for speaking slightly of the divine aid, the benefit of which he had already experienced; and threatens him with the loss of his fortunes as a punishment for his sins. (Verses 11-14.) The prophet deprecates the ill effects of God's displeasure, representing the cheerful readiness with which he had obeyed the divine call, and the continual uneasiness he had felt in contemplating the melancholy subject of his commission. (Verses 15-18.) Assurances of protection and security are renewed to him, on condition of obedience and fidelity on his part. (Verses 19 to the end.)

Verse 1. Send them away from before me, and let them depart—That is as much as to say, Tell them to come no more to me with their supplications, but to go out of my sanctuary. So Isaiah i. 12, 13: "When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hands? Tread my courts no more." A strong declaration of determined resentment!

Verse 2. For death—It is obvious from the foregoing enumeration, (chapter xiv. 12,) that מוֹת, "death," here means "the pestilence." So also chapter xviii. 21.

- 4 And I will give them up to vexation in all kingdoms of the earth,
On account of Manasseh the son of Hezekiah king of Judah,
Because of all that he did in Jerusalem.
- 5 For who shall have pity upon thee, O Jerusalem ?
Or who shall condole with thee ?
Or who shall turn aside to solicit for thy welfare ?
- 6 Thou hast forsaken me, saith JEHOVAH,
Thou wilt go backward :
Therefore have I stretched out my hand against thee, and destroyed thee.
- 7 I am weary of forbearing them ; therefore I have scattered them with a van ;

Verse 4. To vexation—"According to the Masora, we have here a metathesis of a letter, לוועה for לוועה ; but the word in the text bears a greater affinity to its root ווע, and is in general more agreeable to the genius of the language than the proposed lection."—DR. DURELL.

Twenty mss. and three editions concur with the above-mentioned Masoretic reading. But though the word is read with the like variation in other places, the Samaritan text represents it, Dent. xxviii. 25, as we read here, לוועה ; and וועה occurs, Isaiah xxviii. 19, without any opposition from the Masoretes, or any variation in the mss., except that in one ms. it is contractedly written ועה. But it is more material to observe, that the sense in which our translators have generally rendered לוועה, "to be removed," or "for a removing," seems not at all competent to it. For the verb ווע, signifies to "move, agitate, or disquiet ;" but not to remove or transfer from one place to another. Accordingly, וועה is rightly rendered "a vexation," Isaiah xxviii. 19 ; and לוועה, "to trouble," 2 Chron. xxix. 8.

Because of all that he did—Instead of על אשר, all the ancient versions appear to have read אשר ; and so it is found in the text of three mss., and in the margin of one more.

Verse 5. To solicit for thy welfare—לשאל לשלם לך. This phrase, 2 Sam. viii. 10, seems to signify simply, "to enquire after one's welfare." The meaning here is, "Who will go out of his way to show thee any office of humanity, either to inquire after thy welfare, or to petition God for it ?" Either sense is admissible.

Verse 7. I am weary of forbearing them—Our translators have rendered, "I am weary of repenting," deriving הנהם from נהם ; and the sense is a very unexceptionable one, as God is said to "repent" when he remits in mercy the punishment due to sin, and is moved by some sufficient reason not to execute his threatened vengeance. But in this place I am rather inclined to follow the LXX. and Syriac, which seem to have considered הנהם as the infinitive Hiphil from ינה, with the affix ׁם, and signifying, to "leave them unpunished," or "unmolested."

- With my whirlwind have I rendered the land childless ;
 I have destroyed my people ;
 From their ways have they not returned.
 8 Their widows have been multiplied by me beyond the sand of the sea,
 I have brought against their mother a chosen one, spoiling at noonday :
 I have caused to fall upon her suddenly an enemy and terrors.

With my whirlwind—שער, with a Sin, signifies “a storm or whirlwind,” the same as סער; and this seems more apposite here, than to render בשערי הארץ, “in the gates of the land.”

From their ways—Two MSS. and the Syriac version read ומדרכיהם, “but, or yet, from their ways,” &c. There is, however, a like ellipsis of the discretive particle, verse 1; and again, verse 10, of this chapter.

Verse 8. Their widows have been multiplied by me—Eleven MSS. and three editions read, with the Masora, אלמנותי; besides eight MSS. more, which read contractedly אלמנותי—לי, “by” or “through me;” that is, according to my disposition or appointment. See note on chapter iv. 12.

Against their mother, להם עליאם—אם signifies here “a mother city;” see 2 Sam. xx. 19; and להם is used as a possessive pronoun. One MS. reads לחם, which, being interpreted “war” or “fighting,” would afford a good sense. The LXX. totally omit להם.

“The nation in general is called the mother of each Jew in particular; Isaiah l. 1; Hosea ii. 2-5; or, as Lowth thinks, Jerusalem.”—SECKER.

A chosen one—Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon is undoubtedly here designed, who might be called “a chosen one,” as being selected by God to be the instrument and executioner of his vengeance. In the margin of our Bibles, בחור is rendered “a young man;” and this also would very properly characterize the same person. For JOSEPHUS (Contra Apion. lib. i.) cites from Berosus, the Chaldean historian, a passage to the following purport; that “Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, hearing that the provinces of Egypt, Cœle-Syria, and Phœnice had revolted, and being himself infirm through age, sent a part of his forces under his son Nebuchadnezzar, then in the prime of youth, οὗτις ἐστὶ ἐν ἡλικίᾳ, by whom those provinces were again reduced.” This was the expedition said to have been undertaken by him in the third year of Jehoiakim, king of Judah; in the course of which, after having first defeated the Egyptian army at Carchemish, he laid siege to Jerusalem, took and plundered it, carrying away much spoil and many captives to Babylon. See chapter xlv. 2; Dan. i. 1-3; 2 Kings xxiv. 1.

An enemy and terrors—None of the ancient versions, except the Vulgate, seem to have conceived עיר to signify “a city” in this place; nor is it possible to construe the text as it is done there, and in our English version. It is most probable that עיר is either a mistake for ער, “an enemy,” or that it is sometimes used in that sense. And עיר ובהלות may, by an Hendiadys, stand for “a terrible enemy.”

- 9 She that hath borne seven is become feeble,
 She hath given up the ghost ;
 Her sun is gone down while it is yet day ;
 She is ashamed and confounded ;
 And their remnant will I give to the sword
 Before the face of their enemies, saith JEHOVAH.
- 10 Wo unto me, O my mother !
 For thou hast borne me a man of strife,
 And a man of contention throughout the whole land ;
 Yet have I neither lent on usury, nor have they taken usury of me.
- 11 They have reviled me all of them, said JEHOVAH ;
 Have I not brought thee off advantageously ?
 Have I not stood by thee in time of evil,
 And in time of distress against the enemy ?

Verse 9. She that hath borne seven—See 1 Sam. ii. 5. Seven is put for “many,” and the multitude of the inhabitants or children of Jerusalem, the mother city, is here alluded to.

Her sun is gone down—Literally, as the text now stands, “She is gone down, her sun, while it is yet day.” But the Masora reads בא שמישה, instead of באה, and has the sanction of four mss. Houbigant, however, insists that שמישה is both feminine and masculine.

Verse 10. For thou hast borne me a man of strife—The prophet here complains of the opposition he met with from his countrymen for speaking unwelcome truths, which had occasioned him as much uneasiness as if he had engaged in the most invidious of all occupations, and the most likely to engender strife,—that of lending and borrowing upon usury. The discrete particle is here elliptically wanting before לא־ינשיתי; as has been already noted on verse 7. One ms. reads ולא.

Verse 11. They have reviled me, all of them, said JEHOVAH—מקללוני cannot certainly be right; for it does not appear how such a word can be formed. I apprehend, therefore, that the reading should be כלהם קללוני; and that they are the words, not of Jeremiah, but of God; who, resenting what had fallen from the mouth of the prophet, complains that the whole nation, one and all, his prophet as well as the rest, had spoken reproachfully of him; and then proceeds to remind the prophet what an especial care he had taken of him.

Have I not brought thee off advantageously?—For שרותך the Masoretic reading is שריתך, and it is countenanced by five mss. and three editions. But there are many other variations. Nineteen mss. read שרותיך; twelve שריתך; one שארותיך; one שארתך; one שארייתך; and one שארייתך. But among all these שריתך seems the most probable, which, coming from שרה, to “set loose,” or “let go,” may very properly be understood of God’s you.

extricating or bringing the prophet out of all the dangers and difficulties he had hitherto encountered, לִטְבוֹ, "happily," or in an advantageous manner ; so that he had little reason to censure or reproach his Patron and Benefactor.

Verse 12. Shall he break iron in pieces—The subject of יָרֵעַ seems to be "the enemy," הָאֵיִב, mentioned in the preceding verse ; and the meaning may be, "Shall the enemy crush or overpower one whom I have made like the hardest iron and brass ?" alluding to what God had said to the prophet when he first engaged him in his service ; chapter i. 18. "Iron from the north" is perhaps justly supposed to denote in a primary sense that species of hardened iron, or steel, called in Greek χαλῦψ, from the Chalybes, a people bordering on the Euxine Sea, and consequently lying to the north of Judea, by whom the art of tempering steel is said to have been discovered. Strabo speaks of this people as known in former times by the name of Chalybes, but afterwards called Chaldæi ; and mentions their iron mines. (Lib. xii. pag. 549.) These, however, were a different people from the Chaldeans, who were united with the Babylonians.

Verse 13. Not for price—That is, not making thee any compensation, but inflicting these losses upon thee as a punishment for thy sins.

But for all thy sins—The ancient Bodleian MS., N<sup>o</sup>. 1., and one more, with the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, omit the conjunction ו. The Syriac and Chaldee also omit בָּל, and seem to have read only בְּחַטֹּאתֶיךָ, "Because of thy sins."

Verse 14. And I will cause them to pass with thine enemies—The same substantives וְאֹיְצֵרֶיךָ וְאֵיִבֶיךָ serve for accusatives to this verb וְהֵעֲבַרְתִּי, as to the verb אֶתֵּן in the preceding verse : "Thy substance and thy treasures will I give for spoil — and will cause them to pass with thine enemies into a land," &c. ; that is, I will suffer thine enemies to carry them away. There appears, therefore, no internal cause to suspect the authenticity of the text. But the LXX. and Syriac for וְהֵעֲבַרְתִּי read וְהֵעֲבַדְתִּיךָ, "And I will cause thee to serve ;" whether they actually found it so in their Hebrew copies, as it now appears in one MS., and perhaps in two more ; or whether they thought it necessary to bring the text to a conformity in this instance with chapter xvii. 4. Of these two passages, however, it may be observed, that though there is a similarity between them in some respects, there is a difference in others, and intentionally, no doubt, because they relate to different objects, the one to an individual, the other to the Jewish nation taken collectively ; so that what might be true of the one would not hold equally with respect to the other. Thus the Jewish nation were made to serve their enemies in a foreign land ; but not so Jeremiah, who retired, when he left his own country, into Egypt, where he was not under the Babylonish dominion. But all that he had was carried off by the Babylonians with the rest of the spoil ; so that for good reasons the present reading of והעברתי seems to be authentic. Seven mss. and one edition, notwithstanding, read והעברתי, and one ms. והעברתיך. Also in the subsequent part of the verse five mss. for עליכם read עד-עולם in like conformity with chapter xvii. 4. But this last variation is not countenanced by any of the ancient versions, which seem uniformly to have been made after עליכם.

And thy commission was joy to me, and the delight of my

Verse 15. Within the length of thine anger comprehend me not--There is no doubt that ארך אפים denotes "slowness to anger," Exodus xxxiv. 6, &c., but that sense is not suitable here. But ארך is applied to space as well as time ; and denotes "a length" or "extent of limits ;" and the prophet may be understood to pray, that God would not so far lengthen or carry forward his resentment, as to comprehend him personally within the limits of it, who had already incurred the reproach of men for his zeal in God's service. Our old version renders, "Take me not away in the continuance of thine anger ;" which differs not very greatly from the sense I have proposed ; the prophet seeming to think, that, during a long course of God's anger against his people, he himself, however innocent, might naturally be involved in those sufferings, which were intended for the punishment of the guilty. But the former translation seems preferable.

"אל-לוא ארך אפך תקחני—Fortè delendum אל ; sequitur לוא."—SECKER.

Verse 16. And I entertained them—Et suscipiebam eos. So Jerome represents the translation of Symmachus. In which case ואכלם seems to be derived from כול, complecti. And it is certain that none of the ancient versions, except the Vulgate, understand ואכלם as belonging to the verb אכל, "to eat." The prophet says of himself, that when God's commands were communicated to him, he instantly received them with cordiality and goodwill ; and was rejoiced at the honour done him in being appointed the servant and messenger of such a master.

And thy commission—All the ancient versions read דברך in the singular number, according to the reading of the Masora, and of eleven mss. and two editions.

Verse 17. I have not sat in the assembly of those that make merry—

- Neither have I rejoiced because of thy hand ;
 I sat solitary, because thou filledst me with indignation.
 13 Wherefore hath my grief been unremitting ?
 And my wound mortal, refusing to be healed ?
 Wilt thou be altogether unto me
 As the lying of waters that are not sure ?

משחקים, which our translators have here rendered, “mockers,” is more properly translated, “them that make merry,” chapters xxx. 19; xxxi. 4. In the preceding verse the prophet had declared, that he had felt great satisfaction at first in being appointed to the office of God’s messenger. But his joy was not of long continuance; the tenor of his commission was such as to affect him, like St. Paul, and much upon the same account, with “great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart;” (Romans ix. 2 :) so that, renouncing all cheerful society, he indulged a solitary melancholy, in prospect of the dire effects of God’s indignation against his unhappy country.

Because of thy hand—“The hand of God” upon a prophet often means the impulse of the prophetic spirit. (1 Kings xviii. 46; 2 Kings iii. 15; Ezekiel i. 3; iii. 14, 22, &c., &c.)

“Verse 18. מֵאֵין אֶרְפָּא—ποθεν ιασομαι; LXX. Legerunt מֵאֵין אֶרְפָּא.”
 —SECKER.

Wilt thou be altogether unto me as the lying of waters, &c.—These words, I think, may be thus paraphrased, “Wilt thou frustrate and disappoint my hopes, as the waters of a spring, that fail in a dry season, do the hopes of those who are thirsty, and seek for them in vain to allay their thirst?”

On this passage Dr. Durell has the following note:—“As היה is equally the third person feminine as the second masculine of the same verb, היה, I would rather make מבתי, ‘my wound,’ the subject of the verb, than God. A wound alternately healing and rankling may not improperly be compared to ‘a liar.’ But, for a prophet of the true God to address his Creator under that idea, seems to me to border on profaneness. I would, therefore, render, ‘It is altogether to me as a liar,’” &c.—DR. DURELL.

I have produced the above remark of my late pious and learned friend as being certainly ingenious, and corresponding with the LXX. and Vulgate versions. There appears not, however, to me that profaneness in the prophet’s expression, which the Doctor supposes; but a degree of impatience only, which is duly checked in the following reply. But I cannot help bringing forward another citation made by Mr. Harmer (chapter v. observation 24, note) from one of Sir John Chardin’s mss., concerning a delusive appearance of water in the deserts of Arabia, which, as Mr. H. supposes, may be referred to in this place. “There is a splendour, or vapour,” says Chardin, “in the plains of the desert, formed by the repercussion of the rays of the sun from the sand, that appears like a vast lake. Travellers of the desert, afflicted by thirst, are drawn in by such appearances, but, coming near, find themselves mistaken; it seems to draw back as they advance, or quite vanishes. I have seen this in several places. Q. Curtius takes notice of it in speaking of Alexander the Great in Susiana.” With this allusion in view we might render, “Wilt thou be to me as the Verse 19. If thou wilt turn as I shall turn thee—The prophet, having shown some impatience at the nature of his commission, is informed by God that the condition of being his servant must be following implicitly the directions given him ; and that if he did so, and discharged his duty in a proper manner, his opponents should be obliged to conform to him, instead of his complying with their humours and inclinations, and he might rest assured of safe protection. To "separate the precious from the vile" means to teach sound doctrine, distinguishing rightly between what is good and what is otherwise ; which is the characteristic of a true minister of God.

" 'If thou wilt return,' that is, to tell the Jews what I bid thee, 'I will bring thee back,' that is, safe from them ; 'and if thou separate the precious,' that is, my word, 'from the vile,' that is, the reproaches of the people, 'thou shalt be my prophet, and they shall follow thee to seek my word.' CLER. Or, 'If thou distinguish good persons from bad, and make them distinguish themselves.'"—SECKER.

CHAP. XVI. THE prophecy which begins here is continued on to the end of verse 18 of the next chapter. Nor is there any reason to suspect its being out of its proper place, but that it may have been delivered, as well as those of the preceding chapters, towards the beginning of Jehoiakim's evil reign.

The prophet is forbidden to marry or beget children because of the Neither shall there be unto thee sons and daughters in this place.

- 3 For thus saith JEHOVAH ;
 As concerning the sons and concerning the daughters,
 Those that are born in this place ;
 And concerning their mothers that bear them,
 And concerning their fathers that beget them, in this land ;
- 4 They shall die of mortal diseases,
 They shall not be lamented nor buried,
 They shall be for dung upon the face of the ground ;
 By sword also and by famine shall they be consumed ;
 And their carcases shall be for meat
 Unto the fowls of the heavens, and to the beasts of the earth.
- 5 Surely thus said JEHOVAH ;
 Enter not into the house of mourning,
 Neither go to one that lamenteth, judgments that were about to fall upon all the inhabitants of the land, both old and young. (Verses 1-4.) For the like reasons he is commanded not to join with any of his neighbours either in their mourning, or in their convivial mirth. (Verses 5-9.) He shows that their calamities were the effect of their apostasy and disobedience, for which God would drive them into exile, and give them no quarter, till he had fully requited their wickedness. (Verses 10-18.) But their future restoration is intermediately foretold, (verses 14, 15,) as is also the conversion of the Gentiles. (Verses 19-21.)

Verse 3. Those that are born—Forty-one MSS. and twelve editions for מְלִידִים read more rightly, הַלְיָדִים, the participle Pahul.

Verse 4. Of mortal diseases—מִמּוֹתֵי תַחֲלָאִים. Literally, "Of deaths of sicknesses ;" meaning, no doubt, epidemical disorders, such as the pestilence, terminating in death.

Verse 5. The house of mourning—I see not the least reason for rendering מִירוֹחַ, "a mourning feast," as it is expressed in the margin of our Bibles, and as several learned commentators have distinguished it. The word occurs only once besides in the Hebrew, namely, Amos vi. 7, nor is another to be met with from the same root. And in that passage of Amos the notion of a "funeral banquet" is clearly out of the question ; and I am inclined to think the same as to any banquet at all. That funeral feasts were in use among the Greeks and Romans, cannot be doubted ; and that something of the same kind was practised by the Jews, may likewise be allowed ; but whatever relates to that point is here treated of at verse 7. In Arabic the verbs malè habuit, رَزَحَ, and malo affectit, vel, detrimentum passus, مَرَّ, might countenance in מִירוֹחַ the sense of "mourning" or "affliction," which the context in this place evidently suggests, but without any idea of feasting, with which these verbs seem not to have the least connexion. But under the root רָחַץ in CASTELL'S Lexicon we find a sense which seems exactly to suit מְרוּחָה in both passages where it is used, though in different ways ; namely, exaltatio vocis, sive ad fletum, sive ad lætitiā ; so that in one place it might stand for "noisy mirth," in the other, for "the loud outcry of lamentation." The latter is characterized in St. Mark's gospel, chapter v. 38, by the term θορυβος, where, speaking of Jairus's daughter, lately departed, our Saviour, it is said, found θορυβον κλαιοντας και αλαλαζοντας πολλα. Correspondent to which is a passage cited by Mr. Harmer, (chapter vi. obs. 54,) from one of Sir J. Chardin's mss. concerning the present manners of the east, in which "the concourse to places where persons lie dead is said to be incredible. Every one runs thither, the poor and the rich ; and the first more especially make a strange noise." See also what follows in the same observation still more to the purpose. The prophet then is forbidden to enter into the house from whence such lamentable outcries proceeded ; or of "one that lamenteth thus loudly ;" (for מְרוּחָה may be the participle present in Pihel ;) as he is at verse 8 to go into the house of feasting.

For לִסְפּוֹד nineteen mss. and three editions read לִסְפֹּד, which might be the participle present, "to him that lamenteth ;" and if בֵּית מְרוּחָה be rendered, "the house of him that uttereth a mournful cry," these two participles will point out the antecedents, to which לָהֶם, which presently follows, refers.

Lovingkindness and tender mercies—These words are not expressed in the version of the LXX. ; but Origen has inserted, as from some other version, και τον ελεον μου, και τους οικτιρμους μου, which supposes the reading of the text to have been, וְאֶת־חַסְדִּי וְאֶת־רַחֲמֵי. But none of the ancient versions besides, nor any of the collated mss, countenance this reading. And perhaps it might be meant, that as God had withdrawn "his peace" from the people, so he would not have any others show "loving-kindness or compassion" for those, with whom he had declared himself at enmity.

Verse 6. No one shall cut himself for them—יִתְגַּדֵּר לָהֶם וְלֹא is commonly joined with the words preceding ; but those words are complete by themselves, as may be seen above, (verse 4,) and in one ms. the ו in וְלֹא is omitted, in which case יִתְגַּדֵּר לָהֶם will make a hemistich perfectly corresponding with the next.

The cutting of their own flesh as a mark of grief for their deceased friends and relations, though expressly forbidden to the Jews by the law, (Lev. xix. 28 ; Deut. xiv. 1,) appears from hence to have been still in use among them, as well as among their neighbours, on this and other occasions of great mourning and affliction. See chapter xli. 5 ; and compare chapters xlvii. 5 ; xlviii. 37. The like practice attendant on funeral obsequies has been found among people lately discovered in the South Seas. "The New Zealanders have deep furrows marked on their foreheads. These were cut, in the frenzy of their grief, with a sharp shell, for the loss of their friends and relations. The Otaheitean women wound the crown of the head, under the hair, with a shark's tooth, to prove the sincerity of their grief. And the ancient Huns wounded their cheeks on all occasions, where they wanted to testify their grief for the loss of a great man or a relation."—FORSTER'S Observations, p. 588. It is curious to remark and to investigate the cause of such corresponding usages, in nations so widely distant from each other.

It has been observed, that the priests of Baal slashed themselves with knives, in order to excite the attention and commiseration of their idol; (1 Kings xviii. 28 ;) and hence it has been supposed, that this cutting of the flesh was forbidden the Israelites in the law of Moses, as having been practised by their heathen neighbours under the form of an idolatrous rite. This may have been so in some measure; and the superstition of heathen nations might have led them to think, that the anger of their deities, which had occasioned their misfortune, might be propitiated by the voluntary sufferings they inflicted on themselves. If this practice, therefore, in succeeding times was unattended with any such superstitious intention among the Jews, this may have been the cause why the breach of the law in this respect was so coolly passed over in them, who meant no more by cutting their flesh, than others do by tearing their hair and beating their breasts, namely, to give vent to their grief; perhaps not without some indignation against themselves, as if they thought themselves accessory to the evil they deplored by some fault or inadvertency of their own. But that there was no infringement of the law in this proceeding, can never be granted, either as to the letter or the spirit of it. As to the first, Mr. Harmer, indeed, contends (chapter x. obs. 66) that the law would not be at all contravened, if the word "dead," in Deut. xiv. 1, be understood to signify "dead idols." But this cannot possibly be the case, if we consider that לַמֵּת there must be understood as לַנֶּפֶשׁ, Lev. xix. 28, where the same prohibition is given. And if there can be any doubt concerning the import of this latter word, we shall find it explained in a subsequent chapter, (Lev. xxi. 1,) where the priests are forbidden to be defiled, לַנֶּפֶשׁ, "for the dead among his people;" that is, they were not to approach any dead body, or assist in doing the last offices for it; unless, as expressed in the following verses, that dead body was one of their kindred in the nearest degrees of consanguinity. And in the verse immediately after, the same prohibition of shaving off their hair and cutting their flesh is especially renewed in their particular case. This, therefore, plainly shows, that by the terms, "cutting the flesh for the dead," the law had respect to nothing else than to this mode of expressing grief for, or in regard to, a deceased relation or friend. And that the spirit, as well as letter, of the law was violated by this practice, will likewise appear from the reason assigned, Deut. xiv. 2: "For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God; and the Lord hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself above all the nations that are upon the earth." A similar reason is given, Lev. xxi. 6, for restraining the priests from the same behaviour: "They shall be holy unto their God, and not profane the name of their God; for the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and the Nor shall any one make himself bald for them.

- 7 Neither shall men break bread among them,

Nor shall men make them drink of the cup of consolations,
Because of one's father, or because of one's mother.

bread of their God, they do offer; therefore they shall be holy." In both instances we see, the prohibition of the law stands upon the same ground, though in different degrees. Both priests and people were consecrated and set apart for the worship of JEHOVAH in a peculiar manner; and, therefore, neither the one nor the other were to admit of any thing that might derogate from the external decency and comeliness of that service, which they were required to perform in the face of all mankind; which a voluntary disfiguring of the human form in their own persons must unavoidably do.

Nor shall any one make himself bald for them—Cutting off the hair was a still more general practice among mankind as a token of mourning. See Bishop Lowth's note on Isaiah xv. 2. FORSTER, in his Observations, p. 560, speaks of "the hair cut off, and thrown on the bier" at Otaheite. And, at the Friendly Islands, it is expressly said, that "cutting off the hair is one of their mourning ceremonies." (Narrative of Cook's and Clarke's Voyage, vol. i. p. 112.) This also was forbidden by the Mosaic law at the same time, and on the same principles as the foregoing one. The hair is the natural ornament of the head; and the loss of it a considerable defect in the human figure. It was therefore not to be voluntarily assumed by those whose profession obliged them to "worship JEHOVAH in the beauty of holiness." At what time the observance of the law in these particulars began to be relaxed, does not appear; but I do not recollect any traces of such customs among God's chosen people, earlier than those which are alluded to in the prophetic books, properly so called.

Verse 7. Neither shall men break bread among them—The translation in the text of our English Bibles, "Neither shall men tear themselves for them," seems not near so proper as that in the margin, "break bread for them." It would be an unmeaning repetition of what had been said in the foregoing verse, and by no means suitable to the latter clause of this; besides, פָּרַס signifies, not "to tear," but "to divide," and "distribute." So we read, Isaiah lviii. 7, פָּרַס לָרֵעַב לֶחֶם, "to deal" (or distribute) "thy bread to the hungry." The LXX. and Vulgate seem, indeed, to have found לֶחֶם, "bread," in the text of their copies here; and in one MS. לֶחֶם is, perhaps, written for לָרֵעַב. But as לֶחֶם is in a style of conformity with the context, instead of parting with it, I am more apt to conclude, either that לֶחֶם has been lost out of the later MSS., by means of its great similarity to לָרֵעַב, the next adjoining word; or that it was designedly omitted from the first, by an ellipsis very easy to be supplied. As to the custom alluded to, Jerome inform us, in his commentary on this place, that "it was usual to carry provisions to mourners, and to make an entertainment; which sort of feasts the Greeks call παραδειπνα, and the Latins, parentalia." The origin of which custom undoubtedly was, that the friends of the mourner, who came to comfort him, (and that they often came in great numbers for that purpose, we may learn from John xi. 19,) easily concluding that a person so far swallowed up of grief as even to forget his own bread, could hardly attend to the entertainment of so many guests, each sent in his proportion of meat and drink, in hopes to prevail upon the mourner, by their example and persuasions, to partake of such refreshment as might tend to recruit both his bodily strength and his spirits. To this custom Tobit refers when, among other good exhortations to his son, he directs him "to pour out his bread on the burial of the just." (Tobit iv. 17.) And such, no doubt, was the entertainment which Job's friends partook of when they came "to eat bread with him ;" and, for a farther consolation to his misfortunes, "every man gave him a piece of money, and an ear-ring of gold." (Job. xlii. 11.) Sir John Chardin, in one of his mss., tells us, that "the oriental Christians still make banquets of the same kind, by a custom derived from the Jews ; and that the provisions spoken of in this verse were such as were wont to be sent to the house of the deceased ; where healths were also drunk to the survivors of the family, wishing that the dead may have been the victims for the sins of the family." These latter meant, no doubt, or were taken from, "the cup of consolations." "The same," says he, "with respect to eating, is practised among the Moors." In like manner he explains (as many other commentators have also done) "the bread of men," mentioned Ezekiel xxiv. 17, as signifying "the bread of others ; the bread sent to mourners ; the bread that the neighbours, friends, and relations sent."—HARMER, chapter vi. obs. 55. How far the funeral entertainments among the Greeks and Romans corresponded with the before-mentioned, I leave to be considered by those who are conversant in heathen antiquities. See, in particular, HOMER's Iliad, Ψ. 29, Ω. 801.

Verse 10. What is our iniquity, and what our sin—All the ancient versions read חטאתנו ועינינו, as in the text at present ; but thirty-four mss. and three editions read in the plural עינינו ; and thirty-eight mss. and one edition, חטאתינו.

- BECAUSE your fathers have forsaken me, saith JEHOVAH,
 And have followed after strange gods,
 And have served them, and worshipped them,
 And have forsaken me, and not kept my law :
- 12 And ye yourselves have done still more wickedly than your fathers,
 And behold ye follow every one the lusts of his own wicked heart,
 Without hearkening unto me ;
- 13 Therefore will I cast you forth from out of this land
 Into the land which ye have not known, ye nor your fathers ;
 And there shall ye serve strange gods day and night ;
 Because I will shew you no favour.
- 14 After this, behold, the days shall come, saith JEHOVAH,
 When it shall no more be said, As JEHOVAH liveth,
 Who brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt :

Verse 13. And there shall ye serve strange gods—This is a prediction of what would happen to them in the course of their captivity ; but of their own seeking, not of God's appointment. Finding themselves cast out of the favour of their own God, and despairing of any relief from that quarter, they would be tempted to put themselves under the protection of the gods of the country where they dwelt. See Deut. iv. 28 ; xxviii. 36, 64 ; 1 Sam. xxvi. 19.

Verse 14. After this, behold, the days shall come—Mr. Lowth supposes that לכן sometimes signifies, “ nevertheless ;” and Noldius does the same. But, both here and chapters xxiii. 7 ; xxx. 16 ; xxxii. 36 ; and also Isaiah xxx. 18 ; Hosea ii. 14, it seems more properly to signify, “ after this.” ל is used frequently to denote, “ after a time or transaction ;” as לשבעת הימים, “ after seven days ;” (Gen. vii. 10 ;) לשנתיים ימים, “ after two years ;” (2 Sam. xiii. 23 ;) לגלות, “ after the carrying into captivity ;” (Ezek. i. 2 ;) להמית, “ after having murdered ;” (chapter xli. 4 ;) and, therefore, why not לכן, “ after this ?” See also Exodus xix. 1 ; Numb. i. 1 ; 1 Kings iii. 18, &c. It is obvious that this notice of a future restoration was here inserted on purpose to guard the people, during their exile, from falling into idolatry through despair, by letting them see they had still a prospect of recovering God's wonted favour and protection.

When it shall no more be said, As JEHOVAH liveth, who brought up, &c.—That is, “ The people, in those days, shall no more swear by JEHOVAH, as their Deliverer from Egyptian bondage ; but as him who had restored them from a much more calamitous situation, after they had been carried into captivity to Babylon, and dispersed through different countries.” The latter deliverance would be so much more wonderful and important, as to swallow up all remembrance of the former.

- 15 But, As JEHOVAH liveth,
 Who brought up the children of Israel out of the north country,
 And out of all the lands whither he had driven them ;
 For I will cause them to return unto their own land,
 Which I gave unto their fathers.
- 16 Behold I will send for many fishers,
 Saith JEHOVAH, and they shall fish them :
 And afterwards I will send for many hunters,
 And they shall hunt them from every mountain,
 And from every hill, and from the holes of the rocks.
- 17 For mine eyes are upon all their ways ;
 They are not hidden from before my face ;
 Neither is their iniquity concealed from the sight of mine eyes.
- 18 And I will requite in a double proportion their iniquity and their sin,
 Because they have defiled my land by the vileness of their odious practices,
 And their abominations have overspread mine heritage.
- 19 O JEHOVAH, my strength, and my fortress,
 And my refuge in the day of distress ;

Verse 16. Behold I will send for many fishers—The Masoretes for לְדוֹגִים read לְרִיגִים, and so do seven mss. and four editions. By “fishers,” and “hunters,” are probably meant the same enemies, who should take different methods, one after another, to destroy them ; besieging them in their cities, and taking them like fish enclosed in a net ; and afterwards pursuing the scattered parties from place to place, till they got them into their hands ; so that, one way or other, none would be suffered to escape. Compare Isaiah xxiv. 17, 18 ; where it is, in like manner, foretold, that those who escaped from one danger should fall by another.

Verse 18. And I will requite in a double proportion—So I think ראשונה כשנזה should be rendered. Literally, the words signify, “the first time repeated.” And God assigns the reason why their punishment should be doubled : Because the offence committed in their own persons was aggravated by the influence of their bad example, tending to diffuse the same impiety and wickedness throughout the land. Thus they became answerable for the sins of others, together with their own, and were, therefore, to receive double punishment.

Verse 19. O JEHOVAH, &c.—The prophet, shocked at the apostasy of Israel, and concerned for God’s honour, looks forward to the time when, as he predicts, even the Gentiles themselves shall become sensible of the

vanity ;

20 Shall man make Gods for himself,
When they themselves are not Gods ?

absurdity of their hereditary idolatry, and be converted to the acknowledgment of the true God.

Have falsely possessed vanity—נחל signifies, “to be possessed of a property in any thing.” And as JEHOVAH is said to be the “portion” or “inheritance” of his people who claimed him as their peculiar God ; in like manner the heathen nations may be said to have had their portion and inheritance in those idols to whose protection they recommended themselves. But these idols were הבל, “vanity,” things of nought, mere creatures of the imagination, without real existence. Their possession, therefore, or inheritance in such things, was a fiction only, or false possession, a title without a foundation. The next line expresses exactly the same sense in different words ; and the following context argues conformably.

Verse 20. Shall man make gods for himself, &c.—This seems to be a reply from God, accounting for what was said before, (that the Heathens had no benefit from the objects in which they placed their religious confidence,) by asking whether it was likely that men could create gods, giving them power and perfections which they had not in themselves.

Verse 21. Therefore behold I, instructing them at this time—The time alluded to is undoubtedly that when the gospel was to be preached to, and embraced by, the Gentiles ; when God promises that he would make such a display of his mighty power, as should amply convince them of the truth of his existence and divinity. “They shall know that my name is JEHOVAH ;” a name which implies absolute and necessary existence, the real source and origin of all perfection ; and they shall know it by the blessings which shall, from my providence, be derived to them.

CHAP. XVII. In this chapter the prophet describeth, in the first four verses, the attachment of the people of Judah to idolatry, and foretelleth the fatal consequences. He contrasteth the accursed condition of him that resteth his trust on man, with the blessedness of one that trusteth in God ; and illustrates both by apt and lively comparisons. (Verses 5–8.) He sheweth, that, be the human heart ever so wily, God can detect, and will finally punish its double-dealing. (Verses 9–11.) He acknowledgeth that sure salvation cometh from God, and from him only. (Verses 12–14.) And, complaining of those that scoffed at his predictions, he prayeth for the divine countenance and support against them. (Verses 15–18.)

The remaining part of the chapter is taken up with a distinct prophecy,

CHAPTER XVII.

- 1 THE sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron,
With the point of a diamond it is engraved,
Upon the tablet of their heart,
And upon the horns of their altars :
- 2 While their children remember their altars and their groves,
Near the green trees,
And upon the highest hills.

relative to the strict observance of the sabbath-day ; which the prophet was sent, most probably immediately after the delivery of the foregoing, to proclaim aloud in all the gates of Jerusalem, as a matter which concerned the conduct of each individual, and the general happiness of the whole.

Verse 1. The sin of Judah is written, &c.—Some commentators have understood these words in a literal sense, as if these idolaters had actually carried about them tablets hanging before the place of their hearts, on which, and on the horns of their altars, the name of their idol was inscribed. But I think that “the pen of iron,” and “the diamond’s point,” might be sufficient to show that the whole was spoken metaphorically, and meant to denote, that idolatry was indelibly fixed in their affections and memory, as much so as if it had been engraved with instruments capable of making the strongest and most durable impression upon their heart, as upon a writing tablet, and upon their altars, so as to be for ever present before their eyes. And for a further proof of this, appeal is made, verse 2, to the behaviour of their children, equally attentive to and tenacious of the corrupt institutions which they had learned from the example of their parents. This was indeed inverting the rule which Moses had prescribed to them in order to secure the observance of God’s law ; and which is also couched in the like metaphorical terms, Deut. xi. 18–20 : “Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart, and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up : And thou shalt write them upon the door posts of thine house, and upon thy gates.” In the same style Solomon enforces his exhortations, Prov. iii. 3 : “Let not mercy and truth forsake thee ; bind them about thy neck ; write them upon the table of thine heart.” And again, Prov. vii. 3, speaking of his commandments, says, “Bind them about thy fingers ; write them upon the table of thine heart.”

Of their altars—Sixty-one, perhaps sixty-five, mss. and the oldest edition of the Bible, for מִזְבְּחֵיהֶם read מִזְבְּחֵיהֶם ; and forty-nine, perhaps fifty-three, mss. read מִזְבְּחֵיהֶם contractedly. The Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, Arabic, and the Greek versions preserved in the Hexaplar, likewise render “their,” not “your, altars.”

Verse 2. And upon the highest hills—Sixty-two, perhaps sixty-five, mss. and two editions read ועל instead of על before גְּבוּעֹת. The Syriac, Chaldee, and Arabic also prefix the conjunction.

- 3 O my mountain, thy substance in the field,
And all thy stores will I give up to pillage,
Thy strong holds, because of sin, throughout all thy borders.
- 4 And I will dismiss thy glory from the inheritance
Which I have given unto thee ;
And I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in a land
Which thou hast not known ;

Verse 3. O my mountain, &c.—The ancient versions all connect the words הררי בשדה, or whatever they read instead of them, with the preceding context. But it is manifest that the text, as it stands at present, cannot be reconciled with any of their interpretations. Most of the modern commentators render, as we find in our English Bible, “O my mountain in the field ;” although they differ in explaining what is meant thereby. Some understand Mount Sion or Jerusalem ; others, the temple. Michaëlis paraphrases it thus : “O Jerusalem, which hast long been situate on my chosen mountain, and surrounded by a most fertile country, the land of Canaan.” But at the same time he cites Cocceius, who says, that the Jewish people are hereby enigmatically compared with the rest of the world, as a mountain situate in the midst of a level plain, and distinguished with a glory which did not belong to the world in general. These explanations are ingenious ; but the general error seems to me to lie in not observing that בשדה should be construed with הילך, so as to denote substance in the field, as cattle, growing corn, &c. in contradistinction to אוצרותיך, “thy stores,” laid up in granaries, &c. at home. הררי then stands single, and may be understood of the Jewish nation ; the punishment of which is denounced. Nations and princes of great power and eminence are figuratively called “mountains” in regard to their strength and elevation. See chapter li. 25 ; Isaiah xli. 15 ; Zech. iv. 7. Judah is therefore styled “God’s mountain,” as having been chosen by him, and thereby raised to a degree of elevation above all other people. See chapter xxxi. 23.

And all thy treasures—All the ancient versions for כל read ובל, as it is found in no less than one hundred and ninety-three, perhaps one hundred and ninety-five, mss. and three editions.

Thy strong holds—DR. DURELL has the following note on Deut. xxxiii. 29 : “Though במור generally denotes such high places as were appropriated to the religious rites of idolaters ; it is likewise used for ‘intrenchments, or fortifications,’ on eminences, which seems to be the sense of it here. See 2 Sam. i. 19, 25 ; xxii. 34, where the Chaldee paraphrase constantly renders במור by בית חוקף, ‘a fortified edifice.’”—Parallel Prophecies of Jacob and Moses, page 150.

It is obvious how well this sense of במור suits here. And to the above instances we may add Deut. xxxii. 13, with its parallel, Isaiah lviii. 14, and also Ezekiel xxxvi. 2.

Verse 4. And I will dismiss thy glory—ושמטתה וברך. That there is a corruption in the text here, is, I think, scarcely to be doubted. The Greek versions preserved in the Hexaplar render, καὶ ἀφαρῆθησιν (al. ἀφαρῆθησεται, Grab. καὶ ἀφῆθησιν μόνῃ) καὶ ταπεινωθήσιν (al. ταπεινωθήσεται). From hence I conjecture, that possibly instead of וברך they read וירך, because ירך is ren-

Because a fire is kindled in mine anger,

THUS saith JEHOVAH ;

- 5 Cursed is the man who putteth his trust in man,
And maketh flesh his arm,
And whose heart turneth away from JEHOVAH.
- 6 For he shall be like a blasted tree upon the waste,
Which is not sensible when good cometh ;
But is continually exposed to scorching heats in the desert,
A barren land, and uninhabitable.
- 7 Blessed is the man who trusteth in JEHOVAH,
And the object of whose confidence JEHOVAH is.
- 8 For he shall be like a tree planted by the water side,
Which by the side of the stream sendeth forth its roots,
And is not sensible when heat cometh ;
But its leaf is green,
And in a year of drought it is without concern,
Nor doth it decline bearing fruit.
- 9 THE heart is wily above all things ;
It is even past all hope ; who can know it ?

dered by the LXX. ταπεινός and ταπεινωμένος. Admit this, and by separating ה from the end of ושמטתה, where it is at least of no use, and prefixing it to וה, we shall read ושמטת הוה. But שמט properly signifies to “dismiss,” “release,” or “set free.” See the learned Mr. PETER’s explanation of it in his Dissertation upon Job, page 348. We may therefore render, “And thou shalt dismiss” (or, part with) “thy glory from thy inheritance,” &c. ; that is, Thou shalt no longer exercise thy sovereignty, or live in thy wonted splendour in the land. But the Syriac and Arabic seem to have read ושמטתי, which is still better, and conforms with והעבדתי, which follows. “And I will dismiss” (or, cause to depart) “thy glory,” &c.

“והעבדתי—Videntur Gr, Vulg. legisse לבדך, דך, רכא, רכא, interpretantur LXX., ταπεινωσω.”—SECKER.

A fire is kindled—Instead of קדחתם two MSS. read קדחה, as chapter xv. 14. And all the Greek versions in the Hexaplar, together with the Chaldee and Arabic, seem to have done the same. The Syriac, indeed, follows the present reading of the text. And one MS., with the Vulgate, reads קדחת, succendisti.

Verse 6. Is continually exposed to scorching heats—Literally, “inhabiteeth scorching heats.” See the like phrase, Isaiah xxxiii. 14.

Verse 8. And is not sensible—The Masoretes here read יראה, as at verse 6 ; and this reading is justified by forty-eight, perhaps fifty, MSS. and five editions ; and by the Chaldee paraphrast, who renders, ולא יחוי. Compare Psalm i. 3.

Verse 9. It is even past all hope ; who can know it ?—That is, humanly

- 10 I JEHOVAH search out the heart,
And try the reins;
To give to every man according to his ways,
And according to the fruit of his doings.

speaking, there is no chance that any one should trace it through all its windings, and discover what is at the bottom of it.

“אנוש signifies ‘man,’ or ‘sick,’ and perhaps ‘incurable,’ or ‘desperate;’ but, I believe, never ‘desperately wicked.’ Perhaps, ‘to be despaired of.’”—SECKER.

Verse 10. And try the reins—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate prefix the conjunction, and twenty, perhaps twenty-one, mss. read ויבוח; and seven others, ויבוחן.

To give to every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit—Twenty-four mss. and the oldest edition of the Hebrew Bible, together with the LXX., read לות without the conjunction. Sixty-two, perhaps sixty-five, mss. and two editions concur with the Masora, and with the LXX. and Syriac versions, in reading כדרכיו instead of כדרכו. Also twenty-seven, perhaps thirty-one, mss. and two of the most ancient editions, with the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, read וכפרי, with the conjunction prefixed.

Verse 11. As the Kore, that hatcheth what it did not lay—BOCHART (De Sac. Anim. par. i. lib. i. cap. 12) with a great deal of learning contends, that קרא is not a partridge, nor any bird known in these parts. If so, it were wrong to lead persons into error, by giving it a name that belongs to a different species. That it is a bird which frequents the mountains, and of no great value, may be learned from 1 Sam. xxvi. 20. Here it is said to sit upon and hatch the eggs of birds of another species. This want of distinction is indeed common to many sorts of birds; but the partridge is no way remarkable for it. But where it is done, the young ones, when fledged, are sure to forsake their supposititious dam, and to join with those of their own feather; in which circumstance the point of comparison seems to lie.

“קרא—Bird Kore.”—SECKER.

And not according to right—That is, not in a due regular manner, by the blessing of God upon honest endeavours, but by arts of knavery and injustice.

In the midst of his days—For ימי the Masora reads ימי, with the concurrence of fifty-seven mss., among which are some of the oldest, and two editions; and of all the ancient versions.

He shall be a felon in his latter end—That is, He shall have the reward of a felon at last, or shall be brought to condign punishment. This is directly opposite to what Balaam wished, (Numb. xxiii. 10,) and what every wise man would wish for himself, “a latter end like that of the righteous.” נבל seems to signify a man of blasted character or morals; or perhaps one

- 12      A glorious throne, set on high from the beginning, who by his misdemeanour has forfeited the privileges of a citizen, and rendered himself obnoxious to public justice; in short, "a rogue," or "felon." Our translators have generally rendered נבל "a fool;" and no doubt such depravity implies folly in the extreme. But by "fool" we generally understand, not one that goes wilfully wrong, but one who has a natural defect of understanding; and whom we do not so much condemn as pity for the misconduct, which for want of right discernment he is led into. It would therefore be certainly better, if the word נבל were otherwise translated in many passages of the Bible, where, as well as in this, the primary idea of "fool" is apt to mislead the inattentive, or unlearned reader at least, into wrong notions as to the general scope of the sentence. I cannot help mentioning one, which few English readers, I believe, have properly understood for the reason before mentioned, and which also at the same time may serve to illustrate what is meant by a man being נבל in his latter end. In 2 Sam. iii. 33, 34, king David is represented as lamenting over the death of Abner, and doing justice at once to the character of that great general, and to his own innocence of any share or concern in his murder. The words properly understood are as follow: "Died Abner as a felon, or malefactor, dieth?" No; for if he had, the circumstances of his death would have been different; he would have been led, as such persons used to be, bound hand and foot to the place of execution. "But," continues the king, "thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters. As a man falleth before the face of the sons of treachery, so fellest thou." That is, Thou sufferedst not by a legal sentence; but, as many good and virtuous men have done besides, thou fellest by the hand of envious and ruffianly assassins.

Verse 12. A glorious throne—As in the preceding verses was set forth the vain dependence of him who seeks to advance himself by indirect methods; so here we are taught the solid foundation which he builds upon who has recourse to the divine blessing, and seeks to recommend himself to the favour of that Being to whom Israel was taught to look up for support, and whose kingdom, from all eternity, ruleth over all.

Verse 13. And shall be recorded in the earth for revolvers—For יסורי, the Masoretes very properly substitute יסורי, a reading which is confirmed by thirty-eight, perhaps forty, mss., among which are those of the best note, and by two printed editions. The meaning undoubtedly is, that those who deserted JEHOVAH should have their names recorded and transmitted to posterity with infamy, as revolvers and rebels against their rightful Sovereign.

- 15 BEHOLD, these say unto me,
Where is the word of JEHOVAH ? let it come now.
- 16 But I have not been in haste to outrun thy guidance ;
And the fatal day have I not desired ;
Thou knowest that which hath issued from my lips,
It hath been before thy face.
- 17 Be not thou a terror unto me,
Thou art my refuge in the day of adversity.
- 18 Let my persecutors be confounded, but let not me be confounded ;
Let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed ;
Bring thou upon them the day of calamity,
And with redoubled destruction destroy them.
- 19 THUS said JEHOVAH unto me ;
Go and stand in the gate of the children of the people, through which the kings of Judah come in, and through which they —SECKER. Perhaps, rather, an omission of the  $\Xi$ , by a licence of the transcriber. See KENNICOTT's Diss. Gen. sect. 26.

Verse 15. Where is the word of JEHOVAH ? let it come now—The interval of delay between the delivery of the word of prophecy and its accomplishment hath afforded, frequently, to unbelievers, a handle for scoffing at, and questioning, the truth of it. They want, forsooth, more immediate proofs for their conviction. See Isaiah v. 19 ; Ezekiel xii. 22, 27 ; Amos v. 18 ; 2 Peter iii. 4.

Verse 16. I have not been in haste to outrun thy guidance—Literally, “I have not hastened from feeding after thee.” The metaphor is taken from sheep feeding where their shepherd led them. The prophet exculpates himself from having officiously put himself forward, like a sheep that hastily gets before the shepherd ; or showing any desire of bringing on the evil day of which he was appointed to give notice. He appeals to God as a witness, that, in all that he had spoken, he had only acted the part of a faithful messenger, of one who knew that his conduct was subject to the immediate inspection and notice of an omnipresent Judge. “It hath been before thee :” “I have spoken it as in thy presence.”

Verse 19. The children of the people—For בני-עם, the LXX. render as if they had read עמך, “thy people,” λαοῦ σου. But the Masoretes read העם ; and this reading is also countenanced by seventeen MSS. and four editions, besides four MSS. more which have a letter erased at the beginning of עם. By “the gate of the children of the people,” I suppose is meant, the gate most frequented by the people, being that nearest the palace, where the kings of Judah held their most solemn courts of judicature.

- 20 go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem: And thou shalt say unto them, Hear ye the word of JEHOVAH, O ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, 21 that pass through these gates. Thus saith JEHOVAH, Take heed unto yourselves, and carry no burden on the sabbath 22 day, nor bring in through the gates of Jerusalem; neither bring ye forth any burden out of your houses on the sabbath day, neither transact ye any manner of business; but keep ye holy the sabbath day; according as I commanded your 23 fathers: But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but stiffened their neck, so as not to hear, and so as not to 24 receive instruction. And it shall be, if ye will indeed hearken unto me, saith JEHOVAH, so as not to bring in any burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath day, but to keep holy the sabbath day, without transacting thereon any 25 manner of business: Then shall there enter in at the gates of this city kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots, and upon horses, they, and their chieftains, men of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; and 26 this city shall be established for ever. And there shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the environs of Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the hill country, and from the south, persons bringing burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, and meatofferings, and incense, and bringing offerings of praise, unto the house of JEHOVAH. 27 But if ye will not hearken unto me, to keep holy the sabbath

Verse 23. So as not to hear—For שומע, the Masoretes read, by transposition, שמע, with the concurrence of five mss. The same is also found in the margin of the edition of Felix Pratensis, and among the various readings collected by Houbigant. Twenty-eight mss. and three ancient editions read שמע, without the ו.

Verse 24. Thereon—Ten, perhaps twelve, mss. and three editions, with the Masora, read בו for בזה.

Verse 25. They, and their chieftains, men of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem—I suppose it is hereby meant, that both the kings themselves, and the subordinate governors or captains, should be natives of the country, and not foreigners.

Verse 26. And from the plain, and from the hill country, and from the south—These divisions of the country, belonging to the tribe of Judah, may be found, Joshua xv. 21, 33, 48; and these, together with the tribe of Benjamin, made up the whole kingdom of Judah, when taken separate from the kingdom of Israel, or of the ten tribes. See the same enumeration, chap. xxxii. 44.

day, and not to carry any burden, and go through the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall consume the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be extinguished.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 THE WORD WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH, SAYING,

2 ARISE and go down to the potter's house, and there I will
3 cause thee to hear my words. So I went down to the potter's
4 house, and behold he was at work upon the stones. And

Verse 27. And go through the gates—For גַּבַּשׁ, the Chaldee and Vulgate seem to have read גַּבַּשׁ or גַּבַּשׁ, which seems to be countenanced by verses 21, 24. But, “to carry a burden, and go,” implies, to go loaded with it; and therefore no alteration seems necessary. The ancient Bodleian MS. and one more wholly omit גַּבַּשׁ.

CHAP. XVIII. THE prophecies and transactions contained in this and the two following chapters successively hang together; and, if they are introduced in their proper place, (which there is no reason to controvert,) these also, as well as the foregoing, must be referred to some part of the three first years of Jehoiakim's reign.

The prophet is shown, first, under the type of the potter, God's absolute authority over nations and kingdoms, to regulate and alter their condition at his own discretion. (Verses 1–10.) He is then directed to exhort the people to avert the evil designed them, by repentance and amendment; and, upon their refusal, to charge them with the guilt of unprecedented revolt, and to foretell their destruction. (Verses 11–17.) They conspire against him: He protesteth against their unmerited and ungrateful persecution of him, and calleth for justice against them.

Verse 3. And behold he was at work—וַהֲנִי עֹשֶׂה מִלְאָכָה. The Masora here reads וַהֲנִי עֹשֶׂה מִלְאָכָה, instead of וַהֲנִי עֹשֶׂה, and has the concurrence of five mss.; it is also so found in the Babylonish Talmud, another Rabbinical Commentary, and in the margin of the edition of Felix Pratensis. But the present text perfectly agrees with the Hebrew idiom, and needs no alteration.

Upon the stones—This is the literal signification of עַל־הָאֲבָנִים, which the LXX. also render, ἐπὶ τῶν λίθων. There can be no doubt that the machine is intended on which the potters formed their earthen vessels; and the appellation οἱ λίθοι, “the stones,” will appear very proper, if we consider this machine as consisting of a pair of circular stones placed upon one another like millstones, of which the lower was immovable, but the upper one turned upon the foot of a spindle or axis, and had motion communicated to it by the feet of the potter sitting at his work; as may be learned from Eccclus. xxxviii. 29. Upon the top of this upper stone, which was flat, the clay was placed, which the potter, having given the stone the due velocity, the vessel which he was making of clay was marred by the hand of the potter; and he began anew, and made it another vessel, as it seemed meet to the potter to make. Then came the word of JEHOVAH unto me, saying,

- 6 CANNOT I do after the manner of this potter
With respect to you, O house of Israel? saith JEHOVAH.
Behold as the clay is at the disposal of the potter,
So are ye at my disposal, O house of Israel.
- 7 Whensoever I shall speak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom,
Of plucking up, casting down, and destroying;
8 And that nation concerning which I have spoken shall turn from its wickedness;
I also will repent of the evil which I proposed to do unto it.
- 9 And whensoever I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom,
Of building up and of planting;
10 And it shall do that which is evil in my sight, and not hearken unto my voice:
I also will repent of the good which I said I would do for its benefit.
- 11 AND now speak, I pray thee, unto the men of Judah,
And unto the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying,
Thus saith JEHOVAH;
Behold I imagine evil against you, formed into shape with his hands. The principal difference between this and the wheel in present use seems to be, that, instead of the upper stone, a nut or beam is used, of about two feet in length and one in diameter, the foot of which plays perpendicularly upon the nether stone. This beam serves for an axis to a circular wooden frame, like a wheel, joined to it at the lower end; and on the top of this beam, which is flat, the clay is placed, and the motion given, and the operation performed in the manner above described. It is probable the upper stone was, for convenience, shaped not unlike this wheel and beam; and might, not improperly, have given the name of "the wheel" to the whole machine, but not of "the wheels," as in our English version, there being but one of the stones that had the resemblance of a wheel. Perhaps the sella parturientium may have been a contrivance of a similar kind; for which reason, we find it called by the same name, הַאֲבִנִים. (Exodus i. 16.)

Verse 4. Of clay—Instead of בַּחֲמֶר, nineteen, perhaps twenty-three, mss. and four editions read בַּחֲמֶר. Two mss. read בַּחוֹמֶר.

"Abundant hæc verba בִּיד הַיּוֹצֵר בַּחֲמֶר, vel בַּחוֹמֶר, et fortè irrepserunt ex ver. 6."—SECKER.

- And devise against you a device ;
 Return ye now every man from his evil way,
 And amend your ways and your doings.
- 12 But they said, It is a thing not to be hoped :
 For after our own imaginations will we go,
 And we will practise every one the lust of his evil heart.
- 13 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH ;
 Enquire now among the nations,
 Who hath heard such things as these ?
 The virgin of Israel hath practised lewdness in a very high degree.
- 14 Will the snow leave Lebanon before any rock of the field ?
 Will men dig for strange waters perversely in preference to such as flow ?

Verse 14. Will the snow leave Lebanon, &c.—The two similitudes in this verse are evidently designed to illustrate the unnatural and absurd conduct of the Jewish nation in deserting their own God, and adopting the superstitions of a strange idolatry, in preference to the good old paths which God had ordained for them to walk in. As to the first, Lebanon, it must be observed, was the highest mountain in Israel, lying to the north of it, and having its summit almost always covered with snow ; from the whiteness of which it is supposed to have derived its name. See the accounts of modern travellers referred to, Ancient Univ. Hist. vol. i. book i. p. 570, fol. The same circumstance is also recorded by TACITUS, Hist. lib. v. cap. 6 : Præcipuum montium Libanum erigit, mirum dictu, tantos inter erdores opacum fidumque nivibus. It would therefore be very unnatural and monstrous, if the snow should quit the tops of Lebanon, whilst the rocks of less height in the adjacent country were covered with it.

Will men dig for strange waters, &c.—"Strange waters" are those brought from distant parts by pipes or conduits, or by canals digged for the purpose. Thus Sennacherib is represented as boasting of his power, 2 Kings xix. 24 : "I have digged and drunk strange waters, and with the sole of my feet have I dried up the rivers of besieged places," or rather "of embankment ;" the meaning of which I conceive to be, "I have caused waters to be brought from afar in canals, which I have digged for the supply of mine army, which was so numerous as to dry up in their passage even such large rivers, as required a dyke or embankment to guard against their inundations." Instead of נחלים קרים, I propose to read קרי מנחלים. קרי and בקרי are used, Lev. xxvi. 21, 23, 24, &c. adverbially to signify "contrary," or "in direct contradiction." By נחלים, are meant "the natural streams, or rivers." So that the sense here will be, "Will men act so preposterously, as to bring waters from a distance by artificial modes of conveyance, rather than make use of the natural streams, which flow through their own country ?" Compare both these instances with those that follow in the next verse, and it will be seen how exactly they correspond, taken in the same order respectively.

- 15 But my people have forgotten me, they have burned incense to vanity :
And paths of ancient use have caused them to stumble in their ways,
Whilst they walk in paths of a road not thrown up :
16 Making their land an object of astonishment, of perpetual hissing ;
Every one that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall shake his head.
17 Like an east wind will I scatter them before the face of an enemy ;
I will turn my back to them, and not my face, in the day of their destruction.
- 18 THEN said they, Come and let us devise measures against “ זרים נוזלים—βίαιως ανεμω φερομενον, LXX. עז et זר alibi reddunt βίαιος. Pro זרים videntur legisse קרים. Vide vers. 17.”—SECKER.

Verse 15. And paths of ancient use have caused them to stumble—This translation must be right, if the text be right ; for there is no other subject for ויכשלו, or, as it is written at large in twenty-one mss. and four editions, ויכשילום, but שבילי. And if we were to read ויכשלי, according to ms. Bodleian, N<sup>o</sup>. 1, it should seem necessary to read also בזשבילי ; which, however, is not to be found in any collated ms. or edition, although somewhat countenanced by the Syriac and Vulgate. In this latter case we should render, “ And they have stumbled in their ways at paths of ancient use, or standing.” But the same, or nearly the same, sense will be found to result from the text as it stands at present. For, whatever it be that creates such a disgust and prejudice, as to divert any one from pursuing a course he was engaged in, is said to “ cause him to stumble,” or to prove a “ stumbling-block in his way.” By שבילי עולם are meant those good old paths (chapter vi. 16) or lines of duty, which were marked out to the people by the divine law. But these, it seems, disgusted them, or “ caused them to stumble as they went along ;” they therefore quitted those paths, and chose rather to walk in others less commodious and salutary, “ paths of a road not thrown up ;” the paths of an idolatrous ritual, not prescribed or made for their use.

“ ויכשלו—‘ And they have caused them to stumble,’ &c. This is from the Chaldee. Rather, ‘ They have stumbled in their ways, the ancient roads, to walk in bypaths ;’ or, ‘ that they should walk.’”—SECKER.

Verse 17. Like an east wind—All the ancient versions agree in כרוח, the present reading of the text. But the ancient Bodleian ms. N<sup>o</sup>. 1, and twelve more, perhaps fourteen, read ברוח, “ with an east wind.” The “ east wind ” being dry and blasting, is commonly used to express the severity of God’s judgments. See Isaiah xxvii. 8 ; Hosea xiii. 15.

Verse 18. Come and let us devise measures, &c.—The people to whom Jeremiah had delivered his message from God, seem to have been incensed against him, on much the same ground as the Jews, in after-times, were

Jeremiah : For the law shall not fail from the priest, nor counsel from the wise man, nor the word from the prophet : Come and let us smite him on the tongue, and let us not regard any of his words.

- 19      Give heed unto me, O JEHOVAH,
           And listen to the voice of my adversaries.
 20      Shall evil be rendered for good ?
           Surely they have digged a pit for my soul.
           Remember how I have stood before thee,
           To intercede for their welfare,
           To turn away thine anger from them.
 21      Therefore give thou up their sons unto famine,
           And drain them by means of the sword ;

against our Saviour and his apostles. They had persuaded themselves that God had intended for them a perpetual establishment ; and would, accordingly, provide them with a constant succession of men in all departments to preserve and maintain the general welfare ; namely, priests to direct in all matters of law and religion ; wise statesmen to manage their civil concerns ; and prophets to make known to them the immediate will of God on all important and extraordinary occasions. Upon this presumption they inferred that Jeremiah, who foretold the contrary, was a false prophet, and as such they determined to punish him.

Let us smite him on the tongue—Our English translators have rendered, “ Let us smite him with the tongue ; ” which commentators understand to mean, “ Let us bring an accusation against him.” The Chaldee Paraphrast explains it, “ Let us bear false witness against him.” In the margin of our Bibles we find “ for the tongue ; ” which may signify, “ Let us punish him for his malignant speeches.” But I rather think we should render, “ Let us smite him on the tongue,” that is, on the offending part ; alluding to a very significant mode of inflicting punishment, by directing it to that particular member of the body which had the most immediate share in the offence ; although here it may possibly carry this general import only, “ Let us punish him so as effectually to silence him.”

Verse 20. Shall evil be rendered for good ?—Literally, “ Shall one render evil ? ” for רעה, being feminine, cannot be the subject of הַיָּשָׁלֵם, which is used indefinitely.

Verse 21. And drain them—The LXX. here render, ἀρροισον αυτοις εις χειρας μαχαυρας, and the other ancient versions seem rather to favour the derivation of הָגַר from גָּר. But our English translators have derived it from נָגַר, “ to flow or run away ” like water ; and I think, more properly ; although they have supplied, unnecessarily, as it should seem, both here and Ezekiel xxxv. 5, the word “ blood.” For הַגֵּר, or, as it is found in seven mss. and two editions, וְהַגֵּר, and in one ms. הַגֵּיר, without the conjunction, signifies, “ drain them,” or “ cause them to melt and flow away ” like water. See Psalm lviii. 8.

- Let their women be childless and widows,
 And let their men be killed by pestilence,
 Their young men slain by the sword in battle.
- 22 Let an outcry be heard from their houses,
 When thou shalt bring a troop upon them suddenly ;
 Because they have digged a pit to catch me,
 And snares have they privily laid for my feet.
- 23 But thou, O JEHOVAH, hast known
 Their whole counsel against my life :
 Accept no atonement for their iniquity,
 And blot not out their sin from before thee :
 But let them be overthrown in thy presence ;
 In the time of thy wrath proceed against them.

The same phrase occurs, Psalm lxiii. 11, יגירוהו על-ידי-חרב, which I cite in order to suggest an emendation which seems necessary. In our English translation now in use it is rendered, "They shall fall by the sword ;" and correspondently in the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, Παραδοθησονται εις χειρας ρομφαιας, Tradentur in manus gladii. But how יגירוהו can have this passive sense, does not appear. On the other hand, in the margin of our present Bibles it is rendered, "They shall make him run out like water by the hands of the sword ;" in the ancient version, "They shall cast him down with the edge of the sword ;" and in the Chaldee paraphrase, "They shall fear him because of the stroke of the sword." In all which, the difficulty will be to find the antecedent of the affix הו, "him." But it seems evident to me, that the word יגירוהו has suffered a corruption by the transposition of the two last letters, and that we should read יגירוה; and then the sense of the verse will not only be clear in itself, but perfectly correspond with the preceding one, thus :—

- 10 But these with a view to destruction seek my life ;
 Let them go into the lower parts of the earth :
 11 They drain it off by means of the sword ;
 Let them be a portion for foxes.

"Deliver them into the hand." See the old versions."—
 SECKER.

Let their women—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate here omit the copulative ו before והינה, and I should, from analogy, guess them to be right. On the other hand, at the beginning of the last hemistich of this verse, the LXX. together with one MS. add the conjunction before בחוריהם; but this I think less probable.

Killed by pestilence—הרגי מות. Among the judgments enumerated, chap. xv. 2, מות, it was there observed, signified "the pestilence," or some epidemical disease that was mortal. The same must be the case here.

Verse 23. But let them be overthrown—For ורתי, twenty-seven, perhaps twenty-eight, MSS. and five editions read, with the Masora, ורתי. Two MSS. for בעת, read בעת. The sense in both cases is nearly the same ; but the ancient versions confirm the present reading of the text.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 THUS said JEHOVAH unto me; Go and get thee a potter's earthen vessel, and some of the elders of the people and of
 2 the elders of the priests. And thou shalt go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which lieth before the gate Harsith, and shalt proclaim there the words which I shall
 3 speak unto thee. And thou shalt say, Hear ye the word of CHAP. XIX. UNDER the type of breaking a potter's vessel, Jeremiah, in the presence of the elders, of the priests, and people, foreshoweth the ruin and desolation of Judah and Jerusalem for their sins; (verses 1-13;) and repeateth the like denunciations in the court of the temple; (verses 14, 15;) for which, being beaten and imprisoned by Pashur, captain of the temple, on his release he pronounceth a terrible sentence against Pashur and his friends, foretelling their being carried away captives with all Judah unto Babylon, where Pashur, and all that belonged to him, should die in exile. (Chapter xx. 1-6.) Jeremiah complaineth of the mockery of his enemies, and their malicious attempts to hurt him; but professeth his trust that God would still defeat their purposes, and avenge his wrongs, and celebrateth his deliverance with a song of praise. (Verses 7-13.) He bitterly lamenteth his being born to a life of so much sorrow and uneasiness. (Verses 14—to the end.)

Verse 1. Unto me—Six mss. and two editions read אֵלַי, "unto me," agreeably to the LXX. and Syriac versions. Another ms. has אֵלַי in the margin.

And some of the elders, &c.—The LXX., Syriac, and Chaldee here supply a verb answering to the verb "take," which is found in our English version. But I apprehend there is an ellipsis of the words יהלכו אתך, which are virtually contained in the preceding verb הֵלֵךְ: "Go thou, and let some of the elders, &c. go with thee." See verse 10.

Verse 2. Which lies before the gate Harsith—The Masoretes with fifteen mss. and three editions read הַחֲרִסִּית for הַחֲרָסוֹת, and this reading of the last syllable is also confirmed by the LXX., Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, and the Syriac, who all have rendered the word as a proper name; the first Xapσειθ, the other three Greek translators Aποειθ, and the Syriac, by an evident mistake of ד for ר. הַחֲרִסִּית. Our English translators, with some other interpreters, have supposed this to be "the east gate," called שַׁעַר הַמִּזְרָח, Neh. iii. 29; and that הַחֲרָסִית is of the same import, from חָרַס, "the sun," the gate being opposite to the sun at its rising. But though חָרַס signifies "the sun," I see no reason for determining it to be "the rising sun," and, consequently, for interpreting the adjective "eastern." But what more directly contradicts this is, that the valley of the son of Hinnom was not on the east, but on the south, side of Jerusalem; as I think may be concluded from Joshua xv. 8, but is expressly affirmed by an ingenious traveller, who viewed the place on the spot, and whose words are, "On the east is Mount Olivet, separated from the city by the valley of Jehoshaphat, (which also circleteth a part of the north,) on the south the mountain of offence, interposed

JEHOVAH, O ye kings of Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem. Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold I am about to bring evil upon this place, which whosoever heareth, both his ears shall ring: Because they have deserted me, and have alienated this place, and have burned incense in it to strange gods, whom they have not known; they, and their fathers, and the kings of Judah; and have filled this place with the blood of innocents: And have erected the high places of Baal, to burn their sons in the fire for with the valley of Gehinnon.”—SANDYS’S Travels, book iii. p. 155. It seems far more probable, that החרסית is derived from חרש, “a potsherd,” which being written with a “Sin,” is in sound the same as חרס, and the letters are often interchangeably used for each other. In Chaldee it is written חרס; and the Vulgate here renders, fictilis. This favours the supposition of Grotius, that the gate was so called, because the potters threw out of it their broken pieces; only he seems to be mistaken in placing it near the temple. The Chaldee Paraphrast interprets it “the dung gate;” and it is most likely to have been the same with that which is so called, Neh. iii. 13, 14, because, besides the rubbish of broken pots, all the filth of the city was carried through it, and laid in the valley of Hinnom, after Josiah had defiled it; for which reason also the valley itself seems to have been named, “the valley of dead bodies and of ashes,” (chapter xxxi. 40,) or, as it is expressed more fully in the Syriac, “the valley into which they cast dung and ashes.” In further confirmation of this it may be observed, that the dung gate is found exactly in the quarter in which I have before proved the gate to be situated, which was in front of the valley of the son of Hinnom. For when Nehemiah dedicated the walls of Jerusalem, he appointed the people in two companies to go round in procession; one company to the right, or south, the other to the left, or north, so as both to come in by the east to the temple. The procession, therefore, beginning from the west, the first gate that presented itself to the party that came round by the south, was the dung gate; which consequently was on the south side, nearest the west; as the valley of the son of Hinnom also appears to have been. See Neh. xii. 31. However, till the affair has been decided by better judgments, I have thought best to follow the prudent caution of those who have interpreted החרסית as a proper name.

“החרסות—Perhaps there is an allusion to חרש, ‘earthen,’ verse 1.”—SECKER.

“Verse 3. מלכי—Plur. Sic Versiones. Sed potuit oriri ex sequenti.”—SECKER.

Verse 4. They have deserted me—For עזבני twenty-seven, perhaps twenty-eight, MSS. and two editions read עזבוני.

“Rather, distinguish thus, ‘Unto other gods whom they have not known; they, and their fathers, and the kings of Judah,’ that is, have forsaken me.”—SECKER.

Of innocents—The Masora reads נקיים, and has the concurrence of forty-two, perhaps forty-three, MSS. and six editions.

burntofferings to Baal ; which I enjoined not, nor commanded, 6 nor was it acceptable unto me. Therefore behold the days are coming, saith JEHOVAH, that this place shall no more be called Topheth, or The valley of the son of Hinnom, but 7 The valley of slaughter. For I will defeat the counsel of Judah and of Jerusalem in this place ; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hand of them that seek their lives ; and their dead bodies will I give for meat unto the fowls of the heavens, and unto the beasts 8 of the earth : And I will make this city an object of astonishment and of hissing : Every one that passeth by it shall be 9 astonished, and shall hiss because of all its plagues. And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons and the flesh of their daughters ; and they shall eat every one the flesh of his companion during the siege and the distress, with which their enemies and those that seek their lives shall straiten them.
 10 Then shalt thou break the vessel in the sight of the men that 11 go with thee ; and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts : So will I break this people and this city as he breaketh the potter's vessel, which cannot be made whole again : And men shall bury in Topheth, until there be no room 12 to bury. Thus will I do unto this place, saith JEHOVAH, and to the inhabitants thereof, even so as to make this city 13 like Topheth. And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses

Verse 5. Which I enjoined not, &c.—See note on chapter vii. 31.

Verse 7. And I will defeat the counsel of Judah, &c.—It is probable that some signal check was given the Jews in this quarter by the Chaldeans during the siege of Jerusalem.

“וַיִּקְבֹּק”—Perhaps an allusion to בִּקְבֹּק, verse 1.”—SECKER.

Verse 8. Of hissing—Hissing seems to mean here an inarticulate sound, expressing not so much contempt, as astonishment mixed with horror. See chapter xviii. 16, &c., &c.

Verse 9 And I will cause them to eat the flesh, &c.—See the like threatened, Lev. xxvi. 29 ; Deut. xxviii. 53 ; Ezek. v. 10, and spoken of as accomplished, Lam. iv. 10.

Verse 11. As he breaketh—That is, as Jeremiah breaketh ; the words being spoken by JEHOVAH.

Which cannot be made whole again—For לְהִרְפֹּא, thirty-one mss. and three editions read לְהִרְפֵּא ; and the final ה is upon a rasure in five other mss.

And men shall bury in Topheth—These words are omitted by the LXX. ; but are found in the parallel passage, chapter vii. 32.

Verse 12. Like Topheth—That is, either “a place of slaughter,” as verse 6, or “defiled,” as it follows in the next verse.

of the kings of Judah, shall be as the place Topheth, unclean; together with all the houses, on the roofs of which they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven, pouring out also oblations unto strange gods.

- 14 AND Jeremiah came from Topheth, whither JEHOVAH had sent him to prophesy; and stood in the court of the house of 15 JEHOVAH, and said to all the people, Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold I am about to bring upon this city, and upon all the cities belonging to it, all the evil which I have denounced against it; because they have stiffened their neck, so as not to hearken to my words.

CHAPTER XX.

- 1 WHEN Pashur the son of Immer the priest (who was also the commanding officer in the house of JEHOVAH) heard Jere-

Verse 15. I am about to bring—The Masora with twenty-five, perhaps twenty-seven, mss. and three editions, for מביא read מבי.

And upon all the cities belonging to it—כל-עריה. All the cities of Judah and Benjamin are meant, which acknowledged Jerusalem for their metropolis, and were subordinate to her.

CHAP. XX. Verse 1. Commanding officer—Three mss. read with the Syriac, פקיד ונגיד. But the text seems to need no alteration. The case was probably this: The priests, as we learn from 1 Chron. xxiv., were distributed by David into twenty-four courses, under as many heads of families, each of which courses officiated by turns in the temple service. The heads of each course or family are said (verse 5) to be “governors of the sanctuary,” and, according to our present translation, “governors of the house of God;” but “of the house” is not expressed in the Hebrew; therefore אלהים שריהם may more properly be rendered, “principal” or “chief of the judges or magistrates;” according to a well-known signification of אלהים. The meaning then will be, that these heads of the courses had not only the chief ordering of the holy things, or of the service of the sanctuary, but were invested also with authority and power, at least within the precincts of the temple, to maintain peace and good order there. These persons I look upon to be the same with those who, in the New Testament, are styled ἀρχιερεῖς, “chief priests,” being next in dignity and power to the high priest. The course of Immer was the sixteenth in order, and Pashur, it seems, was the head of it; so that if the course of Immer was at that time upon duty, Pashur was at the same time the acting ruler or commander in the temple. And this I conceive to be implied in the words פקיד ונגיד; פקיד implying his authority or command, and נגיד, that he was then in the exercise of it; and by virtue of that authority he took upon him to punish Jeremiah as a disturber of the peace. I have given this officer or magistrate the military title of “commanding officer,” because it was usual to

2 miah prophesying these things : Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and committed him to the house of correction, which was in the higher gate of Benjamin, which was near the 3 house of JEHOVAH. And it came to pass the next day, when Pashur released Jeremiah out of the house of correction, consider the temple as a kind of garrison held by priests and Levites under military subordination. And for this reason, no doubt, we find him called by the name of στρατηγος του ιερου, "captain of the temple," Acts iv. 1 ; v. 24, 26. In Luke xxii. 52, "captains," στρατηγους, are spoken of in the plural number ; which may perhaps be thus accounted for : As on the great festivals not only the priests of the ordinary course, but the whole body of priests, were called upon to assist in the sacrifices ; so, on account of the multitudes that flocked to the temple at these times, the guards were also necessarily doubled, and of course a greater number of στρατηγους, "captains," were on constant duty ; and many, if not all these, came to assist in apprehending Jesus, as on a service which might be esteemed hazardous on account of the number of his disciples.

Verse 2. The house of correction—Our translators have rendered המחפכת "the stocks ;" but I think without sufficient ground ; for the word, which properly signifies that instrument of punishment, is סד. See Job xiii. 27 ; xxxiii. 11. The word המחפכת occurs twice besides ; (chapter xxix. 26 ; and 2 Chronicles xvi. 10 ;) in both which places it is rendered simply "a prison ;" and is mentioned as a punishment due to or inflicted on one, who assumed the character of a prophet without a proper call, or was presumed to have behaved unbecomingly as such. The verb הפך, from which it is derived, signifies in Hiphil to "cause to turn, alter," or "change ;" that is, in respect of moral conduct, to "correct," or "reform ; and therefore המחפכת seems not improperly expressed by "the house of correction ;" such places being also often established in the gates of cities, where courts of judicature were anciently held. And it is very natural to understand here, that Pashur, having caused Jeremiah to be beaten or scourged, ordered him into confinement afterwards ; from whence he released him the next day.

The higher gate of Benjamin—The city of Jerusalem, taken in its full extent, was included within the lot of two tribes ; but the north part, the ancient Jebusi, of which Mount Moriah, where the temple stood, made a part, was in the lot of Benjamin, as may be seen, Jo-hua xviii. 16. Admitting this, the upper or higher gate of Benjamin must be one of those that were on the north side ; and accordingly Ezekiel, (chapter ix. 2,) describes "the higher gate" as "lying toward the north." By the epithet "higher," I suppose regard may be had to the course of the sun, rising in the east, and going down to the west ; so that the higher of the gates, that were in the north quarter in the lot of Benjamin, must be the most eastern of them, and consequently one adjoining to the temple. See chapter xxxvi. 10, 12. This also appears from the before-cited passage, (Ezek. ix. 2,) where Ezekiel, who stood within the inner court of the temple, is said to have seen six men advancing directly "from the way of the higher gate, which lieth toward the north, to the side of the brasen that Jeremiah said unto him, JEHOVAH hath called thy 4 name not Pashur, but Magor-missabib. For thus saith JEHOVAH, Behold I am about to make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends; and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, thine eyes also looking on; and all Judah will I give into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive unto Babylon, and shall 5 smite them with the sword. And I will give all the strength of this city, and all its industry, and all that is valuable in it, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, and they shall spoil 6 them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon. And altar." The gate, however, though it must be thus situated, might otherwise be called "higher," from its standing on more elevated ground than the rest in the circuit of the wall.

Verse 3. Magor-missabib—This word signifies, "Terror-all-around." And God's calling him by that name implies that he would render him such as he called him. So when God called Abram by the new name of Abraham, he assigns the reason, "For a father of many nations have I made thee." (Genesis xvii. 5.)

Verse 5. All the strength of this city, and all its industry, and all that is valuable in it—חֲסִן properly signifies that which strengthens and secures the possession of any thing. Here, no doubt, it means "the men of war," which constitute "the strength" of a city or state; as יָגִיעָה, "its labour," or "industry," does the industrious artisans and mechanics; and יָקָרָה, the honourable and respectable members of the community, not included in the two former classes. With respect to this sense of יָגִיעָה, I think we have an instance in point, Isaiah xlv. 14, where we read, יָגִיעַ מִצְרַיִם וְסַחֲרֵי כוֹשׁ, which Bishop Lowth renders, "The wealth of Egypt, and the merchandise of Cush;" considering יָגִיעַ as put by metonymy for that wealth which is gotten by industry. But if we consider the context, we shall plainly perceive, that persons, and not inanimate things, are spoken of; and that by יָגִיעַ מִצְרַיִם וְסַחֲרֵי כוֹשׁ must be meant, "the manufacturers of Egypt, and the merchants of Cush;" that is, the people of those countries respectively distinguished by their turn for arts and commerce; who, with the Sabæans, alike remarkable for the tallness of their stature, it is said, should come over and join the party of him who was employed and countenanced by the true God.

It will, I think, tend much to illustrate this passage, and the corresponding conduct of the Babylonian monarch, related 2 Kings xxiv. 12–17, if I here cite the words of a celebrated modern historian, who describes the similar behaviour of those barbarians, the Moguls or Tartars, who under Zingis overran and conquered Asia, to their captives, in the following manner: "The inhabitants, who had submitted to their discretion, were ordered to evacuate their houses, and to assemble in some plain adjacent to the city, where a division was made of the vanquished into three parts. The first class consisted of the soldiers of the garrison, and of the young thou Pashur, and all that dwell in thy house, ye shall go into captivity; and thou shalt enter Babylon, and there thou shalt die; and there thou shalt be buried, thou and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied falsely.

7 THOU didst allure me, O JEHOVAH, and I was allured;
Thou didst encourage me, and didst prevail;
I am become a laughing stock every day,

men capable of bearing arms; and their fate was instantly decided; they were either enlisted among the Moguls, or they were massacred on the spot by the troops, who, with pointed spears and bended bows, had formed a circle round the captive multitude. The second class, composed of the young and beautiful women, of the artificers of every rank and profession, and of the more wealthy or honourable citizens, from whom a private ransom might be expected, was distributed in equal or proportionable lots. The remainder, whose life or death was alike useless to the conquerors, were permitted to return to the city; which in the mean while had been stripped of its valuable furniture, and a tax was imposed on those wretched inhabitants for the indulgence of breathing their native air."—GIBBON'S History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol. iii. page 367. Here we see evidently the distinction of דַּחֲסִי, גִּיִּיעַ, and יִקָּר, and also of those poorer and meaner citizens, who were left in the land, but still tributary to the Chaldeans, first under Zedekiah, and next under Gedaliah. (Chapter xxxix. 10; xl. 7.)

Verse 7. Thou didst allure me, &c.—It would be a singular pleasure to me to contribute in any degree towards clearing the character of a much injured servant of God from those imputations, which have, I think, very undeservedly been cast upon it. He has been particularly censured on account of the passage before us, in which he has been represented as profanely and insolently upbraiding God with having falsified his word to him, and having even forced him into his service, without granting him that protection which he had encouraged him to expect. This would have been profane insolence indeed; but neither do the words used by him necessarily imply any such thing; nor can they be so understood consistently with what the prophet declares, verse 11, that God was with him, and so effectually took his part as to baffle all the designs of his enemies, and make them ashamed of their unsuccessful malice. And again, verse 13, he breaks forth into a song of praise and thanksgiving to God for his especial preservation of him. Surely these are not the expressions of one who complained of being deceived and imposed on by God; and the verb פָּתָה may as well signify to "persuade" or "allure" by fair means, as by false and indirect ones; in which latter case only it implies "seduction" and "deceit." Now God had invited Jeremiah into his service; and proposed both to qualify him for, and to employ him in, a ministry of the most important and honourable kind. "Before I formed thee in the womb, I knew thee; and before thou camest forth from the birth, I separated thee; a prophet unto the nations have I constituted thee." (Chapter i. 5.) And again, Ridicule hath spent its whole force upon me.

- 8 For as often as I speak,
Whether I cry out against injustice, or proclaim devastation,
The word of JEHOVAH is turned against me
Into matter of reproach and derision continually.

verse 10 : "See I have given thee power this day over nations and over kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to overthrow ; and to build, and to plant." Such an offer was sufficiently flattering to human ambition ; for if it be accounted highly honourable to serve an earthly prince, how much more to become the special minister and agent of the supreme Lord of heaven and earth ! Accordingly Jeremiah says, that he received the commission with joy, and was much pleased for a time with being "called by the name of JEHOVAH God of hosts." (Chapter xv. 16.) But this was before he had experienced the inconveniences of his new dignity ; although he could not pretend that these were altogether concealed from him ; for he was apprized from the first, that he should encounter great opposition, which, however, God would not suffer to prevail against him. (Chapter i. 17-19.) He could not, therefore, nor did he, say that he was deceived ; the utmost he could mean was, that he was allured by the dazzling splendour of the office to take it upon him, without weighing all its consequences. So that if any reflection be here intended, it is not levelled at God, but at his own rashness and want of consideration. There is also as little ground for charging the prophet with saying, that God had forced him into a disagreeable office against his will. Yet this seems to be implied in our common translation of חֲזַקְתִּי וְהוֹכַל, "Thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed ;" in which sense all the ancient versions and the generality of commentators seem to agree. But the verb חֲזַק in Pihel signifies to "fortify" or "encourage ;" as may be seen, Deut. i. 38 ; iii. 28 ; Isaiah xli. 7, &c. And the words in question, I am persuaded, allude to that encouragement which the prophet received from God, when he told him at first that he would both enable him to discharge the office, and would support him against all opposers, (chapter i. 7, 8, 17-19,) or to that which was afterwards given him, when he began to complain of hardships. (Chapter xv. 19-21.) This being the case, I see nothing in the prophet's words, but what is consistent with the utmost piety and reverence towards God ; who, he says, had prevailed upon him to undertake an honourable, though painful, employment, and had encouraged him to go through with it by assurances, which he acknowledges him to have made good ; but that the unmerited scorn and insult he had met with on the part of man had often tempted him to wish that he could have withdrawn himself fairly out of the way. Surely in all this, we may say of him, as the scripture says of another eminent sufferer,—Jeremiah "sinned not, nor charged God foolishly." (Job i. 22.)

Ridicule hath spent its whole force upon me—כִּלְהָ, if an adjective, as it is generally understood to be, must either be a feminine, or have a feminine affix ; neither of which could well be accounted for in this place. But it is a verb, and literally signifies, "is perfected," or "carried to its utmost length."

- 9 But when I say, I will not make mention of it,
Neither will I speak any more in its name ;
Then it becomes in my heart as a burning fire, being pent up within my bones ;
And though I weary myself with refraining, I find it not in my power.
- 10 Surely I have heard the babbling of many, saying,
Report ye terror all around, and we will report it :

“ Verse 8. מדי דבר—πικρῶ λογῶ μου. LXX. Fortè legerunt, מר דבר.”— SECKER. Perhaps the true reading may have been, מדי דבר, “with all the power of my words,” or, “in the strongest terms.” The passage then may be thus translated :—

I am become a laughing stock every day,
Ridicule is perfected in me,
When I urge in the strongest terms,
I proclaim violence and devastation ;
For the word of JEHOVAH is turned against me
Into matter of reproach and derision continually.

The prophet hereby means to say, that he was sure to be treated with the highest degree of ridicule, whenever he proceeded to enforce his commission with earnestness, which was that of proclaiming the approaching evils, violence and devastation ; for though what he said was no other than the word of JEHOVAH, which ought naturally to have procured him respect, it had a quite contrary effect, and exposed him to perpetual obloquy and derision.

Verse 9. Neither will I speak any more in its name—Our English translations, both ancient and modern, make JEHOVAH the antecedent of the affix pronouns in מדי דבר and בשמו ; but I rather take דבר to be so, as it is evidently the subject of the following verb רדיה. To “speak in the name of God’s word” is to deliver any thing as bearing the stamp of that authority.

Then it becomes in my heart as a burning fire, &c.—I question whether any thing more is meant here, than that his conscience would not let him be easy in suppressing that which he knew it was his duty to speak out. In like manner St. Paul says of himself, that “necessity was laid upon him, so that woe would be to him if he preached not the gospel, the dispensation of which had been committed unto him.” (1 Cor. ix. 16, 17.) The psalmist makes use of the like expression, “the fire burned,” to denote the inward agitation he felt, whilst he endeavoured to stifle the sentiments which laboured for utterance. (Psalm xxxix. 3)

Being pent up within my bones—עצור is the reading, instead of עצר, in nineteen mss., of which the ancient Bodleian is one ; and is right, being the participle Pahal masculine in agreement with דבר. “Pent up within my bones,” that is, confined within my breast.

Verse 10. Report ye terror all around, and we will report it—The prophet says, that he had overheard, or was not unacquainted with, the conversation of many, who encouraged one another to spread reports of danger that threatened him on all sides, in hopes to intimidate him, or to urge him to

- All my familiar friends watch for my halting, Perhaps, say they, he may be drawn aside, so that we may prevail against him,
 And we may take our revenge of him.
- 11 But JEHOVAH is on my side, as a formidable champion ; Therefore shall my persecutors stumble, and shall not prevail ;
 They are exceedingly ashamed, because they have not succeeded,
 With an everlasting shame, that shall not be forgotten.
- 12 And, O JEHOVAH of hosts, who puttest the righteous to trial,
 Who discernest the reins and the heart,
 I shall see thy vengeance upon them,
 For unto thee have I laid open my wrongs.
- 13 Sing ye to JEHOVAH, praise ye JEHOVAH, Because he hath delivered the soul of the poor out of the hand of evildoers.

 The day on which my mother bare me, let it not be blessed.

take some false step, which they, even his most familiar friends, were ever on the watch to turn to his disadvantage. The expressions are borrowed from Psalm xxxi. 13. Recollect also in what manner our Saviour was continually beset by persons, who often put the like treacherous arts in practice, with a view to entrap and entangle him, so as to furnish a specious accusation against him.

“שומרי צלעי—Or, ‘the guards of my side.’”—SECKER.

“Verse 11. אהתי—אותי, Codex unus Kennicott. p. 512.”—SECKER. Eighteen MSS. and four editions read אהתי.

With an everlasting shame, that shall not be forgotten—Dr. Durell proposes to consider עולם as compounded of עול and the ם affix, and to render, “The confusion of their wickedness shall not be forgotten.” This is a very plausible conjecture, and would afford a good sense; but we find the same words repeated, chap. xxiii. 40; only the relative אשר is there expressed before לא תשכח, which here suffers an ellipsis, according to a very common Hebrew idiom; and the sense is so determined in that place, as to leave no room for doubting in this.

Verse 12. And, O JEHOVAH of hosts, &c.—Compare chapter xi. 20.

Verse 14. Cursed be the day, &c.—Here the prophet is again accused of giving proof of the malignity of his heart, by uttering the most horrid imprecations against persons and things that had not injured him, nor could have given him the least cause of complaint. But Mr. Lowth, in his commentary upon the place, has very properly urged in his defence, that what we read here, is a lamentation written in a poetical strain, like the Lessus

- 15 Cursed be the man who brought the news to my father,
Saying, There is a male child born unto thee ;
Making him exceedingly glad.
- 16 And let that man be as the cities,
Which JEHOVAH overthrew, and repented not ;
Even hearing an outcry in the morning,
And an alarm at the time of noon :

or Nenie, which the præfice, or “mourning women,” used to sing ; wherein strong poetical figures are used, and all the circumstances brought in that are proper to raise the passions, but which it would be extremely wrong to interpret in a strict and literal sense ; and, therefore, that the imprecations here excepted to are not to be looked upon as so many expressions of indignation and malice, but rather of mourning and sorrow. Divested of this poetical heightening, all that the prophet says amounts only to this : That his birth-day had proved a very unlucky one to him ; and that the man who had brought his father the news of his birth had, in reality, been the messenger of ill tidings, instead of good ; for that, as things had turned out with him, it would have been a kinder and more charitable office to have strangled him in the womb, than to have assisted in bringing him into the world, to lead a life of so much bitterness and disquietude. So much may be said for it in a moral view. But, with respect to its poetical merit, I know of nothing in its kind more truly and beautifully affecting. What could have painted the distress of the prophet’s mind with more strong and lively colouring ? The pencil is guided by nature ; which delights in multiplying passion, especially of the violent and tumultuous kind, and expanding it over whatever has any the slightest relation to, or connexion with, the object that first excited it. See Elements of Criticism, chap. ii. p. 1, sect. 5. Bishop Lowth has also cited similar instances of grief discharging itself in invectives and bitter wishes against objects equally blameless and undeserving with those which our prophet has singled out ; among the rest is the following exclamation in David’s celebrated lamentation over Saul and Jonathan : “Ye mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew, neither rain upon you, nor fields of offerings.” (2 Sam. i. 21.) Upon which he thus descants :—“All which, if you were to bring to the standard of cool and dispassionate reason, what would appear more absurd ? But if you have an eye to nature, and the ordinary flow of the passions, what more genuine, more exact, more beautiful ! The falling upon a wrong cause instead of the right, though a fault in logic, is sometimes an excellence in poetry ; because the leading principle in the former is right reason, in the latter it is passion.” (De Sac. Poes. Heb. Prælect. xxiii.)*

Verse 16. Even hearing an outcry, &c.—That is, subject to continual alarms ; as cities beset with enemies ; or to mournful cries uttered in his own family, on account of repeated misfortunes.

* Quæ omnia, si ad rectæ rationis normam trahas, quid absurdius ? si naturam et affectuum motus spectes, quid verius, quid expressius, quid pulchrius ? Non causa pro causa, in dialectica fœdissima, in poetica interdum est virtus : Quia nimirum illic ratio, hic affectus dominantur.

So that my mother might have been my grave,
Even the womb of her that conceived me, for ever.

To experience disquietude and sorrow,
And that my days should be spent in shame ?

CHAPTER XXII.*

- 1 THUS said JEHOVAH ; Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and thou shalt speak there this word, and shalt say,

That enter in through these gates :

Verse 17. Even the womb of her that conceived me—Instead of ורחמה הרת I propose to read ורחם הורתי, as exegetic of אמי, or answering as a parallel to it. The Syriac has preserved the affix י after הרת ; but if we read the text as it now stands, how can הרת, which is feminine, agree with רחם, which is masculine ? הורתי is found in a parallelism with אמי, Cant. iii. 4 ; and הורחם with אמם, Hosea ii. 7.

“אשר לא מוהתני, ורחי”—‘Because he did not slay me ; and my mother become my grave.’—SECKER.

THE chapter now marked “chapter xxi.” is the first instance of the disorderly arrangement taken notice of page 14. From the two first verses we learn, that it was delivered in answer to a message sent by king Zedekiah, when Nebuchadnezzar was coming to make war against him ; that is, about the ninth year of his reign. All the intermediate prophecies, therefore, of Jehoiakim’s, and of the eight first years of Zedekiah’s, reign, ought, of right, to precede this ; which is, accordingly, postponed, to follow in its proper order of succession.

CHAP. XXII. THE prophecy which follows, to chapter xxiii. 9, was evidently delivered in the reign of Jehoiakim ; for it speaks of his immediate predecessor as already gone into captivity, and foretells the death of Jehoiakim himself. It is likewise probable that it followed immediately after what is said in the xixth and xxth chapters to have passed in the temple-precincts ; from whence, as from higher ground, the prophet is ordered to “go down to the house of the king of Judah.” Compare chap. xxxvi. 12.

* A new arrangement of the chapters in Jeremiah having been adopted, from chapter xx. to chapter xli., they are here to be found in the following order :—

XXII.	XXIV.	XXXIV.	XL.
XXIII.	XXIX.	XXXVII.	XLI.
XXV.	XXX.	XXXII.	XLII.

XXXV.	XXVII.	XXXVIII.	XLIV.
XXXVI.	XXVIII.	XXXIX. 15—18	XLVI. &c.

- 3 Thus saith JEHOVAH ;
Do right and justice,
And deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor,
And the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow,
Defraud ye not, nor injure by violence,
Neither shed innocent blood in this place.
- 4 For if ye shall indeed do according to this word,
Then shall there enter in through the gates of this house
Kings sitting in the stead of David upon his throne,
Riding in chariots, and upon horses,
Each one himself, and his servants, and his people.
- 5 But if ye will not hearken unto these words,
By myself have I sworn, saith JEHOVAH,
Surely this house shall become a desolation.
- 6 For thus hath JEHOVAH said
Concerning the house of the king of Judah ;

The beginning of this prophecy is an address to the king of Judah, his servants, and people, recommending an inviolable adherence to right and justice, as the only means of establishing the throne, and preventing the ruin of both prince and people. (Verses 1-9.) The captivity of Shallum is declared to be irreversible. (Verses 10-12.) Jehoiakim is severely reprov'd for his tyrannical oppressions, and his miserable end foretold. (Verses 13-19.) His family is threatened with a continuance of the like calamities; the fall and captivity of his son Jeconiah are explicitly set forth; and the perpetual exclusion of his seed from the throne. (Verses 20-30.) The name of Zedekiah is not mentioned, for obvious reasons; but he is no doubt principally intended in the two first verses of chapter xxiii. under the general character of those evil shepherds who should be punished for dispersing, instead of feeding, the flock. In the six following verses, with which the prophecy concludes, the people are consoled with gracious promises of future blessings; of their return from captivity; and of happier times, under better governors; of the glorious establishment of the Messiah's kingdom; and of the subsequent restoration of all the dispersed Israelites, to dwell once more in their own land.

Verse 3. The oppressor—For עֹשֶׂק, the participle Pahul, "oppressed," three mss. read עֶשֶׂק; and one ms., with the oldest edition of the Bible, read עֹשֶׂק, as in the parallel passage, chapter xxi. 12. All the ancient versions follow this reading.

Defraud ye not, nor injure by violence—Twenty-three mss. and eight editions read תִּזְנוּ for תִּזְנוּ. The LXX., Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, with thirty-three mss. and six editions, read וְאֵל, with the conjunction before תִּזְנוּ.

Verse 4. In the stead of David—See note on chapter xiii. 13.

And his servants—For וְעֲבָדָיו the Masoretes read וְעֲבָדָיו, which is certainly right, and agreeable to all the ancient versions, and to twenty-seven, perhaps twenty-nine, mss. and three editions.

- Gilead art thou through me, O summit of Lebanon ;
 Surely I will make thee a desert,
 Cities not inhabited.
- 7 And I will commission against thee destroyers,
 Every man and his weapons ;
 And they shall cut down the choice of thy cedars,
 And shall cast them upon the fire.
- 8 And many nations shall pass by this city,
 And they shall say one to another,
 Wherefore hath JEHOVAH done thus unto this great city ?
- 9 Then shall they answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of JEHOVAH their God,
 And they have worshipped strange gods, and served them.
- 10 WEEP ye not for him that is dead,
 Neither be sorry for him :
 Weep ye sorely for him that is gone away,
 For he shall return no more,
 Nor see his native land.
- 11 For thus saith JEHOVAH
 Concerning Shallum the son of Josiah king of Judah,

Verse 6. Gilead art thou through me, O summit of Lebanon—לִי, “through me,” that is, by my disposition or appointment. See note on chapter xv. 8. Lebanon, it has been observed before, was the highest mountain in Israel ; and was, therefore, an apt emblem of the reigning family, advanced to the highest rank and dignity in the state. Gilead was the richest and most fertile part of the country ; the meaning, then, is plainly this :—“By my providence thou art not only supreme in rank, but hast been rendered exceedingly wealthy and flourishing ; but the same power that raised thee will likewise be exerted in reducing thee to the lowest state of indigence and distress.

Cities not inhabited—The Masora reads נִשְׁבּוּ for נִשְׁבָּה, and has the concurrence of seven mss. and the margin of the Bible of Felix Pratensis. But no alteration is necessary, if Buxtorf's rule be admitted, that a plural substantive may be joined with a singular adjective in a distributive sense ; thus, “Cities every one of them uninhabited.” See Buxtorf. Thes. Gram. lib. ii. cap. 2. But supposing an alteration ; instead of נִשְׁבָּה, or נִשְׁבּוּ, perhaps we should rather read נִשְׁבּוּת. See Ezek. xii. 20.

Verse 7. And I will commission—Our English translation here is, “And I will prepare ;” but וקדשתי literally signifies, “And I will sanctify ;” that is, I will take them into my service, and authorize them to act against thee under my commission, or as my agents and ministers.

Verse 11. Shallum the son of Josiah—The son of Josiah, who immediately succeeded his father on the throne, was no other than Jehoahaz, whom Pharaoh Necho deposed after a reign of three months, and carried him

- Who reigned instead of Josiah his father,
 Who went forth from this place ;
 He shall not return thither any more :
- 12 But in the place, whither they have carried him away captive, he shall die,
 And shall see this land no more.
- 13 Wo unto him that buildeth his house with injustice,
 And his upper apartments with wrong ;
 That exacteth his neighbour's service for nought,
 And payeth him not for his work ;

captive to Egypt, where he died. (2 Kings xxiii. 30-34.) It is therefore probable, that Shallum was his name before he ascended the throne, which he changed for Jehoahaz, as his brothers Eliakim and Mattaniah also assumed the names of Jehoiakim and Zedekiah on the like occasion. (2 Kings xxiii. 34; xxiv. 17.) But it has been thought difficult to reconcile this with 1 Chron. iii. 15, where the sons of Josiah are said to be, "the firstborn, Johanan, the second Jehoiakim, the third Zedekiah, the fourth Shallum." Now Johanan could not be the same as Jehoahaz, because Jehoahaz was certainly younger than Jehoiakim; as appears from comparing 2 Kings xxiii. 31 with verse 36 of the same chapter. What, therefore, became of Johanan, we find not; he may have died before his father; or he may have been set aside for some objection of incapacity or dislike. But if Jehoahaz be Shallum, then the order of the sons must be inverted in the fore-cited passage, and we ought to read, "the third Shallum, the fourth Zedekiah;" which I believe was the case.

Verse 13. His upper apartments—MR. HARMER having remarked, that "the chief and most ornamented apartments of the palace, which Jehoiakim set himself to build, are here represented by Jeremiah as 'upper rooms,'" supposes that "none of our authors would express themselves after this manner; the 'lower rooms' would be the chief object of their attention;" but adds, that "it was perfectly natural in Jeremiah; for the chief rooms of the houses of Aleppo at this day are those above, the ground floor being chiefly made use of for their horses and servants."—Chapter iii. obs. 7. But there is nothing peculiar to the east in this; in England too, the grand apartments in great houses are raised above the ground-floor, which is usually taken up for offices only.

And payeth him not for his work—Our translators have here rendered פְּעֻלָּה, "his work," as the word properly signifies. But in other places they have assigned to it the sense of "reward." The ancient versions have done the same here. And led by such authorities, the learned DR. RANDOLPH, in a comment on Psalm cix, added, by way of appendix to two sermons on The Excellency of the Jewish Law, gives the following note on verse 20, of that Psalm:—"The word פְּעֻלָּה or פְּעֻלָּה, as it signifies 'work,' so it sometimes signifies 'the wages' or 'reward' of work; Lev. xix. 13; Job vii. 2; Jer. xxii. 13." But that greater stress may not be laid on such authorities than is meet, I shall beg leave to transcribe a note taken from a pamphlet,

- 14 That saith, I will build for myself
 A spacious house, and lofty apartments.
 Cutting out also for himself windows,
 And ceiling with cedar, and painting with vermilion.

published soon after the above comment, in which the texts referred to are thus examined:—

“In the first (Lev. xix. 13) it is rendered, ‘The wages (פְּעֻלָּתוֹ) of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning.’ But this is rather a paraphrastic than a literal translation. The Vulgate still renders, opus mercenarii tui, which is right; for, every free man having a right of property in his own labour, if you do not pay an hireling for his day’s work, you detain from him unjustly that labour which is his property, and which he consented to make over to you only for a valuable consideration: So long therefore as that consideration is unpaid, ‘his work’ is truly said to ‘abide with you;’ for it is his by right till paid for. In Job vii. 2, the idea of wages is founded on a misapprehension of the author’s sentiment, who had no such thing in view, as is evident from considering the next verse, where Job complains that he had ‘passed in succession months of vanity,’ (that is, in vain expectation of relief,) and that ‘nights of weariness had been his constant lot.’ The first of these is compared (verse 2) to ‘the shadow’ (the vain hopes of liberty) which the ‘bond-slave (עֶבֶד) gapes after;’ the latter to ‘the day-labourer’s work,’ (פְּעֻלָּתוֹ) which he expects as constantly as the day comes. And in this respect it is, that Job (verse 1) compares ‘his days to the days of an hireling,’ every one bringing its portion of labour and sorrow along with it. The translation, therefore, should be, ‘As a slave panteth for a shadow, and an hireling looketh for his work: So have I passed in succession months of vanity, and nights of weariness have been allotted me.’ In the last instance, (Jer. xxii. 13,) our translators have rightly rendered יִתְּנוּ לֹא יִתְּנוּ, ‘and giveth’ (or ‘payeth’) ‘him not for his work;’ for the verb נָתַן, signifies ‘to pay for,’ or ‘to recompense.’ See 2 Chron. vi. 23; Ezek. vii. 4; xi. 21, &c. So that in all these instances פְּעֻלָּה or פֶּעַל is capable of its usual sense, ‘work,’ or ‘labour.’”—Expostulatory Letter to Dr. Randolph. Oxford, 1773, page 20.

Verse 14. And lofty apartments—מִרוּחִים is a word that occurs no where else in the Hebrew; nor can it be a participle, or participial adjective from רוּחַ in agreement with עֲלִיּוֹת, because of the difference of gender. For my part, I have no doubt that we ought to read מִרוּמִים, “apartments of heights,” that is, lofty ones; which exactly correspond with בֵּית מְדוּת, “a house of dimensions,” or a spacious one. The authority of internal evidence is here so strong, that it seems sufficient to support the emendation without any external testimony in its favour.

Cutting out also for himself windows—In the margin of our English Bibles we read, “my windows;” which certainly cannot be right. Dr. Durell was of opinion, that the true reading is חֲלוֹנָיו סָפַן; and that the verbs סָפַן and מִשּׁוּחַ being infinitives, or rather gerunds, the rendering should be, “And cutteth him out his windows, ceiling with cedar, and painting with vermilion.”—DR. DURELL. In confirmation of this conjecture, one MS. reads חֲלוֹנָיו, and another סָפַן without the conjunction. But many instances

"Putarem hic legendum ספון, ut sit infinitivus."—SECKER.

Verse 15. Shalt thou reign, because thou frettest thyself in cedar?—For מתחרה the Syriac reads מתחדה, from חרה "to rejoice;" so that the sense would be, "Shalt thou reign, because thou gratifiest thy taste with living in a palace of cedar?" That is, Will that circumstance contribute to make thee happy? For thus "to reign" or "be a king" is often used. See 1 Cor. iv. 8. Not that a kingdom or the state of a king is indeed a state of superior happiness, but is generally looked up to as such by those who see nothing but the external pomp and splendour and affluence which usually accompany it. Hence "to be as happy as a king" is a common proverbial expression; and even the writers of the New Testament have borrowed the ideas of "a crown" and "a kingdom" to represent the glory and happiness that await good Christians in another life. But there seems to be no reason for presuming an alteration to be necessary in the text, since מתחרה, from חרה to "fret" and "grieve," signifies one that is a prey to the uneasy passions of discontent and remorse. And the question will then be somewhat of a sarcastic nature, which asks, "Shalt thou reign, because thou frettest thyself in cedar?" As if it had been said, Is this the inestimable privilege of royalty, this the circumstance which constitutes thy happiness as a king, to carry continually about thee the pangs of guilt, anxiety, and remorse in a splendid palace? In like manner speaks HORACE of

———— miseris tumultus
 Mentis, et curas laqueata circum
 Tecta volantes.

Od. lib. ii. 16, 10.

And it is obvious how well this suits with the following context, which places in a striking contrast the happiness of the good Josiah, resulting from the consciousness of having fulfilled the duties of his station with pious integrity. Did not thy father eat and drink, that is, partake of all the real comforts and conveniences which human life requires, in as great a degree

They shall not lament for him, saying,
 Ah my brother ! or, Ah sister !
 They shall not lament for him, saying,
 Ah lord ! or, Ah her glory !

as thyself? But at the same time governing with impartial justice and equity, he enjoyed, in consequence thereof, that solid and true felicity which nothing but the practice of virtue and religion, emphatically called “the knowing of God,” can bestow.

“כי אתה מתחזרה בארץ”—According to the reading of the LXX., the translation should be, ‘because thou contendest with Ahaz,’ that is, which shall be worst. GROTIUS.”—SECKER.

Verse 18. Ah her glory!—So הדרה must be rendered, if the text be right, and must respect Jehoiakim’s queen, whose “glory” was in a manner departed from her on the death of her husband; as in the former stanza the word אחות, “sister,” can be understood of none but her. The prophet’s meaning then will be, that Jehoiakim’s obsequies should not be celebrated with the usual funeral lamentations; either on the part of his relations, bemoaning his loss, and condoling with the queen, their widowed sister; or on the part of his domestics, bewailing the misfortune they had themselves sustained in being deprived of so good a master, and in seeing the degradation of their unhappy mistress. It must, however, be noted, that seven mss. in the text, and two in the margin, read הדרו; and five mss. read הדרו. The ancient Bodleian ms. No. 1, and one more read הדרוה. But I give the preference to the present text taken according to the explanation above.

Verse 19. With the burial of an ass shall he be buried—Let me be allowed here to correct what has been before erroneously, I think, laid down (page 16) in the epitome given of Jehoiakim’s reign, that “in his fourth year he was loaded with chains, when the king of Babylon took Jerusalem the first time;” and that “he was afterwards slain without the gates of Jerusalem in an attempt to check the depredations of the enemy.” That he was once bound in fetters by the king of Babylon with intent to carry him to Babylon, is said, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6. But whether at the first or second time that he made war upon him, is not specified. Dr. Prideaux says, it was the first time, whose opinion I followed both in this circumstance and in that of his death, without having duly attended to Ezek. xix. 8, 9, where we read, that “the nations set upon him on every side from the provinces, and spread their net over him, in their pit he was taken: And they put him in ward in chains, and brought him to the king of Babylon; and he put him into holds, that his voice might no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.” For from hence it may be inferred, that as he is not said to have been put in chains more than once, he was more liberally treated at first on surrendering without resistance to the king of Babylon, who left him in possession of the kingdom. But on his having rebelled afterwards, the nations, meaning, the Chaldeans, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, who were sent to ravage Judah, as we learn from 2 Kings xxiv. 2, having in an ambuscade surprised, and not slain, but made him prisoner, carried him to the king of Babylon, who detained him in close custody till he could conveniently send him to Babylon. But this design being frustrated by his previous death, which happened soon after his confinement, Nebuchadnezzar, at once to testify his indignation against him, and perhaps to intimidate his successor from exasperating him by a long resistance, ordered his dead body to be ignominiously cast forth without burial before the walls of Jerusalem; as is foretold both here and chapter xxxvi. 30.

It may be observed, indeed, that Josephus's narrative differs materially in many particulars from the account which I have given of the transactions of these times. But if I have followed the authority of scripture in preference to that of Josephus, who is sometimes hardly consistent with himself, I trust I shall not need excuse. In the first place, JOSEPHUS says, (Ant. lib. x. cap. 6, edit. Hudson.) that "Nebuchadnezzar made no attempt against the Jews till the eighth year of Jehoiakim's reign, which was the fourth of his own reign; when by threats he compelled Jehoiakim to submit, and pay him tribute, which he did for three years." But Daniel says expressly, (chapter i. 1,) that Nebuchadnezzar came against Jerusalem in the third year of Jehoiakim, and besieged it; by which some are willing to understand, that he entered upon his expedition in the third, but did not actually appear against Jerusalem till the fourth, year of Jehoiakim, after having first defeated the Egyptian army at Carchemish.* Now Daniel was himself one of the captives whom Nebuchadnezzar carried away at this time, and therefore may reasonably be presumed to have not mistaken the date. Further, Daniel says, (chapter ii.) that in the second year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, he was brought before that king, and expounded his dream. But the second year, according to Daniel, who follows the Babylonish computation from the death of that prince's father, corresponds with his fourth year, according to those who date his reign from the time he was associated with his father in the empire. Daniel, therefore, was brought in before Nebuchadnezzar, at Babylon, in the very year which Josephus has fixed on for his first expedition against Jerusalem. But it appears from Daniel i. 5, 18, that Daniel was not introduced to the king till after he had been three years in training under the discipline of the Chaldeans. The captivity, therefore, of Daniel must have begun, and consequently Jehoiakim must have fallen

* This apparent difference may, perhaps, be reconciled by supposing that the Babylonians and Jews began their year at different seasons, and that Daniel followed the former, whilst the other sacred writers conformed to the latter. To explain this, let it be remembered, that before the year 1752, when uniformity was established by act of Parliament, the year in England had two different commencements, one from the 1st day of January, the other from the 25th day of March following, so that an event which happened in the interval was by some attributed to the year 1750, and by others to 1751, of the Christian era. Hence we see, that if the commencement of the Babylonian year was subsequent to that of the Jewish, and the siege and taking of Jerusalem happened in the intermediate time, at Babylon it might be dated in the third, and at Jerusalem in the fourth, year of Jehoiakim. The Jews themselves had two different dates for the beginning of their year. The one took place on the first day of the month Abib, by divine institution, on their coming out of Egypt, the other on the first day of Tisri, six months later, which was in common use before, and was probably the same that was observed by their Syrian neighbours, from whence the nation derived their origin.

20        Go up to Lebanon, and cry,
             And upon Bashan lift up thy voice, under the dominion of Nebuchadnezzar, at least three years before the time which Josephus has assigned for it.

Again: Josephus says, that "soon after Jehoiakim's revolt, the king of Babylon advanced with an army in person, and that Jehoiakim readily admitted him into Jerusalem, not suspicious of any harm, as neither having shut the gates, nor made any preparation to oppose him: But that Nebuchadnezzar, having entered the city, instantly put him to death, and cast his dead body, unburied, without the walls." Now the former part of this account, respecting the manner of the king of Babylon's reception into Jerusalem, I conceive to be true, except only that it happened at the time of his former approach to the city. But after Jehoiakim's revolt, the sacred historian expressly says, (2 Kings xxiv. 2,) that Nebuchadnezzar did not come in person, but sent troops of Chaldeans joined with the neighbouring nations to distress him. And it is also said, (Ezek. xix. 8,) as has been already observed, that he was not taken prisoner, by the king of Babylon himself, but by the nations before-mentioned, who delivered him into the king of Babylon's hand. Besides which, the words of the sacred history (2 Kings xxiv. 10, 11) lead us to conclude, that Nebuchadnezzar did not join his army in person, till after his servants had laid siege to Jerusalem; and that they had not besieged it, till after Jeconiah had reigned nearly three months. So that all Josephus's account of this matter also, except only that Jehoiakim's body was cast forth without burial, appears to be erroneous, if the authority of scripture is at all to be depended on.

Nor is the historian more credible in his relation of what befell Jehoiakim's son and successor. For if the time of the king of Babylon's coming up to his army before Jerusalem has been rightly stated above, then Jeconiah must have reigned three months at least without the authority of the king of Babylon, and not "by his appointment," as Josephus has related. Further: Josephus relates, that "Nebuchadnezzar having, whilst he was at Jerusalem, made Jeconiah king, afterwards repented of what he had done, and sent an army to besiege him; and that Jeconiah surrendered himself to the king of Babylon's generals upon a promise of indemnity; but that within a twelvemonth the terms of capitulation were violated, and Jeconiah with his mother and friends were, by the king's special orders, sent captives to Babylon." All this is quite inconsistent with what we read, 2 Kings xxiv. 11-17, that the king of Babylon was present in person, and that Jeconiah went out to him with his mother, &c., and was directly carried to Babylon, not having reigned in all, according to the most extended account, more than three months and ten days; and that Zedekiah, his uncle, was immediately made king in his stead. The circumstance of the capitulation having been broken within a twelvemonth, seems to have been suggested to Josephus by a mistaken interpretation of לְתוֹכָהּ הַשָּׁנָה, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 10,) which Josephus understood to mean "within the revolution of a year;" but it evidently denotes no more than "at the return, or beginning, of the new year."

Verse 20. Go up to Lebanon, and cry—The verbs here being feminine, Jerusalem is generally supposed to be addressed; but I rather think the

- And cry from the borders ;
 Surely all that favour thee are broken.
- 21 I spake unto thee in the times of thy tranquillity,
 Thou saidst, I will not hearken ;
 Such hath been thy manner from thy youth.
 Because thou hast not hearkened unto my voice,

 And thy friends shall go into captivity ;
 Surely then shalt thou be ashamed,
 And shalt be confounded because of all thy wickedness.

 That makest thy nest in cedars,

 thee,

royal house or family of Judah is meant, the whole chapter being a prophecy concerning it and its several branches. She is styled, "inhabitant of Lebanon," verse 23, for the same reason as her state and dignity is denoted, verse 6, by "the summit of Lebanon," as being highest of all. See note above. Here she is called upon ironically to go to the tops of the high mountains, and to the frontiers of the country, and cry aloud for help to the neighbouring powers ; but in vain ; since all those who had any inclination to favour her, the Egyptians in particular, were themselves crushed and disabled by the arms of the king of Babylon.

The borders—עֲבָרִים signify not only the fords or passages of a river, but all the country along each bank ; and, in general, all those parts through which people pass to go from one country to another, that is, the borders or extremities. See chapter xlix. 32 ; 1 Kings iv. 24.

Verse 22. A blast shall carry off all thy pastors—God's judgments are compared to a scorching and blasting wind. See chapter iv. 12 ; Isaiah xli. 16 ; lvii. 13. This, it is here said, should consume all the heads and governors of the family ; as it happened to the four last kings of it in succession.

Verse 23. O inhabitant of Lebanon—See note on verse 20. For יֹשְׁבֵתִי, the Masora, with eleven mss. and one edition in the margin, reads יֹשֶׁבֶת, or יוֹשֶׁבֶת ; and with thirteen mss. and three editions, for מְקוֹנְנָתִי, reads מְקוֹנְנָה or מְקוֹנְנָה. It is possible, however, that here, as in other places, the paragogic י may have been used. See note on chapter xiii. 21.

How gracious wilt thou be made—The Masora here discards the י final in נִחְנָחִי, as in the preceding participles, and is countenanced by fifty-four mss. and five editions. The LXX., Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate all consider the verb as in the second person singular, though, I think, none of them favour the precise word נִחְנָחִי. But I am inclined to think the text is right as it stands at present ; and that as חָנַן, in Kal, signifies "to be gracious," so, in Niphal, the verb should be rendered, "to be made such" in temper and disposition. נִחְנָחִי, therefore, being the participle in Niphal, Verse 24. Coniah—Some fanciful reasons have been suggested by the Rabbinical writers and others, for calling Jeconiah in this chapter by the name of “Coniah.” But if it be not a mistake in the text, I should suppose this prince to have been originally called “Coniah,” and to have changed his name to Jeconiah on ascending the throne, as was done by his father and uncles.

CHAPTER XXIII.

- 1 Ho to the shepherds that destroy
 And scatter the sheep of my pasture ! saith JEHOVAH.
- 2 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of Israel ;
 With regard to the shepherds that feed my people,
 Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away,
 And have not taken care of them ;
 Behold, I am about to visit upon you
 The evil of your doings, saith JEHOVAH.

government, that Jeconiah should die absolutely childless. Other parts of scripture positively assert him to have had children, 1 Chron. iii. 17, 18 ; Matt. i. 12. And both verse 28, and the subsequent part of this verse, imply that he either had or should have seed. But the historians and chroniclers of the times are called upon, and directed to set him down childless ; not as being literally so, but yet the same to all intents and purposes of public life ; for he was to be the last of his race that should sit upon the throne of David ; and his descendants were no more to figure as kings, but to be reduced to the rank and obscurity of private persons. And in this sense the prophecy was actually fulfilled ; for, allowing Zerubbabel, who is called governor of Judah, (Haggai i. 1,) to have been a lineal descendant of Jeconiah, yet he could not be said to sit upon the throne of David, and reign, or rule, in Judah, seeing he was but a provincial governor, a mere servant of the king of Persia, in whom the sovereignty resided ; nor were any of those kings, who afterwards reigned in Judah, even of the family of David, until the time of Christ, who, though of David's seed, was not the seed of Jeconiah, but descended from the same ancestor in a collateral line.

CHAP. XXIII. Verse 1. Ho to the shepherds—הוי I take to be here a particle of calling, as the LXX. and Syriac represent it ; and not of commination, as in our English translation. The latter wicked kings of David's race, and particularly Zedekiah, (whom it was not proper to mention by name, as the prospect of his succession might excite the jealousy of the reigning monarch,) are here called upon to attend to the divine judgments coming upon them.

Verse 3. And I will bring them back to their own fold—Twenty-one mss. and four editions read נידון in the singular number, instead of נידון. The

- And they shall be fruitful and shall multiply.
- 4 And I will raise up shepherds over them, who shall feed them,
So that they shall not fear any more, nor be dismayed,
Nor shall they be visited, saith JEHOVAH.
- 5 Behold the days are coming, saith JEHOVAH,
That I will raise up unto David a righteous Branch,
And a king shall reign and act wisely,
And shall execute judgment and justice in the land.
- 6 In his days Judah shall be saved,
And Israel shall dwell in security ;
And this is the name by which JEHOVAH shall call him,
OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

singular number is also expressed both in the LXX. and Syriac versions. But perhaps, instead of אֶת־הֵן and נִוְהֵן, we ought rather to read אֶת־הוּא and נִוְהוּא, as all the other references to the same antecedent are in the masculine gender.

Verse 4. Nor shall they be visited—Our present English translation is, “Neither shall they be lacking.” But I think it more suitable to follow the common use of the verb פָּקַד, and to understand thereby, that the people should no more be visited with those calamities to which, through the misconduct of former governors, they had been exposed. Delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi.

Verse 5. A righteous Branch—See again, chapter xxxiii. 15, 16 ; and compare Psalm cxxxii. 17 ; Isai. iv. 2 ; xi. 1 ; Zech. iii. 8 ; vi. 12 ; Luke i. 69.

A king shall reign and act wisely—See Isaiah xxxii. 1.

Verse 6. And this is the name by which JEHOVAH shall call him, OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS—Literally, according to the Hebrew idiom, “And this is his name, which JEHOVAH shall call Our Righteousness ;” a phrase exactly the same as, “And JEHOVAH shall call him so ;” which, as I have before observed in note on chapter xx. 3, implies that God would make him such as he called him ; that is, “our righteousness,” or the author and means of our salvation and acceptance. So, by the same metonymy, Christ is said to “have been made of God unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.” (1 Cor. i. 30.)

I doubt not but some persons will be offended with me for depriving them, by this translation, of a favourite argument for proving the divinity of our Saviour from the Old Testament. But I cannot help it : I have done it with no ill design, but purely because I think, and am morally sure, that the text, as it stands, will not properly admit of any other construction. The LXX. have so translated before me, in an age when there could not possibly be any bias of prejudice, either for or against the before-mentioned doctrine ; a doctrine which draws its decisive proofs from the New Testament only. In the parallel passage, (chapter xxxiii. 16,) the expression is a little varied, but the sense, according to a just and literal translation, is precisely the same : “And this is He whom JEHOVAH shall call, Our Righteousness.”

- 7 After this, behold, the days shall come, saith JEHOVAH,
When they shall no more say, As JEHOVAH liveth,
Who brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt :
- 8 But, As JEHOVAH liveth, who brought up,
And who conducted the seed of the house of Israel from the north country,
And from all countries whither I had driven them,
That they might dwell in their own soil.

CONCERNING THE PROPHETS.

- 9 My heart is broken within me,
All my bones are shaken,
I am become like a drunken man,
And as a man whom wine hath overcome,
Because of JEHOVAH,
And because of his sacred words.
- 10 Surely the land is filled with adulterers ;

Verse 7. After this—See note on the parallel passage, chapter xvi. 14.

Verse 9. Concerning the prophets—This is prefixed as a title to distinguish the following head of prophecy, which, though probably delivered at the same time with the foregoing one, treats of a subject entirely different. In like manner after a general title placed at the head of the prophecies concerning the heathen nations, we find the several particulars distinctly prefaced with למצרים, למואב, לבני עמון, לאדום, &c.; chap. xlv. 1, 2; xlviii. 1; xlix. 1, 7, &c., &c.

Jeremiah testifies the horror he felt within him on contemplating the wickedness of the priests and prophets of Judah, and the vengeance which God was about to execute upon them for the corruption which had been diffused through the whole land by the influence of their evil doctrines and example. (Verses 9–15) He exhorts the people in the name of God not to listen to the words of the prophets that prophesied of peace, when evil was determined, and would infallibly take place, as would in time appear; and charges those prophets with speaking of themselves, and not from the divine commission. (Verses 16–22.) God asserts his omnipresence and omniscience; and reproveth the audaciousness of the false prophets, who affected to place their own idle dreams on a level with the all-powerful and efficacious word of divine revelation; declaring himself against the several species of those impostors. (Verses 23–32.) In fine, he requireth all sorts of persons to desist from an indecency in common use, of styling his word a burden; and threatens severely to punish those who, in defiance of this command, should continue to cast such a slur upon it.

Verse 10. Adulterers—This term, which properly respects those who violate the marriage-bed, seems here extended to such as, by fraud and

Surely because of these the land mourneth ;
 The pastures of the waste are dried up ;
 Their will also hath been wickedness,
 And their might without right.

- 11 Yea both the prophet and the priest have acted perversely,
 Even in my house have I found their wickedness, saith
 JEHOVAH.
- 12 Therefore shall their way become as slippery places,
 Into darkness shall they be thrust, and shall fall therein :
 Surely I will bring upon them evil,
 The year of their visitation, saith JEHOVAH.
- 13 As in the prophets of Samaria I beheld that which was disgusting ;
 They prophesied in the name of Baal, and caused my people
 Israel to err :

falsehood, circumvent others, and tempt them to join in the commission of those illicit actions which imply breach of faith and duty towards God. See verse 14.

Because of these—So מִפְּנֵי אֵלֶּה is rendered both by the LXX. and Syriac, and, I think, rightly ; for I see nothing that “swearing,” which our English translators and others understand by אֵלֶּה, has to do in the case.

“ אֵלֶּה—‘These.’”—SECKER.

The pastures of the waste—See note on chapter ix. 10.

Their will also—Our translators have rendered מְרוֹצָתָם, “their course,” from רוץ, “to run ;” and in the margin, “their violence, from רָצַץ, “to crush or bruise.” But it seems more properly to be here derived from רָצָה, and to signify “their will,” or “choice ;” as גְּבוּרָתָם does the exertion of “their power,” or “might,” in conformity to such a previous determination of the mind.

Verse 11. Even in my house—See chapter vii. 30.

Verse 12. Their way become as slippery places—See Psalm xxxv. 6.

Verses 13, 14. As in the prophets of Samaria, so in the prophets of Jerusalem—See י thus used in the way of comparison, 2 Sam. xv. 34. So likewise the Syriac here renders it.

Verse 13. They prophesied—הִנְבְּאוּ. This verb is not used in Hiphil, except here and Ezekiel xxxvii. 10, in which latter place, for הִנְבְּאוּתִי, nine mss. read וְהִנְבְּאוּתִי in Hithpael ; and one ms. apparently reads הִתְנַבְּאוּ here too, which may probably be right, as it agrees with the versions of the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate.

But one ms. here reads הִנְבֵּא, the infinitive in Niphal, which likewise is no bad emendation, and is rather countenanced by the like use of the two infinitives, נֹאפוּ וְהֵלֵךְ, (verse 14,) expressing that in which “the horrible thing,” שְׁעוֹרוֹרָה, consisted, of which the prophets of Jerusalem were

- 14 So in the prophets of Jerusalem have I seen a horrible thing ;
 Committing adultery and walking in falsehood ;
 They will also strengthen the hands of wicked doers,
 So that none will turn from his wickedness ;
 They are become to me all of them as Sodom,
 And her inhabitants as Gomorrah.
- 15 Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts concerning the prophets ;
 Behold I will feed them with wormwood,
 And I will give them water of hemlock to drink :
 Because from the prophets of Jerusalem
 Perverseness is gone forth into the whole land.
- 16 Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts,
 Harken not unto the words of the prophets,
 Who, instilling vain notions into you,
 Utter a vision of their own heart,
 Not speaking after the mouth of JEHOVAH ;
- 17 Saying unto those that make light of the word of JEHOVAH,
 Peace shall be unto you ;
 And whilst every one goeth after the lusts of his own heart,
 they have said,
 Evil shall not come upon you.
- 18 For who hath stood in the privy council of JEHOVAH, guilty ; as this is intended to specify the “disgustful practice,” תפלה, seen in the prophets of Samaria. In this latter case we should render Prophesying in the name of Baal, so as to cause my people Israel to err.

Verse 14. Committing adultery and walking in falsehood—See note on verse 10.

“שבו—Videtur legendum שבו. Sed confer cap. xxvii. 18 ; Ezek. xiii. 3.”
 —SECKER.

Verse 15. Water of hemlock—See note on chapter viii. 14.

Verse 16. Not speaking after the mouth of JEHOVAH—It is obvious that אומר ought to be constructed with the preceding words, which renders all clear. Five mss. with the LXX. and Syriac read וְלֹא כִפִּי יְהוָה, “and not speaking after the mouth of JEHOVAH.”

Verse 17. And whilst every one goeth after—All the ancient versions render as if they had read וְלֹכֵל, and so do our English translators. But as none of the collated mss. verify this reading, I have considered בָּל הוֹלֵךְ as the participle and noun used absolutely, Omnibus ambulantis.

- And hath seen and heard the matter ?
 Or who hath listened to and heard his words ?
- 19 Behold the whirlwind of JEHOVAH, it goeth forth hot,
 Even a settling whirlwind, upon the head of the wicked it shall settle.
- 20 The anger of JEHOVAH shall not turn back, Until he hath wrought, and until he hath completed the purpose of his heart :
 In the latter days ye shall understand it clearly.
- 21 I sent not these prophets, but they ran of themselves ;
 I spake not to them, but of themselves they prophesied.
- 22 But if they had been present in my privy council,

Verse 18. And hath seen and heard the matter—Instead of אֶת־דְּבָרִי I am for reading אֶת־דְּבָרִי, and prefixing וּ to the following word מִי, rendering אֶת־דְּבָרִי, “the matter,” or proceeding, settled and determined in the privy council of JEHOVAH; and this might not improperly be said to be seen as well as heard. Again: For דְּבָרִי, which signifies, “my word, or words,” the Masora with forty-one, perhaps forty-three, mss. and eight editions read דְּבָרִי; but I am more inclined to think the true reading may have been דְּבָרָיו, “his words;” and that the וּ was accidentally dropt or lost in the same letter following at the beginning of the next word; a case which has frequently happened. And by thus distinguishing between אֶת־דְּבָרִי, “the matter,” and דְּבָרָיו, “his words,” the words of JEHOVAH treating of and deciding upon it, an unmeaning tautology seems to be avoided.

Verse 19. Behold the whirlwind of JEHOVAH, it goeth forth hot—The hot scorching wind blowing from the south, of which notice has been already taken in note on chapter iv. 11, 12, is evidently here alluded to. מִתְהוּלֵל and יָחֹל in the following hemistich are both from the same root, and seem to have the same force as the Arabic verb حَلَّ descendit, requievit, incidit, incubuit. I have, therefore, rendered it “a settling wind,” one that blows not with a transient blast, but exerts a continued force upon the head of the unfortunate traveller, till it has effectually destroyed him. See Maillet’s description of the malignant effects of such a wind cited at large, HARMER’S Observations, chapter i. obs. 16. In the parallel passage, chapter xxx. 23, instead of מִתְהוּלֵל the word used is מִתְגִּיר, a word which has exactly the same signification as is here attributed to מִתְהוּלֵל.

“חמה יצאה—‘Fury goeth forth.’—יחול—‘Shall rest.’”—SECKER.

Verse 20. The anger—Two mss. read חֲרוֹן אַף, “The fierce anger;” as chapter xxx. 24.

Ye shall understand it clearly—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, with two mss., having read מִזְמָה in the singular number instead of מִזְמוֹת, I have followed this reading, which furnishes a proper antecedent to בָּהּ in this clause. All the ancient versions, except the Vulgate and Theodotion, omit בִּינָה, which does not appear in the parallel passage, chapter xxx. 24, except in two mss.

“Videtur vel בָּהּ vel בִּינָה expungendum.”—SECKER.

Then would they have caused my people to hear my words,
And would have turned them from their evil way,
And from the wickedness of their doings.

- 23 Am I a God near at hand, saith JEHOVAH,
And not a God afar off ?
24 Can any one hide himself in secret places,
So that I shall not see him ? saith JEHOVAH.
The heavens and the earth
Do not I fill ? saith JEHOVAH.
25 I have heard what the prophets have said,
That prophesy falsely in my name,
Saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed ;
26 How long shall the fire be in the heart ?
The prophets are prophets of falsehood,
And prophets of the fraud of their own heart :
27 Who study to make my people forget my name through their dreams,
Which they relate every one to his neighbour,
Like as their fathers have forgotten my name through Baal.
28 The prophet who hath a dream, let him tell a dream ;
But he that hath my word, let him speak my word truly,

Verse 22. And would have turned them—וישיבום is the reading of thirty-six, perhaps thirty-seven, mss. and five editions ; and is marked in the margin of Van der Hooght's edition.

Verse 26. How long shall the fire be in the heart ?—Honbigant objects, and justly, as it should seem, to the interrogation in הֵיךְ after the prior interrogation עַד מָתַי. But, instead of rejecting the ה, and reading simply יֵשׁ, as he does, I am inclined to think that הֵיךְ is corruptly written for הָאֵשׁ, which scarcely differs in pronunciation. In chapter xx. 9, the prophet, meaning to say, that, though he was sometimes resolved not to declare any more the word of JEHOVAH revealed to him, he could not forbear, expresses himself thus : וְהָיָה בְּלִבִּי כְאֵשׁ, “Then it becomes in mine heart as fire.” In like manner the false prophets here spoken of, who pretended to dreams, may be understood to ask, “How long shall the fire be in the heart ?” that is, How long shall we be made uneasy by suppressing, and not telling our dreams ? With this, the following context well agrees ; for after premising that these dreamers were false prophets, who studied to withdraw the people from their religious allegiance, God says, verse 28, that they might tell their dreams, if they would, provided they did not presume to blend them with the word revealed by him to his true prophets ; which would be mixing chaff with good wheat.

“עַד-מָתַי” — ‘How long shall it be ?’ See Psalm vi. 4.”—SECKER.

“הֵיךְ בְּלִבִּי” — ‘Is it in the heart of ?’ &c.”—SECKER.

“Verse 27. הֲהֵינֵם חֹשְׁבִים” — ‘Do they think,’ &c.”—SECKER.

- What hath chaff to do with the wheat? saith JEHOVAH.
 29 Is not the power of my word like fire? saith JEHOVAH;
 And like a hammer that breaketh a rock in pieces?
 30 Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith
 JEHOVAH,
 That purloin my words, every one from his neighbour.
 31 Behold I am against the prophets, saith JEHOVAH,
 That take their own tongue, and say, He hath said.
 32 Behold I am against prophets of false dreams, saith
 JEHOVAH,
 Who have also related them, and seduced my people by their groundless lies;
 But I sent them not, nor commissioned them;
 Neither will they profit this people at all, saith JEHOVAH.
 33 And when this people shall ask thee,
 Or a prophet, or a priest, saying,
 What is the burden of JEHOVAH?

Verse 29. Is not the power of my word like fire?—For כה I am strongly inclined to suspect the true reading to have been כח; which is very much countenanced by the version of the Chaldee Paraphrast. Compare Heb. iv. 12.

Verse 30. That purloin my words—Those persons seem to be meant, who, by any indirect methods, hindered the people from receiving the true revealed word of God, prejudicing them against those who were commissioned to declare it, or calumniating and misrepresenting its purport.

Verse 31. That take their own tongue, and say, He hath said—The phrase of “taking their own tongue” is, I think, very easily to be understood of those, who, without any inspiration, take upon them to deliver messages to the people, and pretend that they came from God. “Taking their own tongue” may signify, “taking them into employ;” as God says, chapter xxv. 9, “And I will take, ולקחתי, all the families of the north,” that is, I will engage them in my service.

Verse 32. By their groundless lies—בשקריהם ובפחזותם. These words I consider as an Hendiadys; or they may be rendered, “By their lies and by their groundless tales.” פחו signifies “that which is not solid or stable.”

Verse 33. The remaining part of this chapter is directed against those who called the word of God spoken by the true prophets, “a burden,” by way of reproach; meaning that it always portended evil, and never good; a burden signifying a calamitous prophecy. Ahab intended to cast the same slur on the prophet Micaiah, when he represented him as one that never prophesied good concerning him, but evil. (1 Kings xxii. 8.)

Or a prophet—Three mss. read נביא without the article prefixed; and it ought to be so, as well as כהן.

- Then shalt thou say unto them, Ye are the burden,
 And I will cast you off, saith JEHOVAH.
- 34 And the prophet, and the priest, and the people,
 Which shall say, The burden of JEHOVAH,
 I will even punish that man and his house.
- 35 Thus shall ye speak every one to his neighbour,
 And every one to his brother,
 What hath JEHOVAH answered?
 And, What hath JEHOVAH spoken?
- 36 But the burden of JEHOVAH shall ye mention no more:
 For the burden of every man shall be his own word;
 And ye have perverted the words of the living God,
 Of JEHOVAH of hosts, our God.
- 37 Thus shalt thou say to the prophet,
 What hath JEHOVAH answered thee?
 And, What hath JEHOVAH spoken?
- 38 But if ye will say, The burden of JEHOVAH;
 For this cause thus saith JEHOVAH,
 Because ye say this word, The burden of JEHOVAH;
 Although I sent unto you, saying,
 Ye shall not say, The burden of JEHOVAH;
- 39 Therefore behold I will both take you up altogether,
 And I will cast you off, together with the city,

Ye are the burden—The LXX., Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, all seem to have read the words thus: אַתֶּם הַמִּשָּׁא, instead of אַתֶּם-מִה־מִּשָּׁא. The word מִשָּׁא is then applied in a somewhat different sense from what was intended in the question. “Ye are the burden;” that is, Ye are become an intolerable load to JEHOVAH, of which he will quickly discharge himself. The verb נָשָׂא signifies “to loosen” or “disengage one’s self” from any thing.

“אַתֶּם-מִה־מִּשָּׁא—Υμεῖς ἐστε το λημμα. LXX. Vulg. legerunt, אַתֶּם הַמִּשָּׁא. Omnino rectè. Vide Isai. i. 14; Amos ii. 13; Deut. i. 12; Jer. xlv. 22. Sic olim divisit has voces Meibomius, teste Kenicotto, p. 518.”—SECKER.

Verse 36. For the burden of every man shall be his own word—That is, Every man shall have most reason to regard his own word as hurtful and prejudicial to him. For the words of God were delivered with a salutary tendency to warn sinners of the danger of their situation, and to call them to repentance. Those, therefore, who make a right use of them will have no cause to complain. But those who despise and reject them, pervert that which should have been for their wealth into an occasion of falling.

Verse 39. Therefore, behold, I will both take you up altogether—It is obvious that according to the Hebrew idiom נָשָׂאתִי and נָשָׂא (or נָשָׂאתִי, as it is in twelve mss. and one edition) are the same verb repeated, with an allusion to “the burden” before spoken of, verse 33. Compare Hosca i. 6. נָשָׂאתִי

Which I gave to you and your fathers, from out of my presence.

- 40 And I will bring upon you an everlasting reproach,
And a perpetual disgrace, which shall not be forgotten.

CHAPTER XXV.*

1 THE WORD WHICH CAME UNTO JEREMIAH CONCERNING ALL THE PEOPLE OF JUDAH, IN THE FOURTH YEAR OF JEHOIAKIM THE SON OF JOSIAH KING OF JUDAH (THE SAME WAS THE FIRST YEAR OF NEBUCHADREZZAR KING OF BABYLON)

2 WHICH Jeremiah the prophet spake unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying,
3 From the thirteenth year of Josiah son of Amon king of is put for נשאתי, according to the form of the verbs quiescent in ה, which is often assumed by those quiescent in א.

“אחכם נשא—Λαμβανω υμας λεημματα. LXX. ‘Tollam vos portans,’ Vulg. Syr. Rectissime. Nam imitatur נשא aliquando formam ה.”—SECKER.

Verse 40. And a perpetual disgrace—Three mss. for וכלמית read וכלמת, as chapter xx. 11. The ancient Bodleian ms. N<sup>o</sup>. 1 is one of them. All the ancient versions render the word in the singular number.

CHAP. XXIV. is postponed in regard to the order of time.*

CHAP. XXV. THIS chapter seems to come next in succession to chapters xxii., xxiii. It is dated in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and most probably belonged to the earliest part of that year. For the defeat of the Egyptians at Carchemish, and the subsequent taking of Jerusalem, are both placed in the same year. But from verse 9 I think it may be concluded, that Nebuchadnezzar had but just entered upon his expedition, and had not yet carried into execution any of those designs for which God there says he would send and take him.

The prophet reproveth the Jews for their disregard of the divine calls to repentance. (Verses 1–7.) He foretelleth their subjugation, together with that of the neighbouring nations, to the king of Babylon for seventy years, and the fall of the Babylonish empire at that period. (Verses 8–14.) The same is foreshown under the symbol of the cup of God’s wrath, with which Jeremiah is sent, perhaps in a vision, unto all the nations, which are enumerated at large, to make them drink of it to their utter subversion. (Verses 15–29.) And the like prophecy is the third time repeated in a strain of sublime and poetic imagery. (Verses 30 to the end.)

Verse 1. The same was the first year of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon—That is, according to the Jewish mode of computing his reign from the time of his being associated with his father in the empire, before he set out

* See note, page 166.

Judah even unto this day (this is the three and twentieth year) the word of JEHOVAH hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking, but ye have not
 4 hearkened: (Also JEHOVAH hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, rising early and sending, but ye have not
 5 hearkened nor inclined your ear to hear) saying, Return, I pray you, every one from his evil way, and from the wickedness of your doings, and dwell ye in the land, which JEHOVAH
 6 gave to you and to your fathers for ever and ever. And go not after strange gods to serve them, and to worship them; and provoke me not to anger with the work of your hands;
 7 and I will not hurt you. But ye have not hearkened unto me, saith JEHOVAH, on purpose to provoke me to anger with 8 the work of your hands, to your own hurt. Therefore thus 9 saith JEHOVAH of hosts; Because ye have not hearkened unto my words, behold, I am about to send, and will take all the families of the north, saith JEHOVAH, and Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon my servant, and bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and a hissing, and perpetual desolations.
 10 And I will cause to cease from them the voice of joy, and the voice of mirth, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of milstones, and the light of a candle.

on his Syrian expedition. But the Babylonians do not reckon his reign to have begun till two years after, upon his father's death.

Verse 3. Rising early—For אשכים one ms., and another in the margin, read השכים; and eight mss. and two editions read השכם, as in the next verse; in the ancient Bodleian ms., N<sup>o</sup>. 1, the א is upon a rasure. There is no doubt but this may be reckoned among the instances where the א is substituted by mistake for ה. See note on chapter iv. 19.

Verse 7. On purpose to provoke me—For הכעסוני the Masora, with twenty-five mss. and three editions, reads הכעיסני, conformably to chapter vii. 18; xxxii. 29. למען expresses here the correspondency of the end to the means.

Verse 9. And Nebuchadrezzar—For נבוכדנצר two mss. read נבצר, which is most probably the right reading. In one ms. the נ is upon a rasure.

Verse 10. The sound of milstones, and the light of a candle—Mr. HARNER has an excellent observation on this place, which I cannot do better than present the reader with at large:—

“The time for grinding their corn is the morning; which consideration makes the prophet's selecting the noise of mill-stones, and the lighting up of candles, as circumstances belonging to inhabited places, appear in a view which no commentators, that I have examined, have taken any notice of.

- 11 And this whole land shall become a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon 12 seventy years. And it shall come to pass when seventy years

"I am indebted to Sir John Chardin's ms. for the knowledge of this fact. It informs us, that 'in the east they grind their corn at break of day; and that when one goes out in a morning, one hears every where the noise of the mill; and that it is the noise that often awakens people.'

"It has been commonly known that they bake every day; and that they usually grind their corn as they want it; but this passage informs us, that it is the first work done in a morning, as well as that this grinding of their mills makes a considerable noise, and attracts every ear; and as the lighting up of candles begins the evening, there is an agreeable contrast observable in these words: 'Moreover I will take from thee the voice of mirth and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of mill-stones, and the light of the candle. And their whole land shall be a desolation.' Gloomy shall be the silence of the morning, melancholy the shadows of the evening; no cheerful noise to animate the one, no enlivening ray to soften the gloom of the other. Desolation shall every where reign.

"A land may abound with habitations, and furnish an agreeable abode, where the voice of mirth is not heard—none of the songs, the music, and the dances of nuptial solemnities; but in the east, where no mill-stones are heard in the morning, no light seen in the evening, it must be a dreary, dismal solitude." Chapter iv. obs. 4. See also chapter iii. obs. 18.

Verse 11. And an astonishment—Seventeen mss., among which are several of the most ancient, and three editions read וילשמה, with the conjunction; which is also prefixed by the Syriac and Vulgate. The word is wholly omitted in the common editions of the LXX.; but the ms. Pachom. reads και ερημωσιν.

And these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years—This period of the nations' servitude must be computed from the defeat of the Egyptians at Carchemish, in the same year that this prophecy was given, when Nebuchadnezzar reduced the neighbouring nations of Syria and Palestine, as well as Jerusalem, under his subjection. This was near two years before the heathen chronologers in general begin his reign, his father being still living. After his father's death Nebuchadnezzar, according to Ptolemy's canon, reigned forty-three years, Ilverodamus, or Evilmerodach, his son, two, Neriglissar four, and Nabonadius, supposed to be Belshazzar, the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, seventeen; to which if we add two years of Darius the Mede, who is said (Dan. ix. 1) to have been made king over the realm of the Chaldeans, we shall find the nations to have continued all that time, nearly seventy years, in subjection, more or less, to the king of Babylon. But after the accession of Cyrus, who put an end to the Babylonish monarchy, the nations could serve the king of Babylon no longer, because there was no longer a king of Babylon to serve; for the kings of Persia were never called kings of Babylon; but Babylon became itself a subject and dependent province under a subordinate governor, and began from that instant to experience in some degree those divine visitations, which termi-are accomplished, I will visit upon the king of Babylon, and upon his nation, saith JEHOVAH, their iniquity, and upon the nated at length in what is so justly called, in the next verse, "perpetual desolations." See Bishop Lowth's note on Isaiah xiii. 19.

The same period is likewise precisely determined under a somewhat different view, chapter xxix. 10. Here God promises that "at the very time when seventy years were accomplished in Babylon, לְפִי מִלְאֵת לְבַבְל שְׁבָעִים שָׁנָה, he would visit his people, and perform his good word towards them, in causing them to return to their own place." He did so accordingly in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia, exactly seventy years after the first carrying away of the people captives from Jerusalem to Babylon; when, as the sacred historian expressly testifies, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 22; Ezra i. 1,) "that the word of JEHOVAH by the mouth of Jeremiah might be accomplished, God stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia to issue a proclamation," permitting the Jews honourably to return; and in pursuance of that edict they did immediately return in great numbers to Jerusalem. Now there is no other passage in the writings of Jeremiah, besides those already cited, where any direct mention is made of a period of seventy years. It is evident therefore, that this same period of seventy years must be intended (Dan. ix. 2) "whereof the word of JEHOVAH," it is said, "came unto Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem." I trust, therefore, that I have not been mistaken (as the Rev. Dr. Priestley, in the observations prefixed to his Harmony of the Evangelists, sect. 3, supposes me to be) in having, upon such good authority, fixed on the decree or proclamation of Cyrus, before-mentioned, for the point of coincidence, where the seventy years terminate, alluded to, Dan. ix. 24, and which the Doctor himself is pleased to allow to be the same with those spoken of at the beginning of the chapter, and from which the subsequent term of seventy-seven weeks must be reckoned to begin.* I grant, indeed, that the prophet Zechariah (chapter i. 12) speaks of another term of seventy years, which, as the learned gentleman states, may have commenced somewhere about the last siege of Jerusalem, and been carried down as far as to the building of the temple, under Darius Hystaspes. During this term, too, no doubt, the marks of God's indignation may have subsisted, and actually did subsist, at Jerusalem, as falling in with those troublous times, or times of distress, marked by Daniel as belonging to his second period of seventy-seven weeks, in which he says the building of Jerusalem should, notwithstanding, go forward, and the city should continually improve in consideration and figure.† But that the seventy years of Zechariah were the same with those which had before been the subject of Jeremiah's predictions, cannot possibly be admitted consistently with those texts of scripture already referred to; nor indeed does Zechariah himself say any thing that necessarily leads to such a conclusion. In vain, therefore, is it to think of ascertaining by circumstances quite foreign to the purpose the dates which belong to Daniel's prophecy.

nation;" but the Syriac, "his people;" and I am myself inclined to look upon ההוא to be the substantive pronoun, used in the genitive case, from considering it in many other places, but particularly Gen. xvii. 14; Exod. xii. 15; Lev. vii. 20; &c.; where it seems in like manner to be governed of הנפש, and referred to some other antecedent, because the gender of נפש is determined, by the verb which follows, to be feminine; so that the proper translation in those places would be, "The soul of him," of the same who had been guilty of the transgression specified, "shall be cut off," &c.

And I will make it—For אתו, the LXX. render αυτους, and one ms. reads אתם. Another reads אתה.

Verse 13. And I will bring upon that land—והבאותי. The Masora here reads והבאתי, and so do thirty-three mss. and three editions. But this can hardly be deemed a various reading, it being only an abbreviated mode of writing הבאותי or הביאותי, which is the regular form of the verbs quiescent in the second radical. According to the remark in the last note but one, היהא should be referred to the word בשדים, which is the name of the country, as chapter l. 10; li. 24; not of the people; and ארץ, which is joined with it in the last verse, is used in the masculine gender, if אתו be the true reading. I take, therefore, the true construction of הארץ היהא, to be "the land of the same," that is, of Chaldea; although I have still rendered, "that land;" the sense being all one here, whichever way it is expressed.

In this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied concerning the nations—Those prophecies are meant, which are to be found all together from chapter xlvi. to chapter li. inclusively; and which the LXX. have introduced in this place.

Verse 14. For of them, even of these, shall many nations and great kings exact service—The verb עבד, when ב is prefixed to the object, signifies to "exact," or "make use of the service of another." See chapters xxii. 13; xxvii. 7; xxx. 8; xxxiv. 9. It is probable the original reading here was יעבדו, and that the ו has been lost in that of the preceding word. The LXX. have wholly omitted this verse; but in one of the Greek versions, noticed in the Hexaplar, we find, καταδουλεύουσιν γαρ αυτους, which corresponds with יעבדו-בם.

Verse 15. Take the cup of the wine of this wrath—Those circumstances which constitute the good and evil of human life are often represented in scripture as the ingredients of a cup, which God, as master of a feast, mixes up, and distributes to the several guests, as he thinks fit. Hence, when our Saviour asks his disciples, James and John, whether they were it to all the nations to drink, unto whom I shall send thee; 16 and let them drink, and stagger, and be out of their wits, because of the sword which I am about to send among them;

 17 (So I took the cup at the hand of JEHOVAH, and tendered it to all the nations to drink, unto whom JEHOVAH had sent me; 18 To Jerusalem, and to the cities of Judah, and to the kings thereof, and to the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, and an astonishment, and a hissing, and a curse, as at this able to drink of the cup which he was to drink of, he means, whether they had resolution and patience to undergo the like sufferings and afflictions, as his father had allotted for him. (Matt. xx. 22.) And in the like sense he prays, Matt. xxvi. 39, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." Accordingly, by this image of "the cup of the wine of God's wrath," we are to understand those dreadful and afflictive judgments, which an incensed God was about to inflict on the objects of his displeasure. And Jeremiah the prophet, who announced them, is considered as acting the part of a cup-bearer, carrying the cup round to those who were appointed to drink of it; the effects of which were to appear in the intoxication, that is, the terror and astonishment, the confusion and desolation, that should prevail among them. See Bishop Lowth's note on Isaiah li. 21, and compare Rev. xiv. 10; xvi. 19.

And tender it—to drink—For יהשקיתה thirteen mss. read יהשקית, without the paragoric ה.

"This must be either a vision, or perhaps only a course of figurative expression, signifying that Jeremiah was to foretell, and did accordingly foretell, that these nations should drink of the cup of God's anger, just as he is said, chapter i. 10, to be set over nations, to root out, &c., when the meaning was only to foretell that they should be rooted out."—SECKER.

Verse 17. So I took the cup, &c.—It is not to be imagined that Jeremiah went round in person to all the nations and kings here enumerated; but either that he did so in a vision, or else that he actually did what is figuratively designed, that is, he publicly announced the judgments of God severally against them, as we find in the chapters mentioned in note on verse 13. Another thing to be observed is, that the words of JEHOVAH are broken off at the end of verse 16, and not resumed till the latter part of verse 26; where JEHOVAH again continues his directions thus: "And the king of Sheshach shall drink after them." All the intermediate part contains an account of Jeremiah's executing the divine commission, and is to be included within a parenthesis. It is most likely that this narrative was written either by the prophet himself, or dictated by him to Baruch, his amanuensis, after the destruction of Jerusalem, when a compilation was made of all his prophecies; which supposition will account for the words, כיום הזה, "as at this day," found at the close of the next verse.

"Verse 18. מלכיה—That is, 'successive kings.'"—SECKER.

And to the princes thereof—In Van der Hooght's edition the conjunction ו is omitted before את-שריה; but it is expressed in all the ancient versions, and in one hundred and seventeen mss. and twelve editions.

And an astonishment, and a hissing—Here again the conjunction is omitted

19 day : To Pharaoh king of Egypt, and to his servants, and to his princes, and to all his people, and to all the intermingled
 20 people ; And to all the kings of the land of Uz, and to all the kings of the land of the Philistines, and to Ashkelon, and to 21 Gaza, and to Ekron, and to the remnant of Ashdod ; To

 23 kings of the region which is by the sea side ; And to Dedan, before לשמה and לשרקה ; but five, perhaps six, mss. read it before לשמה, and five, perhaps seven, mss. and two editions, before לשרקה, or לשריקה. The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate express it in both places.

And a curse—The LXX. and Syriac omit ולקללה. The LXX. also omit ביום הזה.

“ ביום הזה—This must have been written in, and not before, the captivity.”—SECKER.

Verse 19. And to all the intermingled people—These words I join with the preceding, and understand thereby all the foreigners resident in Egypt, who had, by intermarriages, formed connexions with the Egyptians. St. Jerome is of the same opinion. In Exodus xii. 38 we read of ערב, “a mixed multitude,” distinct from the children of Israel, that went up with them out of Egypt. And again, Nehemiah xiii. 3, it is evident that כל-עבר means all those that were not of the seed of Israel, but who had settled among them. See Ezekiel xxx. 5. Arabia, properly so called, is specified afterwards. (Verse 24.)

Verse 20. The land of Uz—This was the country of Job ; but, concerning its situation, different opinions are holden. It was most probably on the confines of Idumea, if not a part of it. The daughter of Edom is said to dwell in the land of Uz. (Lam. iv. 21.) Uz was the son of Nahor, Abraham’s brother. (Gen. xxii. 21.)

The remnant of Ashdod—Or Azotus, which had been very much ruined by two sieges, in which it was taken ; the one by Tartan, the Assyrian general mentioned, Isaiah xx. 1, the other by Psammitichus, king of Egypt, who retook it after the longest siege that had ever been known in those times. (HERODOT. lib. ii. cap. 157.) Let it be remembered, that by “kings” are meant only the sovereigns and civil rulers of a country, whatever were the form of government established in it. The prophecy respecting the Philistines is contained in chapter xlvii.

Verse 21. To Edom—The LXX, Syriac, and Vulgate, with seven mss., read the ו at the beginning of this verse. For the prophecies concerning Edom, Moab, and the Ammonites, see chapters xlviii.; xlix. 1, 7.

Verse 22. The region which is by the sea side—So the margin of our English Bible represents הארץ אשר בעבר הים. And that ארץ does not always signify “an island,” properly so called, see note on chapter ii. 10. בעבר signifies, “on the side” of a river, or of the sea ; see Joshua v. i., and note on chapter xxii. 20. I take the same district to be here meant as is called חוף הים, Ezekiel xxv. 16, and ארץ כפתור, chapter xlvii. 4. See note on this latter place.

Verse 23. And to Dedan—Forty-two mss., eight editions, and all the kings of the mingled race of those that dwell in the desert;

ancient versions, express the conjunction  $\gamma$  at the beginning of this verse. Dedan was descended from Abraham, by Keturah. (Gen. xxv. 3.) It was probably he that founded the city Dedan; which, however, in process of time, seems to have been annexed to Edom. See chapter xlix. 8; Ezek. xxv. 13.

Tema—Tema was one of the sons of Ishmael; (Gen. xxv. 15;) and a city or district called after him was situate near the mountains which separate Arabia from Chaldea. (Ancient Univ. Hist. vol. vii. book 4, chap. 8, page 230, folio.)

Buz—Buz was the brother of Uz; (Gen. xxii. 21;) and settled, most probably, in his neighbourhood. Elihu, the most discreet of Job's friends, was a Buzite. (Job xxxii. 2.)

And to all that have their coast insulated—These I suppose to be the inhabitants of the peninsula of Arabia, especially those situate towards the bottom or narrow part of it. See note on chapter ix. 26.

Verse 24. And to all the kings of Arabia—The whole country to which we give the general name of "Arabia" seems to have been thrown, in scripture, into two great divisions, one of which is called properly עֲרַבָּה, Arabah, the other קֶדֶם, Kedem, according to their respective situations; Arabah signifying "the west," as Kedem does "the east." Each of these had their subdivisions; the first comprehending that which geographers have distinguished by the name of "Arabia Petraea," and also, perhaps, those parts along the western coast of the Red Sea, bordering upon Egypt, which I conceive to have been the residence of the Cushites; (note on chapter xiii. 23;) and the inhabitants of which are called Arabians to this day. The other part, called Kedem comprehended Arabia Felix and Arabia Deserta; the former of which the scriptures seem to have distinguished by the name of קְצוּצֵי-פֶאֶה, "those that have their coast insulated," mentioned in the preceding verse; and the latter, I suppose, are intended in this verse by the following words, הָעָרֶב הַשְּׂכָנִים בַּמִּדְבָּר, "the mingled race of those that dwell in the desert;" meaning such as inhabited the great desert country lying between Mesopotamia and Palestine. These may have been called הָעָרֶב, from the sense of the verb עָרַב, "to mix" or "mingle together," either from their manner of inhabiting the desert promiscuously and in common, without any fixed property or abode, but settling for a time where they found pasture, and then removing with their flocks to another place; (see STRABO, lib. xvi. page 747; PLIN. Nat. Hist. lib. vi. sect. 32;) or else, which I rather think, from their being made up of people of different descents; concerning whom see what will be said in a note on chapter xlix. 23.

Verse 25. Zimri—Zimran was one of the sons of Abraham, by Keturah; all of whom he sent away eastward of Canaan, to settle in the east country, or the land of Kedem. (Gen. xxv. 2, 6.) It is probable that the people of Zimri were the descendants of Zimran, and were the same that PLINY mentions, among the inhabitants of Arabia, by the name of "Zimareni." (Nat. Hist. lib. vi. sect. 32.)

Elam—See the prophecy concerning Elam, chapter xlix. 34; and what will be said in the notes there.

The kings of Media—Whether the Medes made any opposition to the conquest of Elam by the king of Babylon, and were unsuccessful; or whether this relates to the disturbance occasioned by the Babylonian invasion of the frontiers of Media, as related in XENOPHON'S Cyropædia; (lib. ii;) or whether to any other calamity which befell that kingdom during their wars with the Babylonian monarchs, of which history has given no account, as far as I know; is uncertain.

Verse 26. The kings of the north, those that are near, and those that are afar off—By the kings of the north that were near, the kings of Syria are probably meant. See chapter xlix. 23. "Those that are afar off" may mean the Hyrcanians and Bactrians, who are reckoned, in XENOPHON'S Cyropædia, (lib. i.) among them that were subjected or oppressed by the king of Babylon; and perhaps others besides of the neighbouring nations that were compelled to submit to the Babylonian yoke. All these lay to the north of Judea, and at a great distance.

All the kingdoms of the earth, which are upon the face of the ground—This must be understood with a limitation to that part of the continent which the Jews had any correspondence or acquaintance with; just as Παρά η οίκουμένη stands for the whole Roman empire, Luke ii. 1. The ambition of a prince like Nebuchadnezzar, who aimed at universal monarchy, could not help occasioning great distress and confusion, both among those who felt, and among those who dreaded, the power of his arms.

And the king of Sheshach shall drink after them—Here the speech of JEHOVAH is resumed, which was broken off at the end of verse 16. That "Sheshach" means Babylon, appears clearly from chapter li. 41; but among the reasons that have been assigned for this name, I have met with none that I think satisfactory. ששך signifies "to subside and sink down;" hence, ששך may signify, "that which subsides and sinks down;" and may, perhaps, allude to the low situation of Babylon, which did not derive its strength from being built, like many other great cities, upon the heights of a rock, but stood upon a large flat or plain, cowering, as it were, amidst the waters that surrounded it, and by which it was rendered, in some parts, inaccessible to an enemy. Accordingly, she is said, chapter li. 13, to "dwell upon many waters."

which is called by my name I begin to bring evil; and shall ye go altogether unpunished? Ye shall not go unpunished; for a sword am I about to call for against all the inhabitants of the earth, saith JEHOVAH of hosts.

- 30 THOU shalt also prophesy unto them all these words, and shalt say unto them,

JEHOVAH from on high shall roar,
And from his holy habitation shall he utter his voice;
He shall roar aloud against his resting place,
A shout like that of the vintagers shall he give Against all the inhabitants of the earth.

- 31 A tumult hath reached unto the extremity of the earth;
Because JEHOVAH hath a controversy with the nations,
He hath entered into judgment with the whole race of the wicked,

Delivering them up unto the sword, saith JEHOVAH.

- 32 Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts;
Behold, evil is going forth from nation to nation,
And a great whirlwind shall be raised from the extreme quarters of the earth:

- 33 And the slain of JEHOVAH in that day shall be
From the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth:

They shall not be lamented, nor gathered, nor buried,
For dung shall they be upon the surface of the ground.

- 34 Wail, O ye shepherds, and cry,
And roll yourselves in ashes, O ye chief of the flock;
Because your days for slaughter, and your dispersions, are accomplished;
And ye shall fall like a precious vessel.

Verse 30. Against all the inhabitants of the earth—Two MSS., both of them respectable ones, for אל read על.

Verse 31. The whole race of the wicked—כל-בשר of itself is sometimes put for “all mankind;” but, Job xii. 10, we read כל-בשר איש, “all flesh of man,” that is, “the whole race of man;” and in like manner I conceive הרשעים should be joined with כל-בשר, and the whole rendered together, “the whole race of the wicked.”

Verse 34. And roll yourselves in ashes—באפר must here be understood as it is expressed, chapter vi. 26; Ezekiel xxvii. 30.

And ye shall fall like a precious vessel—That is, Ye who are esteemed above the common rank shall undergo the fate of a precious vessel, made

And of escape from the chief of the flock.

And of wailing of the chief of the flock,
Because JEHOVAH hath laid their pasture waste !
- 37 Also the peaceful folds are destroyed
By means of the fierce wrath of JEHOVAH.
- 38 He hath quitted, like a lion, his covert ;

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 IN THE BEGINNING OF THE REIGN OF JEHOIAKIM THE SON OF JOSIAH KING OF JUDAH CAME THIS WORD FROM JEHOVAH, SAYING,

2 THUS SAITH JEHOVAH, Stand in the court of the house of

of a crystal or gem, which, being let fall, is shattered to pieces ; its original value being no security against such disasters. I cannot, however, help thinking, that possibly for חמרה, the original reading may have been חמרה, "of clay" or "earth." To be "dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel" denotes irreparable ruin. (Psalm ii. 9.)

"כבלי—Ως κατοι, LXX. ; quasi legissent כבלי, quod cum sequentibus [nec non et cum præcedentibus, B. B.] optimè convenit."—SECKER.

Verse 38. By means of the fierceness of the oppressor—Ten MSS. and one ancient edition, with the LXX. and Chaldee, for חרון, read חרב. The Syriac seems to have read חרון יהוה, instead of חרון היונה. But the reading of the text at present seems preferable ; for if היונה, "the oppressor," be referred to "the lion," which JEHOVAH is compared to, then חרון, I conceive, will be much more suitable than חרב.

CHAP. XXVI. THE preceding chapter is dated in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim, but ascribed, with probability, to the early part of that year. This chapter is dated in the beginning of the same reign. Hence it has been concluded, that this must have preceded the former in order of time. But the conclusion will not hold, if we consider that, chap. xxviii. 1, the beginning of Zedekiah's reign is expressly declared to mean the fourth year and the fifth month. The same, therefore, may be the case here, and may thus be accounted for : In a reign which lasted eleven years, as did both Jehoiakim's and Zedekiah's, the word ראשית, "the beginning" or "early part," need not be restrained to the first year of it ; but, supposing the whole divided into three equal parts, a beginning, a middle, and an end, the first of these may comprehend and denote the three first years, and some part of the fourth also. This chapter therefore may, on such a supposition, be allowed to stand next to the foregoing one.

- JEHOVAH, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, those that come to worship in the house of JEHOVAH, all the words which I have charged thee to speak unto them; abate not a word
- 3 if peradventure they will hearken, and turn every one from his evil way: that I may repent me of the evil which I purpose to do unto them, because of the evil of their doings.
- 4 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith JEHOVAH; If ye will not hearken unto me to walk in my law, which I have set
- 5 before you, to hearken unto the words of my servants the prophets, whom I send unto you, rising up early and sending,
- 6 even as ye have not hearkened: then will I make this house like Shiloh, and this city will I make a curse among all nations of the earth.
- 7 And the priests, and the prophets, and all the people heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of JEHOVAH.

Jeremiah is directed to foretell the destruction of the temple and city of Jerusalem, without a speedy repentance and reformation. (Verses 1-6.) On this account he is apprehended and accused, before the council, of a capital offence; he enters upon his defence, and is acquitted; his advocates urging the precedent of Micah in the reign of Hezekiah. (Verses 7-19.) But from a contrary precedent it appears his life would have been in great danger, had he not met with a powerful protector.

“Verse 2. Fortè pro ערי legendum שרי.”—SECKER.

Unto all the cities of Judah—Here it is evident that ערי, “cities,” are put for their inhabitants; and we may conjecture from hence that this transaction passed at one of the great festivals, when the people of Judah were assembled out of all their cities to worship at Jerusalem.

Verse 5. Rising up early—Thirteen MSS. and the oldest edition of the Hebrew Bible read השכם without the ו prefixed; nor does the conjunction appear in the LXX., Chaldee, or Vulgate versions.

Even as ye have not hearkened—The particle ו is thus used, 1 Sam. xii. 15; Job v. 7, &c.

Verse 6. Like Shiloh—See chapter vii. 12, 14.

This city—Instead of הוצאתה, the Masoretes read הוצאת, which is the reading also of thirty-five MSS., some of them the most ancient, and three editions.

Verse 7. The prophets—The prophets, as is manifest from many passages in scripture, were an order of men among the Jews devoted to sacred literature, and qualified, by their attainments in religious knowledge, to advise and instruct the people, who came to consult them in cases of doubt and difficulty. They appear to have been trained in seminaries and schools, under the direction of some prophet eminent for wisdom and piety; as those mentioned, 1 Sam. xix. 20, were under Samuel; and those, 2 Kings ii. 3; vi. 1, under Elijah and Elisha. That they were numerous, appears from this circumstance; that when Jezebel slew all the prophets of JEHOVAH whom she could meet with, Obadiah hid an hundred of them, and

- 8 And it came to pass, when Jeremiah had done speaking all that JEHOVAH had commanded him to speak to all the people, that the priests, and the prophets, and all the people
 9 apprehended him, saying, 'Thou shalt surely die. Wherefore hast thou prophesied in the name of JEHOVAH, saying, 'This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be made desolate without an inhabitant? And all the people were assembled together against Jeremiah in the house of JEHOVAH.
 10 When the princes of Judah heard these things, they went up from the king's house to the house of JEHOVAH, and sat in 11 the entrance of the new gate of the house of JEHOVAH. Then saved their lives. (1 Kings xviii. 4.) And afterwards there appeared no less than four hundred of them prophesying in that character before Ahab and Jehoshaphat. (1 Kings xxii. 6.) It is not to be supposed that these were, all of them, or at all times, divinely inspired, but ordinarily gave their advice as men versed in the law and in the other scriptures. Sometimes, however, they were enabled to answer those that consulted them, by immediate revelation from God. And out of this body God generally, perhaps, chose those whom he sent as his ambassadors and messengers extraordinary, to notify the designs of his providence, and to warn his people to repent and turn from the ways which displeased him. I say generally, but not always; for Amos expressly says of himself, that he was "neither a prophet," meaning by profession, "nor a prophet's son," one bred up in the schools of the prophets; but an illiterate herdman, when JEHOVAH sent him to prophesy unto Israel. (Amos vii. 14.) But neither did the sacredness of their character secure them from bearing a part in the general corruption of the times; on the contrary, Jeremiah in particular complains bitterly of them for having prostituted themselves to the worst of purposes, deceiving the people by false pretences, and being greatly instrumental in promoting the cause of impiety and wickedness. See chapter v. 31; xiv. 13, 14; xxiii. 14, &c.; xxviii. 15; xxix. 8, 9, &c. &c. See also Ezekiel xiii. 2, &c.; Micah iii. 5, 11; Zeph. iii. 4. After the total cessation of prophecy, the scribes, who are often mentioned in the gospels, seem to have stepped into the place of the prophets; and, by their acquired skill in the sacred writings, without any claim to supernatural gifts, to have taught the people, and instructed them in all matters of religious concernment. See Mat. xxiii. 2, 3.

Verse 9. Hast thou prophesied—For נבִּית, fifteen mss. and two editions read נבִּאת, which is indeed the regular form; but, as was observed in note on chapter xxiii. 39, the verbs quiescent in א, the third radical, often assume the form of those quiescent in ה.

Verse 10. The princes of Judah—This was no doubt the great court of the Sanhedrim, first instituted, Num. xi. 16, and revived by Jehoshaphat, 2 Chron. xix. 8. Before this court we find Baruch afterwards brought to read the roll. (Chapter xxxvi. 12, &c.)

Gate of the house of JEHOVAH—Twenty, perhaps twenty-one, mss. and spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy to die: because he hath prophesied concerning this city according as ye have 12 heard with your ears. Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes and to all the people, saying, JEHOVAH hath sent me to prophesy concerning this house and concerning this city all

 13 the words which ye have heard. But now amend ye your ways and your doings, and hearken unto the voice of JEHOVAH your God; and JEHOVAH will repent him of the evil
 14 which he hath denounced against you. And as for me, behold, I am in your power; do to me as it is good and right
 15 in your eyes. Only know assuredly, that if ye put me to death, surely ye shall bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: for of a truth JEHOVAH hath sent me unto you, to speak all these 16 words in your ears. Then said the princes and all the people unto the priests and to the prophets, This man is not worthy to die; for he hath spoken to us in the name of JEHOVAH our 17 God. Certain also of the elders of the land rose up and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying, Micah the Morasthite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, Sion shall be plowed up as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house shall be like the heights of the forest. Did Hezekiah king of Judah, and 18 all Judah, proceed to put him to death? Did he not fear JEHOVAH, and intreat the favour of JEHOVAH, so that JEHOVAH repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? But we are doing great mischief to ourselves.
 20 But there was also a man that prophesied in the name of one edition read, שער בית יהוה; and the Syriac, Chaldee, Arabic, and Vulgate render conformably to this reading.

Verse 12. Unto all the princes, and to all the people—כל is omitted before השרים in four mss., and in the version of the LXX. We may observe that this verse, compared with verses 16, 17, seems to savour strongly of a democratical form of government; as if the people in general were appealed to, and had a voice in judicial proceedings.

Verse 18. Micah—For מִיכָיָה, the Masoretes, with twenty-nine mss. and four editions, read מִיכָה, conformably to Micah i. 1. There is another similar mistake in this verse in the word יִירוּשָׁלַם, which in one hundred and two, perhaps in one hundred and five, mss. and two editions is written יִירוּשָׁלַם.

Sion shall be plowed, &c.—See Micah iii. 12.

Verse 20. But there was also a man, &c.—There are three different

JEHOVAH, Urijah the son of Shemaiah of Kirjath-jearim ; and he prophesied against this city and against this land 21 according to all the words of Jeremiah. And when Jehoiakim the king, and all his great men, and all the princes, heard his words, then the king sought to put him to death : but Urijah heard and was afraid, and fled and went into Egypt.
 22 But Jehoiakim the king sent adversaries, Elnathan the son of opinions respecting the words that follow. The first ascribes them to an opposite party, who, by a contrary precedent to the foregoing, urged the condemnation of Jeremiah. But against this it is objected, that such a transition in the speakers would have had some mark of distinction prefixed. Others suppose that this instance was adduced by the same persons as the former, and with intent to mark the different consequences that had ensued ; but that they forbore to draw their inference at large, partly out of a decent respect to the reigning prince, who was chiefly concerned in the transaction ; and partly because all their hearers were of themselves sufficiently sensible of the present calamitous state of the kingdom. But this implies a more refined system of manners than was consistent with the practice of the times ; besides that the nation was not at that season in circumstances singularly calamitous, whatever might be the case soon after. But the least exceptionable opinion seems to be, that the elders concluded their speeches, verse 19 ; and that the writer of the narrative goes on to observe in his own person, that, notwithstanding the precedent of Micah, there had been a later precedent in the present reign, which might have operated very unfavourably to the cause of Jeremiah, but for the influence and authority of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, which was exerted to save him.

“ Here I suppose the prophet speaks again.”—SECKER.

Verse 21. And was afraid—For ירא thirty-three mss. and five editions read יריא ; which is more right.

Verse 22. Adversaries—It is scarcely probable that מִצְרִים should here signify “ Egypt,” as אֱל־מִצְרִים follows immediately after, and the tautology would be intolerable. But either מִצְרִים may be the participle in Hiphil, and signify “ distressers,” or, perhaps, the מ may have been repeated from the end of the preceding word, and we should read אֲנָשִׁים צָרִים, “ adversaries,” instead of אֲנָשִׁים מִצְרִים. This is certainly as common a ground of mistake in transcribers as any that occurs, and the pleonasm of the word אֲנָשִׁים is a well-known Hebrew idiom. So אֲנָשִׁים אֶחָיו signifies “ brethren,” Genesis xiii. 8. By “ distressers,” or “ adversaries,” words of nearly the same import, may probably be understood persons whose business it was, by crimination and solicitation, to prevail upon the governors of Egypt to give up the man who had fled for refuge into their territories. For it is hardly to be supposed, that Jehoiakim would have dared to send a party of men into the dominions of a powerful neighbour, to seize, by force, one that had put himself under the protection of a foreign state ; nor would the Egyptians have put up with the insult. But as the king of Egypt was in friendship with Jehoiakim, he may have been prevailed on by the press-

- 23 Achbor, and certain men with him, into Egypt: and they brought Urijah forth out of Egypt, and brought him to king Jehoiakim, who slew him with the sword, and cast his dead body into the buryingplaces of the children of the people.
- 24 Howbeit the hand of Ahikam the son of Shaphan was with Jeremiah, that he should not be delivered into the hand of the people to put him to death.

CHAPTER XXXV.*

1 THE WORD WHICH CAME UNTO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH IN THE DAYS OF JEHOIAKIM THE SON OF JOSIAH KING OF JUDAH, SAYING,

ing importunity of his agents to suffer them to carry off the obnoxious fugitive.

Verse 23. And cast his dead body into the buryingplaces of the children of the people—By “the children of the people” are meant the populace of the lowest order, who were buried in a public cemetery, having no distinct sepulchre to themselves, as all persons of rank and character, and especially of so honourable an order as that of the prophets, used to have. But the king’s design was to brand his memory, as far as he could, by such an ignominious treatment of his remains. Maillet, speaking of the Egyptian repositories of the dead, says, that while some “were enclosed in chests, and placed in niches,” others “were put into those tombs without any embalming at all, or such a slight one, that there remains nothing of them in the linen in which they were wrapped but their bones, and those half rotten. It is probable,” continues he, “that each considerable family had one of these burial-places to themselves; that the niches were designed for the bodies of the heads of the family; and that those of their domestics and slaves had no other care taken of them than the laying them on the ground after having been embalmed, and even without that; which, without doubt, was also all that was done even to the heads of families of less distinction.” See HARMER’S Observations, chap. vi. obs. 59. Should we now suppose,—and the supposition is not improbable,—that the prophets had an appropriated burying-place of their own; the excluding of Urijah from it, and burying of him promiscuously among the common herd, could be regarded, in those days, in no better light than the burying of a person now in the highway would be.

CHAP. XXXV. ALL the intermediate prophecies from chapter xxvi., according to the Hebrew arrangement, belong clearly to the reign of Zedekiah; and, consequently, are posterior to this chapter and the next, which are dated in the reign of Jehoiakim, together with chapter xlv., which is closely connected with the latter of these two chapters. The Rechabites appear to have retired within the walls of Jerusalem upon the hostile approach of Nebuchadnezzar and his army in the fourth year of Jehoiakim. Calmet, indeed, supposes that it was not till the latter end of

* See note, page 166.

- 2 Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of JEHOVAH, into one of the Jehoiakim's reign that the Rechabites were driven into the city for shelter; grounding his opinion upon its being said, verse 11, that they entered it "for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians," and comparing this with 2 Kings xxiv. 2, where "JEHOVAH" is said to have "sent bands of Chaldees, and of Syrians, &c. against Judah to destroy it." But this reasoning will not hold; for, first, Nebuchadnezzar might have been, and most probably was, joined by the Syrians in his first expedition against Jerusalem, after the defeat of the Egyptians at Carchemish, which brought on the submission of all Syria. And, secondly, Nebuchadnezzar does not appear to have come in person a second time till after Jehoiakim was at least taken prisoner, and his generals had closely invested Jerusalem. See note on chapter xxii. 19. But, further, the title of Psalm lxx., according to the LXX., speaks of the sons of Jonadab as among the first that were carried into captivity. Now the first captivity was in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, when Daniel and his companions, with several others, were transported to Babylon. If any stress, then, is to be laid upon this title, the date of this prophecy is decided. I pretend not, indeed, to say of what authority the titles in general are; nor is this recognised in the Hebrew copies. But its being found in all the copies of the LXX., affords reason to conclude, that there was such a tradition, at least, concerning the sons of Jonadab, when this version of the Psalms was made.

Jeremiah is sent unto the Rechabites upon their coming to Jerusalem, and for a trial of their obedience offers them wine to drink. They refuse it, and object the express prohibition of their father. (Verses 1-11.) The Jews are hereupon upbraided with their disobedience to the divine commands, and menaced with vengeance. (Verses 12-17.) A blessing is promised to the Rechabites for their dutiful behaviour. (Verses 18, 19.)

Verse 2. The house of the Rechabites—The Rechabites, as may be collected from verse 7, were not of the children of Israel, but strangers of another race that dwelt among them. From 1 Chron. ii. 55, they appear to have been Kenites, a people originally settled in that part of Arabia Petraea, which was called the land of Midian; and most probably the descendants of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, or of Hobab, (whom some look upon to have been Jethro's son, others, Jethro himself,) who is called "a Kenite," and said to have severed himself from the rest of his countrymen, and to have dwelt among the people of Israel. Compare Numb. x. 29-32 with Judges i. 16; iv. 11. At what time Rechab lived, who gave his name to the family, is not certain, nor whether he was the immediate father or the remote ancestor of Jonadab; for the word "son" often denotes nothing more than "a lineal descendant." But it is most likely, that the Jonadab here spoken of, as having dictated a rule of living to the Rechabites, was the same person of whom mention is made, 2 Kings x. 15. For that this latter was a man of considerable eminence, is manifest from the respect shown him by Jehu; and his being taken along with him by that prince to witness his zeal for the honour of the true God, shows him to have been a man of right and religious principles. The institutions he left with his

3 chambers, and give them wine to drink. Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habatziniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites. And I brought them into the house of JEHOVAH, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaliah, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah the son of Shallum, the 5 keeper of the door. And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine and cups; and I said unto 6 them, Drink ye wine. But they said, We will not drink wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father charged us, saying, Ye shall not drink wine, ye, nor your sons for ever: 7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, posterity bespeak a principal concern for the purity of their morals, which he might rightly suppose would be less liable to be corrupted, whilst they adhered to the simplicity of their ancient usages, than if they adopted the refinements of modern luxury. He, therefore, enjoined them not only to abstain from the use of wine, but to live, as the patriarchs did of old, and as many of their countrymen, the Scenite Arabs, continue to do at this day, without any fixed habitations or possessions, far from the society of cities, in the open country, feeding their flocks, and maintaining themselves by the produce of them.

“The Rechabites descended from the Kenites, who inhabited the same country that the Nabathæans did afterward, of whom DIODOR. SICULUS (lib. xix. page 722, edit. Rhodoman.) says, Νομος δ' ἐστὶν αὐτοῖς, μὴτε σιτον σπείρειν, μὴτε φυτεύειν μηδὲν φυτὸν καρποφόρον, μὴτε οἶνον χρῆσθαι, μὴτε οἰκίαν παρασκευάζειν. χρωμαὶ δὲ τῷ νόμῳ τούτῳ, διαλαμβάνοντες τοὺς ταῦτα κτώμενους ἀναγκαζεσθαι ραδίως ὑπὸ τῶν δυνατῶν ἐνεκα τῆς τούτων χρείας ποιεῖν τὸ προσταττομένον. Ammian. Marcellin. says much the same things of the Saracens, excepting their not building houses.”—SECKER.

Verse 4. A man of God—This name usually imports “a prophet,” one who had been employed upon a divine commission; nor do I ever find it used in any other sense. Otherwise I might have been induced to think, that it here denoted an officer in waiting upon the magistrates or rulers, (so הַאֲלֹהִים is sometimes used, as also אֲנָשִׁים, for those in attendance upon a great man’s person; see 1 Kings x. 8;) and entitled to a chamber in the temple in right of his office; his chamber being said to be next to that in which the princes, or Sanhedrim, used to assemble.

Verse 6. But they said—One MS. of note and antiquity adds לִּי, “unto me.”

Mr. Harmer, from some circumstances which he relates concerning the Bedouins of Egypt, conjectures, that some misunderstandings had arisen between the Rechabites and the children of Israel, on account of the former having taken upon them to sow lands in the country of the latter; and that these being chiefly owing to wine, Jonadab, who was then the Sheek, or head of the family, solemnly charged them for the future never to drink

- nor have any : but ye shall dwell in tents all your days, that ye may live many days in the land where ye are strangers.
- 8 And we have obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab our father in all that he charged us, so as not to drink wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, and our daughters ;
- 9 nor to build houses for us to dwell in ; neither have we vine-
- 10 yard nor field, nor seed : but we have dwelt in tents, and obeyed and done according to all that Jonadab our father com-
- 11 manded us. But it came to pass, when Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon was coming up against the land, that we said, Come, and let us enter into Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians ; and let us dwell in Jerusalem.
- 12 Then came the word of JEHOVAH to Jeremiah, saying,
- 13 Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel ; Go and say unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words ? saith
- 14 JEHOVAH. The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, which he gave in charge to his sons not to drink wine, have been punctually performed ; for they have drunk no wine unto this day, but have obeyed the commandment of their father : I also have spoken unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye wine, which had been the immediate cause of the feud, nor to attempt to sow any lands, which had been the remote cause of it ; but to content themselves with feeding their flocks in the common pastures, so as to give no umbrage to the people among whom they dwelt. (Chapter ii. obs. 4.) And this conjecture, it must be owned, is much favoured by the motive assigned, verse 7, “that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.” As if, on supposition of a contrary behaviour, there was some reason to fear lest they might be driven out of it.

“Verse 7. The noblest of the Arabians dwell always in tents. PIETRO DELL VALLE, Lett. 5 Aug. 1625. sect. 4.”—SECKER.

Verse 14. The words of Jonadab have been punctually performed—There is no doubt but this is the sense of the words here made use of. There is, however, a peculiarity in the construction that deserves notice. Two anomalies are generally supposed, the nominative case with a preposition before it, אֶת־דָּבָרִי; and the singular verb הִוָּקֵם in agreement with a plural subject. But I much question whether this is the case ; and I submit whether it is not more probable, that the idiom consists in the passive verb being used in the third person singular impersonally, with an accusative after it, according to the construction of the active verb. “It hath been performed,” or “There hath been a performance of (or, according to) the words of Jonadab.” Other passages of the like form may be accounted for in the same manner. See chapter xxxvi. 32.

15 have not hearkened unto me. And I have sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending, saying, Return, I pray you, every one from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after strange gods to serve them; and dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers: but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto 16 me. Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have fulfilled the commandment of their father, which he commanded
 17 them, but this people hath not hearkened unto me: Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I am about to bring upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, all the evil which I have denounced against them; because I have spoken unto them, and they have not hearkened; and I have called unto them, and they have not answered.

18 And unto the house of the Rechabites said Jeremiah; Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel; Because ye have hearkened unto the commandment of Jonadab your father, and have observed all his directions, and have done according 19 to all that he hath charged you; Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, There shall be no failure of one in the line of Jonadab the son of Rechab, standing before me continually.

Verse 19. There shall be no failure of one in the line of Jonadab, &c.—The meaning of this promise in its full extent seems to be, not only that the race of Jonadab should never fail or be extinct, but that some of the family should ever be found among the worshippers of the true God. For to stand in the presence of a prince implies an attendance, in some degree, upon his person and service. So the queen of Sheba, speaking of Solomon's court, says, "Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee." (1 Kings x. 8.) And, therefore, to "stand before God" must denote, at least, the privilege of treading his courts, and of worshipping him among the train of his chosen servants and followers. Some have carried the matter still further, and have supposed that in virtue of this promise the Rechabites were admitted to bear a part in the temple-service; and this opinion seems to have dictated the Vulgate translation of 1 Chron. ii. 55: Cognationes quoque scribarum habitantium in Jabes, canentes, atque resonantes, et in tabernaculis commorantes. Hi sunt Cinæi, qui venerunt de calore patris domus Rechab. But besides that there is no other authority for believing that the Levites were set aside from the functions of singers and porters, which belonged exclusively to them, and which in this translation seems to be given to the Kenites, I am of opinion that not only these words, תריעתים שמיעתים שיכתיים, are the proper names

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 AND IT CAME TO PASS IN THE FOURTH YEAR OF JEHOIAKIM THE SON OF JOSIAH KING OF JUDAH, THAT THIS WORD CAME UNTO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH, SAYING,

2 TAKE thee a roll of a book, and write upon it all the words which I have spoken unto thee concerning Israel, and concerning Judah, and concerning all the nations, from the day that I began to speak unto thee, from the days of Josiah, of distinct families, but that the same is the case of סופרים also, which should be rendered "Sopharites" instead of "scribes;" and that the text does not represent them as Rechabites, but as collateral branches descended from Hemath, a common ancestor of those families, and of the house of Rechab. So that the verse may properly be translated thus: "Also the families of Sopharites dwelling in Jabetz, Tirhathites, Shimeathites, Suchathites: These were Kenites, descended from Hemath, an ancestor of the house of Rechab." Should Jabetz have been a city built by an eminent man of that name, mentioned, 1 Chron. iv. 9, (which Kimchi not unreasonably supposes,) this would be another circumstance to distinguish these people from the Rechabites: For it is most natural to conclude, that the Rechabites, who had already found their obedience to their father's commands turn out so much to their honour and advantage, would not have departed from it in this article of dwelling in tents without an apparent necessity.

CHAP. XXXVI. By divine appointment Jeremiah causeth Baruch to write all his preceding prophecies on a roll, and to read them to the people on a fast-day. (Verses 1-10.) The princes are informed of it, and send for Baruch, who readeth the roll before them; at the contents of which they are greatly alarmed, and advise Jeremiah and Baruch to hide themselves. (Verses 11-19.) They acquaint the king, who sendeth for the roll; and, having heard a part of it read, he cutteth it in pieces and burneth it. (Verses 20-26.) Jeremiah is commanded to write it anew, and to denounce the judgments of God against king Jehoiakim. (Verses 27-31.) Baruch writeth a new copy, with additions. (Verse 32.)

It was the opinion of both Archbishop Usher and Dean Prideaux, that the roll was twice read by Baruch in the temple; and that the first reading was on the tenth day of the seventh month, being the great day of atonement, in the fourth year of king Jehoiakim. But this, I am persuaded, is a mistake; and the reasons urged by the latter of those two learned men, in support of his hypothesis, are by no means satisfactory and conclusive: He says that "the reading of the roll in the temple is twice related in this chapter;" and that, "in the first relation, it is said to be done in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and in the second relation it is said to be done in the fifth; which plainly denotes different times." (Connexion of Old and New

3 even unto this day. Peradventure the house of Judah may hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them, so as to return every one from his evil way, and I may forgive their

Testament, part i. book 1.) The conclusion is unquestionable, if the premises were but just; but no such double relation do I see in fact, nor is it any where asserted, in this chapter, that the roll was read in Jehoiakim's fourth year. It is said, indeed, (verse 1,) that the word of JEHOVAH came to Jeremiah in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, but not at what time of the year; and we may allow, too, that Baruch received his instructions from Jeremiah immediately, concerning both the writing and the reading of the roll. With respect to the latter, his instructions were, that he should read the roll on a fast-day, when the people of Jerusalem, and out of all the cities of Judah, were assembled in the house of JEHOVAH. But it is presumed only, and not with much probability neither, that the fast-day intended was the tenth day of the seventh month, which, in the Old Testament, is known only by the name of "the day of atonement;" and had it been designed under another name here, it would, methinks, at least, have been distinguished by prefixing the article הַ, as בְּיוֹם הַצֹּם, "on the day of the fast;" in like manner as in the New Testament, where it is supposed to be spoken of, Acts xxvii. 9, it is stiled ἡ νηστεία, "the fast," by way of eminence, it being the only one enjoined the Jews by divine authority. It is, however, simply said here, בְּיוֹם צֹם, "on a fast-day," which would suit any day that the people should agree among themselves to observe as such. Accordingly, after its being said in general terms, (verse 8,) that Baruch did as Jeremiah commanded, in regard to reading the roll in the temple, the ninth and tenth verses proceed to specify the particular circumstances of time and place; namely, that it was in the ninth month of the fifth year of king Jehoiakim, on a fast-day, which all the people of Jerusalem, and of all the cities of Judah, had appointed, and were met to observe, on account, as it is believed, of the city having been taken by Nebuchadnezzar, on that very day in the preceding year; and in a certain chamber belonging to the house of JEHOVAH, distinctly described, most probably, from the window or balcony of it that looked into the higher court, where the people were gathered together in crowds below; that Baruch read in their hearing the words which Jeremiah had dictated to him. Here, then, is but one single relation; and, as far as appears hitherto, of one single reading only in the audience of the people. Nor is any more proved by the second argument adduced, namely, that, "in the first relation, Jeremiah is said to be shut up in prison when the roll was read; but in the second relation, it plainly appears he was out of prison, for he was then at full liberty to go out of the way and hide himself." Here, also, the matter labours for want of proof, and the whole proceeds upon a misconstruction of the text; for it is not said that "he was shut up in prison" when he gave the directions to Baruch, but barely, that he was "shut up," or "confined," עֲצוּר; (verse 5;) or,—taken, as it should be, in connexion with the context that follows,—under some such confinement or restraint as precluded him from going to the house of JEHOVAH. Now, this he might have been in a variety of ways, without being shut up in a prison; a species of persecution which does not otherwise

4 iniquity and their sin. And Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah; and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of JEHOVAH, which he had spoken unto him, 5 upon a roll of a book. And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am confined, I cannot go into the house of JEHOVAH:

appear to have befallen him about this time. We read, indeed, chapter xxvi., that, in the beginning of Jehoiakim's reign,—that is, as has been already explained in the introductory note on that chapter, in the early part of this same fourth year,—Jeremiah was arrested, and brought to a capital trial before the princes and people, for the predictions he had uttered; but he was then acquitted, though not, as may be concluded from the last verse of the chapter, without difficulty, and by the influence of a powerful friend. It is not improbable, however, that, though he escaped with his life, he might, upon this occasion, have received a prohibition, like that which the Sanhedrim gave to the apostles; (Acts iv. 18; v. 40;) or might even have been obliged to give security not to enter the temple, or to speak in it by way of prophesying, for a certain time. This would be sufficient to justify the expression made use of; and might even extend to restrain him from going in person to the temple at the time the roll was actually read, though long after the directions were given, and yet not prevent him from hiding himself with Baruch, where the king's officers could not find them. Upon the whole, I see no good reason for concluding that the roll was read publicly in the temple more than once; nor does JOSEPHUS, who speaks of its being read in the ninth month of the fifth year, (Ant. lib. x. cap. 6, edit. Hudson,) give the least hint of its having been done before; which if it had been, I think we might naturally have expected to have been informed how it was received by those who heard it the first time, as well as by those who heard it the second. From the utter silence on this head the contrary may be presumed; and we may fairly conjecture the case to have been pretty nearly as follows: Towards the latter end of Jehoiakim's fourth year, after Nebuchadnezzar had replaced him on the throne, and had left the city, it is possible that both king and people, freed from former apprehensions, began again to indulge their wicked inclinations and fancies; and therefore Jeremiah was ordered to lay before them, at once, all the evils that still threatened them in future, and from which nothing but speedy repentance and amendment could protect them. In consequence of this charge, Jeremiah caused Baruch to write a collection of all his prophecies, and to have them in readiness to read at a fit opportunity. Perhaps the collection was not fully completed before the fifth year was already begun; but the season pitched on as most convenient for reading this tremendous publication, was the day on which the people had assembled themselves to deplore before God the calamity with which he had visited them just a twelvemonth before. Accordingly, at that time Baruch read openly in the temple what he had written; and the immediate consequences of such reading are related at large. I have been more particular in discussing this matter, as thinking it necessary, by way of apology, or justification of myself, for opposing my opinion to two such very respectable authorities.

6 But go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of JEHOVAH in the hearing of the people, in the house of JEHOVAH, upon a fast day; and also in the hearing of all Judah that come out of their cities shalt
 7 thou read them. Peradventure they may prostrate themselves in supplication before JEHOVAH, and they may return every one from his evil way: for great is the anger and the indignation
 8 which JEHOVAH hath denounced against this people. And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of 9 JEHOVAH in the house of JEHOVAH. For it came to pass in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month, that all the people in Jerusalem, and all the people that came out of the cities of Judah, proclaimed a “Verse 6. The fast is taken to be that of the tenth of the seventh month, which was yearly; and this to be a second reading, on an occasional fast ten months after; because ‘the fast’ properly denotes the stated fast; and ‘reading in the ears of Judah’ probably means reading at the feast of tabernacles, which came five days after the yearly fast, (Lev. xxiii. 34,) and at which all Judah assembled, which we do not find that they did at the yearly fast. But we find they did at the occasional fast here, verse 9; and therefore that may be meant, verse 6. It is said, indeed, that when Jeremiah first bid Baruch read the book, he said he was ‘shut up;’ but at the reading mentioned here he was at liberty to hide himself. (Verses 19, 26.) But he might be set at liberty between his directions to Baruch and Baruch’s reading to the princes, though it were but a day’s distance. And he is not said, verse 5, to be ‘shut up in prison,’ as chapters xxxiii. 1; xxxix. 15, but only ‘shut up,’ עָצָר; which word is used, Neh. vi. 10, of a person who was not in prison; though it appears not what is directly meant there. And if there were two readings, it seems strange that no effect of the first should be mentioned. Jeremiah might be detained by prudence, or by the king’s command, that he did not go to speak in the temple.”—SECKER.

Verse 7. They may prostrate themselves in supplication—Literally, “Their supplication may fall,” which undoubtedly respects the humble posture of the supplicant in presenting it. See again chapter xxxvii. 20. In the subsequent part of the verse “the anger and the indignation” is put by metonymy for the effects of it, the heavy judgments which in consequence thereof JEHOVAH denounced against his people.

Verse 9. All the people in Jerusalem, and all the people that came out of the cities of Judah, proclaimed a fast—This is the natural construction, as the text stands at present, and so the LXX., Chaldee, and in part the Syriac, render. But the Vulgate and our English translators render, “They proclaimed a fast—to all the people,” as if for כָּל־הָעָם they had read לְכָל־הָעָם, which is indeed found in one ms. But the text, I am persuaded, is right; and meant to indicate that the fast was enjoined by human authority, by the

- 10 fast before JEHOVAH in Jerusalem. Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of JEHOVAH, in the chamber of Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the entrance of the new gate of the house of JEHOVAH, in the hearing of all the people.
- 11 And Micaiah the son of Gemariah the son of Shaphan heard 12 all the words of JEHOVAH from out of the book. And he went down to the king's house, into the scribe's chamber; and, lo! all the princes were sitting there, Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and Elnathan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of 13 Hananiah, and all the princes. Then Micaiah declared unto them all the words which he had heard, when Baruch read in 14 the book, in the hearing of the people. And all the princes sent Jehudi, the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, The roll wherein thou hast been reading in the hearing of the people, take it in thine hand, and go. And Baruch the son of Neriah took the roll in 15 his hand, and came unto them. And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our hearing. And Baruch read in 16 their hearing. And it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they looked with consternation upon one another; and said unto Baruch, We will surely inform the king of all 17 these matters. And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, authority of the people themselves, and not of God. See 1 Kings xxi. 12. The ancient Bodleian ms. N<sup>o</sup>. 1, omits the word הבאים, according to which the translation should be, "and all the people of, or belonging to, the cities of Judah."

Verse 10. In the higher court, at the entrance of the new gate of the house of JEHOVAH—It may hardly be necessary to observe, that by "the house of JEHOVAH" is meant all that is included within the sacred precincts; not only the sanctuary, or house, properly so called, but all the outbuildings, and the courts around, the inner court of the priests, and the outer court, which was open to all the people. Neither of these courts could be called "the higher" because of the elevation of the ground; for JOSEPHUS expressly tells us, (Ant. lib. viii. cap. 3, edit. Hudson,) that the whole was levelled by Solomon with incredible pains, so as to raise the lower parts to the same height with the top of the mountain on which the temple was built. But it has been before suggested, in a note on chapter xx. 2, that העליון, "the higher," may have respect to the course of the sun, rising in the east, and going down to the west, and so may denote "the eastern." As, therefore, the sanctuary stood at the west end of the hill, and the court of the priests before it, surrounded by the court of the people on three sides, that part of the court of the people which was in front of the inner court was most probably that which is here called "the higher court."

- 18 How didst thou write all these words from his mouth. And Baruch said unto them, With his mouth he repeated unto me 19 all these words, and I wrote in a book after him. Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah, and let no man know where ye be.
 20 And they went in unto the king into the court; but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe; and 21 they declared all the matters in the hearing of the king. And the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll; and he took it out of the chamber of Elishama the scribe; and Jehudi read it in the

What strengthens this opinion is, that the gate, which is here called "the new gate," being, no doubt, that which had been lately built by Jotham, is styled "the higher gate" of the house of JEREMIAH. (2 Kings xv. 35.) The chamber of Gemariah, therefore, in which Baruch took his station, was in the great outer court, either close to or over the gateway of the eastern gate; so that if he read, as is supposed, from a window or balcony, he would be heard by the concourse of people, that came flocking into the court through that gate.

Verse 18. And I wrote in a book after him—Our English translation is, "and I wrote them with ink in a book." The Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, have also agreed in rendering בְּדִי "with ink;" but the LXX. and Arabic express no such word. Nor can it escape notice, how little to the purpose of the question it was for Baruch to specify the materials with which he wrote. And as to the word, דִּי, which is translated "ink," it occurs nowhere else in the Hebrew in that sense. For my part, I think that בְּדִי is composed of the preposition ב, the noun דִּי, and the affix pronoun י. דִּי signifies "the sufficiency" or "ability" of a person, or the "full measure" of a thing. And we find בְּדִי to denote, "in the sufficiency of," or "according to the ability, measure," or "full proportion" and "extent" of a person or thing. See בְּדִי, chapter xlviii. 30, and בְּדִי, chapter li. 58. בְּדִי also, which is much the same, is used in the like sense. I therefore think that בְּדִי here denotes "after him," or according to Jeremiah, that is, according to the matter which he supplied or dictated; in other words, I wrote, says Baruch, exactly as he suggested, neither more nor less.

"Mr. Green on Psalm xiii. observes, that these words should be placed and pointed thus—'How didst thou write all these words? From his mouth? And Baruch answered them, From his mouth. He pronounced all these words unto me, and I wrote,' &c."—SECKER. Query, Whether בְּדִי may not be a transposition of בִּידִי, "by his direction?" See note on chapter xxxviii. 10, page 277.

Verse 20. And they went in unto the king into the court—They were before, it is said, (verse 12,) in the king's house, that is, in the exterior precincts of the palace, where were apartments and offices fitted up for the principal officers of state, and for the attendants of the court. But from what is here said it appears, that there was an interior corps of building for the king's personal residence, ranged, as is the fashion of the great houses of the east at this day, round an open court or quadrangle, and containing apartments separately appropriated for summer and winter use.

hearing of the king, and in the hearing of all the princes who 22 stood beside the king. And the king was sitting in the winter apartment in the ninth month, and there was set before him a 23 hearth with burning coals. And it came to pass when Jehudi had read three or four sections, he cut it with the scribe's knife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

Verse 22. And there was set before him a hearth with burning coals—I have rendered אש “a hearth,” or “fire-place,” without determining it to be a fixed one under a chimney, of which it is said there was none admitted at Jerusalem by reason of the smoke. Mr. Harmer, who gives this circumstance as related by Maimonides, tells us likewise from Dr. Russell, that the fires used at Aleppo, in the lodging-rooms, are of charcoal, in pans; and in like manner from Dr. Pococke, that pans of coals are the fires used in winter in Egypt. He further adds, that Sir John Chardin, in his ms. notes, supposes the fire that was burning before Jehoiakim was a pan of coals; and cites a passage from him, which says, in French, “This was just as the great warm themselves in winter in Persia, and particularly in Media, and wherever there is no want of wood. The manner in which they sit will not allow them to be near a chimney; in these places, therefore, of the east they have great brasiers of lighted coals.” (HARMER’S Observations, chapter iii. obs. 24.) Now the translation of the Vulgate entirely agrees with this account: Et posita erat arula coram eo plena pruinis. For arula, “a little altar,” entirely conveys the idea of “a brasier,” or “receiver,” of lighted coals, standing upon a tripod, or some such support. Nor do I see any reason why מבערת, or מבערות, may not be understood to signify, “with burning coals.” Again: If for ואת-האש we read אש ואתה (which is more natural, as, no mention having been made of a hearth before, there is consequently no occasion for the article ה prefixed to אש.) the Hebrew text will also be found in perfect agreement with the Latin translation, and the English will run thus: “And there was brought, or came, before him a little altar, or movable hearth, with burning coals.” It is, I think, a confirmation of what has been offered on this subject, that the arula, or fire-hearth, is said to have approached, or been set before the king, and not the king to sit before it; which would have been a much properer mode of expression, had the hearth been immovable under a chimney.

Verse 23. Three or four sections—As the book which Jehudi read was “a roll,” to render דלתות “leaves,” would seem rather to carry an eye to the books of modern times, than to suit that ancient mode of writing. דלת properly signifies “a door that opens and shuts;” and from thence I conjecture that by דלתות may be meant the different sections of these prophecies, which, being delivered at different times, and having a relation to different subjects, have each a proper beginning and ending of its own. The title of a section and the first hemistich of a poem, is said to be called in Chaldee דלת, as being the introduction or door leading to what follows.

With the scribe's knife—It is probable that the implements for writing were lying on the table before the king, ready for the scribe's, or secretary's, use, in case there was any call for writing orders or dispatches. Among

24 But neither were the king, nor any of his servants, that heard 25 all these words, afraid, nor rent they their garments. And although Elnathan, and Delaiah, and Gemariah interceded with the king not to burn the roll, yet he would not hearken unto 26 them. And the king ordered Jerahmeel the king's son, and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, to apprehend Baruch the scribe, and Jeremiah the prophet: but JEHOVAH hid them.

27 Then came the word of JEHOVAH to Jeremiah (after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch had 28 written from the mouth of Jeremiah) saying, Take thee again another roll, and write upon it all the former words, which were in the first roll, that Jehoiakim king of Judah hath burned.
 29 And to Jehoiakim king of Judah thou shalt say, Thus saith JEHOVAH, Thou hast burned this roll, saying, Why hast thou written thereon, saying, The king of Babylon shall surely come, and shall destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from 30 it man and beast? Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH concerning Jehoiakim king of Judah, He shall not have one to sit upon the throne of David; and his dead body shall be cast forth to 31 the heat by day, and to the frost by night. And I will visit upon him, and upon his seed, and upon his servants, their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil which I have denounced against them, but they hearkened not.

32 Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the son of Neriah, the scribe; and he wrote thereon from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the book, which Jehoiakim these was the knife he used either for restoring the pen, when it became too blunt, or for making erasures.

Verse 26. The king's son—So all the ancient versions render המלך, except the Vulgate, which makes it a proper name, "Amelech," and is followed by our English translators here, though not in a similar instance, (1 Kings xxii. 26,) where Joash, "the king's son," according to our version, but "the son of Amelech," according to the Vulgate, has a commission given him to execute not unlike the present. Perhaps he may not have been the son of the reigning king, but one of the blood royal, and therefore called the king's son, as the king was in the place of father or head of the family.

Verse 30. His dead body shall be cast forth—See chapter xxii. 19.

"His son Jehoiachin reigned three months. Zedekiah, who succeeded, and reigned eleven years, was Jehoiakim's brother, according to 2 Kings xxiv. 17; and Jer. xxxvii. 1; his son, according to 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. But the LXX., Vulgate, and Syriac, here agree with the book of Kings. Or, king of Judah had burned in the fire ; and there was a further addition made unto them of many words of the same sort.

CHAPTER XLV.*

1 THE WORD WHICH JEREMIAH THE PROPHET SPAKE UNTO BARUCH THE SON OF NERIAH, AFTER HE HAD WRITTEN THESE WORDS IN A BOOK FROM THE MOUTH OF JEREMIAH, IN THE FOURTH YEAR OF JEHOIAKIM THE SON OF JOSIAH KING OF JUDAH, SAYING,

2 THUS hath JEHOVAH the God of Israel spoken concerning 3 thee, O Baruch ; Thou hast said, Woe now unto me ! for supposing the latter, he had afterwards none to sit on his throne.”—SECKER.

Verse 32. And there was a further addition made, &c.—Here I think is another instance of the passive verb in the third person singular used impersonally, with an accusative after it, according to the regimen of the verb active ; ועוד נוסף עליהם דברים רבים כהמה. See what has been before said on the subject of this idiom in the note on chapter xxxv. 14.

CHAP. XLV.—This chapter, though placed at such a considerable distance from the foregoing, is simply an appendage of it. Baruch, as we there learn, had been employed by Jeremiah, as his amanuensis, to write a collection of all those dreadful threatenings which God had denounced by his mouth. This seems to have affected the poor man’s spirits, and to have alarmed his fears to such a degree, that God thought proper to re-assure him by letting him know, that though amidst the general calamities of his country he ought not to look for any mighty matters for himself, yet in consideration of his services his own life should be preserved to him by an especial providence in all places whither it might be his lot to go.

Verse 1. After he had written—בכתבו. This seems to indicate that the exact time of this prophecy was between the writing and the publication of the roll. And, perhaps, if Baruch had not received such special assurances of protection, he might not have had resolution enough to follow the prophet’s further directions, and to have read first before all the people, and afterwards before the princes, what he had written.

“את הדברים האלה—‘These words ;’ that is, those in chapter xxxvi. to which this chapter belongs. But Grotius observes, that the prophecies which relate to the whole people are placed first ; then that which concerns a single person, as in St. Paul’s epistles ; some of whose epistles to particular persons were written before some to churches ; and, lastly, the prophecies concerning the Gentiles, which follow in chapter xli. &c. But, possibly, the meaning may be, that Jeremiah said this to Baruch on his having written what is contained in chapter xli. in the book which he had formerly written from Jeremiah’s mouth in the fourth year of Jehoiakim

* See note, page 166.

Jehovah hath added grief to my sorrow ; I am wearied with 4 my sighing, and have found no rest. Thus shalt thou say unto him, Thus hath Jehovah said ; Behold, what I have builded, I am about to pull down ; and what I have planted, 5 I am about to pluck up, even the whole land itself : and seekest thou great things for thyself ? Seek them not ; for, behold, I am about to bring evil upon all flesh, saith Jehovah ;
 but I will give thee thy life as spoil in all places whither thou goest.

Only, if so, verse 4 must relate to the affairs of Egypt ; as, indeed, even bad persons are said to be planted by God ; (chapter xii. 2 :) and all kingdoms ; (chapter xviii. 9.)"—SECKER. This latter supposition cannot possibly be true ; for it is evident that the things contained in chapter xlv. did not happen till after the people were removed into the land of Egypt, and therefore could not have been written in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, as "these things" are expressly said to have been.

Verse 5. I will give thee thy life as spoil—This is a proverbial expression found not only here, but also, chapter xxi. 9 ; xxxviii. 2 ; xxxix. 18 ; and may be thus explained. What comes to a man in the way of spoil, being unlooked-for gain, may be considered as an extraordinary instance of good luck, as it is called. Accordingly the psalmist says, "I rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great spoil." (Psalm cxix. 162.) And therefore, when it is said, "A man's life shall be given him as spoil," the meaning is, that his life shall be saved under such circumstances, that he shall have reason to look upon himself as extremely fortunate, or, to speak more properly, as indebted to the favour of divine providence for a singular and extraordinary benefit.

THE prophecies being all concluded, which were delivered in the reign of Jehoiakim, excepting such as relate to the heathen nations, which were probably reserved apart from the rest by special design ; the next in order are those which belong to the former or peaceable part of Zedekiah's reign, before he renounced his allegiance to the king of Babylon ; and of these the following appears to be the most proper arrangement : Chapter xxiv. xxix. xxx. xxxi. xxvii. xxviii.

CHAP. XXIV. WE cannot be mistaken in placing this chapter at the very beginning of Zedekiah's reign, within the first year at least, since the vision is dated from after the carrying away of Jeconiah and the people with him into captivity, as from an event which happened but a little before.

Under the type of good and bad figs, God representeth to Jeremiah the different manner in which he should deal with the people that were already gone into captivity, and with Zedekiah and his subjects that were left behind ; showing his favour and kindness to the former in their restoration and re-establishment ; but pursuing the latter with unrelenting judgments unto utter destruction.

CHAPTER XXIV.*

1 JEHOVAH shewed me, and behold two baskets of figs offered according to law before the temple of JEHOVAH, after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, and the artificers, and the armourers, from Jerusalem, and had conducted them to Babylon: one basket of figs exceedingly good, like the figs of the early sort; and the other basket of figs exceedingly bad, which could not be eaten for badness. And JEHOVAH said unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs: the good figs exceedingly good; and the bad exceedingly bad, which cannot be eaten for badness. Then came the word of JEHOVAH unto me, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH the God of Israel; Like these good figs, so will I distinguish the captives of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of Chaldea, Verse 1. Two baskets—שְׁנֵי דִּרְאִי. דִּרְאִי is the dual number of דִּר, in which the Aleph is inserted to express the Pathach.

Offered according to law—This is what is meant by מוֹעֲדִים, “ordained, appointed;” they were brought for an offering of first-fruits, as the law had directed.

“מוֹעֲדִים—Κελευσους, LXX.; ‘positi,’ Vulg. Syr. Ch. Nescio an עומדים legendum.”—SECKER.

And the artificers, and the armourers—הָרָשׁ is a general name for any handicraftsman, whether working in wood or in metal; but מַסְבֵּנִי, which comes from סָבַר, to “shut in,” or “enclose,” I am inclined to think, means properly “the armourers,” who made the coats of mail which enclosed the body. And it is reasonable to presume, that the king of Babylon would be solicitous to carry all these off, with intent not only to employ them in his own service, but to prevent the Jews who were left behind from furnishing themselves with arms, in case of a revolt.

Verse 2. Like the figs of the early sort—Dr. Shaw speaks of three sorts of figs; the first of which he calls the boccere, (being those here spoken of,) which come to maturity towards the middle or latter end of June; the second the kermes, or summer-fig, which ripens seldom before August; and the third, which he calls the winter-fig. This is usually of a much longer shape and darker complexion than the kermes, hanging and ripening upon the tree, even after the leaves are shed; and, provided the winter proves temperate, is gathered as a delicious morsel in the spring. (SHAW'S Travels, page 370, fol.) The Doctor thinks that the latter sort were those which our Saviour expected to have found on the fig-tree at the time of the passover in March. (Matt. xxi. 19; Mark xi. 13.)

* See note, page 166.

6 in a favourable manner. And I will set my eyes upon them favourably, and I will bring them again to this land; and I will build them up, and not pull down; and I will plant them, and not pluck up. And I will give them a heart to know me, that I am JEHOVAH; and they shall be to me a people, and I will be to them a God; when they shall return unto me with their whole heart. But as the bad figs, which cannot be eaten for badness, surely thus saith JEHOVAH, So will I make Zedekiah king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, those that are left in this land, and those that settle in the land of Egypt: and I will deliver them up to vexation afflictively in all kingdoms of the earth; to be a reproach, and a proverb, and a taunt, and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them. And I will send among them the sword, and the famine, and the pestilence, until they be consumed from off the land, which I gave unto them and to their fathers.

Verse 5. In a favourable manner—See note on chapter xiv. 11. לטובה is to be joined, not with the verb שלחתי, as our English translation seems to indicate, but with אריר.

Verse 8. So will I make Zedekiah, &c.—So אהן should be rendered here, as chapter xxix. 17.

“כִּי—Taðe, LXX.; ‘sic,’ Syr.; ‘hæc,’ Vulg. quasi non legissent.”—SECKER.

In this land—For בארץ הזאת, one ms. reads בעיר הזאת, “in this city;” and the Syriac and Vulgate adopt this reading, and so does the Alexandrian edition of the LXX. But the other editions of the LXX. render, εἰ ἦν ταύτη, according to the received reading of the text.

In the land of Egypt—See chapter xlv. 12–14.

Verse 9. To vexation afflictively—With respect to לזועה, “to vexation,” see note on chapter xv. 4. In the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, a conjunction is prefixed to לרעה, and one ms. reads ולרעה; in which case, לזועה ולרעה, “to vexation and to affliction,” might not improperly be rendered as an Hendiadys, “to afflictive vexation.” But לרעה is probably right, and may stand opposed to לטובה; (verses 5, 6;) and as one denotes a disposition to favour and befriend, the other may signify a disposition to harm and afflict; in which case לרעה may be rendered “afflictively,” or, with an unfriendly and afflictive view.

And a taunt—The ancient versions seem very properly all of them to have prefixed the לשנינה. Twenty-five mss. and two editions read ולשנינה; and in three mss. a letter is erased before the ל.

Verse 10. And the famine—Seventeen, perhaps eighteen, mss. and one edition read ואת־הרעב; and the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate likewise prefix the conjunction.

CHAPTER XXIX.*

- 1 Now these are the words of the letter, which Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem, unto the residue of the elders of the captivity, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people, whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon, after the departure of Jeconiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs, and the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the artificers, and the armourers,

CHAP. XXIX. THERE is no person that can read this chapter with attention, without being sensible of an embarrassment and incoherence in particular parts of it, which leaves a suspicion of some capital defect either in the text or its arrangement. Happily the LXX. are found to step in here to our relief, by evidencing a transposition of verse 15, which they have placed, where undoubtedly it ought to stand, immediately before verse 21. This emendation I have adopted, as by it a due order and connexion is restored, both in the place from whence the verse is removed, and in that to which it is transferred: A sufficient proof of its authenticity. That transpositions of this kind have taken place in various parts of sacred scripture, through the inadvertency of transcribers, is notorious. (See Bishop Lowth's notes on Isaiah vii. 8, 9; xxxviii. 4, 5.) The case here may possibly have been, that the transcriber's eye was caught by the same word with which verse 16 begins, at the beginning of the other verse a little below, which led him to transcribe the whole verse. Then, finding his mistake, rather than deface his ms., he may have chosen to pass it over without notice, or may have added a mark of correction in the margin, which was neglected by future copyists. But there is still another difficulty in this chapter to be accounted for, which is, that it undeniably contains the substance of two letters written at different times, as is evident from comparing verse 28 with verses 4, 5; although the title at the beginning announces but one, and there is no mark of distinction to be found afterwards. The distinction, however, is certainly to be made at the end of verse 20. For in the first letter the prophet exhorts the captives to accommodate themselves to their present circumstances, under an assurance that their captivity would last to the end of seventy years; after which period, and not before, God would visit and restore them. And to prevent their listening to any false suggestions that might flatter them with hopes of a speedier return, he informs them of what would happen to their brethren that were left behind at Jerusalem, for whom a harder fate was reserved than for those that had been carried away. After this, finding, as it should seem, upon the return of the messengers, the little credit his first message had met with, he sends a second to the same persons, denouncing the divine judgments against three of their false prophets, by whose influence chiefly the people had been prevented from hearkening to his good advice.

Verse 2. And the princes—Six mss. and one edition read וישרי, and the conjunction is prefixed in all the ancient versions, except the Chaldee.

* See note, page 166.

- 3 from Jerusalem, by the hand of Elasah the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiab, (whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Babylon) saying,
- 4 THUS saith JEHOVAH of hosts the God of Israel unto all the captivity, whom I have caused to be carried away captive
- 5 from Jerusalem unto Babylon ; Build ye houses, and inhabit ;
- 6 and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them. Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters ; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters unto husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters ; and increase ye there, and be not
- 7 diminished. And seek ye the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captive, for in the peace thereof
- 8 shall ye have peace. For thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel ; Let not your prophets that are in the midst of you, nor your diviners, impose upon you, neither hearken ye
- 9 to your dealers in dreams, whom ye cause to dream. For they

Verse 5. The fruit of them—Here, instead of פֵּרוֹן, the true reading is probably פְּרִיָהֶן, as at verse 23, and it is so found in one ancient ms. of good note.

Verse 8. Your dealers in dreams, whom ye cause to dream—As this word חִלְמֵיכֶם is used for persons that dream, chapter xxvii. 9, it ought likewise to be taken in the same sense here. These dreamers might be said to be made, or encouraged, to dream, by the easy credit given to their impostures, and the reputation and respect they thereby acquired.

It may, however, be observed, that this verb חִלַּם no where else occurs in Hiphil; and all the ancient versions seem to have read אַתֶּם חֹלְמִים, for they render, unanimously, “your dreams, which ye dream.” But as for the reason above assigned I am persuaded, that חִלְמֵיכֶם signifies, not “your dreams,” but “your dreamers,” so I cannot but suspect a latent corruption of the text, and that for אַתֶּם חֹלְמִים, the true reading originally was, אֲשֶׁר אֹתְכֶם חֹלְמִים, “who dream among you.” It is obvious, how much better this suits with the context: “Hearken not to your dreamers who dream among you,” being in perfect correspondency with what goes before: “Let not your prophets that are in the midst of you, nor your diviners, deceive you.” And as to the manner of the mistake, consider only, that, if it be a mistake, it was most probably made before the ם final began to be in use; in which case a transcriber might easily mistake אֹתְכֶם, for אַתְּכֶם; and that change once made, the latter ם would naturally be prefixed to the following word, since no such word as אַתְּכֶם could possibly be made out. This emendation, however, depending so much upon conjecture, I have not followed it in the version, but submit it to further consideration.

“חֹלְמִים—Ἐνυπνιαῖσθε LXX. Syr. Vulg. Conjugationem Hiphil retinet Chald. quæ hic tantum, et Isaiah xxxviii. 16; reficiendi sensu extat in V. T.”—SECKER.

prophesy falsely unto you in my name; I have not sent them, 10 saith JEHOVAH. For thus saith JEHOVAH, Surely when seventy years have been completed at Babylon, I will visit you, and I will perform towards you my good promise, in 11 bringing you again to this place. For I know the intentions which I have in my mind respecting you, saith JEHOVAH, intentions of peace, and not of hurtful tendency; to make 12 your latter end even an object of hope. And ye shall call upon me, and shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken 13 unto you. And ye shall seek me, and shall find, when ye 14 shall have sought me with your whole heart. And I will be found of you, saith JEHOVAH: And I will reverse your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith JEHOVAH; and I will bring you again to the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

Verse 9. I have not sent them—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate here suppose the conjunction prefixed to לא־שלחתים; but it is not found so in any of the collated mss.

Verse 10. When seventy years have been completed—לפי properly signifies “at the mouth;” and as the mouth of a river metaphorically denotes the extremity of its course, where it discharges its waters into the sea; so, by a further metaphor drawn from hence, לפי seems to denote being “at the full end” of a certain period or limited course of time, where it is just going to lose itself in, and mix with, the ocean of eternity. Here, therefore, we are to understand that, “at the very instant of, or immediately upon, the completion of seventy years,” the restoration of the Jews should take place. See note on chapter xxv. 12.

Verse 11. To make your latter end even an object of hope—See chapter xxxi. 17.

“לתת לכם אחרית ותקוה”—‘To give you posterity (Psalm cix. 13) and hope.’—SECKER.

Verse 13. Ye shall have sought me—Twenty-one mss. and two of the oldest editions read at large, תדרשוני.

Verse 14. I will reverse your captivity—For שביתכם, which is the common reading of the text in this place, the Masora substitutes שבוּתכם, with the concurrence of twenty-six mss. and five editions. This I take to be right; for it appears to me that שבית, or, in regimine, שבית, properly signifies “captive persons,” but שבוּת, “the state and condition of captivity;” and that ושבתי is to be rendered, “And I will reverse, alter, or put an end to captivity;” the same Divine Providence, which first brought such a state upon a people, causing it to go away again, or return from them. But it is not easy to discover upon what principle the Masoretes proceeded, when, having here changed שביתכם into שבוּתכם, they contrariwise altered שבוּתנו into שביתנו, Psalm cxxvi. 4; and again שבוּתם into שביתם, Zeph. ii. 7; although the reason of the case seems exactly alike in all; and, what

- 16 BUT thus hath JEHOVAH spoken concerning the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and concerning all the people that dwell in this city, your brethren that went not forth with 17 you into captivity: Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, Behold, I am about to send upon them the sword, and the famine, and the pestilence, and I will make them like the vilest figs, which 18 cannot be eaten for badness. And I will persecute them with sword, and with famine, and with pestilence; and I will give them up to vexation in all kingdoms of the earth, for a curse, and for an astonishment, and for a hissing, and for a reproach,
 19 among all nations, whither I have driven them: because they have not hearkened unto my words, saith JEHOVAH, when I sent unto them my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending, even as ye have not hearkened, saith JEHOVAH.
 20 Harken ye therefore unto the word of JEHOVAH all ye of the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon.

is more singular still, having first changed שְׁבוּתָהֶן into שְׁבִיתָהֶן, Ezek. xvi. 53, in the very same verse, and where there can be no doubt but that the very same thing is intended, they have twice changed the text from שְׁבִית into שְׁבוּת; and have moreover substituted וְשְׁבוּת שְׁבִיתָךְ instead of וְשְׁבִית שְׁבִיתָךְ, where, notwithstanding, it appears, both from the sense of the passage, and the concurrent testimony of all the ancient versions, that neither the one nor the other is right, but that the true reading must have been וְשְׁבִית שְׁבוּתָךְ.

Verse 16. But thus hath JEHOVAH spoken—Though כִּי is here rendered “but,” it properly signifies “for,” as assigning a second reason for not crediting the false prophets, who, as it should seem, had promised the captives, not only a speedy return, but a peaceful re-establishment in their own land. In confutation of the latter part, the people are shown the many and grievous calamities which would fall upon their brethren that were left there. And hence, in the conclusion, the prophet derives a fresh argument to those of the captivity, for composing themselves to that quietness and patience which he had recommended, considering the comparatively easier lot which Providence had assigned to them.

Upon the throne—For אַל, sixteen mss. and two editions read more properly, עַל. In four more mss. א is upon a rasure.

Verse 17. And the famine—Twenty-two mss. and three editions read וְאֶת־רָעָב; and the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate also prefix the conjunction.

“הַשְׁעָרִים — * τα συναρειμ. Συναρειμ δε εστι η Εβραϊκή φωνη τα εν υλαις φρυμενα. Theodoret. apud Montfauc. Qu. An שְׁבִיעִרִים. Vide de hac voce Grab. de vitiis, p. 80.”—SECKER. Might not this bad sort of figs be called שְׁעָרִים from being hairy on the outside?

Verse 18. And with famine—Here, also, thirteen mss., perhaps fifteen, and one edition, read וְבִרְעָב, with the Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, and Theodotion.

To vexation—See note on chapter xv. 4.

Verse 19. Even as ye have not hearkened—See note on chapter xxvi. 5.

- 15 WHEREAS ye have said; JEHOVAH hath raised up for us
 21 prophets in Babylon: Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, concerning Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and concerning Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, who prophesy unto you in my name falsely; Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall slay them
 22 before your eyes: and from them shall be taken a curse among all the captives of Judah that are at Babylon, saying, JEHOVAH make thee like Zedekiah, and like Ahab, whom the 23 king of Babylon roasted in the fire: because they have practised villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken a word in my name falsely, which I commanded them not; for I know and am a witness, saith JEHOVAH.
- 24 ALSO to Shemaiah the Nehelamite shalt thou speak, saying, 25 Thus hath JEHOVAH of hosts the God of Israel spoken, saying, Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of 26 Maaseiah the priest, and to all the priests, saying, JEHOVAH hath made thee priest in the room of Jehoiada the priest, that

Verse 20. It seems not improbable that after this verse, and before verse 15, which is here restored, some words may have been dropped, which served for a title to the subsequent letter; perhaps these that follow: ואלה דברי הכפר ירמיה הנביא אשר שלח שנית מירושלם בבבל: "And these are the words of the letter of Jeremiah the prophet, which he sent a second time from Jerusalem to Babylon." Compare these words with the preceding.

Verse 22. Roasted in the fire—In all probability they were treated in the same manner as was intended for Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. (Daniel iii. 20, 21.)

Verse 23. Have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives—The Jewish Rabbins, as Grotius here observes, have a traditionary notion that these were the two elders who attempted the chastity of Susannah; the story of which they think to be true in part, though not altogether such as it is represented in the Greek.

For I know and am a witness—That is, "For I am not an inattentive witness of such enormities." Twenty-two, perhaps twenty-three, mss. and five editions read, with the Masora, היודע instead of היודע; and eight more mss. read היודע, sinking the י.

* Verse 24. The Nehelamite—In the margin of our Bibles הנחלמי is rendered "dreamer;" but the termination speaks it to be a patronymic. The Chaldee renders הלם דמן; and we find such a place as "Helan" mentioned, 2 Sam. x. 16, 17. Jerome interprets it, de loco Neelami.

Shalt thou speak—The charge is here addressed to the prophet.

Verse 26. Hath made thee priest in the room of Jehoiada—Seraiah is said there should be officers in the house of JEHOVAH, in the case of any one that is mad, and giveth himself out for a prophet, and that thou shouldest commit him to the house of correction, and to close confinement. Now therefore why hast thou not rebuked Jeremiah the Anathothite, who giveth himself out for a prophet among you? Forasmuch as he hath sent to us at Babylon, saying, The term is long; build ye houses, and inhabit; and plant gardens, and eat of the fruit of them. (And Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet.) Therefore hath the word of JEHOVAH come unto Jeremiah, saying, Send unto all the captivity, saying, Thus hath JEHOVAH spoken concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite; Because that Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you, when I sent him not, but he hath caused you to trust in a falsehood: Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH, Behold, I will punish Shemaiah the Nehelamite, and his seed, there shall not be one of his line dwelling among this people; neither shall he behold the good which I will do unto my people, saith JEHOVAH; because he hath spoken prevarication concerning JEHOVAH.

to have been the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, when Jerusalem was taken. (Chapter lii. 24.) Who, then, was Jehoiada? Perhaps he was one that had been superseded in his office of second priest for being remiss in his duty; and therefore Zephaniah may have been here reminded of him by way of intimation, that as they had been both appointed for the same purposes, so Zephaniah might expect the same fate as his predecessor, if he copied the example of his negligence. The second priest officiated as substitute of the high priest, in case of absence or indisposition, and perhaps was always invested with subordinate authority.

“בית—פְּקִידִים—ἐπιστάτην ἐν τῷ οὐκῳ. LXX.; ‘ut esses prefectus,’ &c. Syr.; ‘ut sis constitutus princeps,’ &c. Chald.; ‘ut sis dux,’ &c. Vulg. Fortè, פְּקִיד בְּבֵית.”—SECKER.

And that thou shouldest commit—וְנָתַתָּה. Ten mss. and one edition omit the paragogic ה. Perhaps, however, we ought rather to read וְנָתַתָּם, “and that ye should commit,” &c.

To the house of correction, and to close confinement—For the first of these words, הַמַּחֲפֶזֶת, see chapter xx. 2; where we find Jeremiah to have met with this treatment from Pashur, one of the priests, and captain of the temple. With respect to the second word, הַצִּיֵּק, it occurs no where else in the Hebrew, but, in Arabic, ضَمَكٌ signifies, arctum esse. See Grotius in locum.

Verse 28. The term is long—אֶרְכָּה, or אֶרְכָּא, Dan. iv. 24, signifies, “a prolongation” or “lengthening of a term.”

“Verse 32. יֵשֵׁב—Videtur vox ex literis preced. et sequent. conflata.”—SECKER.

Prevarication—סָרָה properly signifies, “a declining,” or “turning aside

CHAPTER XXX.

1 THE WORD WHICH CAME UNTO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH; SAYING,

2 THUS hath JEHOVAH the God of Israel spoken, saying,
Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a from the strait path," the path of truth and right. Here, and chapter xxviii. 16, it means the presumption of uttering as a revelation from God what a man knew to be not so.

CHAPTERS XXX. XXXI. THERE are many prophecies in various parts of the Old Testament which announce the future restoration of Israel to their own land, and the complete re-establishment of both their civil and religious constitution in the latter days, meaning the times of the gospel dispensation. These two chapters contain a prophecy of this kind, which must necessarily be referred to those times, because it points out circumstances which certainly were not fulfilled at the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, nor have hitherto had their completion. For the people that returned from Babylon were the people of Judah only, who had been carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar; but here it is foretold, that not the captivity of Judah only should be restored, but the captivity of Israel also; meaning those ten tribes that were carried away before by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, and who still remain in their several dispersions, having never returned, in a national capacity at least, to their own land, whatever some few individuals have done. But the terms of the prophecy entitle us to expect, not an obscure and partial, but a complete and universal, restoration; when God will manifest himself, as formerly, the God and patron of all the families of Israel, and not of a few only. Again: It is promised that, after this restoration, they should no more fall under the dominion of foreigners, but be governed by princes and magistrates of their own nation, independent of any but God and David their king. But this was not the case with the Jews that returned from Babylon. They then, indeed, had a leader, Zerubbabel, one of their own nation, and also of the family of David; but both the nation and their leader continued still in a state of vassalage and the most servile dependence upon the Persian monarchy. And when the Grecian monarchy succeeded they changed their masters only, but not their condition; till at length, under the Asmonæan princes, they had, for a while, an independent government of their own, but without any title to the name of David. At last they fell under the Roman yoke, since which time their situation has been such as not to afford the least ground to pretend that the promised restoration has yet taken place. It remains, therefore, to be brought about in future, under the reign of the Messiah, emphatically distinguished by the name of "David;" when every particular circumstance predicted concerning it will, no doubt, be verified by a distinct and unequivocal accomplishment.

3 book. For, behold, the days are coming, saith JEHOVAH, when I will reverse the captivity of my people, Israel and

There is no particular date annexed to this prophecy, whereby to ascertain the precise time of its delivery ; but it may not unreasonably be presumed to have followed immediately after the preceding one, in which the restoration of the people from their Babylonish captivity is, in direct terms, foretold. From hence the transition is natural and easy to the more glorious and general restoration that was to take place in a more distant period, and was designed for the ultimate object of the national hopes and expectations. Both events are frequently thus connected together in the prophetic writings, and perhaps with this design, that when that which was nearest at hand should be accomplished, it might afford the strongest and most satisfactory kind of evidence that the latter, how remote soever its period, would, in like manner, be brought about by the interposition of Providence in its due season.

But though this prophecy relates wholly to one single subject, it seems naturally to divide itself into three distinct parts. The first part, after a short preface, in which the prophet is required to commit to writing the matters revealed to him, commences with representing, in a style of awe and energy, the consternation and distress which, in some future day of visitation, should fall upon all nations, preparatory to the scene of Jacob's deliverance. (Verses 5-9.) Israel is encouraged to confide in the divine assurances of restoration and protection. (Verses 10, 11.) He is prepared, previously, to expect a severe chastisement, for the multitude of his sins ; but consoled with the prospect of a happy termination. (Verses 12-17.) This is followed by an enumeration at large of the blessings and privileges to which the Jews should be restored upon their re-admission into God's favour. (Verses 18-22.) Again, however, it is declared, that the anger of JEHOVAH would not subside till his purposed vengeance against the wicked should have been fully executed ; and then, but not till then, an entire reconciliation would take place between him and all the families of Israel. (Verse 23—xxx. 1.)

The second part of this prophecy begins, chapter xxxi. 2, and is marked by a sudden transition to a distant period of time, represented in a vision, and embellished with a variety of beautiful scenes and images. God announces the renewal of his ancient love for Israel, and promises them, in consequence thereof, a speedy restoration of their former privileges and happiness. (Verses 2-5.) Already the heralds have proclaimed on Mount Ephraim the arrival of the joyful day ; they summon the people to re-assemble once more in Sion ; and promulge, by special command, the glad tidings of salvation which God had accomplished for them. God himself declares his readiness to conduct home the remnant of Israel from all parts of their dispersion ; to compassionate and relieve their infirmities ; and to provide them with all necessary accommodations by the way. (Verses 6-9.) The news is carried into distant lands ; and the nations are summoned to attend to the display of God's power and goodness in rescuing his people from their stronger enemies, and in supplying them, after their return, with all manner of good things, to the full extent of their wants and desires. (Verses 10-14.)

Judah, saith JEHOVAH; and I will bring them back to the land which I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.

4 AND these are the words which JEHOVAH hath spoken concerning Israel and concerning Judah.

5 SURELY thus saith JEHOVAH,
A voice of trembling have we heard,
There is terror, and no peace.

6 Ask ye now, and see,
If a male can bring forth?
Wherefore have I seen every man,
His hands upon his loins, as a woman in travail,
And all faces are changed into paleness?

7 Alas! for that day is great,

Here the scene changes, and two new personages are successively introduced, in order to diversify the same subject, and to impress it more strongly. Rachel first; who is represented as just risen from her grave, and bitterly bewailing the loss of her children, for whom she looks about her in vain, but none are to be seen. Her tears are dried up, and she is consoled with the assurance that they are not lost for ever; but shall, in time, be brought back to their ancient borders. (Verses 15-17.)

Ephraim comes next. He laments his past undutifulness with great contrition and penitence, and professes an earnest desire of amendment. These symptoms of returning duty are no sooner discerned in him, than God acknowledges him once more as a darling child, and resolves, with mercy, to receive him. (Verses 18-20.)

The virgin of Israel is then earnestly exhorted to hasten the preparations for her return; and encouraged with the prospect of having a signal miracle wrought in her favour. (Verses 21, 22.) And the vision closes at last with a promise, that the divine blessing should again rest upon the land of Judah; and that the men of Judah should once more dwell there, cultivating it according to the simplicity of ancient institutions, and fully discharged from every want. (Verses 23-26.)

In the third part, by way of appendix to the vision, the following gracious promises are specifically annexed:—That God would, in time to come, supply all the deficiencies of Israel and Judah; and would be as diligent to restore, as he had ever been to destroy, them; and would not any more visit the offences of the fathers upon the children. (Verses 27-30.) That he would make with them a better covenant than he had made with their forefathers. (Verses 31-34.) That they should continue his people by an ordinance as firm and lasting as that of the heavens. (Verses 35-37.) And that Jerusalem should again be built, enlarged in its extent, and secure from future desolation. (Verses 38-40.)

Verse 3. I will reverse the captivity of my people, Israel and Judah—See notes on chapter iii. 18, and chapter xxix. 14.

- So that there is none like it ;
 And a time of distress, which shall be to Jacob ;
 But he shall be saved from it.
- 8 And it shall be in that day,
 Saith JEHOVAH of hosts,
 I will break his yoke from off his neck,
 And his bands will I burst asunder ;
 And strangers shall no more exact service of him :
- 9 But they shall serve JEHOVAH their God,
 And David their king, whom I will raise up for them.
- 10 Therefore, fear thou not,
 O my servant Jacob, saith JEHOVAH ;
 And be not thou dismayed, O Israel ;
 For, behold, I will bring thee safe from afar,
 And thy seed from the land of their captivity ;
 And Jacob shall again be at rest,
 He shall also be secure, and there shall be none to make him afraid.

Verse 7. Which shall be to Jacob—It is evident that there is no other antecedent to היא but צרה. Two MSS., indeed, read הוא, so as to represent היום; and two other MSS., one of which is the ancient Bodleian, N<sup>o</sup>. 1, omit היא. But the text needs no alteration. “That day is a great one, and a time of distress; which” [distress] “shall be to” (or, upon) Jacob;” that is, he shall himself have a share in it, although he shall, in the end, be rescued from it by a mighty salvation.

“ועתה צרה היא ליעקב”—“And it is a time of trouble to Jacob.”—SECKER.

Verse 8. From off his neck, and his bands—The Vulgate appears clearly to have read ומוסרתיו, et vincula ejus, instead of ומוסרתיו; and the context absolutely requires that we should read both צוארו and ומוסרתיו, “his neck, and his bands;” for the yoke of Jacob can alone be meant, the yoke which he carried upon his neck, and the bands by which that yoke was fastened upon him; there being no other antecedent to which the pronoun affix can possibly be referred; and Jacob is spoken of in the third person, and not addressed in the second till afterwards at verse 10. Accordingly the LXX. render, απο του τραχηλου αυτων, και τους δεσμούς αυτων, expressing the pronoun in the plural, because the antecedent, Jacob, is plural in sense; which they usually do in the like circumstances, as may be seen, verses 20, 21. The collated MSS. afford several instances of this mistake of ך for י, which requires only an extension of the lines both ways. See Bishop Lowth’s note on Isaiah lii. 14, where עליך appears to have been written for עלי.

Verse 9. David their king—The Messiah is thus called after the name of his progenitor, Isaiah lv. 3, 4; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24; xxxvii. 24, 25; Hos. iii. 5.

- 11 For I will be with thee,
 Saith JEHOVAH, to save thee ;
 When I shall make a full end of all the nations,
 Whither I have dispersed thee,
 Yet will I not make a full end of thee :
 But I will correct thee with moderation,
 And will not make thee altogether desolate.
- 12 Surely thus saith JEHOVAH ;
 Thy bruise is desperate,
 Thy wound is grievous :
- 13 There is none that lendeth a helping hand for thy cure ;
 No healing medicines are applied to thee.
- 14 All thy friends have forgotten thee,
 They seek not after thee ;
 Surely with the stroke of an enemy have I smitten thee,
 A severe chastisement ;
 Because thy iniquity is great,
 Thy offences are numerous.

Verse 11. Correct thee with moderation—See note on chapter x. 24.

And will not make thee altogether desolate—In this sense the Chaldee renders וְנִקָּה לֹא אֲנִיָּקָה, and with the approbation of several learned commentators ; for it is a sense that seems most suitable to this place. Nor can there be a doubt that the words will admit of this construction. For the verb נִקָּה primarily signifies vacuum esse ; and though it often may denote exemption from guilt or punishment, yet it may, with equal reason, signify, “cleared” or “emptied of all that is good,” or, “made desolate.” In this sense it is certainly used, Isaiah iii. 26, and Zech. v. 3. And thus it seems most agreeable to the context to understand the words וְנִקָּה לֹא אֲנִיָּקָה, Exodus xxxiv. 7 ; Numb. xiv. 18, particularly in the latter instance, where it is urged by Moses as a reason for God’s sparing the Israelites, that he had declared himself to be a God of “mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and not utterly destroying, when he visiteth the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.” It must, however, be granted, that the other sense, in which the words are usually taken, has much to be said in its favour.

Verse 13. There is none that lendeth a helping hand for thy cure—The words אֵין־דִּין רִינָן properly signify, “There is none that pleadeth thy cause ;” but instead of “juridical,” the word לְכוּר and the sense of the context require them to be understood of “medical,” assistance. כְּוֹר signifies “the dressing of a wound or sore.”

Verse 14. Because thy iniquity is great—רַב is the preter of רָב. See על thus used with the preter verb following, Psalm cxix. 136.

“עִוִּיךְ—Vel excidit כי post ה, vel intelligendum est ; vel חטאת ‘pœnam,’ non ‘peccatum,’ notat, ut alibi ; vix tamen hic ; vide enim versum sequentem, ubi extat ὅτι apud Th. Syr.”—SECKER.

- 15 Why criest thou because of thy bruise?
 Thy suffering is without remedy;
 Because thy iniquity is great,
 Thy offences are numerous,
 Have I done these things unto thee.
- 16 Afterwards shall all they that devour thee be devoured,
 And all thine enemies, they shall go into captivity;
 And they that spoil thee shall become a spoil,
 And all them that plunder thee will I give up to plunder.
- 17 For I will restore soundness to thee,
 And of thy wounds will I heal thee, saith JEHOVAH;
 Although they have called thee an Outcast,
 Sion, she whom no one careth for.
- 18 Thus saith JEHOVAH;
 Behold, I will reverse the captivity of Jacob's tents,
 And upon his dwelling places will I have compassion;
 And the city shall be builded upon its heap,
 And the palace shall be re-established upon its former plan.
- 19 And out of them shall go forth thanksgiving,
 And the voice of them that are joyous;
 And I will multiply them, and they shall not be diminished,
 And I will raise them to honour, and they shall not be brought low.
- 20 And his children shall be as aforetime,

Verse 16. Afterwards—לְכֵן. See note on chapter xvi. 14.

They that spoil thee—For שֹׁאֲסִיךְ six mss. and two ancient editions read שׁוֹסִיךְ; and six other mss. with one edition, and the margin of Van der Hooght's Bible, read שֹׁסִיךְ.

Verse 18. And the city shall be builded upon its heap—That is, “upon the ruins of the old city;” for הֵל usually signifies “a heap of ruins.” It might, however, signify “a hill” or “rising ground,” such as Jerusalem was built upon, and such as was generally chosen for the site of ancient cities. So הֵלֶם seems to signify, Joshua xi. 13; and, accordingly, the margin of our Bibles here renders תְּלֵה, “little hill.” So that by the city being built על־הֵלֶה, may be understood its being rebuilt upon its ancient ground-plot; which perfectly corresponds with the next hemistich. By “the city,” Jerusalem is commonly understood, and by אֶרְמוֹן, either “the temple,” or “the king's palace.” But I rather think that both עִיר and אֶרְמוֹן are designed, not for any particular city or palace, but for the cities and palaces of Jacob in general. Nouns in the singular number are often thus used; which I am persuaded is the case of עִיר and אֶרְמוֹן, Isaiah xxv. 2, where they stand for the cities and palaces of the nations, whose punishment had been predicted in the conclusion of the preceding chapter.

Verse 20. And his children—Here we may observe, that the pronouns in

- And his congregation shall be established before me ;
 And I will call to account those that oppress him.
- 21 And his prince shall be of his own race,
 And his governor shall go forth out of the midst of him ;
 And I will draw him, that he may come near unto me ;
 For who is he that hath set his heart
 To draw near unto me? saith JEHOVAH.
- 22 And ye shall be unto me a people,
 And I will be unto you a God.
- 23 Behold the whirlwind of JEHOVAH, it goeth forth hot,
 Even a settling whirlwind, upon the head of the wicked shall it settle.
- 24 The fierce anger of JEHOVAH shall not turn back, Until he hath wrought, and until he hath accomplished the purpose of his heart ;
 In the latter days ye shall discern it.

CHAPTER XXXI.

- 1 · AT that time, saith JEHOVAH,
 Will I be a God unto all the families of Israel,
 And they shall be unto me a people.

this and the verse following are of a different number from those in the preceding verse; and with good reason, for they refer to different antecedents. The antecedents to those used, verse 19, are the dwelling-places of Jacob, the cities and palaces spoken of, verse 18. But the antecedent to the pronouns in this and the next verse is manifestly Jacob himself; a distinction not sufficiently marked in our translation.

Verse 21. And his prince shall be of his own race—The meaning here is plain, that they should not be governed by foreigners, but by those of their own nation or family. Here it is probable, that אֲדִירִי and מְשָׁלִי, though singular, denote his governors and magistrates in general; as before observed on verse 18.

And I will draw him—God promises to dispose the heart of his people to turn to him, as without his grace few or none would be so inclined. The sense is much the same as chapter xxxi. 33. Compare John vi. 44, 45.

“עֲרַב אֶת־לְבוֹ—Fortè legendum עָרַךְ; nam מַעֲרַב־יֵלֵב Prov. xvi. 1.”—SECKER.

Verses 23, 24. These two verses occur, with some slight variations, chapter xxiii. 19, 20. For סֵעַר sixteen mss. read here, וְסֵעַר, as in the parallel passage; and so do the Syriac and Chaldee. For מִתְגֹּרֵר one ms. reads מִתְחַלֵּל. Both these words are nearly of the same import, as has been already observed in the note on chapter xxiii. 19.

Verse 24. The purpose—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate read מִזְמָה in the singular number here, as well as chapter xxiii. 20. One ms. reads מִזְמִימָה. Three mss. read בִּינָה here at the end of the verse, as in the parallel place.

- 2        Thus said JEHOVAH,
       A people, relicks of the sword, hath found favour in the wilderness,
       Israel a proceeding towards his restoration.
- 3        (From afar off JEHOVAH appeared unto me)
       Also with a love of long standing have I loved thee,
       Therefore have I lengthened out mercy to thee.
- 4        Yet again will I build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin
       of Israel;
       Yet again shalt thou deck thyself with thy tabrets,

CHAP. XXXI. Verse 2. In the wilderness—By “the wilderness,” I conceive to be here meant the barren and desolate condition of the Jewish church and nation during the time of their rejection. It seems to denote nearly the same, Isaiah xl. 3. See Bishop Lowth’s note there.

Israel a proceeding towards his restoration—הלך (in twelve mss. and three editions it is written הלך) is, I doubt not, the infinitive verb applied as a substantive. It properly denotes “a going forwards,” or making an actual progress towards a certain point or end. Thus ההלכים לרדת מצרים is spoken of those who were already set forwards, and were on their way to go down to Egypt, Isaiah xxx. 2. Accordingly הלך להרגיע is to be understood of God’s having actually set forwards, or begun to execute his design of causing the children of Israel to return to their own land; and so is exegetic of the grace or favour which the people is said to have found in the wilderness. See the sense of הרגיע, explained at large in note on chapter vi. 16, and take into the account what is observed in the following note.

Verse 3. From afar off JEHOVAH appeared unto me—These words, it is certain, were not spoken by God, as those were that go before, and those that immediately follow. They must, therefore, be included in a parenthesis, and seem designed to intimate, that the prophet was favoured with a visionary prospect of a remote period to come, in which God is represented as discoursing of the transactions belonging to that period, as if they were already at hand; and this accounts for the use of verbs in the past tense, both in the preceding verse, and in verses 6, 7. It is manifest from verse 26, that the prophet had been in a vision or trance, out of which he awaked. And it is no less evident, that the general restoration of Israel, the subject of the discourse which he had heard during his vision, so much to his satisfaction, is not yet accomplished, nor entered upon, nor is there any certainty when it will be.

Also with a love—The ו before אהבת is omitted by the LXX., and in eight mss.

Have I lengthened out mercy to thee—משך signifies to “lengthen out,” or “continue on;” and is used precisely in this sense with חסד, Psalm xxxvi. 10; cix. 12. God is here said to have lengthened out his mercy, or continued the exercise of it, to Israel in regard of his ancient love, although frequently provoked to abridge it.

Verse 4. Yet again shalt thou deck thyself with thy tabrets—That it was usual for the women of Israel to go forth with tabrets and dancing in times

- And shalt go forth in the dance of those that make merry.
 5 Yet again shalt thou plant vineyards on the mountains of Samaria ;
 Plant, O ye planters, and eat ye the fruit.
 6 For the day is come, have watchmen proclaimed on mount Ephraim ;
 Arise ye, and let us go up to Sion, unto JEHOVAH our God.
 7 For thus hath JEHOVAH said,
 Shout forth joy unto Jacob,
 And congratulate with the chief of the nations ;
 Publish ye, praise ye, and say,
 JEHOVAH hath saved thy people,
 The remnant of Israel.

of public rejoicing and prosperity, see Exodus xv. 20 ; Judges xi. 34 ; 1 Samuel xviii. 6. These times were now to be renewed.

Verse 5. Plant, O ye planters, and eat ye the fruit—The verb חָלַל signifies to “make,” or “use as common,” and “not prohibited.” By the law of Moses no man was allowed to eat the fruit of his vineyard till the fifth year after the planting. For the three first years it was to be considered as in a state of uncircumcision, or uncleanness. In the fourth year the fruit was holy to the Lord. But after that time it became free for the owner’s use. See Lev. xix. 23–25, where the verb חָלַל is accordingly used for eating of the fruit of a plantation without restraint, as also Deut. xx. 6 ; xxviii. 30, as well as in the passage before us. Here, therefore, a promise is given, directly opposite to the threat denounced, Deut. xxviii. 30, that the persons, who planted the vineyards on the hills of Samaria, should not be compelled to give up the fruits of their labour to others, but should themselves remain in the land, and enjoy the produce of their plantations unmolested.

Verse 6. For the day is come, have watchmen proclaimed—So the words should be rendered, and not as in our translation, “For there shall be a day, that the watchman shall cry.” For the verbs ישׁ and קראוּ are neither of them in the future, but in the preter tense. See the first note on verse 3. It is scarcely needful to repeat here, what has been before observed, (see note on chapter vi. 17,) that by “watchmen” are meant God’s prophets, giving notice of his dispensations, and calling upon men to act suitably under them.

Verse 7. The chief of the nations—This term I look upon to be synonymous with Jacob, or Israel, who, being the peculiar people of God, was thereby exalted to a pre-eminence above other nations. The privileges of primogeniture are asserted to belong to him, verse 9, which is equivalent to calling him the chief or head of the nations ; the firstborn being commonly entitled to the rank of chief or head among many brethren. (Romans viii. 29.)

JEHOVAH hath saved thy people—The LXX. and Chaldee render הוֹשַׁעַת in the third person of the preter tense, instead of the imperative ; and the context seems so to require it. For to publish with praise belongs to a blessing already received, and does not imply praying for it. But in both

- 8 Behold, I will bring them from the north country,
And will gather them from the extremities of the earth:
Among them the blind and the lame,
The woman with child, and she that travaileth together,
A great company shall they return.
- 9 Behold-with weeping shall they come,
And amidst supplications will I lead them along;
I will conduct them to streams of water,
In a smooth way, wherein they shall not stumble;
For I have been a father unto Israel,
And Ephraim, he was my firstborn.
- 10 Hear the word of JEHOVAH, O ye nations,
And report in the distant coasts, and say,
He that scattered Israel will gather him,
And will guard him, as a shepherd doth his flock.
- 11 For JEHOVAH hath redeemed Jacob, these versions עמיו "his people" is substituted for עמך "thy people;" this, however, is not countenanced by any of the collated mss., nor does the context afford ground for presuming a mistake in the text. The watchmen are required to address their publication to Jacob, and to say, as they very properly might, "JEHOVAH hath saved thy people." See the first note on verse 3.

Verse 9. Behold with weeping shall they come—It seems much more natural to place הנה at the beginning of this verse, rendering it "behold," than to construct it, as most of the ancient versions and as our translators have done, at the end of the 8th verse, giving it the sense of "thither." It also suits the metre better where I have placed it. I consider בבכי, "with weeping," and בתחנונים, "amidst supplications," to denote, that, at the very instant they were weeping for their sins, and offering up their supplications to God for mercy, he would interpose graciously in their favour, and begin to conduct them safely back to the place whither it was their wish to return. Compare chapter iii. 21. Something of the same sort is said concerning Ephraim, verses 19, 20.

In a smooth way, wherein they shall not stumble—One ms. for ישר reads אשר; and I cannot help saying, that I think it the most natural and grammatical reading; although, in conformity with the generality of copies, and with the ancient versions, I have followed in my version the received reading of the text. Were we to read אשר, the translation would be "in," or "along, a way wherein they shall not stumble."

For I have been a father unto Israel—The remembrance of former connexions is here set down as the motive of God's returning favour to Israel. See verse 3.

Verse 11. For JEHOVAH hath redeemed Jacob, and will deliver him—The first of these verbs is in the preter tense; but the second must be construed in the future, because of the Vau conversive. It is meant to say, that God

- And will deliver him out of the hand of him that is stronger than he.
- 12 And they shall come, and shall shout in the height of Sion, And shall flock together for to share in the good things of JEHOVAH,
For corn, and for new wine, and for oil,
And for the young of the flock, and of the herd;
And their soul shall be as a wellwatered garden,
And they shall not pine for hunger any more.
- 13 Then shall the virgin in the dance rejoice,
And the young men and old men together;
For I will change their mourning into joy;
I will also comfort them, and cheer them after their sorrow.
- 14 And I will satiate the desire of the priests with delicacies,
And my people shall be satisfied with my good things,
saith JEHOVAH.
- 15 Thus saith JEHOVAH;
A voice hath been heard in Ramah, had already begun, and would continue to carry on, the redemption and deliverance of Jacob. See the first note on verse 3.

“Verse 13. יחדו—‘Shall be glad,’ χαρησονται. LXX. Syr. ‘Saltabant virgines et mulieres,’ Exodus xv. 20, &c. De viris autem vix invenies, nisi de Amalekitis, 1 Sam. xxx. 16; et de Davide, 2 Sam. vi. 14; Psalm. xxx. 11, nedum de senibus; nam Exodus xxxii. 19; Job xxi. 11; Psalm. cxlix. 3; cl. 4, an ad viros, an ad fœminas pertineant, incertum.”—SECKER. But I see not why on such an extraordinary occasion even the old men might not be said to forget their age and infirmities, and to join in the dance as well as the young.

Verse 15. A voice hath been heard in Ramah—In this verse I have kept close to the received reading, except that, in conformity to the LXX., Syriac, and St. Matthew’s Gospel, I have rejected the repetition of על-בניה, which carries internal marks of interpolation, being not only superfluous, but rather perplexing the sense, and loading the metre. Ramah was a city of Benjamin, near which Rachel, the mother of Joseph and Benjamin, was buried; who is here, in a beautiful figure of poetry, represented as come forth out of her grave, and lamenting bitterly for the loss of her children, none of whom presented themselves to her view, being all either slain or gone into exile. The evangelist, indeed, applies these words to Herod’s massacre of the infants at Bethlehem, and its environs. (Matt. ii. 17, 18.) The context, however, plainly shows that this massacre could not have been the direct and immediate object of the prophecy. See the following note. But the prophet’s words so well suited the occasion, that the evangelist could not help observing their congruity. He must, therefore, be understood just as if he had said, “The circumstances of this affair were such,

A lamentation of most bitter weeping ;
 Rachel, weeping for her children,
 Refuseth to be comforted, because they are not.

- 16 Thus saith JEHOVAH,
 Refrain thy voice from weeping,
 And thine eyes from tears ;
 For thy work shall have a reward, saith JEHOVAH,
 And they shall return out of the land of the enemy :
 17 There is also hope in thy latter end, saith JEHOVAH,
 And thy children shall return unto their own border.

- 18 I have surely heard Ephraim lamenting himself ;
 Thou hast corrected me, and I was corrected, like a steer not broken :
 Turn thou me, and I shall be turned ;
 For thou art JEHOVAH my God.
 19 Surely after that I was turned, I repented,
 And after that I was admonished, I smote upon my thigh ;
 I was ashamed, and even covered with confusion, that the words of Jeremiah, though spoken with a different view, may well be accommodated to the present occasion." And this is as much as can be allowed in many passages of the New Testament, where the words in the Old Testament are said to be fulfilled. See Matt. ii. 15 ; Acts i. 16-20, &c., &c.

"ברכיה—It is observable that Nebuzaradan had the captives at Ramah. (Chapter xl. 1.) There is an emphasis in the repetition of the words על-בניה. So HORACE, Epist. i. xiv. 7, 8:—

Fratrem mœrentis, rapto de fratre dolentis Insolabiliter."—SECKER.

Verse 16. For thy work shall have a reward—That is, Thou shalt not have brought forth children in vain, nor shalt thou be deprived of that satisfaction in seeing the welfare of thy children, which is the parent's reward for her care and attention in bringing them into the world, and providing for their support and education. "They shall return out of the land of the enemy." But if the massacre at Bethlehem had been primarily designed here, with what propriety could this have been said ?

Verse 17. There is also hope in thy latter end—See the like expression used chapter xxix. 11.

"לאחריתך—Perhaps, 'to,' or, 'concerning thy posterity.'"—SECKER.

And thy children—The LXX. and Arabic appear to have read בניך instead of בנים.

Verse 19. I smote upon my thigh—Smiting upon the thigh was an indication of inward sorrow and compunction. See Ezekiel xxi. 12. So also in HOMER'S Iliad. II. 124 :—

- Because I did bear the reproach of my youth.
 20 Is Ephraim a son dear unto me ?
 Is he a child fondly beloved ?
 That so soon as ever my word is in him,
 I should indeed call him again to my remembrance ?
 Therefore have my bowels been moved for him,
 I will surely have mercy upon him, saith JEHOVAH.
- 21 Set thee up waymarks,
 Fix up for thyself tall poles,
 Set thine heart toward the highway ;
 By the way thou wentest return, O virgin of Israel,
 Return to these thy cities.
- 22 How long wilt thou turn thyself away, O refractory virgin ?
 For JEHOVAH is about to create a new thing in the earth,
 A woman shall put to the rout a strong man.

————— αυταρ Αχιλλευσ
 Μηρω πλεγμαμενος Πατροκληα προσειπεν.

When Ephraim was made sensible of his sinfulness, he discovered marks of real contrition.

Because I did bear the reproach of my youth—That is, because by the misconduct of my earlier days I had fixed a blot upon my character, and subjected myself to reproach.

Verse 20. Is Ephraim a son dear unto me ? Is he, &c.—These questions are designed to be answered in the affirmative, as appears from the inference, “Therefore have my bowels been moved for him.”

Verse 21. Set thee up waymarks, &c.—These words are a call to Israel to prepare for their return. צינים are “stone pillars,” and תמרים are “tall poles,” like “palm-trees,” or, perhaps, made of palm-trees, (תמר properly signifies a “palm-tree,”) both set up in the roads at certain distances for the traveller’s direction, and extremely necessary for those who have to pass wild and spacious deserts.

Verse 22. Wilt thou turn thyself away—חזק is found only here and in one other place, Cant. v. 6, where it is understood of one that had “turned himself about and gone off;” and from hence, perhaps, חזקוק, Cant. vii. 1, are thought to signify “the joints of the thighs,” which turn about for the purposes of motion. The tergiversation of Israel, their backwardness to comply with the gracious invitations given them to return, seems to be here intended.

A woman shall put to the rout a strong man—I cannot, at any rate, concur in opinion with those commentators who understand these words to relate to the miraculous conception of the Virgin Mary without the operation of man. They surely cannot, by any construction, be brought to imply such a thing. Admitting that the word תסובב may signify, “shall encompass” or “comprehend in the womb,” and that גבר, instead of “an adult” or

- 23 Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel ;
 Again shall they speak this word in the land of Judah,
 And in the cities thereof, when I reverse their captivity,
 JEHOVAH shall bless thee, O habitation of righteousness,
 O mountain of the most Holy One.
- 24 And Judah shall dwell in it, and all his cities, Husbandmen altogether, and they shall go about with flocks.
- 25 For I have refreshed the thirsty soul,
 And every soul that pined for hunger have I filled.

“strong man,” may also signify “a male child;” yet the words, all together, will still import no more, than that “a woman shall conceive,” or “contain, a male child.” But this, it will be said, is nothing new or extraordinary. I grant it is not, and, therefore, have reason to presume that this is not the sense intended. But the verb סבב signifies “to turn about,” and, consequently, in Hiphil or Pihel may signify, to “cause to turn about,” that is, to “repulse,” or “put to the rout,” an opposing adversary. But to do this implies a prevalency over him. Again : There is a manifest opposition between נקבה, “a woman,” one of the feebler sex, and גבר, which signifies not simply “a man,” but “a mighty man, a hero,” or “warrior.” And, therefore, “A woman shall put to the rout,” or “repulse, a strong man,” may, by a proverbial form of speech, denote, “The weaker shall prevail over the stronger.” Now this, it must be confessed, is in itself new and unusual, and contrary to the ordinary course of nature ; but then it is ascribed to the interposing power of God, who is said therein to “create a new thing,” or, in other words, to work a miracle. The connexion of this sense with the context is easy to be explained. The virgin of Israel is exhorted not to turn aside, or to decline the invitation given her to return, as she might, perhaps, be disposed to do, through dread of the power of enemies, who would oppose her deliverance. For her encouragement, she is told, that she had no reason to be apprehensive of the superior strength of any enemies, since God would work a miracle in her favour, and enable her, though apparently weaker, to overcome and prevail against all their opposition. See verse 11. By “women,” weak and feeble persons are frequently designed. See chapter l. 37 ; li. 30 ; Isaiah xix. 16.

Verse 23. O mountain of the most Holy One—Or, “O mountain the most holy.” הר הקדש may be rendered either way.

Verse 24. And all his cities—By “cities,” we must here understand “citizens,” or “inhabitants of cities,” as chapter xi. 12 ; xxvi. 2 ; Genesis xxxv. 5. So also, I think, Isaiah xiv. 21.

Husbandmen altogether, and they shall go about with flocks—These words are descriptive of the circumstances, in which the ancestors of the Jews were placed upon their first introduction into the land of Canaan. The land was, by divine appointment, divided by lot among them, and every man had his separate portion or patrimony assigned him, which he was forbidden to alienate or exchange, and, consequently, was bound to cultivate himself for the maintenance of himself and family. Besides which, I con-

- 26 Hereupon I awoke, and saw ;
And my sleep was pleasing unto me.
- 27 BEHOLD the days come, saith JEHOVAH,
That I will sow the house of Israel, and the house of Judah,
With the seed of man, and with the seed of beast.
- 28 And it shall be that, as I have watched over them,
To pluck up, and to pull down, and to overthrow,
And to destroy, and to afflict :
So will I watch over them,
To build, and to plant, saith JEHOVAH.
- 29 In those days they shall no more say,
The fathers have eaten a sour grape,
And the children's teeth shall be set on edge.
- 30 But every man shall die for his own iniquity ;
Every man that hath eaten the sour grape,
His teeth shall be set on edge.
- 31 Behold, the days come, saith JEHOVAH,
That I will make with the house of Israel,
And with the house of Judah, a new covenant :

ceive, there were certain districts of waste or unappropriated plain, known by the name of "the wilderness," reserved for the purpose of grazing and feeding their cattle in common. Thus every citizen was literally a husbandman, without any exception, and also a shepherd, or feeder of flocks. Nor could any institution be better calculated to render a people virtuous and happy, by training them up to habits of sobriety, frugality, and industry, and restraining them from the pursuits of luxury and pernicious elegance ; whilst the prodigious increase of their numbers under such circumstances afforded a sufficient proof, that, through the divine blessing co-operating with the natural fertility of their soil, they were all plentifully supplied with every article requisite for their commodious and comfortable subsistence. Accordingly, it here appears to be the avowed design of divine Providence, upon bringing the Jewish people back to inhabit once more their ancient land, to revive among them an institution so favourable to their happiness.

Verse 26. Hereupon I awoke, and saw—These words afford a plain proof that something like a dream or visionary representation had preceded, and confirm the interpretation offered in the first note on verse 3.

Verse 29. The fathers have eaten a sour grape, &c.—For אכלו, eleven mss., and the first printed edition of the Bible, read in the future יאכלו, as in the text, Ezekiel xviii. 2. Five other mss. have a rasure in the place of the ך. It is not, however, very material to the sense, which reading we follow. The meaning of the proverbial expression is obvious, and seems to have been founded on what is generally declared in several parts of scrip-

32 Not according to the covenant which I made with their fathers,
 In the day that I took them by the hand,
 To bring them out of the land of Egypt ;
 Which covenant of mine they violated,
 Although I was a husband unto them, saith JEHOVAH.

ture, that “ God visiteth the sins of the fathers upon the children ;” and, perhaps, on his having particularly threatened to bring evil upon Judah and Jerusalem for the sins committed in the reign of Manasseh. (Chapter xv. 4 ; 2 Kings xxi. 11–15 ; xxiii. 26, 27.) But it certainly does not follow from hence, as the proverb would seem to insinuate, that the innocent children were to be punished for the offences of their guilty fathers. This is no way consistent with our ideas of natural justice ; nor can any instance be produced of God’s ever having proceeded in such a manner. I speak of judicial punishment, properly so called, and not of the natural effects and consequences of sin. If children have been punished for the transgressions of their parents, it was because the children were guilty as well as the parents. Nor did the children suffer more than their own iniquities had deserved ; although the delinquency of their forefathers might have become a reasonable motive for treating them with greater severity than they would otherwise have met with, in order to put a stop to the progress of hereditary wickedness. This is all, I conceive, that ever was, or could be, designed by God’s “ visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children.” It is promised, however, that in those future times, of which the prophet was speaking, no regard of any kind should be had to the sins of others, but that every man should bear his own burden, and suffer simply and solely for his own transgressions.

Verse 32. Which covenant of mine they violated—The LXX., and St. Paul, (Heb. viii. 9,) render אשר as a conjunction, οτι ; but I rather consider it as a relative pronoun, with which the substantive is repeated by a pleonasm not uncommon in the Hebrew language. See BUXTORF. Thes. Gram. lib. ii. cap. 8.

Although I was a husband unto them—ואנכי בעלתי בם. Various have been the attempts made to reconcile the Hebrew text with the apostle’s citation, Heb. viii. 9, where we read, καγω ημελησα αυτοις. Some have supposed the original Hebrew to have been בעלתי, others בהלתי, both which signify, “ I have loathed,” or “ abhorred.” The learned Dr. Pococke has from the Arabic asserted the same sense to belong to בעלתי. But we find nearly the same words used before, (chapter iii. 14,) כי אנכי בעלתי בכם, which our translators render, “ for I am your husband ;” but perhaps they might as well have been rendered, “ for I have been your husband ;” that is, I have discharged the duty of a husband, or superior relation, in patronizing and protecting you. For in all those mutual relations which imply subordination, as between husband and wife, father and child, sovereign and subject, wherever submission and obedience are required on the one hand, care and protection are stipulated, or understood to be due, on the other. And this stipulation is expressly made in the covenant between God and his people, which is so often alluded to in the very terms

- 33 But this is the covenant which I will make with the house of Israel ;
 After those days, saith JEHOVAH, will I put my law into their inward parts,
 And upon their heart will I write it ;
 And I will be unto them a God,
 And they shall be unto me a people.
- 34 And they shall not teach any more,
 Every man his neighbour, and every man his brother,
 Saying, Know ye JEHOVAH ;
 For they shall all know me,
 From the least of them even unto the greatest of them,
 saith JEHOVAH ;
 For I will pardon their iniquity,
 And their sin will I remember no more.
- 35 Thus saith JEHOVAH,
 Who hath appointed the sun for a light by day, of the matrimonial one. Now, God asserts, both in the text before us, and in the other passage above cited, that he had been "the husband" of his people ; that is, in other words, that he had fulfilled his part of the covenant in taking due care of them, although they had violated it on their part by revolting and withdrawing their allegiance from him. So that with this sense of בעלתי, the words of the LXX., as they stand in the generality of copies, do materially agree ; καγω εμελησα αυτων, "although I took care of," or, "protected them." In the Alexandrian copy, indeed, as well as in the Epistle to the Hebrews, the word ημελησα is found, which bears a quite contrary sense. But this variation in the copies of the LXX. leaves room to doubt, whether the apostle, who certainly in this instance cited from the LXX., may not originally have written εμελησα too. There is nothing in the scope of his argument that is conclusive with respect to either of the two readings. The corruption might, therefore, have been the more readily admitted into the text of the apostle, by those who found it already in the copies of the LXX. which they had in use.

Verse 33. I will put my law—נִתְּתִי is the preter tense ; but the future seems to be required. Accordingly sixteen, perhaps seventeen, mss. prefix the ו conversive, besides two which have a letter erased before נִתְּתִי. But the LXX. and the apostle, Heb. viii. 10, both render διδους ; which leads me to think, that probably instead of נִתְּתִי, the word might originally have been בִּתְּתִי, compounded of תָּתַת the infinitive, with the affix pronoun י, and the preposition ב prefixed. It is obvious, how easily the ב might have been changed into נ ; and the construction of בִּתְּתִי will equally suit with the Hebrew idiom, and with the Greek translation : "When I put, or, in putting, my law into their inward parts, I will also write it on their heart."

"Verse 34. כִּי אֶסְלַח—'When,' or 'that I forgive, and remember.'"—SECKER.

The stated order of the moon and stars for a light by night ;
 Who agitateth the sea, so that the waves thereof roar ;
 JEHOVAH of hosts is his name :

36 If these ordinances shall depart from before me ;
 Then shall the seed of Israel also cease
 From being a nation before me continually.

37 Thus saith JEHOVAH ;
 If the heavens above can be measured,
 Or the foundations of the earth beneath be traced out ;
 Then will I also reject the whole seed of Israel,
 Because of all that they have done, saith JEHOVAH.

38 Behold, the days come, saith JEHOVAH,
 That the city shall be built, under the direction of JEHOVAH,
 From the tower of Hananeel unto the corner gate :

Verse 35. The stated order—Twenty-four mss. and five editions read חֻקָּו, and three mss. חֻקֹּת, in the plural number. But the Syriac and Vulgate acknowledge the singular. In the LXX. the word is omitted.

Who agitateth the sea—רָגַע הַיָּם. These words occur, Isaiah li. 15, where our translators render, as they have done here, “who divideth ;” but Bishop Lowth, “who stilleth.” But on comparing the ancient versions in both places, we find a very different sense assigned to רָגַע. The LXX. here render, καὶ κρανῆν, but in the passage of Isaiah, οὐταπασσων : and the Vulgate, turbo, and qui turbat ; which agree better with the primary sense of רָגַע, that implies “quick motion.” See TAYLOR’S Concordance, and the note on chapter vi. 16.

Verse 37. Because of all that they have done—Three mss. add לִי, “unto me,” or “against me.” And the same is expressed in the Alexandrian copy of the LXX., and in the Chaldee and Arabic versions.

Verse 38. Behold, the days come—In the Hebrew text, as it stands in the generality of mss. and printed editions, the word בָּאִים is wanting ; but the Masoretes have supplied it ; and it is found in twenty-two, perhaps twenty-three, mss. and in five editions ; in two mss. a word of four letters is erased after יָמִים. All the ancient versions express it.

Under the direction of JEHOVAH—לִיהוָה, “through JEHOVAH,” according to his disposition and appointment. See notes on chapters xv. 8 ; xxii. 6. Or it may signify, “for JEHOVAH,” for his use and service.

From the tower of Hananeel, &c.—Here follows a description of the circumference of a new city to be built on the site of Jerusalem ; but that it does not mean the city which was rebuilt after the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, is evident from two principal circumstances ; first, because the limits are here extended farther, so as to include a greater space than was contained within the walls at that time ; and, secondly, it is here said, that it should never be razed or destroyed any more. This new city, therefore, must be referred to those after-times, when the general restoration of Israel is appointed to take place.

- 39 And a line of the measure shall proceed on straight forward
Over the hill Gareb, and shall encompass Goatha, 40 And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes,
And all the fields unto the brook Kidron,
As far as to the angle of the horse gate eastward :

From the tower of Hananeel unto the corner gate—Here I would beg leave to refer to a plan of the city of Jerusalem, as rebuilt in Nehemiah's time, to be found in the Ancient Universal History, vol. i. book i. chapter 7, folio. According to this plan, the tower of Hananeel appears to have stood in the north-east part of the city, opposite to the west end of the temple-precincts. From thence the wall proceeded to the corner gate, supposed to be the same as the old gate, which stood directly north. It probably had the name of "the corner gate" given it from the wall running out into an angle in that part.

Verse 39. A line of the measure—For קוֹר fourteen mss. and one edition read with the Masora, קו. "A line of the measure" is a line marking the circumference. נגדו is rendered, "straight before him," or "directly forward," Joshua vi. 5.

Over the hill Gareb, and shall encompass Goatha—According to the above-mentioned plan, the hills Gareb and Goatha are out of the limits of the city. The latter is supposed to be Golgotha; that is, in Hebrew, "the heap of Gotha;" which, being the place where our Saviour was crucified, was of course without the city-walls at the time of that transaction. These hills were a little to the north-west of the old city-walls, but seem destined to be brought within the compass of the new city.

Verse 40. And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes—This was undoubtedly the valley of Hinnom, called "the valley of the dead bodies and of the ashes," from its having been made a common burying-place, and a receptacle for the rubbish and filth of the city. See chapter vii. 32; xix. 11; and note on chapter xix. 2. The valley of Hinnom lay to the west of the city, winding to the south. See note on chapter xix. 2, compared with Ancient Universal History, vol i. book i. chap. 7.

And all the fields—Twenty-five, perhaps twenty-six, mss. and six editions read here, according to the Masora, השדמות, instead of השדמות. "The fuller's fields" are supposed to be meant. Aquila here renders τα προαστεια, and the Vulgate confirms the reading of השדמות, though divided into two words, השדמות, regionem mortis. The fuller's field is said to have been near the conduit of the upper pool, (2 Kings xviii. 17,) and, consequently, on the south side of the city, where the pools were situate. Those fields with the valley of Hinnom, though before without the line of the city, seem now to be included within it, if the verb ינבב, "shall wind about," or "encompass," extends to them, as well as to Goatha, by means of the copulative.

The brook Kidron—This appears, according to the before-mentioned plan, to be at the south-east end of the city. JOSEPHUS places it at the foot of the Mount of Olives, to the east of Jerusalem. (De Bell. Jud. lib. v. cap. 2. edit. Hudson.) The horse-gate was situate in the east.

Sacred to JEHOVAH it shall not be plucked up,
Neither shall it be thrown down any more for ever.

CHAPTER XXVII.*

I IN THE BEGINNING OF THE REIGN OF ZEDEKIAH THE SON OF JOSIAH KING OF JUDAH CAME THIS COMMAND UNTO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH, TO SAY,

Sacred to JEHOVAH, it shall not be plucked up—The words קדש ליהוה, “Holiness unto JEHOVAH,” were ordered to be inscribed on the plate that was worn upon the high priest’s forehead, to denote that his person was sacred, being set apart for the peculiar service of God. (Exodus xxviii. 36.) The same words, I conceive, are here used to signify, that the whole circuit of the city, being consecrated to God, appropriated to his honour and service, should not thenceforward be any more subjected to ruin and devastation.

CHAP. XXVII. It is evident, notwithstanding the mistake that has crept into the introductory sentence of this chapter, as will be presently noticed, that the prophecies contained both in this chapter, and in that which follows next, belong to the fourth year of Zedekiah’s reign. About this time, ambassadors came to Zedekiah from the kings of Edom, Moab, and other neighbouring nations, to solicit him, as it should seem, to join with them in a confederacy against the king of Babylon. On this occasion Jeremiah is ordered to put bands and yokes about his neck, and to send them afterwards to the before-mentioned kings, declaring the sovereignty of Nebuchadnezzar and his successors to be of divine appointment, and promising peace and protection to such as submitted quietly, but menacing evil in case of resistance. (Verses 1–11.) A like admonition is delivered to Zedekiah, advising him not to expose himself and his people to certain ruin by listening to the suggestions of false prophets, and revolting from the service of the king of Babylon. (Verses 12–15.) The priests and all the people are also warned not to give credit to the false prophets, who taught them to expect a speedy restoration of the vessels, which had been carried to Babylon together with Jeconiah. Instead of which it is foretold, that the remaining vessels in the house of God, and in the king’s house at Jerusalem, should be carried after the other, and should not return till the appointed period of Judah’s captivity was at an end. (Verses 16 to the end.)

Verse 1. ZEDEKIAH—The common reading of the text here is “Jehoiakim;” but this is so difficult to reconcile with what follows, that Mr. Lowth, in his Commentary upon the place, with a liberality of sentiment the more laudable, as it was singular in his days, when almost all the world was infatuated with a vain prejudice of the absolute integrity of the Hebrew text, owns his persuasion, that “the least forced way of solving the difficulty is to say, that Jehoiakim is crept into the text, by the negligence of the scribes, who might have their eyes fixed upon the beginning of the last chapter or section, instead of Zedekiah.” Accordingly, we find צדקיהו in

* See note, page 166.

- 2 THUS said JEHOVAH to me, Make thee bands and yokes,
 3 and thou shalt put them upon thy neck; and thou shalt send them to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the children of Ammon, and to the king of Tyre, and to the king of Sidon, by the hand of the ambassadors, that are come to Jerusalem to Zedekiah king of Judah.
 4 And thou shalt charge them with a message unto their masters,
 5 saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, Thus shall ye say unto your masters; I have made the earth, and the man and the beast which are upon the face of the earth, by my great power, and by my outstretched arm; and I will give it unto whomsoever it seemeth meet unto me.
 6 And now I have given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, my servant, and the beasts of 7 the field also have I given unto him, to serve him. And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the time of his land, even his, be come, when many nations
 8 and great kings shall exact service of him. And it shall be, that whatsoever nation and kingdom will not serve him, Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and will not submit its neck to one MS., of good repute and antiquity, in the margin of another, and most probably it was so in the text of a third, where the ' was evidently ו at first, and the remainder of the word is upon a rasure. The Syriac and the Oxford MS. of the Arabic version also read, Zedekiah. See note on chapter xxviii. 1.

Verse 2. Thus said JEHOVAH unto me—The word אלי is omitted by the LXX., as are all the words אלי יהוה אלהי ישראל in the Syriac version. One MS. for אלי reads ישראל. In all these cases it might not be improper to render in the preceding verse, according to the usual form, "came this word unto Jeremiah from JEHOVAH, saying"—But the introduction of אלי, "unto me," which is found in all the collated MSS. and editions, and in the Chaldee and Vulgate versions, and in the MS. Pachom. of the LXX., seems to imply, that the prophet was commanded to declare what JEHOVAH had given him in charge to do. And it follows accordingly, verse 12, that he did so declare it in the presence of Zedekiah, adding a serious admonition, with a particular application to that king and his people of what had been before laid down in general terms concerning every nation and kingdom, according as they did, or did not, submit to the power which God had appointed to rule over them.

Verse 5. And the man—Three MSS. read והאדם; and the Syriac, and Vulgate likewise prefix the conjunction. The LXX. omit all the following words והאדם והבהמה אשר על-פני הארץ.

"Verse 7.—גם-הוא. 'Until the time of his land come, even his;' as Prov. xxiii. 15; 1 Kings xxi. 19; Psalm ix. 6. Of the fulfilling of this verse, see Cler. The last was his daughter's son."—SECKER.

 9 JEHOVAH, until I have consumed them by his hand. Therefore hearken ye not to your prophets, and to your diviners, and to your dealers in dreams, and to your astrologers, and to your sorcerers, that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not 10 serve the king of Babylon: for they prophesy falsehood unto you, so as to remove you far from your own land, and that 11 I should drive you out, and that ye should perish. But the nation which shall bring its neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and shall serve him, I will even leave them undisturbed in their own land, saith JEHOVAH, and they shall cultivate it, and shall dwell therein.
- 12 And I spake to Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying, Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live.
 13 Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by sword, and by famine, and by pestilence, according as JEHOVAH hath spoken concerning the nation which will not serve the king of Babylon.
 14 And hearken ye not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon; for they prophesy falsehood unto you. For I have not sent them, saith JEHOVAH, but they prophesy in my name falsely, that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you.
- 16 Also to the priests, and to all the people, spake I, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH, Hearken not unto the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying, Behold, the vessels of the house of JEHOVAH shall be brought back again from Babylon now shortly: for they prophesy unto you falsehood.
 17 Hearken ye not unto them; serve the king of Babylon, and 18 live: wherefore should this city become a desolation? But if they be prophets, and if the word of JEHOVAH be with them, let them now intercede with JEHOVAH of hosts, that the vessels which are left in the house of JEHOVAH, and in the house of the king of Judah, and in Jerusalem, may not go to 19 Babylon. For thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts concerning the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and Verse 13. And by famine—Seven MSS. and one edition read וברעב, conformably with the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, which all express the conjunction.

 carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah of Israel, concerning the vessels that are left in the house of JEHOVAH, and in the house of the king of Judah, and in 22 Jerusalem; They shall be carried to Babylon, and there shall they be until the day that I shall visit them, saith JEHOVAH; when I will bring them up, and restore them to this

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 AND it came to pass in the same year, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, in the fifth month, that Hananiah, the son of Azur, the prophet, who was of Gibeon, spake unto me in the house of JEHOVAH, in the presence of the priests and of all the people,
 2 saying, Thus hath JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, spoken, saying, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.

Verse 21. And in Jerusalem—One MS. reads here בירושלם, as at verse 18, and another has a rasure in the place of ב. The Chaldee also, and Theodotion express the preposition.

CHAP. XXVIII. HANANIAH pretendeth to prophesy in the name of JEHOVAH, that within two years the Babylonish yoke should be broken, and that the vessels which had been carried to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, together with all the captives, should within that time be restored. (Verses 1-4.) Jeremiah consenteth to allow of Hananiah's pretensions to the character of a true prophet, in case his prediction be accomplished. (Verses 5-9.) Hananiah, in confirmation of what he had foretold, breaketh off the yoke from Jeremiah's neck. (Verses 10, 11.) Jeremiah is ordered to declare that the king of Babylon's yoke, instead of wood, should be made of iron. (Verses 12-14.) He foretelleth the death of Hananiah within the year; and he dieth, accordingly, two months after. (Verses 15 to the end.)

Verse 1. In the same year—Here we find the precise date of the preceding prophecy ascertained, and that it was delivered not only in the beginning of Zedekiah's reign, but in the fourth year of it, and gave rise to the following transaction. How the fifth month of the fourth year of Zedekiah's reign can be said to be "the beginning" of it, see accounted for in the prefatory note on chapter xxvi.

In the fourth year—The Masora instead of בשנת reads בשנה, which is more regular, and is the reading of twenty, perhaps twenty-two, mss., four editions, and the Jerusalem Talmud.

Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet—In what sense Hananiah was a prophet, see note on chapter xxvi. 7.

- 3 Within two full years will I bring again to this place all the vessels of the house of JEHOVAH, which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took from this place, and carried them to Babylon.
- 4 And Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and all the captives of Judah, that went to Babylon, will I bring again to this place, saith JEHOVAH; for I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon.
- 5 Then Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Hananiah the prophet in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all
- 6 the people that stood in the house of JEHOVAH. And Jeremiah the prophet said, Amen; so let JEHOVAH do; let JEHOVAH confirm thy words which thou hast prophesied, in bringing back the vessels of the house of JEHOVAH, and all
- 7 the captives, from Babylon unto this place. Nevertheless hear now this word which I speak in thy hearing, and in the
- 8 hearing of all the people. The prophets, who have been before me and before thee from ancient time, have also prophesied concerning many nations, and concerning great king-
- 9 doms, of war, and of calamity, and of pestilence. Whatsoever prophet shall prophesy of peace, by the word of the prophet coming to pass shall the prophet be discerned, whom JEHOVAH hath sent indeed.
- 10 Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the
- 11 prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it. And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH, After this manner will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from off the neck of all the nations within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way.
- 12 Then came the word of JEHOVAH to Jeremiah, after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck
- 13 of Jeremiah the prophet, saying, Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH, Thou hast broken yokes of wood,

Verse 8. And of calamity—So וְלָרָעָה signifies, which is the present reading of the text; but twenty-one mss. and one edition read וְלָרָעָב, “and of famine;” and three mss. read לָרָעָב without the conjunction. וְלָרָעָב seems the most probable reading, if we consider that the evils frequently threatened by the prophet are “the sword,” (that is, “war,”) “famine,” and “pestilence.” See chapters xxiv. 10; xxvii. 8, 13; xxix. 17, 18, &c. The LXX. in this place omit the two latter, and speak only of πόλεμον, “war;” but in the ms. Pachom. it is added, καὶ εἰς κακὰ, καὶ εἰς θάνατον; the Vulgate substitutes et de fame, instead of וְלָרָעָב.

Verse 13. Yokes of wood—For מִוֹטָה, which is singular, nineteen mss.

- 14 but thou shalt make instead of them yokes of iron. For thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel; A yoke of iron have I put upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him; and also the beasts of the field have I given unto him.
- 15 The prophet Jeremiah also said unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah; JEHOVAH hath not sent thee;
- 16 but thou hast made this people to trust in a lie. Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH, Behold I am about to cast thee from off the face of the ground; this year thou shalt die, because
- 17 thou hast spoken prevarication concerning JEHOVAH. And Hananiah the prophet died in the same year, in the seventh month.

and one edition read מוֹשׁוֹת, and thirteen mss. and three editions, מוֹשׁוֹת at large. Also for וַעֲשִׂית, “but thou shalt make,” the LXX. and Arabic render, “but I will make,” as from וַעֲשִׂיתִי.

Verse 16. Prevarication—See note on chapter xxix. 32.

CHAP. XXI. THIS chapter contains the first of those prophecies which were delivered by Jeremiah subsequent to the revolt of Zedekiah, and the breaking out of the war thereupon, and which are continued on to the taking of Jerusalem, related in chapter xxxix., in the following order: Chapters xxi., xxxiv., xxxvii., xxxii., xxxiii., xxxviii., xxxix.

The message in this chapter has by some been confounded with that in chapter xxxvii.; (see the argument prefixed to chapter xxi. in Mr. Lowth's Commentary;) but they are, I think, clearly and undeniably distinct from each other. From the reply given to that in chapter xxxvii., it is manifest, that the Chaldeans, who had been besieging Jerusalem for some time, had already raised the siege, and were gone to meet the Egyptian army, leaving the Jews in great hopes that they would never return again. But the terms of this message seem to imply, that the king of Babylon had but just commenced his hostilities against Judah, of which Zedekiah informs the prophet, as of a matter that might not yet have come to his certain knowledge; and desires him to intercede with God, that he would divert the storm by some such extraordinary interposition, as he had been wont to manifest in favour of his people. (Verses 1, 2.) The answer likewise takes no notice of any siege or operations past, but simply regards the future,

* See note, page 166.

- 2 INTREAT, we pray thee, JEHOVAH for us, because Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us; if so be that JEHOVAH will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, and he may go up from us.
- 3 And Jeremiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah; Thus saith JEHOVAH the God of Israel, Behold, I will turn aside the weapons of war, which are in your hand, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, that besiege you from without the wall, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city. And I myself will fight against you with an outstretched hand, and with a strong arm, and with anger, and with fury, and with great wrath.
- 6 And I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and
- 7 beast; of a great pestilence shall they die. And after this, saith JEHOVAH, I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, even those that are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life; and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; he shall have no pity on them, neither shall he spare, neither shall he shew mercy.
- 8 And unto this people shalt thou say, Thus saith JEHOVAH, which it is declared should end unfortunately, because God would take an active part against the inhabitants of Judah, and would deliver both their city, and also the king and his people, into the hands of their merciless enemies. (Verses 3-7.) It is further shown, that the only resource of the people for safety, was to surrender themselves to the Chaldeans. (Verses 8-10.) And as for the royal house, they are warned to prevent the effects of God's indignation by doing justice and right, and not to trust to their strong hold, which would stand them in no stead, when God was bent on their destruction. (Verses 11 to the end.) The time of this transaction, therefore, I conceive to be in the ninth year of Zedekiah, previous to the siege of Jerusalem, which began in the tenth month of that year.

Verse 2. Intreat—רָשָׁה signifies to “seek” or “apply to” God by prayer and supplication, as well as to “inquire” any thing of him. See Isaiah lv. 6; and the former sense is most suitable in this place. See note on chapter xxxvii. 7.

Nebuchadrezzar—Dr. Kennicott has observed that the name of the king of Babylon is thus spelt in twenty-six other places of this book, besides that before us, in the printed copies; and in ten places, “Nebuchadnezzar.” There is a great variation in the mss.

Verse 3. Thus shall ye say—Thirty mss. and three editions read תַּאמְרוּן, instead of תַּאמְרֶנָּה. One ms. seems to read תַּאמְרוּ, and in another וּ upon a rasure.

- Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.
- 9 He that abideth in this city shall die by sword, and by famine, and by pestilence; but he that goeth out, and surrendereth himself to the Chaldeans that lay siege round about you, he
- 10 shall even live, and his life shall be unto him as spoil. For I have set my face against this city in an evil, and not in a friendly manner, saith JEHOVAH; into the hand of the king of Babylon shall it be delivered, and he shall burn it with fire.
- 11 And with regard to the house of the king of Judah, hear
- 12 ye the word of JEHOVAH. O house of David, thus saith JEHOVAH, Judge ye, searching out right, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, lest my wrath go forth like fire, and it be kindled, and there be none to quench, Verse 9. He shall even live—The Masora for יחיה reads וחי, and is countenanced by eighteen mss., two capital editions, the margin of the edition of Felix Pratensis, the Chaldee Paraphrast, and the Babylonish Talmud. There is also some trace of it in the LXX.; for though we read there, ζησεται, και εσται η ψυχη αυτου εις σκυλα, it follows immediately, και ζησεται.

His life shall be unto him as spoil—See note on chapter xlv. 5. In the ms. Pachom. of the LXX., instead of εις σκυλα we read, εις ωφελειαν.

Verse 10. In an evil, and not in a friendly manner—See notes on chapters xiv. 11; xxiv. 5, 9.

“Verse 11. וילבית—‘And to the house,’ &c.”—SECKER.

Verse 12. Searching out right—לבקר appears to me to be the gerund from בקר, “to seek” or “search out diligently;” and to afford a better sense than if we render it, “in the morning.” Perhaps we may find a similar mistake in the sense of לבקרים, Isaiah xxxiii. 2, which is there rendered by our English translators, “every morning.” But might not the words דיה לבקרים be better translated, “Be thou their support to those that seek,” or “make application to thee for that purpose?” the pleonasm of the affix in ורעם being an extremely common Hebrew idiom.

Lest my wrath go forth like fire—It has been the opinion of many learned men, and Mr. LOWTH in particular, in the argument prefixed to this chapter in his Commentary, gives it for his, that “all which follows from verse 11 of this chapter belongs to the same subject with the twenty-second chapter, and relates to the time of Jehoiakim.” And afterwards, in his note on these words, “Lest my fury go out like fire,” he infers from them, “that this prophecy was antecedent to that at the beginning of the chapter, and before that peremptory decree was published against the king’s house mentioned, verse 7 of this chapter.” But I cannot help thinking that this latter part is but a continuation of the same prophecy with which the chapter begins; for the house of David was still to be visited with more calamities than those which had befallen it in the days of Jehoiakim. And how peremptory soever the decree may sound, verse 7, we must remember the rule laid down concerning such decrees, chapter xviii. 7, 8; none of 13 because of the evil of your doings. Behold, I am against thee, O thou inhabitant of the levelled hollow of a rock, saith JEHOVAH; ye who say, Who shall make a breach upon us?

 14 Or who shall enter into our habitations? And I will punish you according to the fruit of your machinations, saith JEHOVAH; and I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof, and it shall consume all around it.

which, it seems, are irreversible on the condition of a change of conduct. And though God may well be supposed to know when no such ground of reversal will take place, yet it is agreeable to the justice of his providence repeatedly to admonish sinners of the means by which his judgments may be avoided, that they may have none to blame but themselves, when the threatened vengeance overtakes them.

Of your doings—The Masora for מעלליכם, reads מעלליכם, and is countenanced by twenty one MSS., and by the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate versions. The LXX. omit the three last words of this verse; but in the MS. Pachom. we find, απο προσωπου αδικιας των επιτηδευματων υμων. One MS. reads מעלליכם.

Verse 13. O thou inhabitant of the levelled hollow of a rock—It is impossible that our present English translation can be right, for there appears no trace of a conjunction preceding צור; nor do I see any reason to suppose that it is Jerusalem which is here addressed by apostrophe, although such seems to be the prevailing opinion; or how that city could well be said to be “an inhabitant of the valley,” when it was built chiefly on two hills, as we learn from JOSEPHUS; (De Bell. Jud. lib. v. cap. 4, edit Huds.;) or how it could be called “a rock of the plain,” when it was surrounded by deep valleys, “for the most part environed with other not far removed mountains, as if placed in the midst of an amphitheatre;” which is the description given of it by a modern traveller, who had been upon the spot. (SANDYS’S Travels, book iii. page 155.) The address is certainly continued on to the house of David, whose place of residence was Mount Sion, called “the city of David.” This was a very high and steep rocky mountain on every side, and, in the opinion of its ancient possessors, the Jebusites, deemed impregnable, till David took it from them; (2 Sam. v. 6, 7;) and both he and his successors are said to have improved considerably its natural strength. This is undoubtedly here meant by צור; and העמק I conceive to signify “the hollow surface” of this rock at the top, in which (המישר, “levelled,” or “regularly formed by art”) the foundations of the buildings were laid; for it is manifest, that if המישר be considered as the participle Pyhal from ישר, “to be even” or “level,” it must, on account of the prefixed article, rather agree with העמק, which has the article likewise, than with צור. And this situation, in a hollow at the top of a rock, is perhaps alluded to in the word מקננת, which is used concerning the same family, chapter xxii. 23; who are said to “make their nest,” as the eagle doth, in the holes or clefts of the high rocks. See chapter xlix. 16. And, confiding in the strength of their situation, the inhabitants are here represented as defying the approach of any one to hurt them.

CHAPTER XXXIV.*

1 THE WORD WHICH CAME UNTO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH, WHEN NEBUCHADNEZZAR KING OF BABYLON, AND ALL HIS ARMY, AND ALL THE KINGDOMS OF THE EARTH THAT WERE UNDER HIS DOMINION, AND ALL THE PEOPLES, MADE WAR AGAINST JERUSALEM, AND AGAINST ALL THE CITIES THEREOF, SAYING,

2 THUS saith JEHOVAH the God of Israel, Go and speak to Zedekiah, and thou shalt say unto him, Thus saith JEHOVAH, Behold, I am about to deliver this city into the hand of the lation is made according to the present reading of the text, ביערה, when the affix must be referred to the house of David; and "the forest thereof" will then denote the large trees or timber of which the habitations of that royal family were built, and in respect of which it is called, chapter xxii. 23, "the inhabitant of Lebanon that made her nest among" (or of) "cedars." But there is some reason to suspect the authenticity of the word ביערה. Both the Syriac and Chaldee appear to have read בעררה, which is some advance towards בערה, the reading of one, and בוערה, the reading of two MSS., which if admitted as the participle present of בער, "to burn," the rendering of the passage would be, "And I will kindle a fire burning and consuming," or, "which shall burn and consume" all around it; that is, all around the fire itself.

CHAP. XXXIV. THIS chapter contains two distinct prophecies; the first of which is dated at the time when Nebuchadnezzar was engaged in carrying on the siege of Jerusalem, and of the cities of Lachish and Azekah, most probably towards the latter end of the ninth year of Zedekiah, the siege having been begun in the tenth month of that year. It announces to Zedekiah the taking and burning of Jerusalem, his own captivity, peaceful death, and honourable interment. (Verses 1-7.)

The second prophecy was delivered some time after, when the Chaldeans had broken off the siege, and were marched off to meet the Egyptian army, which made a show of coming to the relief of Jerusalem. It reproaches the people of Judah for their perfidious and inhuman behaviour to their brethren, whom they had released from bondage, according to the law; but, on thinking all danger from the enemy over, had compelled to resume their former servitude. For this God threatens to let loose upon them at once the sword, the pestilence, and the famine; and to deliver them up to the vexations of the Chaldeans, their cruel enemies, who should return, take and burn their city, and reduce their country to a solitary waste. (Verses 8 to the end.)

Verse 1. And against all the cities thereof—The LXX. and Arabic, with one MS., instead of עררה read ערי יהודה, as at verse 7. But עריה means

3 king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire. And thou shalt not escape out of his hand, but shalt surely be taken, and into his hand shalt thou be delivered; and thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak with thee mouth to mouth, and thou shalt go to
 4 Babylon. Nevertheless hear the word of JEHOVAH, O Zedekiah king of Judah; Thus hath JEHOVAH spoken concerning
 5 thee, Thou shalt not die by the sword. In peace shalt thou die, and according to the burnings of thine ancestors, the former kings that were before thee, so shall they burn for thee; and they shall lament for thee, saying, Ah lord! for I
 6 have spoken the word, saith JEHOVAH. And Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Zedekiah king of Judah all these words
 7 in Jerusalem, when the forces of the king of Babylon were making war against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that remained, against Lachish, and against Azekah; for these remained of the cities of Judah, fortified cities.

8 THE WORD WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH, AFTER THAT KING ZEDEKIAH HAD ENTERED INTO COVENANT WITH ALL THE PEOPLE THAT WERE IN JERUSALEM, TO PROCLAIM LIBERTY UNTO THEM: THAT EVERY ONE SHOULD LET HIS BONDMAN, AND EVERY ONE HIS BONDWOMAN, THAT WAS A HEBREW MAN, OR HEBREW WOMAN, GO FREE, AND NOT EXACT SERVICE OF THEM, EVERY ONE OF A JEW HIS BROTHER.

the same, as the other cities of Judah were all dependent upon the authority residing in the capital.

Verse 5. According to the burnings of thine ancestors—See 2 Chron. xvi. 14; xxi. 19; from whence it appears to have been customary for the Jews to burn a large quantity of spices at the interment of their kings; an honour not refused to Zedekiah, though he died in captivity.

They shall lament for thee, saying, Ah lord!—See chapter xxii. 18, and the note there.

Verse 8. To proclaim liberty unto them—By the law of Moses, (Exodus xxi. 2; Deut. xv. 12,) the Israelites were not allowed to detain their brethren of the Hebrew race in perpetual bondage, but were required to let them go free after having served six years. This law had, it seems, fallen into disuse; but king Zedekiah, upon the approach of the Chaldean army, whether from religious motives, or a political view to employ the men who were set free in the service of the war, engaged the people in a covenant to act conformably to the law; and they released their brethren accordingly. But no sooner were their fears abated by the retreat of the Chaldeans, than, in defiance of every principle of religion, honour, and humanity, they imposed the yoke of servitude anew upon those unhappy persons.

- 10 And all the princes hearkened, and all the people, who entered into covenant to let every one his bondman, and every one his bondwoman, go free, and not to exact service of them any more, they hearkened, I say, and let them go.
- 11 But they returned afterwards, and took back the bondmen and the bondwomen, whom they had let go free; and compelled them to serve as bondmen and bondwomen. Then came the word of JEHOVAH to Jeremiah from JEHOVAH,
- 13 saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH the God of Israel, I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bond-
- 14 men, saying, At the end of seven years ye shall let go every man his brother, an Hebrew, who shall have been sold unto thee; when he shall have served thee six years, then thou shalt let him go free from thee. But your fathers
- 15 hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear. And when ye had turned at this time, and had done what was right in mine eyes, in proclaiming liberty, every one to his neighbour, and had entered into a covenant before me in the house which
- 16 is called by my name: then ye returned, and profaned my name, and took back every one his bondman, and every one

Archbishop Usher computes the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign to have been the sabbatical year; and supposes that, on this account, the covenant of general release was entered into at the beginning of that year. But the sabbatical year, which was every seventh year from that in which the Israelites entered into possession of the land of Canaan, had nothing at all to do with the release of servants. In the year of sabbath they were only restrained from sowing their ground and pruning their vineyard; but every seventh year from the beginning of their service the Hebrew bond-slaves were to be discharged. Six years they were to serve, and in the seventh they were to go out free. Only the fiftieth year, or year of jubilee, was also to be a time of general release. (Lev. xxv. 39-41.) But that the sabbatical year was so, I see not the least reason to conclude, but quite the contrary.

Verse 10. And all the princes hearkened—That is, they hearkened, or conformed, to the obligations of the covenant, which they had entered into at the instigation of their prince.

Verse 11. And compelled them to serve—For ויכבישום, forty-three mss. and four editions read, with the Masora, ויכבשום. See verse 16.

Verse 14. At the end of seven years—This is the literal rendering of מִקֵּץ שִׁבְעַת שָׁנִים; but the import of the phrase is, "in the course of the seventh year," or, in the last term of that period. See Mr. Lowth's note on this verse. Compare Deut. xv. 1, 9.

Verse 16. And took back—For ויחשבו, which occurs twice in this verse, forty two mss. and three editions read ויחשיבו in the second instance, as in his bondwoman, whom ye had let go free to follow their own inclinations; and ye compelled them to be bondmen 17 and bondwomen unto you. Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH, Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty every one to his brother, and every one to his neighbour; behold, I proclaim liberty in regard to you, saith JEHOVAH, unto the sword, and to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will 18 give you up to vexation in all kingdoms of the earth. And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, who have not fulfilled the terms of the covenant which they made in presence of the calf, which they cut in twain, and passed 19 between the parts thereof; the princes of Judah, and the

the first instance fourteen mss. read וְהַשְׁבוּ. And this distinction of the conjugations Kal and Hiphil seems necessary to be thus expressly marked, as we find it in the text at verse 11.

Verse 17. And to the pestilence—All the ancient versions, except the Vulgate, place the conjunction before אֶל-הַדָּבָר; and thirty-four mss. and three of the oldest editions read וְאֶל-הַדָּבָר.

To vexation—The Masora, in conjunction with thirty-six mss. and three editions, read לְוִעָה instead of לְוִיעָה; but in support of the present reading see note on chapter xv. 4.

Verse 18. In presence of the calf—All the versions that I have met with, both ancient and modern, have fallen into the same error (so I deem it) of rendering לפני “in my presence;” whereas לפני appears to me to have no affix, but to have the government of the next word that follows, הָעֵגֶל, and therefore we should render לפני הָעֵגֶל, “in presence of the calf.” This at once takes away all the difficulty that has been found in the construction of הָעֵגֶל, and the case appears to be this: In order to ratify the covenant, they killed a calf, or young bullock, which they cut in two, and placing the two parts at some distance from each other, they passed between them; intending to signify by this rite, that they consented to be served in the like manner, in case they violated their part of the covenant. Something of the like sort was in practice among the Greeks and Romans upon such occasions, as may be seen in HOMER’s Iliad, τ. 298, and LIVY’s Roman History, lib. i. cap. 24, and lib. xxi. cap. 45. Hence there will appear a peculiar force in the expression of “entering into the covenant in presence of the calf,” because the sight of that object served to remind them of the penalties they subjected themselves to on violating their engagement. We find God conforming himself to this usage, when he made a covenant with Abraham. (Genesis xv. 9, 10, 17, 18.)

“כִּרְחוּ וְגו’—Si omittas posteriori loco אשר כִּרְחוּ, liquida erunt omnia; vel si legas, בעֵגֶל.”—SECKER.

“When they cut the calf—English Bible. Rather, literally, ‘the calf which they cut.’ For this, being the sign of the covenant, was called ‘the covenant;’ as circumcision was, and as the cup in the New Testament. On the custom of dividing the calf, see Lowth.”—SECKER.

princes of Jerusalem, and the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, that passed between the parts of the 20 calf; I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life; and their dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heavens, and 21 to the beasts of the earth. And Zedekiah king of Judah, and his princes, will I give into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life, even into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which are gone up from you.
 22 Behold, I will give the command, saith JEHOVAH, and will cause them to return to this city; and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire; and the cities of Judah will I make a desolation without an inhabitant.

CHAPTER XXXVII.*

1 Now king Zedekiah the son of Josiah reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of
 2 Babylon made king in the land of Judah. But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, regarded the words
 3 of JEHOVAH, which he spake by the prophet Jeremiah. And Zedekiah the king sent Jehuchal the son of Shelemiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, to Jeremiah the 4 prophet, saying, Pray now to JEHOVAH our God for us. For

Verse 19. And the eunuchs—The LXX., Syriac, Chaldee, and Arabic versions add the conjunction before הַסְרִיסִים, or הַסְרִיסִים, as it is more perfectly written in forty-four MSS. and four ancient editions.

Verse 22. And burn it with fire—Forty-seven MSS. and seven editions read regularly וְשָׂרְפָהּ, instead of וְשָׂרְפָהּ.

CHAP. XXXVII. IN the beginning of this chapter certain preliminary facts are related, tending to fix the time and occasion of Zedekiah's second message to Jeremiah. (Verses 1-5.) God suggests an answer, foretelling the retreat of the Egyptians, and the return of the Chaldean army, who should take and burn Jerusalem. (Verses 6-10.) During the absence of the Chaldeans, Jeremiah, attempting to quit the city, and retire to his own country-possession, is seized upon for a deserter, and thrown into a dungeon. (Verses 11-15.) The king sends for, and consults, him; and, being entreated by the prophet not to remand him to his former prison, is prevailed upon to change the place, and to abate of the rigour of his confinement. (Verses 16 to the end.)

Verse 3. Jehuchal the son of Shelemiah—This man came in the place of Pashur, who, together with Zephaniah, brought the former message from

* See note, page 166.

- Jeremiah came in and went out among the people, and they 5 had not cast him into prison. Also Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt, and the Chaldeans who laid siege to Jerusalem, when they heard the report of them, marched off from before Jerusalem.
- 6 Then came the word of JEHOVAH unto Jeremiah the pro-7 phet, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah that sent you to me, to seek me; Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to your 8 assistance, shall return to their own land, to Egypt. And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and 9 they shall take it, and burn it with fire. Thus saith JEHOVAH, Deceive not yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely go 10 away from us; for they shall not go. But, although ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans, that fight against you, and there remained of them wounded men, every one in his tent, they should rise, and burn this city with fire.
- 11 AND it came to pass, when the army of the Chaldeans were marched off from before Jerusalem because of Pharaoh's 12 army, that Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem, to go into the land of Benjamin, to receive a portion thereof among the 13 people. And as he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of Zedekiah. See the other marks of distinction between the two messages in the introductory note on chapter xxi.

Verse 4. Into prison—Eighteen, perhaps nineteen, MSS. and two editions read הכלוא, according to the Masora, instead of הכליא. Six MSS. read הכלא.

Verse 7. To seek me—Our English translators render, “to inquire of me.” But this is not the proper sense of דרש here; for the messengers were not sent to ask any question of God, but to desire the prophet to be their advocate with him, to “seek,” or “solicit him in their favour.” (Verse 3.) See note on chapter xxi. 2.

Verse 12. To receive a portion thereof—This is a proper sense of the verb חלק, to “divide,” or “take a share” among others; as חלק the noun also signifies “a portion,” or “share.” And this seems a more natural interpretation here, than to understand it, as our translators seem to have done, of the prophet’s “withdrawing himself,” or “slipping away,” (as it is expressed in the margin,) for fear of being shut up again in the city on the renewal of the blockade. For the case appears to have been this: Jeremiah had been cut off from his patrimony in the land of Benjamin, by the Chaldeans having been masters there. But upon their retreat he meant to return, with a view of coming in for a share of the produce of the land with the rest of his neighbours. For that he was likely to want some means for his support, is evident from his having been obliged to be subsisted in prison afterwards upon a public allowance.

the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he laid hold on Jeremiah, 14 saying, Thou art going over to the Chaldeans. And Jeremiah said, It is false, I am not going over to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him. And Irijah laid hold on Jeremiah, 15 and brought him unto the princes. And the princes were incensed against Jeremiah; and smote him, and committed him to prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe; for they made that a prison.

16 When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon and into the 17 cells, and had abode there many days; then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him; and the king asked him in his house privately, and said, Is there any word from JEHOVAH? And Jeremiah said, There is: for he hath said, Into the hand of 18 the king of Babylon shalt thou be delivered. And Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What offence have I committed against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, 19 that ye have cast me into prison? And where are your pro-

Verse 15. For they made that a prison—There is nothing extraordinary in making the dwelling-house of a great man a prison, according to either the ancient or modern manners of the east. See Genesis xxxix. 20. Even in the royal palace itself we find there was a prison. (Chapter xxxii. 2.) Mr. HARMER (Observations, chapter viii. obs. 37) gives the following passage concerning eastern prisons, out of a ms. of Sir John Chardin: "The eastern prisons are not public buildings erected for that purpose, but a part of the house in which their criminal judges dwell. As the governor and provost of a town, or the captain of the watch, imprison such as are accused in their own houses, they set apart a canton of it for that purpose, when they are put into these offices, and choose for the jailor the most proper person they can find of their domestics."

And thus Mr. Harmer thinks that Jonathan's house became a prison, in consequence of his being made a royal scribe, or, as we should term him, secretary of state.

Verse 16. Was entered into the dungeon, and into the cells—From comparing this place with chapter xxxviii. 6, it seems likely that "the dungeon" was a deep pit, sunk perpendicularly like a well, in the middle of the open court or quadrangle, around which the great houses were built; and that in the sides of it, near the bottom, were scooped niches, like the cabins of a ship, for the separate lodgment of the unfortunate persons who were let down there. Hence also it may be, that the same word בור is frequently put for "the grave;" the ancient repositories of the dead being often constructed with niches in the same manner, in which the bodies were placed separately. Accordingly, we read, Isaiah xiv. 15, "But thou shalt be brought down to the grave, to the sides of the pit." אל-יורכתי-בור.

Verse 19. And where—Thirteen mss. and four editions read, with the Masora, ראיה, instead of ראוי.

phets, that prophesied unto you, saying, 'The king of Babylon 20 shall not come against you, nor against this land? But now hear, I pray thee, O my lord the king; let my supplication, I pray thee, fall down before thee, and cause me not to return 21 to the house of Jonathan the scribe, nor let me die there. And Zedekiah the king commanded, and they committed Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and allowed him a loaf of bread every day out of the baker's street, until all the bread in the city were spent. And Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

Verse 20. Let my supplication fall down before thee—That is, Let me be allowed to supplicate thee in the most humble manner, prostrating myself before thee. See note on chapter xxxvi. 7.

Verse 21. Into the court of the prison—This was not belonging to the house of Jonathan the scribe, where the dungeon was; but the court of the prison in the king's house, mentioned, chapter xxxii. 2.

And allowed him—Literally, "allowing him also;" for וְנָתַן is the infinitive used for a gerund.

CHAP. XXXII. THE date of the following transaction and prophecy is ascertained, at the beginning of this chapter, to have been in the tenth year of Zedekiah's reign, whilst the Chaldeans invested the city, and Jeremiah was confined in the court of the prison. These circumstances show, that it must have been after that the Egyptians had retreated back to their own land, and the Chaldeans had renewed the siege a second time. Different, however, is the opinion of Usher, Prideaux, and other learned men, who suppose a prior imprisonment of Jeremiah, immediately after he had spoken to Zedekiah, as is represented, chapter xxxiv. 1-7. And the ground of this supposition seems to be, his being here in this chapter said to have been confined by Zedekiah for having spoken those words. But it does not follow from hence, that he was immediately put under confinement for the offence so given. No such thing is related, chapter xxxiv., nor expressly asserted elsewhere. On the contrary, it is expressly denied, chapter xxxvii. 4, where it is said, that at the time the message came from Zedekiah, during the temporary absence of the Chaldeans, Jeremiah was at full liberty, "for they had not cast him into prison:" Words which could not have been properly used, had he been released from prison but a very little while before. The truth, I am persuaded, is, that Jeremiah was confined by order of Zedekiah but once, and then in consequence of the disagreeable truths spoken by him, as is here reported. For it is evident, that the king, when he sent for him, (chapter xxxvii. 17,) had nothing to lay to his charge, nor does he offer to disprove the prophet's asseverations of his innocence. But he was probably mortified to perceive, that the prophet's sufferings had not made him more pliable, as he hoped to have found him, but that he still persisted in his former denunciations of evil; and, therefore, though he condescended to mitigate, he would not absolutely release him from his confinement, but committed him to the court of the prison; which accord-

CHAPTER XXXII.*

1 THE WORD WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH
IN THE TENTH YEAR OF ZEDEKIAH KING OF JUDAH :
THE SAME WAS THE EIGHTEENTH YEAR OF NEBUCHAD-NEZZAR :

2 And at that time the army of the Chaldeans laid close siege to Jerusalem, and Jeremiah the prophet was confined in the court of the prison, which belonged to the house of the king of 3 Judah. For Zedekiah king of Judah had put him in confinement, saying, Wherefore hast thou prophesied, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH, Behold, I am about to give this city into the 4 hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it. And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak with him mouth to 5 mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes. And he shall ingly became the scene of the following transaction. I trust, therefore, that this chapter and that which follows next will appear to be inserted in their proper place.

The circumstances of time and place being specified as above in the five first verses, Jeremiah relates the order he received from God to buy the field of Hanameel ; which he does in due form, and delivers the writings to Baruch to keep safely, in token of God's promise to restore the rights of possession in the land. (Verses 6-15.) Jeremiah, in a prayer to God, acknowledges his infinite greatness and power, and the wonders of his goodness to Israel, with the ungrateful and contumacious behaviour of that people, which had derived the present evil upon them ; and concludes with an humble representation of the desperate circumstances of his country, notwithstanding which he had been commanded to make the foregoing purchase. (Verses 16-25.) In reply, God asserts his own all-sufficiency ; and then goes on to avow his determined resolution to give up the city to be taken and burned by the Chaldeans, because of the many and great provocations that had been given him. (Verses 26-35.) He promises, however, in time to re-assemble his people, and bring them back to their own land, to enter into covenant with them anew, and to promote their welfare ; so that the land, though given up to desolation at present, should flourish again, and possessions be once more bought and sold, as in former time. (Verses 36 to the end.)

Verse 1. The tenth year—בשנת עשירית. The Masora here proposes to read בשנה, with the concurrence of sixteen mss. and three editions ; but בשנת is equally justifiable by usage. See chapter xlv. 2 ; li. 59, &c., &c.

Verse 4. And his eyes—The Masora here reads ועיניו. This is clearly transport Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith JEHOVAH. When ye shall fight against the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.

* See note, page 166.

6 AND Jeremiah said, The word of JEHOVAH came unto me,
7 saying, Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum thine uncle will come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field which is in Anathoth, for thine is by law the redemption for to purchase. And Hanameel my uncle's son came unto me according to the word of JEHOVAH in the court of the prison, and said unto me, Buy, I pray thee, my field which is in Anathoth, which is in the land of Benjamin; for thine is by law the inheritance, and thine the redemption: buy it for thyself. Then I knew that 9 this was the word of JEHOVAH. I bought therefore the field which was in Anathoth of Hanameel my uncle's son, and I 10 paid him the money, seventeen shekels of silver. And I had right, and is confirmed by fifty-four MSS. and seven editions, together with all the ancient versions, and the parallel passage, chapter xxxiv. 3, where we read ועיניך, and not ועיניך.

Verse 5. When ye shall fight against the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper—Three MSS., ancient ones, read וְלֹא תִצְלִיחַ; according to which the Syriac renders, “For ye shall fight against the Chaldeans, but shall not prosper.” A turn very suitable to the context.

Verse 7. Thine is by law the redemption for to purchase—See Lev. xxv. 25. מִשְׁפָּט is the “law” or “ordinance” there established, and is governed by the preposition בְּ, sunk by ellipsis at the beginning; answering to jure, or de jure, in Latin.

Verse 8. Thine is by law the inheritance—See Numbers xxvii. 11.

מִשְׁפָּט may fairly be rendered, as in our English Bible, “the right” of the redemption, and “the right” of the inheritance; jus redemptionis, jus hereditatis. See Dent. xviii. 3; xxi. 17; Ezek. xxi. 27.

Verse 9. And I paid him the money, seventeen shekels of silver—As money was anciently paid by weight, and not by tale, the verb שָׁקַל is often used simply for “to pay;” and the act of weighing in the balance or scales being specified particularly in the next verse, I have rendered וַאֲשַׁקְלָה here simply, “And I paid.” See Isaiah lv. 2; where תְּשַׁקֵּל is applied, not only to silver, which might be weighed, but to labour also, where it can only signify the “paying” or “bartering” of it in exchange, according to its supposed worth. As to the price that was paid, doubts have arisen concerning the amount of it. Seventeen shekels of silver make but about forty shillings sterling; and this has been thought too inconsiderable a price for the purchase of a piece of ground. But it should be considered, in the first place, that the quantity of land is uncertain; and next, that the circumstances of the times must have greatly tended to lessen the value of landed estates. The field in question was, at the time of the purchase, in the enemy's possession; and the purchaser well knew that he or his heirs had no chance of entering upon it till after the expiration of the seventy a deed drawn up and sealed, and I caused witnesses to witness, 11 and I weighed the money in scales. And I took the purchase deed, that which was sealed containing the assignment and 12 the limitations; and that which was open. And I delivered the purchase deed to Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the presence of Hanameel my uncle's son, and in years' captivity; so that the purchase-money was not in itself so inadequate as at first sight might be imagined. Besides, the seller, it is likely, was in immediate want of money, and could get no one else to purchase in the precarious situation things were in. He might, therefore, be glad to take what the prophet, who, doubtless, was not rich, was able to give; and who would not have thought of making the purchase, at any rate, had he not acted under the divine direction, for a special purpose. From the construction of the words הכסף ועשרה שקלים, some have been led to suppose that עשרה הכסף meant, "ten pieces of silver," of a different value from shekels; but the numerals in Hebrew are so variously disposed in different places, as to afford no certain rule of arguing from thence. Upon the whole, I should think that "seventeen shekels of silver" are most likely to be the sum here intended; only, perhaps, there may be a redundancy of the ה in הכסף, repeated by mistake, from the end of the preceding word; and in one ms. it is omitted.

Verse 10. And I had a deed drawn up and sealed, and I caused witnesses to witness—I see no reason why אכתוב and אחתום, as well as אעיד, may not be considered as in Hiphil. The formalities of a Hebrew bargain of sale are here worth noticing.

Verse 11. That which was sealed containing the assignment and the limitations, and that which was open—The deed or instrument of purchase, from what is here said, seems to have been written upon a single roll, but to have consisted of two parts; the upper part containing הכתיבה, which I conceive to be the formula, directing the assignment, or making over the property; and הדחקים, "the limitations," or description of the premises. This part was rolled up, and sealed with the seals of the parties, or, perhaps, of the public officer who attended; by which the falsification of the contents was prevented. At the bottom, which was left open, perhaps an abstract of the deed was written, and the names of the witnesses; this being for public notoriety, as the close part was reserved for evidence, in case of judicial controversy.

Verse 12. And I delivered the purchase deed to Baruch—Baruch was a scribe by profession; and it may be concluded that the attendance of such a one, skilled in the forms of law, was necessary on those occasions, both to draw up the writings, and to officiate in the capacity of a notary public with us. And to his custody, as being a public officer, the custody of the title-deeds was intrusted.

My uncle's son—In the original text we read only דודי, "my uncle;" but the LXX., Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic, render, "my uncle's son," as in the preceding verses; and seven, perhaps nine, mss. read בן דודי, or בן דודי.

the presence of the witnesses who were written in the purchase deed, and in the presence of all the Jews, who sate in the 13 court of the prison. And I charged Baruch in their presence,
 14 saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, Take these writings, this purchase deed, both the sealed, and this open deed, and deposit them in an earthen vessel, that they 15 may endure many days. For thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts the God of Israel, Yet again shall houses and fields and vineyards be recovered in this land.

16 THEN prayed I unto JEHOVAH, after I had delivered the 17 purchase deed to Baruch the son of Neriah, saying, Ah Lord JEHOVAH! Behold, thou hast made the heavens and the earth by thy great power, and by thy stretched out arm; there can 18 be nothing too hard for thee; who shewest mercy unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the

The witnesses who were written in the purchase deed—הכתובים may be taken, either actively or passively, for “those who wrote,” or, “those who were written;” and fourteen, perhaps sixteen, MSS. and four ancient editions read הכתובים; the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate also render in the passive. I prefer this, too, as the subscription of witnesses to deeds in their own handwriting appears to be a modern practice only. The ancient mode with us was this: When the instrument was drawn up, it was read in the hearing of the witnesses, (which seems to be what the prophet meant by ויאעד עדים, “and I caused witnesses to witness,”) and then the clerk, or scribe, added their names, in a sort of memorandum. See BLACKSTONE’S Commentaries, book ii. chap. 20. The same I suppose to have been the proceeding here; nor do I recollect, in any part of the sacred writings, the most distant allusion to a man’s signing his own name by way of evidence; unless it may be so inferred from our English translation of Isaiah xlv. 5, where we read, “And another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord;” instead of which the LXX., Aquila, and Symmachus agree in rendering, “And another shall write upon his hand, I belong to God;” which Bishop Lowth, in his note upon the place, has shown to be “an allusion to the marks which were made by punctures, rendered indelible by fire, or by staining, upon the hand, or some other part of the body; signifying the state or character of the person, and to whom he belonged: The slave was marked with the name of his master; the soldier, of his commander; the idolater, with the name or ensign of his god.” But though there is no allusion in the scriptures to the evidence of subscription, there frequently is to sealing, as a mode of authentication.

And in the presence of all the Jews—Nine, perhaps ten, MSS. read here וכלעמי, with the conjunction; and so the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate.

Verse 14. Take these writings—I do not think that this contradicts what is said in the note on verse 11. For הספרים may be understood of the two parts of the same roll, of which one was sealed, and the other part left open.

bosom of their children that come after them ; the greatest, 19 the mightiest God, whose name is JEHOVAH of hosts : great in counsel, and manifold in operation, whose eyes are open upon all the ways of the children of men, to give to every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings :
 20 who hast displayed signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among men ; and hast 21 made thyself a name, as at this day : and hast brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt, with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched 22 out arm, and with great terribleness ; and hast given unto them this land, which thou swarest unto their fathers to give them, 23 a land flowing with milk and honey : and they have entered in, and possessed it ; but they have not obeyed thy voice, nor walked according to thy law ; all that thou commandedst them to do, they have not done ; therefore hast thou caused all this 24 evil to befall them. Behold, the mounts are advanced unto the city to take it, and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans, that war against it, by means of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence ; and what thou hast spoken 25 is come to pass, and, behold, thou seest. Yet hast thou said unto me, O Lord JEHOVAH, Buy thee the field for money, and cause witnesses to attest ; whereas the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

Verse 18. Whose name is JEHOVAH of hosts—One ms. reads שׁוֹכֵן instead of שֹׁמֵר, and the Vulgate renders, nomen tibi. But the text, I think, needs no alteration ; for the ה is emphatic before the three words, הָאֵל הַגָּדוֹל, הַגִּבּוֹר, and we might render thus, “the God, the greatest, the mightiest, he whose name is JEHOVAH of hosts.”

Verse 20. And wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day—Twenty-seven mss. and twelve editions read וּמוֹפְתִים, as expressed at large in the next verse, where we read וּבְמוֹפְתִים. It is not meant, that God had continued on working miracles in Egypt from the time of Moses, but that the miracles which he then wrought in Egypt continued still to bear witness to his omnipotency both there, and in Israel, and among all mankind.

Verse 21. And with a stretched out arm—וּבְאֵזְרוֹ. Nine mss. omit the א. The word אֵזְרוֹ, however, occurs for זֵרוֹ once besides in the Hebrew, Job xxxi. 22.

Verse 23. According to thy law—Twenty five, perhaps twenty-six, mss., and seven editions, read, with the Masora, וּבְתוֹרוֹתָךְ, instead of וּבְתוֹרָתָךְ. Some of these mss. are of the most ancient. One ms. reads וּבְתוֹרָתְךָ. The LXX. and Arabic render in the plural number, but the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate in the singular. In ms. Pachom. the rendering is, ἐν τῇ νομῇ, instead of ἐν τοῖς ποσταγμασι.

26 THEN came the word of JEHOVAH unto Jeremiah, saying,
 27 Behold, I JEHOVAH am the God of all flesh; can any thing
 28 be too hard for me? Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH, Behold,
 I am about to give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he 29 shall take it. And the Chaldeans, that war against this city, shall enter, and shall set this city on fire, and shall burn it, and the houses, upon the roofs of which they have burned incense to Baal, and have poured out libations unto strange gods, so 30 as to provoke me to anger. For the children of Israel and the children of Judah have been but doing that which is evil in my sight from their youth: surely the children of Israel have been but provoking me to anger with the work of their own 31 hands, saith JEHOVAH. For a yoke of mine anger, and a yoke of mine indignation, hath this city been to me, from the day that they built it, even unto this day, to remove it from before me, 32 because of all the wickedness of the children of Israel, and of the children of Judah, which they have committed to provoke me to anger, they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and inhabitants of 33 Jerusalem. For they have turned unto me the back, and not the face, and when I taught them, rising early and teaching, 34 they none of them hearkened so as to receive instruction. And

Verse 30. Surely the children of Israel have been but provoking me—Four MSS. and one edition here add כי after כי, as before at the beginning of the verse.

Verse 31. For a yoke of mine anger, and a yoke of mine indignation, hath this city been to me—As I cannot construe על here as a preposition, I am led to suppose it to be the noun עול, “a yoke,” written by abbreviation, על. The metaphor, it must be confessed, is strong and singular; but the meaning is obvious enough, and suitable to the context. For as a yoke upon the neck compels the bearer to carry about the burden suspended from it; so, God says, the city of Jerusalem, because of the notorious wickedness of the people, had been as it were a yoke about his neck, having his anger and his indignation so closely connected with it, that he could not dismiss them, till they had caused an entire removal of the offensive object from before him.

Verse 33. And when I taught them—ולמד here, in the first instance, if the text be right, must be the participle present, agreeing with אלי; “they have turned the back, and not the face, unto me, even teaching them.” But this construction seems not very familiar to the Hebrew language. I therefore am inclined to suspect a fault in the text, and that, instead of ולמד אתם, we should read יאני למד אתם; and the ancient versions of the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, favour this conjecture. One MS. read at first ילמד instead of ולמד; and the י may have been the remains of יאני.

they have set up their abominations in the house which is called 35 by my name, to defile it. And they have erected the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through unto Molech; which I commanded them not, nor was it acceptable unto me; practising this abomination for to bring guilt upon Judah.

36 But now after this, thus saith JEHOVAH the God of Israel concerning this city, of which ye say, It is delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by sword, and by famine, and by 37 pestilence: Behold, I will gather them out of all the countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in mine indignation, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto 38 this place, and I will cause them to dwell securely. And they shall be unto me a people, and I will be unto them a God.
 39 And I will give them one heart and one way, to fear me continually, for the good of them, and of their children that come 40 after them. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, which I will not withdraw from their posterity, to be a Verses 34, 35. See chapter vii. 30, 31, and the notes there.

Verse 35. To cause their sons and their daughters to pass through unto Molech—Our English version runs, “to pass through the fire;” but though מֹלֵךְ is added in the text, Deut. xviii. 10; 2 Kings xvi. 3, and in several other parallel places, it is not found so here, except in two mss., nor, Lev. xviii. 21. It is, however, no doubt, to be understood. But how much is implied in thus causing the children to pass through the fire, is a point that learned men are not quite agreed in. Some suppose that the children were only dedicated to the idol-deity by a ceremony, in which fire was used without hurting them; and it is certain that דִּבְעִיר implies no more than a bare dedicating or consecrating, Exod. xiii. 12. On the other hand, by comparing other passages, and particularly the parallel ones, chapter vii. 31; xix. 4, we shall there see reason to conclude, that the children were actually burned to death in the fire, and consumed like other burnt-offerings. See Bishop Patrick’s comment on Lev. xviii. 21, and Mr. Lowth’s on chapter vii. 31. The fact, in all probability, was, that the more tender-hearted parents were content simply to dedicate their children, waving them perhaps over the fire that was burning before the idol, without doing them any corporal hurt; whilst the gloomy superstition of others prompted them to go greater lengths, and to perpetrate the most inhuman barbarities under the notion of religious worship. Both, however, were guilty of actions highly offensive to God, and provoking his resentment.

For to bring guilt upon Judah—Twenty, perhaps twenty-one, mss. and two editions read, with the Masora, דָּחַשׁ instead of דָּחַשׁ. The final שׁ is lost in the initial of the word that follows.

Verse 36. After this—לְכֵן. See note on chapter xvi. 14.

Verse 40. Which I will not withdraw from their posterity—For אֲשֶׁר the benefactor unto them ; and the fear of me will I put into their 41 heart, that they shall not depart from me. And I will rejoice over them in doing them good, and I will plant them in this 42 land assuredly, with all my heart, and with all my soul. For thus saith JEHOVAH, As I have brought upon this people all this great evil, so will I bring upon them all the good which 43 I speak concerning them. And the fields shall be bought in this land, of which ye say, It is desolate without man or beast ; 44 it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans. Fields shall men buy with money, drawing up writings also, and sealing, and causing witnesses to attest, in the land of Benjamin, and in the environs of Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the hill country, and in the cities of the plain, and in the cities of the south ; for I will reverse their captivity, saith

 JEHOVAH.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 THE WORD OF JEHOVAH CAME ALSO TO JEREMIAH A SECOND TIME, WHILST HE WAS STILL CONFINED IN THE COURT OF THE PRISON, SAYING,

LXX. seem to have read אָשִׁיבָם, ἢ οὐ μὴ ἀποστρέψω ; unless we admit of שׁוּב in Kal being used in the sense of “ turning back,” or “ bringing again ;”
 of which there are frequent instances ; see chapters xxx. 3, 18 ; xxxi. 23 ;
 xxxiii. 26 ; xlviii. 47 ; Psalm xiv. 7 ; lxxxv. 1 ; Ezek. xvi. 53 ; Amos ix. 14 ;
 &c., &c. מֵאַחֲרֵיהֶם, “ from those that come after them,” or “ their posterity.”
 So אַחֲרָיִךְ is properly rendered, “ thy posterity,” 1 Kings xxi. 21. And בְּנֵיהֶם אַחֲרֵיהֶם, “ their children that come after them,” verses 18, 39.

Verse 44. In the land of Benjamin, &c.—For these divisions of the kingdom of Judah, see chapter xvii. 26, and the note there.

CHAP. XXXIII. THIS chapter contains a prophecy, which, though applicable in some parts to the restoration of the Jews from Babylon, cannot, however, be so understood upon the whole, for reasons already touched upon in the note prefixed to chapters xxx., xxxi., and which hold equally good in the present instance.

God reveals his gracious purpose of healing the wounds of Jerusalem, restoring the captivity both of Israel and Judah, forgiving their sins, and distinguishing them with such blessings, as to strike the astonished nations with fear and trembling. (Verses 1–9.) He foretells that the land, whose desolation they deplored, should again flourish with multitudes both of men and cattle. (Verses 10–13.) He confirms his former promise of establishing a kingdom of righteousness in a branch of the house of David, and rendering it perpetual, together with the priesthood of the sons of Levi. (Verses 14–18.) He declares his covenant in this respect with David and the Levites to be as sure as the covenant of day and night. (Verses 19–22.) And,

- 2      Thus saith JEHOVAH, the doer of it,
       JEHOVAH the framer of it, who also disposeth it,
       JEHOVAH of hosts is his name.
- 3      Call unto me, and I will answer thee,
       And I will shew thee great things,
       And hidden things, which thou knewest not.

to remove the reproach of having cast off those families whom he had once distinguished by his choice, he renews his protestations of infallibly restoring the seed of Jacob, and of appointing the seed of David to rule over them for ever. (Verses 23 to the end.)

Verse 2. The doer of it—This place has been looked upon as corrupt, because the affix pronoun ה in עשה seems to be without an antecedent. Houbigant proposes two emendations; one suggested by the Syriac, where עשך is substituted instead of עשה, and also אהך for איהה, and להכינך for להכינה. But he inclines to give the preference to another taken from the LXX., who render, ποιῶν γῆν, καὶ πλασσῶν αὐτήν. Hence he infers, that the Greek interpreters read עשה יהוה האדמה instead of עשה יהוה. To give this conjecture its full force, we may add, that, instead of יהוה after עשה, one ms. has been found to read אדני, which may be thought to come somewhat nearer the word אדמה. But I am persuaded in myself, that the received reading of the text is genuine, and conceive the pronoun ה, “it,” to refer to the thing which God says: “Thus saith JEHOVAH, who himself is about to do it,” namely, what he saith. There is an instance of a similar kind to be met with, Isaiah xxxvii. 26, where the antecedent of the same pronoun ה is to be sought in the sense of the context. The whole verse may be thus rendered:—

Hast thou not heard? of old I have done it,
 Of ancient times I have also formed it; now have I brought it on;
 And thou hast been for the desolating of flourishing nations, strongly fortified cities.

The pronoun “it” here evidently refers to “the desolating of flourishing nations,” &c; for this was the very thing which God says he had “done of old, and formed in ancient times,” as Nebuchadnezzar might well be supposed to “have heard;” and this was also that which he had “brought about of late” by the agency of Nebuchadnezzar himself; who, indeed, had been vain enough to arrogate to himself the whole performance, although he had only borne the part of a subordinate minister in it. Bishop Lowth, in interpreting this verse, adopts the reading of the LXX., גוים נצים, instead of גוים גלים; and I have done the same; but, instead of “warlike nations,” I have rendered נצים, “flourishing,” from נץ, “to flourish.”

Verse 3. And hidden things—Two mss., and the celebrated printed Bible, called “Minchath Shai,” (see DR. KENNICOTT’s Dissert. General. sect. 62,) instead of ובצורה read ונצורה, which agrees with the Chaldee; and is most likely to be the true reading. See Isaiah xlviii. 6.

“לא ידעתם”—Whether this means the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, or the times of the Messiah, both had been foretold by Jeremiah as plainly as they are expressed here. Calvin answers, that his

- 4 For thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of Israel,
Concerning the houses of this city,
And concerning the houses of the kings of Judah,
Which are thrown down by the mounts and the sword,

And to fill them with the dead bodies of the men,
Whom I have smitten in mine anger, and in my wrath,

I have hid my face from this city :

I will also grant their prayer for peace and truth :

faith had been staggered. Perhaps God speaks here, not to the prophet, but to the people, who were backward to know what they might have known ; and as some presumed on false predictions in their favour, so some despaired of the true. Chapter xxxii. 36."—SECKER. Rather perhaps, "which thou didst not, nor couldst know," but by revelation.

"Verse 4. הנתצים—Rather, 'which are to be thrown down ;' as Isaiah xxvii. 13 ; Psalm cxxxvii. 8.—הרב is used for an instrument in destroying walls and forts. See 2 Chron. xxxiv. 6 ; Ezek. xxvi. 6."—SECKER. "The sword" is commonly used for "war," or "the operations of war" in general. See note on chapter i. 38. And it is very probable that some of the houses of Jerusalem had already been cast down by the enemy's warlike engines playing upon them from the mounts without.

Verse 5. That are come to make war on the part of the Chaldeans—באו is thus used with הסללות for its subject, chapter xxxii. 24. But את-כשדים must not be rendered, "against the Chaldeans ;" for it is evident those instruments of war were not employed against the Chaldeans, but in their service against the besieged. Therefore את-כשדים must either signify "on the part of the Chaldeans ;" (see chapter li. 59 ; ) or else את may be left by mistake for מאת, the initial ט being lost (as it often happens) in the same letter terminating the preceding word.

Verse 6. Behold, I will make it perfectly sound and whole—The antecedent to לה is clearly מהעיר, verse 5. The Vulgate and Chaldee render as if they had read לזה ; but the LXX and Syriac confirm the present reading, which is found in all the collated mss. and editions, except one ms., which reads לך.

And will heal them—For ורפאתם, forty-two mss. and nine editions read ורפאתים, in conformity with all the ancient versions. The antecedent of the pronoun must be sought in the next verse ; namely, the captivity of Judah and Israel. See note on verse 2.

ורפאתים—The antecedent of the pronoun must be those whom God says in the preceding verse that he had smitten, or plagued ; for it does not imply that they were slain.

I will also grant their prayer for peace and truth—עתר signifies to "pray in a devout, fervent manner." Hence עתרה may well be construed "a

And the captivity of Israel ;
And I will build them as at the first.

And I will forgive all their iniquities,
Which they have been guilty of towards me, devout and fervent prayer ;" and to " manifest to any one his petition" seems to imply the granting of it. I have therefore rendered וגליתי להם עתרה שָׁלוֹם וְאֵמֶת, "I will also grant their prayer for peace and truth;" or, will show them the blessings they have prayed for.

"עֲתָרָה—Putat Castellio legendum עֲתָרָה ; aliter frigere et cogi sententiam."
—SECKER.

Verse 7. And I will build them—For רִבְנֵיהֶם, thirty mss. and five editions read more correctly, וּבְנֵיהֶם.

"Verse 9. וְהָיְתָה—'And it shall be — unto it.'—English Bible. Rather, 'And she shall be — unto her.'"—SECKER. But וְהָיְתָה is here used absolutely, there being no feminine subject to which it can properly be referred. "It," therefore, signifies the whole matter or proceeding. See notes on chapters xlii. 16 ; lii. 3. And the sense of the passage is probably, that the restoration of God's people should afford cause to all nations to rejoice in God, and to give praise and glory to him for what he had wrought. Render, therefore, "And it shall become to me a name (or, title) of joy," &c.

That I procure unto them—All the ancient versions render as if they had read לָהֶם, instead of לָהּ, and there is one mss. that does so.

 For I will restore the captivity of the land,
 As at the first, saith JEHOVAH.

 Yet again shall there be in this place,
 That is desolate without man and beast,

 An habitation of shepherds folding sheep.

 And in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin,

 saith JEHOVAH.
- 14 BEHOLD, the days come, saith JEHOVAH,
 That I will perform that good thing,
 Which I have spoken concerning the house of Israel,
 And concerning the house of Judah in those days.

Verse 13. And in the cities of the plain—Twenty mss. read וּבְעֵרִי, and the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate likewise express the conjunction. For the divisions here enumerated, see chapter xvii. 26, and note there.

According to the direction of him that numbereth—Our English translation is, “under the hands of him that telleth them;” as if עֲלֵי־יָדַי meant the same as תַּחַת הַשֶּׁבֶט, Lev. xxvii. 32. But “passing under the rod” means only their being numbered, the shepherd striking every sheep with his rod or crook, as it passes out of the fold, and so counting them. But the expression here made use of seems to imply, that the sheep should not stray about at random, but pass according to the direction of a shepherd, who, in numbering them as they come out of the fold, at the same time points out to them with his hands the way they are to take. See note on chapter ix. 31.

עֲלֵי־יָדַי—See note on chapter v. 31, page 58.

Verse 14. Concerning the house of Israel, and concerning the house of Judah—אֶל־בֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל וְעַל־בֵּית יְהוּדָה. These two prepositions, אֶל and עַל, seem to be nearly of the same force; and we often find them applied in the same sentence, as if the variation was accounted a matter of elegance. Here, undoubtedly, no difference can be conceived between them. Some mss., however, affect an uniformity; two for אֶל reading עַל, and on the other hand, four, perhaps five, for עַל substitute אֶל.

- Of the line of David a branch of righteousness,
 And he shall execute judgment and justice in the land.
- 16 In those days Judah shall be saved,
 And Jerusalem shall dwell securely :
 And this is he, whom JEHOVAH shall call OUR RIGHTEOUS-NESS.
- 17 Surely thus saith JEHOVAH,
 There shall not be a failure in the line of David of one Sitting upon the throne of the house of Israel :

Verse 15. A branch of righteousness—After צמח צדקה, (three mss. read ימלך מלך צמח צדק) twenty-one mss. and four editions add the words ויהשכיל, “and a king shall reign and prosper,” as chapter xxiii. 5. The same is found in the Syriac and Arabic versions.

Verse 16. And this is he, whom JEHOVAH shall call OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS—This is the strict grammatical translation of the words of the text. The ancient versions seem to have been made from the parallel passage, chapter xxiii. 6, where, however, the words differ extremely, though they amount to the same sense. See the note there. Three mss. read here, וזה שמו, and one of these omits לה. It must be observed, that the ה in לה is not the feminine affix, but the masculine after the Chaldee form, which frequently occurs.

“לה—Potest pronomen punctis mutatis vel masc. esse vel fem.”—SECKER.

Verse 17. There shall not be a failure in the line of David of one sitting, &c.—From the Babylonish captivity to the coming of Christ, David was without a successor of his family sitting upon the throne of Judah or Israel, in any sense whatsoever. And from the destruction of Jerusalem to the present time, the Jews have had neither a king nor a regular priesthood belonging to their nation. So that hitherto there has been a failure and interruption both in the royal line of David, and in the sacerdotal one of Levi: A plain proof that the prophecy alludes not to any time that is already past, but respects what is to come. It is true, indeed, that, in a spiritual sense, the kingdom of Christ, the Son of David, has been for some time established over those whom the apostle calls “the Israel of God,” (Gal. vi. 16,) and the “children of Abraham,” (Gal. iii. 7,) meaning thereby all true believers, whether of the Jews or of the Gentiles. And it is true, also, that in the church of Christ there hath been a constant and uninterrupted succession of persons appointed to perform the public offices of religion in the room of, although not taken out of the family of, the priests the Levites. And the perpetuity of this kingdom and this priesthood is, I know, in the opinion of many learned expositors, looked upon as a full and authentic completion of the intention of this prophecy. This, however, seems to be spiritualizing too far, when the case admits of a more direct and literal interpretation. The days, it is evident, are not yet arrived, though they certainly will come, for the performance of God’s good promise concerning the restoration of the house of Israel and the house of Judah under Christ, their Righteousness. Admitting this, and that all the families of Israel shall again be re-established in their own possessions,

- 18 Neither shall there be a failure in the line of the priests
the Levites of one
Offering before me burnt offerings, and burning meat offerings,
And performing sacrifice continually.
- 19 THE word of JEHOVAH came also unto Jeremiah,
saying,
- 20 Thus saith JEHOVAH,
If ye can make void my covenant of the day,
And my covenant of the night,
So that they be not daily and nightly in their season :
- 21 Then shall my covenant be made void with David my servant,
That he shall not have a son reigning upon his throne ;
And with the Levites the priests, that they shall not minister unto me.
- 22 As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, what improbability is there, that the two families of David and Levi may actually revert also to their ancient privileges, subject only to the supreme authority of the Messiah, and continue to enjoy them, as it is here expressly declared, in uninterrupted succession to the end of the world ?

Verse 18. And burning meat offerings—The verb בִּקְטִיר, which properly signifies, “burning incense,” is not unfitly here applied ; because part of every meat-offering was covered with frankincense, and burned upon the altar for a memorial of sweet savour unto God. See Lev. ii 1, 2, &c. It is not necessary, however, to suppose, that precisely the same sacrifices shall continue to be offered in the Christian church, which are prescribed by the Mosaic law ; but, as that law is abrogated, we may fairly understand those sacrifices figuratively to denote the offices of a more spiritual worship substituted in their stead.

Verse 20. So that they be not daily and nightly in their season—Our translators render, “and that there should not be day and night in their season.” But in this case we should read יוֹם, and not יומם. יוֹם is the adverb, “by day,” or, “daily ;” and יוֹם-וּלְיָלָה signifies, die et nocte, “by day and by night,” or, “daily and nightly,” that is, “always,” or “continually.” So that the true construction of the words is, “that my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, be, or hold, not continually in their season.” See verse 25.

Verse 21. That they shall not minister unto me—Here מִשְׁרָתִי seems to be the infinitive verb with the affix י, and the preposition כ prefixed ; answering to מִשְׁרָתִי, used just before. But in the next verse מִשְׁרָתִי, followed by אֲתִי, is the participle plural in Pihel.

“Verse 22. מִשְׁרָתִי אֲתִי—Fortè delendum אֲתִי, cum præcedat חֲתִי. Vid. ver. 21.”—SECKER.

Nor the sand of the sea measured :
 So will I multiply the seed of David my servant,
 And the Levites that minister unto me.

- 23 THE word of JEHOVAH came also unto Jeremiah, saying, 24 Hast thou not observed what this people have spoken,
     saying,
     The two families which JEHOVAH had chosen, he hath even rejected them ?
     And they have treated my people with scorn,
     So as not to look upon them any more as a nation.
 25 Thus saith JEHOVAH,
     If my covenant be not daily and nightly,
     The ordinances of heaven and earth if I have not appointed :
 26 Then will I cast off the seed of Jacob, and David my servant,
     So as not to take of his seed to be rulers
     Unto the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob :
     But I will reverse their captivity, and I will have mercy upon them.

Verse 24. The two families which JEHOVAH hath chosen—It is plain from verse 26, that the two families here meant are those of Jacob and David ; though some have supposed the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah, others the royal and sacerdotal families of David and Levi, to be intended.

“הָעָם הַזֶּה—‘This people,’ that is, some of them.—GROTIUS. But the distinction between ‘this people’ and ‘my people’ in this verse, is remarkable.”—SECKER.

“מִהֵינָה—‘That they are no more,’ &c.”—SECKER.

Verse 25. If my covenant be not, &c.—In this verse the Vulgate and Syriac both read וְחֻקֹּת, but the conjunction is not found in any of the collated mss. or editions. The same versions agree in expressing the negative לֹא but once ; but the Vulgate omits it after וְאֵם, the Syriac before שְׂמִתִּי. But the text needs no alteration ; all that is necessary being to extend the influence of וְאֵם, “if,” to the latter clause as well as to the former. It would, perhaps, be more clear if we read וְחֻקֹּת, but the Asyndeton appears to be often matter of choice. The covenant is that above-mentioned of the day and of the night, (verse 20,) which there is understood to be daily and nightly, that is, perpetual without interruption ; and the ordinances of heaven and earth are the stated order of things in both, such as the system of numberless stars in the heavens, and the unmeasurable sand of the sea, (verse 22,) all which God claims to be of his ordering and appointment.

Verse 26. But I will reverse their captivity—For אֲשׁוּב, nineteen mss. and three editions read with the Masora, אָשׁוּב. But it is questionable at least whether אֲשׁוּב be not as proper. See note on chapter xxxii. 40. These

CHAPTER XXXVIII.*

1 AND Shephatiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchijah, heard the words which Jeremiah used to
 2 speak unto all the people, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH, He that remaineth in this city shall die by sword, and by famine, and by pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; and his life shall be unto him as spoil, and he
 3 shall live. Thus saith JEHOVAH, This city shall surely be words, we may observe, are the regular inference of a syllogism, the minor of which is suppressed, but may be thus supplied: "But my covenant is daily and nightly, and I have appointed these ordinances, therefore I will not cast off the seed of Jacob," &c., but I will reverse their captivity, and will have mercy upon them.

"כִּי אֶשׁוּב—'When I shall,' &c."—SECKER.

CHAP. XXXVIII. THIS chapter (to which are subjoined the four last verses of chapter xxxix. on account of their obvious connexion) contains the last transaction in which Jeremiah was prophetically concerned before the taking of Jerusalem. The princes of Judah, offended with Jeremiah for repeating to the people who visited him in the court of the prison, the message he was charged with; (chapter xxi. 9, 10;) cause him to be cast into a deep and miry dungeon. (Verses 1-6.) Ebed-melech obtains an order from the king, and takes him up out of it. (Verses 7-13.) The king consults with him in private; he seeks to persuade the king to give himself up to the king of Babylon's officers, as the only means of safety to himself, and of preserving the city from destruction. (Verses 14-23.) The king assures to him his life, but requires him not to divulge the secret of his conference to the princes; who inquire about it, but receive an evasive answer; and Jeremiah remains in the court of the prison. (Verses 24-28.) The piety of Ebed-melech is rewarded with a promise of personal safety amidst the ensuing public calamities. (Chapter xxxix. 15-18.)

Verse 1. Used to speak—This is the proper sense of מִדְּבַר, the conjugation Pihel specially denoting the diligent or repeated performing of an action.

Verse 2. And by famine—Six MSS. read וּבְרָעָב, as found in the text, chapter xxi. 9. The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate also express the conjunction.

And by pestilence—The common editions of the LXX. totally omit וּבְדִבְרָא; but in the ms. Pachom. we find, kai en thavartō. Aquila and Theodotion express the same. Drusius also cites from one of the Greek interpreters, though without a name, kai en loimō.

Shall live—Here also, as in chapter xxi. 9, the Masoretes propose to read וְחָיָה, instead of יָחִיָּה, and have the concurrence of fifteen, perhaps sixteen, delivered into the hand of the army of the king of Babylon, 4 who shall take it. Then said the princes unto the king, Let this man, we pray thee, be put to death, forasmuch as he weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking unto them according to these words: surely this man is not one that 5 seeketh the welfare of this people, but the hurt. And Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your power; for the king can 6 carry no point in competition with you. Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchijah, the king's son, which was in the court of the prison; and they let Jeremiah down with cords: and in the dungeon there was no water, but mire; and Jeremiah sunk in the mire.

mss. and two editions, with the margin of the Bible of Felix Pratensis. But how properly soever the ו may have been prefixed there, the use of it seems to be superseded here by the extraordinary addition of וחי at the end of the verse. It may be observed frequently, that, in the repetition of a message or command, the repeater is not always scrupulous in adhering to the precise form of words, provided there be no essential alteration in the sense and general meaning. This will appear on a further comparison between this verse and chapter xxi. 9, in the latter of which we find ונפל and הצרים עליכם, which are not here; as, on the contrary, וחי, which is here, is not to be found there. The meaning of the words, "And his life shall be unto him as spoil," see explained in note on chapter xlv. 5.

Verse 3. The army of the king of Babylon—Four mss. omit חי, in conformity with chapter xxi. 10; but it is expressed in all the ancient versions.

Verse 4. Let this man, we pray thee, be put to death—Seven mss. and two ancient editions omit את before הוא.

He weakeneth—Three mss. and two editions read מרפה, which is certainly right, and not מרפא, which comes from רפא, "to heal," and suits not with this place. The gutturals א and ה are often substituted by mistake for each other, and the contrary mistake to this is made in reading להרפה instead of להרפא, chapter xix. 11.

Verse 5. For the king can carry no point in competition with you—The king evidently speaks this in disgust with the princes for endeavouring to frustrate his clemency. He had once rescued Jeremiah out of their hands, and taken him under his royal protection; but his prerogative, he tells them, was likely to avail but little when opposed by their obstinate and repeated importunities. The power was, in reality, theirs, and not his.

Verse 6. The king's son—See note on chapter xxxvi. 26.

In the dungeon there was no water, but mire—This account of the dungeon accords with what was mentioned in the note on chapter xxxvii. 16. For if the dungeon was in the open court, and left open like a well at top, there being no other way of giving it air and light, the falling of rain, mixing with the earth below, would occasion mud in a place where the sun's rays could not reach to dry up the moisture.

- 7 And Ebed-melech the Cushite, an eunuch, who was then in the king's house, heard that they had cast Jeremiah into the dungeon; and the king was sitting in the gate of Benjamin.
- 8 Then Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and
- 9 spake to the king, saying, My lord the king, these men have done amiss all that they have done unto Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have caused to be thrown into the dungeon: for he will die upon the spot for hunger, when there is no longer
- 10 any bread in the city. Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Cushite, saying, Take along with thee thirty men from hence, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the
- 11 dungeon, before he die. And Ebed-melech took the men along with him, and went into the king's house under the store-room, and took from thence torn rags and worn out rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.
- 12 And Ebed-melech the Cushite said to Jeremiah, Put now these torn and worn out rags under thine armholes under the cords.
- 13 And Jeremiah did so. And they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.
- 14 And king Zedekiah sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the third entrance, which is in the house of JEHOVAH. And the king said unto Jeremiah, I am about to

Verse 7. The king was sitting in the gate of Benjamin—No doubt, he sate there to hear the complaints of the people, and to administer justice; the courts for that purpose being usually held in the gates of the city. See Bishop Lowth's note on Isaiah xxix. 21.

Verse 9. When there is no longer any bread in the city—Our translators render, "For there is no more bread in the city." But the city does not appear to be reduced as yet to that extremity; for when that came to be the case, the king fled, and the city was taken. See chapter lii. 6, 7. But Ebed-melech supposed with reason, that when the bread failed, Jeremiah must be starved with hunger in the dungeon; for he would of course be neglected, and have it not in his power to make those shifts for subsistence which persons at liberty might avail themselves of.

Verse 10. Take along with thee—בִּידֶךָ. Literally, "In thine hand." See the like phrase, 1 Sam. xvi. 2.

בִּידֶךָ—"Under thy command." Sub ductu et imperio tuo. (Num. xxxi. 49.)—MICHAELIS.

Verse 11. Torn rags—For הִסְחָבוֹת, the Masoretes, with five mss., read סִחְבוֹת סָחַב signifies, "to tear," as מִלָּח does, "to grow rotten by wearing."

Verse 14. Into the third entrance—מִבְּיֹאֵר properly signifies, "an avenue," or "entrance" to any place. It appears that, from the king's house to the temple, Solomon formed a communication, which was called, "the king's 15 ask thee a question ; hide not any thing from me. And Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, When I have told thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death ? and when I shall have 16 given thee counsel, thou wilt not hearken unto me. Then king Zedekiah sware unto Jeremiah in secret, saying, As JEHOVAH liveth, who made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, nor will I deliver thee into the hand of these men that 17 seek thy life. And Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, Thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of hosts, the God of Israel, If thou wilt ascent by which he went to the house of JEHOVAH," and was of so excellent a structure, that it is reckoned as one of the things that raised the queen of Sheba's astonishment at Solomon's wisdom and magnificence. (1 Kings x. 5.) This we find to have extended to one of the western gates of the temple, called "Shallecheth," which is said to have been "by the causeway of the going up," or "ascent," above-mentioned. (1 Chron. xxvi. 16.) Now this I conclude to have been the first entrance. From the gate Shallecheth there must have been a passage the whole length of the south side of the building of the sanctuary, extending straight forward, till the king faced about to the left, in order to go to his place in the court, where he is said to have stood before the altar, 2 Chronicles vi. 12. From the gate Shallecheth, therefore, to this turning, I look upon to have been the second entrance, and the same that is called "the king's entry without," 2 Kings xvi. 18. The third entrance, then, I conceive to be the continuance of the same approach from the turning above-mentioned, till it terminated with "the brasen scaffold on which Solomon stood in the midst of the court, right over against the altar, in the presence of the whole congregation of Israel." (2 Chron. vi. 12, 13.) This is expressly called מבוֹא, "the entrance," where "the king stood at" (or upon) "his pillar," 2 Chron. xxiii. 13; the pillar being, most probably, the support on which the scaffold or pulpit rested. This entrance, I am also inclined to think, is that which is called מוֹסֵף הַשַּׁבָּת, "the covert of the Sabbath," 2 Kings xvi. 18; being covered over for the king's accommodation, when he appeared in the temple on the sabbath-day, at the head of the congregation of Israel. To this, as the most retired place, king Zedekiah may be understood to have brought the prophet, in order to confer with him with the greatest privacy. For the better understanding of what is here laid down, I would refer the reader to the plan of Solomon's temple in Ancient Univ. Hist. vol. i. book 1, chap. 7.

Verse 16. Who made us—אֵת אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה. The Masoretes omit אֵת, and so do fifteen mss. and three editions.

Of these men that seek thy life—הָאֲנָשִׁים הָאֵלֶּה אֲשֶׁר מִבְקָשִׁים אֶת־נַפְשִׁיךָ. The ancient Bodleian ms., No. 1, instead of אֲשֶׁר מִבְקָשִׁים, reads הַמִּבְקָשִׁים; three other mss. also read הַמִּבְקָשִׁים, and one מִבְקָשִׁים, with a rasure of a letter at the beginning. This last and one of the three omit אֲשֶׁר הָאֵלֶּה.

Verse 17. The God of hosts—Six mss. omit the word אֱלֹהֵי before צְבָאוֹת; nor do any of the ancient versions appear to countenance more than according to the usual form, יְהוָה צְבָאוֹת.

indeed go forth unto the chieftains of the king of Babylon, then shall thy soul live, and this city shall not be burned with 18 fire; but thou shalt live, thou and thy family. But if thou wilt not go forth unto the chieftains of the king of Babylon, then shall this city be delivered into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire; and thou thyself shalt 19 not escape out of their hand. And king Zedekiah said unto Jeremiah, I am apprehensive of the Jews, who are gone over to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and 20 they insult me. And Jeremiah said, They will not deliver thee. Hearken, I beseech thee, unto the voice of JEHOVAH, in what I speak unto thee, that it may go well with thee, and 21 that thy soul may live. But if thou refuse to go forth, this is 22 the thing that JEHOVAH hath revealed unto me: Even, behold, all the women that are left in the house of the king of Judah, shall be brought forth unto the chieftains of the king of Babylon, and these shall say, Thy familiar friends have set thee on, and prevailed over thee; they have set thy 23 foot fast in the mire, and are turned away back. And all thy wives, and thy children, shall they bring out to the Chaldeans; and thou thyself shalt not escape out of their hand, but by the hand of the king of Babylon shalt thou be taken, and thou
 24 shalt be the means of burning this city with fire. Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these 25 words, and thou shalt not die. But if the princes shall hear that I have conversed with thee, and shall come unto thee, and shall say unto thee, Tell us, we pray thee, what thou hast spoken unto the king, conceal not from us, and we will not put thee to death; and what the king hath said unto thee:

But thou shalt live—For וחיית, before אחר, seven, perhaps eight, mss. and one in the margin read וחיית; and seven others, perhaps eight, and two editions, read וחייתה.

Verse 22. They have set thy foot fast in the mire, and are turned away back—Twenty-four mss. and the margin of Van der Hooght's Bible read רגליך. The Syriac, and Vulgate, and the Alex. edit. of the LXX. also express the word in the plural number; but the LXX., according to the Vatican edition and Chaldee, confirm the present reading in the singular. Our translators have rendered, "Thy feet are sunk in the mire," according to the punctuation of השבעי, which makes it passive in Hophal; but it is rather to be taken in Hiphil, and referred to the king's "familiar friends," as the subject of the verb, who, having brought him into difficulties, went off, and left him in the lurch. This was particularly true of his Egyptian allies. See chapter xxxvii. 7.

26 then shalt thou say unto them, I offered humbly my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return
 27 to the house of Jonathan to die there. Accordingly all the princes came to Jeremiah, and questioned him; and he told them according to all those words, which the king had commanded. And they said no more, for the conversation was not 28 heard. And Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken, and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

CHAPTER XXXIX.*

15 AND the word of JEHOVAH came unto Jeremiah, whilst he 16 was confined in the court of the prison, saying, Go, and speak unto Ebed-melech the Cushite, saying, Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I am about to bring my words upon this city for harm, and not for good; and they 17 shall be before thy face in that day. But I will deliver thee

Verse 26. I offered humbly my supplication before the king—Literally, “I let fall,” or “prostrated, my petition.” See note on chapter xxxvi. 7.

Verse 27. For the conversation was not heard—הִדְבָּר I consider to be the conversation that had passed between the king and Jeremiah; which no one having heard but they two, the princes had nothing to object against what Jeremiah told them.

Verse 28. And he was there when Jerusalem was taken—Three mss. for ויהי read ויהי, which, according to the rule of the Vau conversive, would be right. Some copies begin the next chapter with these words; the Syriac omits them entirely. The LXX. express ויהי at the beginning of chapter xxxix., but omit the three words that follow in the Hebrew.

“ויהי כאשר נלכדה ירושלם—Non extant apud LXX. Desunt etiam in Syr. et videntur delenda, utpote a præcedentibus bis scriptis orta.”—SECKER. As some mss. read ויהי, if instead of that we suppose the reading to have been ויהי, it will afford a good sense, being rendered, “For he was alive when Jerusalem was taken.” But supposing the four last verses of chapter xxxix. to have followed immediately, as I have inserted them, which is clearly their natural order, these words may then have been prefixed to them in the following manner:—“And it came to pass about the time that Jerusalem was taken, that the word of JEHOVAH came unto Jeremiah,” &c.

CHAP. XXXIX. Verse 16. I am about to bring—Twenty-one mss. and three editions read, with the Masora, מביא instead of מבי. The א is lost both here and chapter xix. 15, in the same letter, which begins the following word.

And they shall be before thy face in that day—That is, Thou shalt see the accomplishment of them.

* See note, page 166.

in that day, saith JEHOVAH; and thou shalt not be given into 18 the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid. But I will surely rescue thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword; but thy life shall be unto thee as spoil; because thou hast trusted in me, saith JEHOVAH.

CHAPTER XXXIX.*

1 IN the ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon and all his 2 army unto Jerusalem, and they laid siege to it. In the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, on the ninth 3 day of the month, the city was broken into. And all the chieftains of the king of Babylon entered, and posted themselves in the gate of the centre; Nergal-sharetzar Samgar, Nebo-sarsechim Rab-saris, Nergal-sharetzar Rab-mag, and all

Verse 18. But thy life shall be unto thee as spoil—See note on chapter
 xlv. 5.

THIS chapter begins with an account of the taking of Jerusalem, and relates the flight of Zedekiah, and the particulars of his punishment, after that he was taken and brought before the king of Babylon; and also the burning of the city, and removal of the people, a few of the meanest only excepted, to Babylon. (Verses 1-10.) Jeremiah is released, and kindly treated in consequence of a special charge from Nebuchadrezzar.
 (Verses 11-14.)

Verse 2. In the eleventh year—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate place a conjunction at the beginning of this verse; but it does not appear in any of the collated MSS. and editions.

Verse 3. The gate of the centre—The city of Jerusalem stood upon two hills, Sion to the south, and Acra to the north, with a deep valley between them. "The gate of the centre," as the term seems plainly to import, was a gate of communication in the middle of the valley between the two parts of the city, sometimes called "the higher" and "the lower city." The Chaldeans entered the city on the north side by a breach in the walls, and immediately rushing forward, and posting themselves in this gate, in the very heart or centre of the city, they became thereby masters at will of the whole. Zedekiah, with his troops, perceiving this, fled out of the opposite gate on the south side.

Nergal-sharetzar Samgar, Nebo-sarsechim Rab-saris, Nergal-sharetzar Rab-mag—As Nergal-sharetzar occurs twice, the next word seems to be an addition to the name by way of distinguishing the persons. And I am inclined to think that רב־סריס, רב־סריס, and רב־סריס, were all titles of office, as we find רב־טבחיס, which we render, "captain of the guards," or it might be, "commander in chief of the forces," was the title of Nebuzar-

* See note, page 166.

4 the rest of the chieftains of the king of Babylon. And it came to pass, when Zedekiah king of Judah, and all the men of war, saw them, they fled, and went forth out of the city by night by the way of the king's garden, through the gate between the two walls: and they went forth toward the
5 plain. And the army of the Chaldeans pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho; and they took him, and brought him up to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon at Riblah in the land of Hamath: and he proceeded judicially
6 against him. And the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zede-adan. What tends to confirm this is, that we find afterwards, verse 13, נְבֻזַּשַׁדְאֵן and נְבֻזַּשַׁרְמִי placed after נְבוּשַׁבְנֵן and רַב־סָרִיס without a conjunction intervening, in the same manner as רַב־טַבָּחִים follows נְבוּזַרְאֲדָן, although the conjunction ו precedes both נְבוּשַׁבְנֵן and נְבֻזַּשַׁרְמִי. But if Rab-saris be a title of office, (the Syriac supposes it to be "master of the eunuchs,") then Nebo-sarsechim, here, and Nebu-shazban, verse 13, mean, probably, the same person, notwithstanding the difference of the names. Nor is it to be wondered at, that there should be such a variation in the name of a subject, when the name of the king himself is varied in like manner, being sometimes found "Nebuchadnezzar," and sometimes "Nebuchadrezzar;" not to mention a number of other differences that occur in the different copies. Nergal was an idol worshipped by the Cuthites. (2 Kings xvii. 30.) Nebo, a Babylonish Deity. (Isaiah xlv. 1.) And we find it usual to prefix the name of those idols to the names of persons of rank; as Nebu-chadnezzar, Nebo-nassar, Nebu-zaradan, Neriglissar, or Nergal-assur, who was one of Nebuchadnezzar's successors; Bel-shazzar, another of them; and Daniel the Jew had the name of Bel-teshazzar given him, "after the name of my god," says Nebuchadnezzar, speaking of him, Dan. iv. 8. I conceive, therefore, that we have in this verse the names of three only of Nebuchadnezzar's captains, with their titles of distinction, Nergal-sharetzar Samgar, Nebusarsechim Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharetzar Rab-mag; and again, verse 13, the names and titles of three, Nebu-zaradan Rab-tebachim, or "captain of the guards," Nebu-shazban Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharetzar Rab-mag. What offices Samgar, Rab-saris, and Rab-mag denote, I pretend not to determine.

Verse 4. Through the gate between the two walls—We find mention made of two walls, one exterior to the other, 2 Chron. xxxii. 5. Probably between these two walls might have been a private postern, through which the king and his followers might slip out unperceived by the besiegers, who surrounded the city, and, undoubtedly, kept a strict watch at the principal gates.

And they went forth—For וַיֵּצֵא, seven mss. and the first printed edition read וַיֵּצְאוּ; and in one ms. a letter is erased at the end of וַיֵּצֵא. The Syriac, Theodotion, Vulgate, and the Arabic ms. Oxon. all represent the verb in the plural.

Verse 5. And he proceeded judicially against him—See note on chapter i. 16. Zedekiah had sworn allegiance to the king of Babylon, and was, there-

- kiah at Riblah before his eyes, and all the nobles of Judah did 7 the king of Babylon slay. And he put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, to carry him to 8 Babylon. And the house of the king, and the houses of the people, did the Chaldeans burn with fire, and they brake down 9 the walls of Jerusalem. And the residue of the people that remained in the city, and the deserters who had come over to him, even the residue of the people, those that remained,
 Nebuzaradan captain of the guards transported to Babylon.
 10 But the meanest of the people, who had no property, Nebuzaradan captain of the guards left in the land of Judah, and gave them at the same time vineyards and fields.
- 11 And Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had given a charge concerning Jeremiah to Nebuzaradan captain of the guards, 12 saying, Take him, and have thine eyes upon him, and do him no manner of harm; but according as he shall say unto thee,
 13 so deal thou with him. So Nebuzaradan captain of the guards sent, and Nebu-shazban Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharectzar Rabmag, and all the commanders of the king of Babylon; they 14 sent, I say, and took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison, and delivered him to Gedaliah, the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, to conduct him home; and he dwelt among the people.

fore, liable to be tried and condemned as a rebel and traitor. See 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13; Ezek. xvii. 16, 18.

Verse 8. And the houses of the people—Literally, “And the house of the people,” where הָעָם, “the people,” may denote every private citizen or subject taken distributively; so that as the community is made up of king and subject, this expression, “the house of the king, and the house of the people, or subject,” is equivalent to “all the houses of Jerusalem” without distinction. See chapter lii. 13.

Verse 9. And the residue of the people, &c.—Two sorts of persons are here distinguished: 1. The residue of the people that remained in the city, when it was taken: 2. Those who had deserted during the siege; and these together are included under one general name, “even the residue of the people, those that remained.” Compare chapter lii. 15.

Verse 12. But according as—וְכַד is omitted by the Masora, and by sixteen mss. and one edition. Yet וְכַד seems full as proper as כִּי singly.

Verse 14. To conduct him home—It appears from chapter xl. 1, that Jeremiah had been first carried off to Ramah with the rest of the captives.

CHAP. XL. THE five following chapters contain a particular account of what passed in the land of Judah from the taking of Jerusalem to the retreat of the people into Egypt; and the prophecies of Jeremiah concerning them there.

CHAPTER XL.

1 THE WORD WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH FROM JEHOVAH, AFTER THAT NEBUZARADAN CAPTAIN OF THE GUARDS HAD TAKEN HIM AND LET HIM GO FROM RAMAH; FOR HE HAD BEEN BOUND WITH CHAINS AMONG ALL THE CAPTIVITY OF JERUSALEM AND JUDAH, WHO WERE CARRIED AWAY CAPTIVE TO BABYLON.

2 AND the captain of the guards took Jeremiah, and said unto him, JEHOVAH thy God hath denounced this calamity against
3 this place. And JEHOVAH hath come and done according as he spake; because ye had sinned against JEHOVAH, and not
4 obeyed his voice; therefore hath this thing befallen you. And now, behold, I have loosed thee this day from the chains which were upon thy hands. If it seem good unto thee to come with me to Babylon, come; and I will set mine eyes upon thee: but if it seem evil unto thee to come with me to Babylon, forbear: behold, the whole land is before thee; according as it seemeth good, and according as it seemeth right in thine eyes to go, go thither; and while it continueth so, it shall not be “Verse 1. הַדְבַּר אֲשֶׁר הָיָה—The word of the Lord is not delivered till chapter xlii. 7.”—SECKER. All the intermediate part, therefore, from בָּקָחְתוּ אֹתוֹ must be considered as related in a long parenthesis.

HAD TAKEN HIM AND LET HIM GO—Most interpreters have understood בָּקָחְתוּ אֹתוֹ of Nebuzaradan’s having first taken Jeremiah as a captive unto Ramah. But if the order of the sentence be well observed, as well as the more common use of the verb לָקַח, it will, I think, rather appear, that those words relate to his “taking,” or having him brought to him, in order to give him his discharge.

Verse 3. And JEHOVAH hath come and done—יָבֵא may as well be the future in Kal as in Hiphil; and God is frequently said to “come” in person to execute his purposes. See Exodus xx. 24. And, indeed, the word “visit” implies “coming,” either to show mercy, or to inflict punishment.

Hath this thing—Twenty-six mss., three editions, and the Babylonish Talmud, read הַדְבַּר; in two other mss. a letter is erased in the place of ה.

Verse 4. Thy hands—Twenty-three, perhaps twenty-four, mss. and eight editions read יָדְךָ instead of יָדֶיךָ. The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate also express the plural number.

And while it continueth so, it shall not be set aside—וְעוֹדֵנִי לֹא יָשׁוּב. Interpreters seem much perplexed about the explanation of these words; but by connecting them at the end of this verse with the words preceding, the sense, I think, becomes perfectly clear. וְעוֹדֵנִי, “and while it is still” good and right in thine eyes, לֹא יָשׁוּב, “it shall not turn back,” or “be set aside;” no one shall compel thee to take a different course.

- 5 set aside. Return therefore to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people : or else, whithersoever it seemeth right in thine eyes to go, go. And the captain of the guards gave him provisions, and a gratuity, and dismissed him. And Jeremiah went unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpeh, and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.
- 7 Now when all the captains of the forces, which were in the open country, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor over the land, and that he had committed to his charge men, and women, and children, even certain of the poor of the land, of those who were not carried away captive to Babylon : then they came to Gedaliah in Mizpeh, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan, the sons of Kareah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah the
- 9 Maachathite, they and their men. And Gedaliah the son of “Verse 5. וְעֹדֵנִי לֹא־יָשׁוּב—Vide omnino Prolegomena Grab.”—SECKER. Perhaps instead of יָשׁוּב we should read יֹשֵׁב or יוֹשֵׁב, and then Nebuzaradan may be supposed to proceed in his speech thus: “And until it” (namely, “the land,” for אֶרֶץ is sometimes masculine as well as feminine; see chapter xxv. 12) “be settled, do thou also return to Gedaliah, and dwell with him in the midst of the people.” See note on chapter i. 13. This Nebuzaradan advises the prophet to do for his security, in case he chose to continue in the land; but still leaves him at full liberty to go and do as he pleased.

Verse 7. Of those who were not carried away, &c.—In two MSS. for מַאֲשֵׁר we read only אֲשֵׁר, which seems more agreeable to the LXX. and other ancient versions.

Verse 8. And Johanan and Jonathan—The LXX. have only καὶ Ἰωαννὰν υἱὸς Καρῆ; save that in MS. Pachom. after Καρῆ, or rather Καρῆ, follows καὶ Ἰωανθάν. Two MSS. omit וַיִּוְנָן, and it is erased in two others. One MS. omits וַיִּוְנָן. Thirteen MSS. and one edition read בָּן for בְּנֵי; and the Chaldee reads בַּר in the singular number.

Ephai—The Masora reads עֵפַי for עֹפַי, and so do fifteen, perhaps sixteen, MSS. and three editions. In two MSS. and the first printed edition we read only עֵפַי. But the LXX. rather countenance עֹפַי, rendering it Ἰωφε; in the Alexandrian edition Ὠφετ, and in MS. Pachom. Ὠφεθ.

And Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah the Maachathite—הַמַּעַכְתִּי is, doubtless, a patronymic, and, probably, bespeaks a descendant of Maachah, Caleb's concubine. (1 Chron. ii. 48.) The name of Jezaniah's father appears to have been Hoshaiah, (chapter xlii. 1,) and it has, most probably, been lost out of the text in this place.

- Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, sware unto them and to their men, saying, Fear not to serve the Chaldeans; dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you. As for me, behold, I will reside at Mizpeh, to stand before the Chaldeans who shall come to us; but do ye gather in wine, and summer fruits, and oil, and put into your vessels; and dwell in your cities, which ye have occupied. Also when all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the children of Ammon, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had given a remnant to Judah, and that he had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, governor over them; then all the Jews returned from all the places whither they had been driven, and came to the land of Judah unto Gedaliah to Mizpeh; and they gathered in wine and summer fruits in great abundance.
- And Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the open country, came unto Gedaliah to Mizpeh; and they said unto him, Art thou well aware that Baalis the king of the children of Ammon hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to take away thy life? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not. And Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in private at Mizpeh, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and smite Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no one shall know. Wherefore should he take away thy life, and all Judah be dispersed, those that are gathered unto thee, and the remnant of Judah perish? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, By no means do this thing; surely thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

CHAPTER XLI.

- AND it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael, the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, and great officers of the king, even ten men, with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpeh; and they eat bread there together in Mizpeh. Then Ishmael the son of Verse 9. Fear not to serve the Chaldeans—The ancient Bodleian MS., No. 1, has a singular reading here, מעבור for מעבור, “Fear not to come over to the Chaldeans.” This makes a very good sense; but the text needs no alteration.

Verse 10. To stand before the Chaldeans—That is, to be ready to receive and obey their commands.

Verse 16. By no means do this thing—For רעש the Masora reads רעשה, with the concurrence of twenty-one MSS. and three editions.

Nethaniah arose, and the ten men that were with him, and they smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had 3 made governor over the land. And all the Jews that were with him, with Gedaliah in Mizpeh, and the Chaldeans that
 4 were found there, the men of war, did Ishmael smite. And it came to pass the second day after he had murdered Gedaliah,
 5 whilst no one knew it, that there came men from Shechem, and from Shiloh, and from Samaria, fourscore persons, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with an oblation and incense in their hand, to 6 bring to the house of JEHOVAH. And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went out to meet them from Mizpeh, weeping all along as he went; and it came to pass when he met them, that he said unto them, Come ye to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.
 7 And it came to pass, when they were come into the midst of CHAP. XLI. Verse 5. And from Shiloh—Seven MSS., with all the ancient versions, prefix the conjunction ו. “Shiloh” is differently written in the Hebrew copies, שִׁילֹה, שִׁלֹה, שִׁלֹ, שִׁלֹה.

Having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves—All these signs of mourning and great affliction (see Job i. 20, and notes on chapter xvi. 6) seem to have been manifested on account of the calamity which had befallen the city and temple.

To bring to the house of JEHOVAH—Though the temple was destroyed, it may be presumed that the people continued to offer up sacrifices and offerings on the spot where it stood, as long as they remained in the land; for we find this began to be their practice soon after their return, before the temple was rebuilt. See Ezra iii. 2, 3, &c.

“It is not said in the preceding history that the house of God was burned, though, chapter xxxix. 8, the burning of the houses is mentioned. But it is said, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19, and it is intimated, chapter i. 28; li. 11. That it was burned on this occasion, is allowed. According to 2 Kings xxv. 8, this happened on the seventh day of the fifth month; but, chapter lii. 12, on the tenth day of the fifth month; which fifth month Jeremiah, chapter i. 3, mentions as the time of Zedekiah’s captivity. Now, what is here told happened in or after the seventh month; within which time these persons must have known that the temple was burnt. But, they were going to the place where it stood; as the Jews are said, Ezra iii. 8, to come to the house of God at Jerusalem before it was rebuilt; and they set up an altar, and offered sacrifices there. (Verses 3, 6.) Kimchi and others think that Gedaliah had set up an altar at Mizpeh. But were such places called ‘the house of the Lord?’ And if Jeremiah had meant thus, would he not have explained himself? Vignoles, indeed, (vol. i., p. 507, &c.) seems to prove that the temple was not burned till thirteen months after the city was taken. Yet he alleges not this passage.”—SECKER. JOSEPHUS says, the temple was burnt on the first day (τῇ νομηνίᾳ) of the fifth month of the eleventh year of Zedekiah’s reign. (Ant. lib. x., cap. 8., edit. Hudson.)

the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah massacred them at 8 the pit, he, and the men that were with him. But ten men were found among them, that said unto Ishmael, Slay us not, for we have hidden stores in the fields, wheat, and barley, and oil, and honey. He forbore therefore, and slew them not among 9 their brethren. Now the pit, into which Ishmael cast all the dead bodies of the men whom he had smitten along with Gedaliah, the same which king Asa had made on account of Baasha

Verse 7. Massacred them at the pit—Our English translators have rendered, “slew them and cast them into the midst of the pit,” adding the words, “and cast them,” which are not in the Hebrew, in order to make out the sense. And Mr. Lowth, in his note on the place, undertakes to justify the ellipsis as agreeable to the Hebrew idiom. Others have supposed that the verb וישליך, or וישליכו, has been lost out of the text, it being expressed in the Syriac, and also in the Complutensian edition of the LXX. by καὶ εμβάλεν, in the ms. Pachom. by καὶ ἐβρίψε, and in one other of the Greek versions, cited in the Hexapla, by καὶ ἐβρίψεν αὐτούς. But, on the other hand, it may be observed, that חוץ is not expressed either by the LXX. or Syriac, and I am therefore inclined to believe that, instead of an omission, we have here an undue repetition of this word חוץ after אל, which was occasioned by reading אל-חוץ העיר just before. In this case, by rejecting חוץ, and reading only אל-הבור, we may render, “at,” or, “near the pit.” So we read, 2 Kings x. 14: וישחטום אל-בור בית-עקד; “and slew them at the pit of the shearing-house.” So also 1 Maccab. vii. 19, a book said to have been translated out of Hebrew, we find, καὶ ἐβυσεν αὐτούς εἰς τὸ φρεαρ τὸ μέγα, which our English translators have also rendered, “and when he had slain them, he cast them into the great pit;” but in the Hebrew original it was doubtless as we suppose it here, וישחטום אל-הבור.

“אל-חוץ העיר”—The same ellipsis see 1 Maccab. vii. 19; Psalm lxxiv. 7; lxxxix. 39. Kai ἐβρίψεν εἰς τὸ φρεαρ. Cod. Reg.; Vide Prolegom. Grab.—SECKER.

Verse 9. Now the pit—בור signifies a “bason, cistern,” or “reservoir;” a large pit for receiving rain water, which Asa, who built and fortified Mizpeh at the time he was at war with Baasha, king of Israel, (1 Kings xv. 22,) caused to be made in the midst of the city, in order that the people might not be in want of so necessary an article in case of a siege. Reservoirs of this kind were much in use in Palestine, as JEROME tells us in his Commentary upon Amos iv. 7, 8. His words are, “In his enim locis, in quibus nunc degimus, præter parvos fontes, omnes cisternarum aquæ sunt.” And JOSEPHUS testifies the advantage of them to the besieged, when he tells us, that when Masada was reduced to the greatest distress for want of water, it was relieved by a fall of rain in the night, which filled all the reservoirs. (Ant. lib. xiv., cap. 14., edit. Hudson.) Each private family seems also to have had one of these pits or reservoirs for its own use: “Drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;” בורו, “his pit,” or “reservoir,” says Rabshakeh to the people of Jerusalem, Isaiah xxxvi. 16.

Along with Gedaliah—ביר, “by the hand,” or “side” of him. So ביד is used, chapter xxxviii. 10. See note there.

king of Israel, Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with 10 the slain. And Ishmael took captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpeh, the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpeh, whom Nebuzaradan captain of the guards had committed to the charge of Gedaliah the son of Ahikam; even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah took them captive, and set forth to pass over to the children of Ammon.

11 But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that 12 Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done, they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and 13 came up with him at the great waters that are in Gibeon. And it came to pass, when all the people that were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the 14 forces that were with him, they rejoiced. And all the people that Ishmael had taken captive from Mizpeh faced about, and 15 came back again to Johanan the son of Kareah. But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, 16 and went to the children of Ammon. Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people, whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpeh, after the murder that had been committed upon Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, strong men, men of war, and women, and children, and eunuchs, whom he had brought back from Gibeon;
 17 and they went, and dwelt in Geruth-Chimham, which is near

“בְּיַד גִּדְיֹהוּ—Φρεαρ μεγα. LXX. Legerunt בור גדול. Rectè, ni fal-

 “Now the pit, into which Ishmael cast all the dead bodies of the men whom he had slain, (it was the great pit, which king Asa had made on account of Baasha king of Israel,) Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with the slain.”
 The addition of the relative pleonasticè together with the substantive is a Hebrew idiom not unfrequent. BuxT. Thes. l. ii. cap. 8. Or might not the true reading have been בְּעֵד גִּבְלִיהוּ?

Verse 12. The great waters that are in Gibeon—Called “the pool, or lake, of Gibeon,” 2 Sam. ii. 13.

Verse 16. After the murder that had been committed upon Gedaliah—I take הָכָה to be here the infinitive in Hophal.

Verse 17. In Geruth-Chimham—For גֵּרֻת כִּמְהָם twenty-six mss. and four editions read, with the Masora, כִּמְהָם. Geruth-Chimham signifies, “the habitation of Chimham,” and was so called, as the Chaldee Paraphrase informs us, from its having been given by David to Chimham the son of Barzillai the Gileadite, 2 Sam. xix. 38, 40. But I have followed the example 18 Bethlehem, in order to proceed to go into Egypt, out of the reach of the Chaldeans; for they were afraid of them, because that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 THEN all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah, and all the people,
 2 from the least even unto the greatest, came near, and said unto Jeremiah the prophet, Let, we beseech thee, our supplication come humbly before thee, and pray for us unto JEHOVAH thy God, in behalf of all this remnant, (for we remain a few out
 3 of many, as thine eyes do see us) that JEHOVAH thy God may inform us of the way wherein we shall walk, and of the 4 thing which we shall do. And Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard; behold, I will pray unto JEHOVAH your God according to your words; and it shall be that whatsoever thing JEHOVAH shall answer you, I will declare to you;
 5 I will not keep any thing from you. And they said to Jeremiah, Let JEHOVAH be a true and faithful witness among us, if according to whatsoever JEHOVAH thy God shall commis-
 6 sion thee to say to us, we do not so act. Whether good or bad, we will obey the voice of JEHOVAH our God, to whom we send thee; that it may be well with us, when we shall have obeyed the voice of JEHOVAH our God.
 7 And it came to pass at the end of ten days, that the word
 8 of JEHOVAH came unto Jeremiah. Then called he for Johanan the son of Kareah, and for all the captains of the forces that were with him, and for all the people, from the least even unto 9 the greatest, and said unto them, Thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of Israel, unto whom ye sent me to lay your supplication 10 humbly before him: If ye will indeed remain in this land, of the LXX., in rendering the whole as a proper name, affixed to the place from a circumstance that belonged to it so long ago.

CHAP. XLII. Verse 2. Let our supplication come humbly before thee—See note on chapter xxxvi. 7.

Verse 6. To whom we send thee—For אָנִי fifty-seven, perhaps sixty-seven, MSS. and six editions read, with the Masora, אֲנִי.

Verse 10. If ye will indeed remain—All the ancient versions agree in rendering שׁוּב חִשְׁבוּ, as both from the verb יָשַׁב, although the infinitive of יָשַׁב according to the anomaly is שִׁבַּח; it is, however, found יָשַׁב, written then will I build you, and will not pull down; and I will plant you, and will not pluck up; for I repent me of the evil 11 that I have done unto you. Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid; be not afraid of him, saith JEHOVAH; for I will be with you to save you, and to deliver 12 you out of his hand. And I will shew mercies unto you; and he shall have mercy upon you, and shall settle you in your 13 own land. But if ye say, We will not remain in this land, so as not to hearken unto the voice of JEHOVAH your God,

 14 saying, No; for we will go into the land of Egypt, that we may not see war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor be
 15 hungry for bread; and we will reside there: Even now therefore hear the word of JEHOVAH, O remnant of Judah, Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, If ye will 16 altogether set your faces to enter into Egypt, and will go to sojourn there, and the thing shall be; the sword, of which ye are afraid, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt; and the famine, of which ye are apprehensive, shall there follow 17 close after you into Egypt; and ye shall die there. And it shall be that all the men, who have set their faces to go into defectively for ישוב, 1 Sam. xx. 5, according to the form of regular verbs; and may either have dropped the י by accident here, or it may have been taken away by Aphæresis. But I see no reason why שוב may not be considered as the gerund of שוב, “to return,” and so be rendered with תשובו, “if going back ye will remain;” that is, “if ye will go back to your former habitations, and remain in this land.” Only it must be confessed, that the usual Hebrew idiom is the repetition of the same verb.

Verse 12. And shall settle you in your own land—Both the Syriac and Vulgate seem to have considered השוב as written defectively for הושוב; and it most probably was so; for the persons addressed are supposed not to have left their own land; the king of Babylon, therefore, might more probably be said to let them remain, or to confirm their settlement there, than to bring them back to a place which they had never quitted.

“וְהָשִׁיב—Και επιστρέψω υμας, LXX.; ‘Et habitare faciam,’ Vulg., Syr. Potest minori mutatione legi וְהָשִׁיב, ‘et sinet vos habitare.’ Confer cap. xliii. 3. Sed fortè וְהָשִׁיב idem notat, ut ver. 10. שוב idem quod שבת. Vel אדמה de fundo uniuscujusque intelligendum est; ut Gen. xlvii. 22.”—SECKER.

Verse 16. And the thing shall be—That is, if ye shall carry your resolve into execution. Compare chapter lii. 3; Isaiah vii. 7; xiv. 24; where also the verb is used in the feminine, as it is here. On the contrary, the verb is always masculine, when the design is to express the certainty of a prediction taking place, as announced in words that follow; as may be seen in places without number.

Verse 17. And it shall be that all the men—Instead of ויהיו, the ancient

Egypt to sojourn there, shall die by sword, and by famine, and by pestilence; and there shall not one of them remain, or 18 escape from the evil that I bring upon them. For thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel; As mine anger and my wrath hath been poured out upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem: so shall my wrath be poured out upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt; and ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach, and ye shall not see this 19 place any more. The word of JEHOVAH concerning you, O remnant of Judah, Go ye not into Egypt, ye shall know assuredly;
 20 for I have testified to you this day. Surely ye have practised deceit against your own souls: for ye sent me unto JEHOVAH your God, saying, Pray for us unto JEHOVAH our God; and according to all that JEHOVAH our God shall say,
 21 so declare unto us, and we will do. And I have declared unto you this day, but ye have not hearkened unto the voice of JEHOVAH your God, nor to any thing with which he hath 22 commissioned me unto you. Now therefore ye shall know assuredly, that by sword, and by famine, and by pestilence shall ye die in the place, whither ye have chosen to go to sojourn.

Bodleian ms., N<sup>o</sup>. 1, reads יִהְיֶה; which is more agreeable to the rule of the ו conversive. But perhaps we ought rather to read יִהְיֶה.

And by famine—Six mss. read וּבָרָעַב, and so the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate. But the LXX. omit וּבָרָעַב, as chapter xxxviii. 2, which, however, is expressed in ms. Pachom. by kai en thavara, as it is also by Theodotion. See again, verse 22.

Verse 19. The word of JEHOVAH ye shall know assuredly—וְבֵר is not a verb here, as our English translators have rendered it, but a noun, and governed in the accusative by יָדַע חֲדָעוּ. The meaning is, “Ye cannot plead ignorance of the divine command, for I have solemnly declared it to you this day.”

Verse 20. Surely ye have practised deceit against your own souls—Twenty-two mss. and five editions read with the Masora הִתְעִייתֶם, which is certainly right. The deceit they had practised, the prophet tells them, would certainly turn to their own disadvantage.

Verse 22. And by famine—Thirteen mss. and three editions read here, וּבָרָעַב, as do also the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate. Here also וּבָרָעַב, which is omitted in the common editions of the LXX., is expressed in ms. Pachom. by the words kai en thavara, and so likewise in the versions of Aquila and Theodotion. See above on verse 17.

God, with which JEHOVAH their God had commissioned him
 2 unto them, all these words; that Azariah the son of Hoshai-ah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the proud men, said, speaking unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsehood; JEHOVAH our God hath not sent thee to say, Ye shall not go into Egypt 3 to sojourn there. But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans to 4 slay us, and to carry us away captive to Babylon. So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of JEHOVAH, to remain in 5 the land of Judah. But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, who were returned from all the nations, whither they had been 6 driven, to dwell in the land of Judah; the men, and the women, and the children, and the king's daughters, and every person whom Nebuzaradan captain of the guards had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, and 7 Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah; and they went into the land of Egypt; for they obeyed not the voice of JEHOVAH: and they came as far as Tahpanhes.
 8 Then came the word of JEHOVAH unto Jeremiah in Tah-9 panhes, saying, Take in thy hand great stones, and hide them in the clay in the brickkiln, which is at the entrance of the house of Pharaoh in Tahpanhes, in the sight of some men of CHAP. XLIII. Verse 2. Azariah the son of Hoshai-ah—The Syriac here reads “Jezaniah the son of Hoshai-ah,” as chapter xlii. 1, and there can be little doubt that the same name is intended here, the variation being no greater than is to be found frequently in the use of proper names in scripture. The name יוניה is written יאזניהו, 2 Kings xxv. 23; from which עזריה may be found without farther deflection than the usage of the prophet in other instances may seem to justify. Coniah and Jeconiah are the same name, without and with the י at the beginning; and so are Nebuchadnezzar and Nebuchadrezzar, where the נ and ר are used indiscriminately. With the like variations יאזניה becomes אזריה; and the א and ע are but different modes of aspiration, between which the modern Jews at least make so little distinction, as to express them both nudo vocalis sono. Hence we may conclude יוניה, יאזניהו, and עזריה to be but different enunciations of one and the same name.

Verse 7. Tahpanhes—That is, Daphnæ Pelusiacæ. See note on chapter ii. 16.

Verse 9. In the sight of some men of Judah—Literally, “In the sight of men Jews;” which implies indefinitely some of that nation; not, as our present translation runs, “the men of Judah,” as if the presence of all the emigrants was required; for in that case the reading would, at least have been, האנשים היהודים, with the definite article prefixed.

- 10 Judah. And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon my servant, and I will set his throne above these stones which I have hidden, and he shall spread forth his splendor over them. And he shall come and smite the land of Egypt, those that are for death, with death; and those that are for captivity, with captivity; and 11 those that are for the sword, with the sword. And I will kindle a fire in the houses of the gods of Egypt; and he shall burn them, and shall carry them away captive; and he shall clothe

Verse 10. And he shall spread forth his splendor over them—I cannot find any ground for rendering שפירו (so the Masora reads with the concurrence of fourteen, perhaps sixteen, mss. and three editions, instead of שפירו,) “his tent” or “pavilion;” for שפר signifies no more than “beautiful, elegant, splendid;” and therefore I understand the words here to denote, that Nebuchadrezzar should there display all the splendour and magnificence of his royal state; or if something more particular be intended, it would be, that, as he sate upon his throne, his royal robes should spread themselves, and cover the place where those stones lay. The LXX., according to the Vatican edition, render, τα σπλα επ’ αυτους. The Alexandrian edition and ms. Pachom. τα σπλα αυτου.

“The Greek writers make no mention of any conquest of Egypt by the Babylonians, but make Apries overcome by Amasis. See chapter xlv. 30. It is thought the Egyptian priests would not tell them what was not for the honour of their country. The conquest mentioned, chapter xvi. 2, was before this, and under Necho; and for the truth of it, and of further ones made by Nebuchadnezzar in Africa, GROTIUS on chapter xvi. 2, refers to 2 Kings xxiii. 29, xxiv. 7, to Strabo, Megasthenes, Josephus, Berosus. The last, he says, affirms that Nabopollassar, father of Nebuchadnezzar, had part of Egypt. The two first, I suppose, only mention the succession of the kings. See hereafter on chapter xlv. 30.”—SECKER.

Verse 11. And he shall come—Fifteen mss. and two editions, with the Masora, for וּבֹא, read וּבֹא.

Verse 12. And I will kindle a fire—The LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate render the verb in the third person, as if they had read וְהָצִיַּת; but it is not so found in any of the collated mss. And the same phrase occurs in several other passages of this prophet, (chapters xvii. 27; xxi. 14; xlix. 27; l. 32,) in all which God speaks of himself as the agent or prime mover; as he does here, no doubt, with design to inculcate this necessary and important lesson, that in all that is performed here below, both the plan is his, and the power of carrying it into execution, whatever other instruments he may choose to employ as the subordinate ministers of his providence. The other verbs which follow are to be referred to Nebuchadrezzar, as acting under the divine commission and authority.

“וְהָצִיַּת—Kai kavsei, LXX., Syr., Vulg.; quasi legissent וְהָצִיַּת. Rectè, ut videtur.”—SECKER.

- himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd clotheth himself with his garment; and he shall go forth from thence in peace.
- 13 And he shall break in pieces the images of the house of the Sun, which is in the land of Egypt; and the houses of the gods of Egypt he shall burn with fire.

CHAPTER XLIV.

- 1 THE WORD WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH CONCERNING ALL THE JEWS THAT DWELT IN THE LAND OF EGYPT, THAT DWELT AT MIGDOL, AND AT TAHPANHES, AND AT NOPH, AND IN THE COUNTRY OF PATHROS, SAYING :

- 2 THUS saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; for, behold, they are a desolation this day, and there is no inhabitant in them, because of their wickedness which they have committed to provoke me to anger, in going to burn incense for to serve strange gods,

He shall clothe himself with the land of Egypt—This expression seems to denote, that he should appropriate to himself, and carry off the riches of the land of Egypt; or, as we say, load himself with the spoils of it, and go off as quietly as a shepherd wraps his garment about him, and goes about his business. See Ezekiel xxix. 19.

Verse 13. The house of the sun—The LXX. render בית שמש, Heliopolis, that is, “the city of the sun,” where, as we learn from HERODOTUS, (lib. ii. cap. 59,) the Egyptians celebrated a grand festival annually in honour of the sun, who had a temple there. But בית שמש seems rather to mean the temple itself, in which the images of their deity were erected.

“CHAP. XLIV. Verse 1. לֹא לֵבָל—Sic Versiones. Fortè tamen לֵבָל. Sed sic לֵבָל—על, cap. xlvi. 1.”—SECKER. Two MSS. read לֵבָל.

AT MIGDOL, &c.—Migdol is mentioned, Exodus xiv. 2, as situate near the Red Sea. But I do not take this to be the place here intended. Migdol properly signifies “a tower,” and may, in all probability, have been given as a name to different cities in Egypt, where there was a distinguished object of that kind. The city of Magdulus is mentioned by Herodotus, Hecataeus, and others, and placed by Antoninus at the entrance of Egypt from Palestine, about twelve miles from Pelusium. This was too far distant from the Red Sea to be in the route of the Israelites; but its situation in the neighbourhood of Tahpanhes, or Daphnæ, and its distance from Judea, favour the supposition of its being the “Migdol” here spoken of. For then, as BOCHART observes, we shall find the four places mentioned exactly in the order of their respective distances from that country; first, Migdol, or Magdulus; secondly, Tahpanhes, or Daphnæ; thirdly, Noph, or Memphis; and, lastly, the district of Pathros, or Thebais. See BOCHART, Phaleg. (Lib. iv. cap. 27.)

4 whom they knew not ; they, ye and your fathers. I sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early and sending, saying, Do not, I pray you, this abominable thing which 5 I hate. But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, to turn from their wickedness, and not to burn incense unto 6 strange gods. Therefore hath my wrath been poured out, and mine anger, and hath been kindled against the cities of Judah, and against the streets of Jerusalem ; and they are become a 7 desolation and a waste, as at this day. And now thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of hosts, the God of Israel ; Wherefore do ye commit great evil against your own souls, to the cutting off among you of man and woman, child and suckling, out of 8 the midst of Judah, without leaving a remnant of you ; in provoking me to anger with the works of your own hands, in burning incense to strange gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye are gone to dwell ; that there may be a cutting off of you, and that ye may become a curse and a reproach among all 9 nations of the earth ? Have ye forgotten the wickednesses of your fathers, and the wickednesses of the kings of Judah, and the wickednesses of the princes thereof, and your own wickednesses, and the wickednesses of your wives, which they have committed in the land of Judah, and in the streets of 10 Jerusalem ? They have not been contrite unto this day, neither have they feared, neither have they walked in my law, nor in my statutes, which I set before you, and before your

Verse 3. They, ye and your fathers—One ms. omits המה, and six mss. omit אחם. But the text, I conceive, is in no need of any alteration, the words, “they, ye and your fathers,” being added, in order to specify who “they” were, who are said to have committed the wickedness ; “they,” namely, “ye and your fathers.” Two mss. read ואחם, “even ye,” &c.

Verse 6. And a waste—Eight mss. read ולשמה, with the ו prefixed ; and all the ancient versions express the copulative.

Verse 7. Against your own souls—Twenty-eight mss. and three editions, besides the London Polyglott, read, נפשותיכם, instead of נפשתכם ; and seven mss. and one edition נפשותיכם.

Verse 9. And the wickednesses of the princes thereof—It is very evident that the present reading, נשי, “his wives,” must be wrong. The true reading seems to be pointed out by the LXX., who render, και των ακων των αρχωντων. That the wickednesses of the princes or subordinate magistrates should follow the mention of the wickednesses of the kings, is very natural. See verses 17, 21. It is therefore not improbable, that for נשי, the original word was שרי, or perhaps, נשיאי, which, being contractedly written נשיאי, might have been corrupted into נשי. Two mss. omit

11 fathers. Therefore thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I set my face against you for harm, even to 12 cut off all Judah. And I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed in the land of Egypt;
 they shall fall by the sword, by famine shall they be consumed, from the least even unto the greatest; by the sword and by famine shall they die; and they shall become an execration, 13 and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach. And I will visit upon them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have visited upon Jerusalem, with sword, and with famine, and with 14 pestilence. And the remnant of Judah, those who are come into the land of Egypt with a view to sojourn there, and to return into the land of Judah, whither they set their minds upon returning, to dwell there, shall not have one escaper or survivor; whereas none shall return but escapers.

נשי ואת רעתם; ואחת רעות—נשי ואת רעתם; and three
 mss. omit נשי ואת רעתם.

“Apocryphus LXX.; quasi legissent שריכם. Leviori mutatione legeretur שריי; nam principes sunt et regis et populi.”—SECKER.

“Verse 11. כלי יהודה—That is, ‘all the Jews’ who fled into Egypt, of whom also it is said, chapter xlii. 17, that none should remain; meaning that but a few should, as appears on comparing verses 14, 28.”—SECKER.

Verse 12. They shall fall by the sword, by famine shall they be consumed—
 So I render conformably to the received reading of the text. But twenty-eight, perhaps twenty-nine, mss. and one edition, for ברעב, read וברעב; and all the ancient versions express the copulative ו.

“The words may be rendered thus: ‘Consumed in the land of Egypt:
 They shall fall by the sword, they shall be consumed by the famine; from the least unto the greatest by sword and famine shall they die.’”—
 SECKER.

And an astonishment—Here also thirty mss. and six editions read וישמה in conformity with the ancient versions. See chapter xlii. 18.

Verse 13. And with famine, and with pestilence—Here again all the ancient versions, with thirteen mss., read וברעב, with the copulative. Here, also, וברב is omitted in the Vatican edition of the LXX., but expressed in the Alexandrian, and in ms. Pachom. by the words καὶ ἐν θανάτῳ. See notes on chapter xlii. 17, 22.

Verse 14. And the remnant of Judah, &c.—It is evident from verse 28, that some Jews were to escape the general destruction in Egypt, and to return into their own country, although but a few; and the same thing is implied in the latter sentence of this verse. But the former part of this verse excludes out of the number of escapers every individual of those that were called properly “the remnant of Judah;” those that had set their faces to enter Egypt to sojourn there in opposition to the express command of God, upon a presumption that they knew better than God how to consult

- 15 Then all the men, who knew that their wives had burned incense unto strange gods, and all the women that stood by, a great company, even all the people that dwelt in the land of 16 Egypt in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying, As for the word which thou hast spoken unto us in the name of JEHOVAH,
 17 we will not hearken unto thee. But we will surely perform what is gone forth out of our mouth, in burning incense unto the regency of the heavens, and pouring out libations thereunto; like as we did, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, when we had plenty of bread, and were prosperous, 18 and saw no adversity. But from the time we left off to burn their own restoration. The few, then, who were destined to escape, and to return back to the land of Judah, were to be such as had come into the land of Egypt in a less offensive manner, and chanced to be there when the storm burst upon them.

“פליטים—Ἀνασσεσσωμενοι, LXX. This word and σωζομενοι answer often to פליטים and פליטה. Hence σωζομενοι, in the New Testament. Translate thus:—‘And none of the remnant of Judah shall escape or remain, which are come to sojourn here in the land of Egypt, and to return into the land of Judah, on which they set their heart to return to dwell there.’ For this is the natural construction, and the Vulgate, Syriac, and Chaldee follow it; and שם signifies ‘here’ of necessity, both in this place and Numb. xxxii. 26.”—SECKER. I have pretty nearly followed the above translation, on a supposition that all was right in the text. But it ought to be observed, that the LXX. render του επιστρεψαι εις γην Ιουδα, as if for ולשוב, they had read לשוב, without the conjunction; and this is the reading of three mss., one a pretty ancient one. One ancient ms. omits שם after לגור, and neither the LXX. nor Vulgate acknowledge it. Also thirteen mss. read בארץ יהודה, which all the versions favour. ב was probably dropped by means of the same letter preceding in לשוב. With these alterations, if allowed, I would propose to render, “And of the remnant of Judah, who are come to sojourn in the land of Egypt, there shall not be an escaper or survivor to return into the land of Judah, where they set their minds upon returning to inhabit; for there shall none return but escapers.” By “escapers” it is evident are meant such individuals as have had the particular good fortune to save themselves by flight from the general destruction.

Verse 17. The regency of the heavens—See note on chapter vii. 18. Eleven mss. and two editions read למלאכת; one ms. למלאכת אחרים; in three others the כ is dilated upon a rasure. Again, verse 18, twelve, perhaps thirteen, mss., besides one in the margin, and one edition, read למלאכת, and in two mss. the כ is dilated upon a rasure. Again, verse 19, thirteen, perhaps fourteen, mss. read למלאכת, and in three the כ is dilated upon a rasure. It is to be observed that in these places the LXX. render, τη βασιλειαν του ουρανου; whereas, chapter vii. 18, they have rendered the same words, τη σπατια του ουρανου.

incense unto the regency of the heavens, and to pour out libations thereunto, we have been in want of every thing, and 19 have been consumed by the sword and by famine. And when we burned incense unto the regency of the heavens, pouring out also libations thereunto, did we, exclusively of our men, make cakes for it, worshipping it, and pouring out libations thereunto?
 20 Then spake Jeremiah unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, even to all the people, who had returned him
 21 an answer, saying, The incense which ye have burned in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land with them, hath not JEHOVAH remembered? and hath 22 it been acceptable unto him? But JEHOVAH could no longer

Verse 19. Exclusively of our men—By the law of Moses, the men had an independent power of binding themselves by any religious vow or obligation; but the vows of the women were not binding, without the knowledge and consent of their fathers and husbands; but if the father or husband knew of the vow, and did not signify his dissent at the time, his consent was presumed, and the vow stood firm and irrevocable. (Num. xxx. 1-16.) This appeal, therefore, to the concurrence of their men, must be considered as coming from the female part of the assembly only, who thereby appear to declare, that since they were thus authorized by those who alone had a legal right to control them, they should not submit to any other restraint upon their inclinations. It is to be observed, that מקטרים is of the masculine gender, because אנחנו includes both the men and women, who, in some degree, joined together in this idolatrous worship; and from this joint concern it is, that the women argue the consent of the men. The women, however, seem to have taken the most active part in the business, and the men to be rather passively concerned. See what follows in note on verse 25.

“להעצבה—Non extat apud LXX., Syr.; ‘ad colendum eam,’ Vulg.; ‘idolo,’ Chald. Rectè.”—SECKER.

And pouring out—For והסך, eleven mss. and two editions read וילהסך, and two mss. להסך.

“Verse 21. זכר יהוה—Ουχι του θυμαματος, εμνησθη Κυριος; LXX., Syr.; quasi legissent—הקשרת-אתה, quod et cum verbo sequenti convenit.”—SECKER.

Or hath it been acceptable unto him—והעלה על-לבו. That is said to be על-לב, “near,” or “according to the heart” of any one, which is pleasing or acceptable to him: Thus Ruth, ii. 13, “Thou hast spoken according to the heart of thine handmaid,” על-לב שפחתך, “what is agreeable or pleasing to her;” so again, 2 Sam. xix. 7. Accordingly, that thing is said to “ascend” or “come unto” or “upon the heart” of any one which he approves and delights in: Thus, “All that came into Solomon’s heart,” 2 Chron. vii. 11, means all that was agreeable to him, or that he liked to bear, because of the wickedness of your doings, because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is your land become a desolation, and an astonishment, and a 23 curse, so as to be without an inhabitant at this day. Because ye have burned incense, and because ye have sinned against JEHOVAH, and have not obeyed the voice of JEHOVAH, nor walked according to his law, and to his statutes, and to his testimonies; therefore hath this calamity befallen you, as at this day.

24 Moreover Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear ye the word of JEHOVAH, all Judah, that are 25 in the land of Egypt: Thus hath JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, spoken, saying, As for you and your women, they have even spoken with your mouths, and with your hands have ye fulfilled, saying, We will surely perform our vows which we have vowed, to burn incense to the regency of the heavens, and to pour out libations thereunto; they will surely make good your vows, they will surely accomplish 26 your vows. Therefore hear ye the word of JEHOVAH, all do; and, 2 Kings xii. 5, "All the money that cometh into any man's heart," אשר יעלה על לב-איש, is, "all that he is willing or desirous to bring into the house of JEHOVAH;" so, chapter vii. 31, the burning of the children in sacrifice is said to be a thing which God had not commanded, "nor did it ever come unto his heart," ולא עלתה עלי-לבי, that is, as has been before explained, it was "not what he desired, or in any wise approved or delighted in." הקטר is here the infinitive mood of the verb with the article prefixed, used as a noun, and is properly to be rendered, "the burning of incense."

Verse 25. As for you and your women, &c.—The different genders have not been sufficiently attended to in the explications that have been hitherto given of this verse; they ought, however, to have been carefully distinguished, as such a distinction seems to be the proper key to let us into the true meaning of the text; for it cannot be imagined that a writer of any tolerable accuracy would jumble the genders together in such a promiscuous manner as they would be found here, supposing the same persons to be all along intended. In the version I have endeavoured to preserve the distinction; and the sense resulting therefrom appears to be this, that, though the women were the immediate actors in the idolatrous vows and service, the men would still be considered as having a principal share in the guilt, forasmuch as they made the acts of the women their own, by not preventing what, without their allowance, could not have been carried into effect. See the preceding note on verse 19.

They will surely accomplish your vows—Three, perhaps four, mss. read, with the Chaldee, נסכיכם, "your libations," instead of נזריכם, in the last instance; and with that reading we must render, "They will surely perform your libations."

Judah, that dwell in the land of Egypt; Behold, I have sworn by my great name, saith JEHOVAH, that my name shall no more be called upon by the mouth of any man of Judah, saying, As JEHOVAH liveth, throughout all the land of Egypt.

27 Behold I will watch over them for evil, and not in kindness; and they shall be consumed, every man of Judah which is in the land of Egypt, by the sword, and by famine, until there

28 be an end of them. And the escapers from the sword, that shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah, shall be few in number; and all the remnant of Judah, that are come into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know

29 whose word shall stand good, mine or theirs. And this shall be the sign unto you, that it is I that visit upon you in this place, to the end that ye may know that my words shall be

30 surely verified upon you to your hurt: Behold, I will deliver Pharaoh-Hophra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of them that seek his life; like as I have delivered Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon his enemy, and who sought his life.

CHAPTER XLVI.*

1 THE WORD OF JEHOVAH WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH
THE PROPHET CONCERNING THE NATIONS.

Verse 30. Pharaoh-Hophra king of Egypt—This prince is the same that is called by profane authors, Apries; and his unfortunate end, in exact conformity with this prediction, is related by HERODOTUS, lib. ii. cap. 169, and by DIODORUS SICULUS, lib. i. pag. 43, edit Rhodomanni, 1604.

“By the enemies of Pharaoh, thus distinguished from Nebuchadnezzar, some think that Amasis and the rebellious subjects of Apries are meant. Jeremiah might have reasons for not explaining whom he alluded to; or there might be Egyptians in Nebuchadnezzar’s army who sought Apries’s life, as is hinted, chapter xlv. 26. But the Egyptian king and his enemy here must surely be the same as chapter xliii. 9, 10, and therefore must be Apries and Nebuchadnezzar. Indeed, if Amasis called in Nebuchadnezzar, he may be jointly meant. Josephus says, Nebuchadnezzar killed the king of Egypt after taking Jerusalem, but mentions not Amasis. Herodotus says, Amasis killed him, and mentions neither Nebuchadnezzar nor any foreigner assisting; nor doth any Greek historian. See a little before, on chapter xliii. 10.”—SECKER.

OF EGYPT.

CONCERNING THE ARMY OF PHARAOH-NECHO KING OF EGYPT, WHICH WAS BY THE RIVER EUPHRATES AT CARCHEMISH, WHICH NEBUCHADREZZAR KING OF BABYLON DEFEATED, IN THE FOURTH YEAR OF JEHOIAKIM THE SON OF JOSIAH KING OF JUDAH.

3 ORDER ye the buckler and shield,
And move on to battle.

CHAP. XLVI. Verse 1. THE WORD OF JEHOVAH, &c.—This verse is a general title to the collection of prophecies contained in this and the five following chapters. The nations spoken of are the same of whom an enumeration is made, chapter xxv. 19–26. Thirteen, perhaps fourteen, mss. and eight editions read כל־הגוֹיִם, “all the nations.” These prophecies were not delivered all at the same time: To some the date is annexed; in others it is left uncertain.

“The difference of style between the following prophecies and the preceding is remarkable.”—SECKER.

Verse 2. OF EGYPT—In this chapter are two distinct prophecies concerning Egypt. The first appears to have been delivered at the time that the Egyptian army lay along the banks of the Euphrates, waiting to oppose the entrance of Nebuchadnezzar into Syria, in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Judah. The two armies came to an engagement near the city of Carchemish, the same which Pharaoh-Necho was going against when he was opposed by king Josiah, (2 Chron. xxxv. 20,) and which is supposed to be that which AMMIANUS calls Carcusium. (Lib. xxiii. cap. 5.) The event of the battle proved very unfortunate to the Egyptians, who were routed with a prodigious slaughter; as is here foretold by the prophet, in a very animated style, and with great poetic energy and liveliness of colouring. In the third and fourth verses the mighty preparations of the Egyptians for war are described; which occasion the prophet, who foresees the defeat, to express his astonishment at an event so contrary to what might have been expected; but he accounts for it by ascribing it to the disposition of the Almighty, who had spread terror all around, and had decreed that neither swiftness nor strength should avail the owners, so as to save them from the impending overthrow. (Verses 5, 6.) In the verses that follow next, the king of Egypt is represented as beginning his march with all the ostentation and insolence of presumed success. He is compared to a mighty river,—the Nile, or the Euphrates,—when it swells above its banks, and threatens to overwhelm the country with ruin and desolation. (Verses 7, 8.) He is heard calling aloud to the nations of which his army is composed, giving them the signal for action, and rousing them to deeds of desperate valour. (Verse 9.) But all in vain; for the time is come for God to avenge himself of his ancient foes; they are doomed to slaughter, to fall a bloody sacrifice on the plains of the north. (Verse 10.) The whole concludes with an apostrophe to the daughter of Egypt, whose wound is

- 4 Harness the horses ; and mount, ye horsemen ;
And stand forth with helmets ;
Make bright the spears, put on the coats of mail.
- 5 Wherefore have I seen these in dismay ?
Put to the rout, even their mighty ones are beaten down ;
And they are fled amain, and have not looked back.
Fear is on every side, saith JEHOVAH :
- 6 Let not the swift flee away ;
Neither let the mighty escape ;
Northward by the side of the river Euphrates
They have stumbled, and shall fall.
- 7 Who is he that riseth up like a river,
Whose waters swell like floods ?
- 8 Egypt riseth up like a river,
And like floods do his waters swell.
He saith, I will rise, I will cover the land,
I will destroy the city, and those that dwell therein.
- 9 Mount ye the horses, and deal furiously ;

pronounced incurable, and her disgrace universally known ; forasmuch as the number of her warriors have served only to augment the general disorder, and more effectually to destroy each other.

“According to Daniel i. 1, Nebuchadnezzar came to Jerusalem, which was after smiting Pharaoh, in the third year of Jehoiakim. But ‘came’ may mean only ‘went.’ VIGNOLES (vol. ii. page 426) thinks he beat Pharaoh after the Chaldeans had taken Jerusalem ; which seems to me improbable.”—SECKER. See note on chapter xxii. 19.

Verse 5. Fear is on every side, saith JEHOVAH—These words ought rather to be connected with the following, which, being spoken imperatively, can only be understood as coming from the mouth of God. “Fear” seems to be put, by metonymy, for danger ; so that the words, taken all together, imply, that, from the danger which surrounded them on all sides, it was the divine decree, that neither the swift should escape by flight, nor the strong be able to extricate himself by any exertions of valour.

Verse 8. Do his waters swell—The ancient versions seem all to have read here מימיו, as in the preceding verse. I am inclined to think that the י has been dropped by accident after מימ ; and that, instead of מימ ויאמר, we should read, מימיו יאמר ; although the versions seem rather to countenance מימיו ואמר.

“מימ—Ydara avrns, Cod. Reg.; Vide Prolegom. Grab. Sic et Syr., Vulg., Chald.; legerunt מימיו, ut ver. 7. Rectè ; præsertim cum sequatur יי.”—SECKER.

I will destroy the city—Perhaps instead of אבירה עיר, we should rather read אביר העיר ; not that any particular city seems to have been intended, but, indefinitely, the cities of the land which the king of Egypt, under the image of a river, was to overflow.

- The chariots, and let the warriors go forth :
 Cush and Phut handling the shield,
 And the Ludim expert in the use of the bow.
 10 But this is the day of the Lord,
 A day of vengeance of JEHOVAH of hosts,

Verse 9. Cush and Phut—Cush and Phut were two of the sons of Ham, and brothers to Mizraim, the father of the Egyptians. (Gen. x. 6.) And the Ludim are said to be descended from Mizraim, Gen. x. 13. Cush is translated, both in the LXX. and Vulgate, as well as in our English version, Ethiopians; but Bochart and others are persuaded, that the Arabians are always meant by that appellation in scripture; and, in general, I think it must be so understood. See BOCHART, Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 2. Here, I think, those Arabians are chiefly intended who bordered upon Egypt, near the Red Sea, and whom we find closely connected with the Egyptians. (Isaiah xx. 3–5.) See note on chapter xiii. 23. As these lay to the east, so, by Phut, it is most probable the Libyans were intended, who lay west of Egypt. JOSEPHUS says expressly, that Phut settled in Libya; and that in Mauritania there was, at the time he wrote, a river of that name. (Ant. lib. i. cap. 6, edit. Hudson.) PLINY mentions this river; (Nat. Hist. lib. v. cap. 1;) and JEROME; who likewise adds, that the country round was called Phutensis. (Tradit. Heb. in Genesin.) See also BOCHART, Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 33. As for the Ludim, BOCHART contends that they were the Ethiopians. (Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 26.) And, that the Ethiopians were famous for the use of the bow, we may learn from HERODOTUS, (lib. vii. cap. 69,) who says that they had bows four cubits long. In a matter, however, not altogether certain, it seems the best way to adhere to the scriptural names, and to be satisfied that the three nations were allies of Egypt, as they are also represented, Ezek. xxx. 5.

“לודים—These were probably inhabitants of Meroe.”—SECKER.

Expert in the use of the bow—תַּפְשֵׁי דַרְכֵי קֶשֶׁת. Literally, “handling” or “practising the ways of the bow.” The Syriac version seems to countenance this; but, for my own part, I cannot help suspecting an interpolation of the word תַּפְשֵׁי, which was used just before; and think that יִלְדֵי דַרְכֵי קֶשֶׁת is, in itself, a complete and more likely sentence: “And the Ludim that bend the bow.” In what manner those great bows were bent, see note on chapter li. 3.

“תַּפְשֵׁי דַרְכֵי—Videtur delendum hic תַּפְשֵׁי, cum ante duas voces præcesserit. Confer tamen רומיִקֶשֶׁת נוֹשֵׁקִי, Ps. lxxviii. 9.”—SECKER.

Verse 10. But this is the day of the Lord—There is some ground for suspecting the word לְאֲדָנִי, which I do not think is countenanced by the ancient versions; and, in the collated mss. there are the following variations:—In one ms. לְאֲדָנִי is upon a rasure; in another לִיהוָה is substituted for it; in another, for לְאֲדָנִי יְהוָה, we find לִיהוָה only; in another, לִיהוָה; in another, לִיהוָה אֱלֹהִי; in another, לִיהוָה is omitted. In the second instance, for לְאֲדָנִי יְהוָה the ancient ms. No 1. reads לִיהוָה אֱלֹהִים; and one ms. omits צְבָאוֹת. The LXX., in the first instance, seem to have read, לִיהוָה; and in the second, only לִיהוָה, according to the Roman edition; but לִיהוָה צְבָאוֹת, according to the Alexandrian and ms. Pachom.

To avenge himself of his enemies ; and the sword shall devour ;

It shall also be satiated, and drenched in their blood ;

For the Lord JEHOVAH of hosts hath a sacrifice,

In the north country, by the river Euphrates.

11 Go up to Gilead, and take balm,

O virgin daughter of Egypt ;

In vain hast thou multiplied medicines,

There is no cure for thee.

12 The nations have heard of thy disgrace,

And thine outcry hath filled the earth :

For they have stumbled, the mighty against the mighty,

They are both of them fallen together.

13 THE WORD WHICH JEHOVAH SPAKE TO JEREMIAH
THE PROPHET CONCERNING THE COMING OF NEBUCHAD-REZZAR KING OF BABYLON TO SMITE THE LAND OF EGYPT.

14 DECLARE ye in Egypt, and publish ye in Migdol,

The Vulgate I conceive to have read, in both places, ליהוה אלהי צבאות, or ליהוה לאלהי צבאות. I have not, however, attempted any further alteration than barely to prefix ל יהוה in the first instance, which, I think, tends to a proper division of the hemistichs. See chapter l. 25.

To avenge himself of his enemies—Besides ancient feuds, a more recent ground of God's enmity against Egypt arose from the perfidious conduct of the Egyptians towards his people, whom they encouraged to trust in their alliance, and always deserted in time of need. See Isaiah xxx. 3-5 ; Ezek. xxix. 6, 7.

Verse 11. And take balm—צרי. See note on chapter viii. 22.

Hast thou multiplied—For הרביתי, seven mss. read, with the Masora, הרבית. And all the ancient versions express the second person singular, and not the first.

“ Verse 12. קלונך—φωμνη σου, LXX. Rectè, ut videtur.”—SECKER.

Together—For יחדיו, twenty-one mss. and two editions read יחדו.

Verse 13. THE WORD WHICH JEHOVAH SPAKE, &c.—There appears no ground for ascertaining the time when this second prophecy was delivered ; but the desolation foretold in it is, undoubtedly, the same which Ezekiel has predicted, chapters xxix. xxx. xxxi. xxxii. And this came to pass in the twenty-seventh year of Jehoiachin's captivity, (that is, the sixteenth year after the destruction of Jerusalem,) as may be collected from Ezekiel xxix. 17, where Nebuchadnezzar's army is spoken of as having at that time suffered a great deal in the siege of Tyre ; on which account the spoils of Egypt are promised them for their wages and indemnification ; and the promise was accordingly made good that same year. See JOSEPH. Ant. (Lib. x. cap. 9, edit. Hudson.)

- Publish ye also in Noph, and in Tahpanhes say ye ;
 Stand firm, and prepare thyself,
 For the sword hath devoured those that are round about thee.
- 15 Wherefore is thy mighty one overthrown ?
 He stood not, because JEHOVAH pushed him down.
- 16 He hath caused many to stumble, yea, to fall ;
 They said therefore one to another,
 Arise, and let us return to our people,
 And to our native country, because of the oppressor's sword.
- 17 They cried there, O Pharaoh king of Egypt,
 A tumult hath frustrated the appointed meeting.
- 18 As I live, saith the king,
 Whose name is JEHOVAH of hosts,
 Surely like Tabor among the mountains,
 And like Carmel by the sea, shall one come.
- 19 Get ready thy equipage for removing,
 O inhabiting daughter of Egypt ;
 For Noph shall become a desolation,
 It shall also be destroyed, so as to have no inhabitant.

Verse 14. Those that are round about thee—For סביבך, eighteen mss. and four editions read סביבך. But the text needs no alteration.

Verse 15. Thy mighty one—The syntax and context show plainly that we should read אבירך instead of אביריך ; and forty-five, perhaps forty-six, mss. and three editions, with the Vulgate, confirm this emendation. The LXX. render, ο Απτις ; ο μοσχος ο εκλεκτος σου, as if that Egyptian idol was intended. But it may as well be understood of the king of Egypt, or indefinitely put for the mighty ones or warriors of that nation in a plural sense.

“ אביריך—נסחף—Εφυγεν—ο μοσχος ο εκλεκτος σου, LXX. ‘Computruit fortis tuus?’ Vulg. legerunt אבירך. Rectè. Vide cap. xxx. 21.”—SECKER.

Verse 16. He hath caused many to stumble, yea, to fall—The LXX. connect the words thus ; and, I think, most properly, both with respect to the sense and metre.

Verse 17. They cried there—The allies of Egypt, driven to their own homes, as mentioned in the preceding verse, send from thence their excuses to Pharaoh, alleging the disaster which had prevented their joining him at the time and place appointed.

Verse 18. Like Tabor among the mountains—Tabor and Carmel were two of the most considerable mountains in the land of Israel. Carmel formed the principal headland all along the sea-coast. Nebuchadnezzar is compared to these, on account of his superiority over all others.

Verse 19. Get ready thy equipage for removing—I conceive כלי to mean either the carriages, or the trunks and boxes that held the things that were to be removed. See Ezekiel xii. 3.

O inhabiting daughter of Egypt—There seems to be a designed antithesis

- 20 Egypt is a heifer of a beautiful countenance,
A breeze from the north is coming against her.
- 21 Her mercenaries also in the midst of her are like bullocks of the stall;
Yet even these have turned their backs,
They are fled together, they made no stand;
Because the day of their destruction was come,
The time of their visitation was upon them.
- 22 Her voice shall proceed like that of an enchanter,
When they shall advance with force and with axes;
Come ye against her, like fellers of trees, between יושבת, "inhabiting," and the act of migration which was to follow.

Verse 20. Of a beautiful countenance—יפה-פיה are two words, and seem to answer the Latin words, Os formosa.

A breeze—The Hebrew verb קרץ, as the Arabic قَرَضَ, signifies to "pinch" or "bite," like one of those stinging flies which infest the cattle. Hence we find קרציה used in Chaldee for a fly of the larger kind. It is probable, some allusion may here be designed to the Egyptian traditions concerning Isis, on which the Grecian mythologists founded their story of IO. (Οἶνός. Metam. lib. i.)

Is coming against her—For the second בא, seventy-three mss. and two editions read בה, as do all the ancient versions. One ms. reads באה; and, in nine others, the א is upon a rasure.

Verse 21. Like bullocks of the stall—That is, pampered and high-fed, so that from them might have been expected the most spirited exertions.

Together—For יחדיו, thirty-six mss. and one edition read יחדיו.

Verse 22. Her voice shall proceed like that of an enchanter—"That is, 'Her (Egypt's) voice shall be low and inarticulate through fear.' This passage seems to be an imitation of Isaiah xxix. 4, where we find the same threat denounced against Jerusalem, namely, 'Thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground.' The cause which is assigned is the same in both places, the irresistible attack of powerful enemies."—DR. DURELL.

The pertinency of the above illustration needs no other comment than to refer to Bishop Lowth's note on Isaiah xxix. 4.

When they shall advance—No subject is here expressed, but it is clear enough from the context who are intended; especially if the following verbs באו and כרתו be rendered, as I am persuaded they should be, in the imperative. The Syriac so renders the latter of these verbs. For the persons, whose coming was to occasion Egypt to lower her tone to such a degree, must be those to whom JEHOVAH gave the command to go against her, and cut down her forest; that is, the Chaldeans. By "her forest" may be understood either her people, or her cities; both of which were very numerous; the latter amounting to no less than one thousand and twenty in those times; as Grotius reckons.

- 23 Cut down her forest, saith JEHOVAH,
That it may not be found on searching ;
Although they surpass the locusts in multitude,
And they are without number.
- 24 The daughter of Egypt is confounded ;
She is given into the hand of the people of the north.
- 25 JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel, hath said ;
Behold, I will visit upon Ammon of No,
And upon Pharaoh, and upon Egypt,
And upon her gods, and upon her kings ;
Even upon Pharaoh, and upon those that depend upon him.
- 26 And I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their life,
Even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon,
And into the hand of his servants :
But after this shall it be inhabited,
As in days of old, saith JEHOVAH.

Verse 25. Ammon of No—This is a literal translation of אַמּוֹן מִנּוֹ, and we need seek for no other. Ammon was the name by which the Egyptians called “Jupiter ;” who had a famous temple at Thebes, and was worshipped there in a distinguished manner ; on which account the city was called “Diospolis ;” and by this name the LXX. have rendered נַא, Ezek. xxx. 14, 16. If No, therefore, be Thebes, or Diospolis, then “Ammon of No” signifies the deity of the place, “the Theban Jupiter,” as HERODOTUS styles him, lib. ii. cap. 42. As, on the other hand, נַא אַמּוֹן, Nahum iii. 8, should be rendered, “No of Ammon,” which exactly corresponds with the Greek Διοσπολις. But very different from these is the term, אֶתְחַבְּרוֹן נַא, used, Ezek. xxx. 15, which, indeed, signifies “the multitude,” or numerous inhabitants, “of No ;” although from the similitude of אַמּוֹן and חֲבֵרוֹן our translators, and others besides them, have confounded them together, and have rendered מִנּוֹ אַמּוֹן, “the multitude of No,” and נַא אַמּוֹן, “populous No,” or “No of multitude.” Some have supposed No to mean “Alexandria,” the great emporium of Egypt ; and the Chaldee and Vulgate have rendered accordingly. But Alexandria was not built at the time when Jeremiah prophesied ; and it does not appear that there had been before any considerable city at least standing upon the spot, which the founder made the object of his choice.

When an idolatrous nation is doomed to destruction, God is said to execute vengeance upon the idols of the country. See chapter xliii. 12, 13. Accordingly, Ammon of No, the principal deity, and Pharaoh, the principal man, among the Egyptians, are marked out, in the first place, as the primary objects of divine visitation ; then follow, in the gross, Egypt with all her gods, and all her kings ; which latter term is explained to include both Pharaoh himself, and those subordinate rulers who were dependent upon him for the rank and authority they held.

- 27 But fear thou not, O my servant Jacob,
Neither be thou dismayed, O Israel ;
For, behold, I will bring thee safe from afar,
And thy seed from the land of their captivity ;
And Jacob shall again be at rest,
He shall also be secure, and there shall be none to make him afraid.
- 28 Fear thou not, O my servant Jacob,
Saith JEHOVAH, for I will be with thee ;
When I shall make a full end of all the nations,
Whither I have driven thee,
Yet of thee will I not make a full end ;
But I will correct thee with moderation,
And will not make thee altogether desolate.

CHAPTER XLVII.

- 1 THE WORD OF JEHOVAH, WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH
THE PROPHET CONCERNING THE PHILISTINES, BEFORE THAT PHARAOH SMOTE GAZA.

Verse 26. After this shall it be inhabited—At the end of forty years Egypt was to begin to recover itself, as Ezekiel foretells, chapter xxix. 13.

Verses 27, 28.—These two verses are almost the same as chapter xxx. 10, 11. See the notes on the latter of those verses.

“How was a full end made of these nations? The kingdoms, which then and afterwards led the Jews captive, were destroyed, and the people of those kingdoms mixed so as not to be now distinguished; and their religions are extinct. Judaism hath subsisted; and, doubtless, its professors are generally Jews by descent. Yet they have undergone more and heavier sufferings than any people. As their prophets, beginning with Moses, threaten them heavily, why should they not have threatened them with destruction; especially as they seemed incurably prone to idolatry? How could they, on the contrary, venture to say, as, Lev. xxvi. 44; Deut. iv. 31, and here, if not by God’s direction, that they should not be destroyed utterly? Can they mean only that they should return from Babylon? Their words carry more. The Romans, indeed, called their city ‘eternal.’ And any writer may flatter the constitution of his country with perpetuity. But Moses and the prophet here are not making panegyrics or compliments. And that a thing so unlikely to be said or fulfilled should be both, is a strong presumption that it was said by inspiration. Circumcision, early instruction, the prerogatives ascribed to the Jews in sacred scripture, mutual hatred between the nations and them, intermarriages among themselves, the idolatry of other nations, have contributed to preserve them.”—SECKER.

CHAP. XLVII. Verse 1. CONCERNING THE PHILISTINES.—Among the other nations who were doomed to suffer by the hostilities of Nebuchad-

2       THUS saith JEHOVAH,

Behold, waters are coming up out of the north,
And they shall become an overflowing torrent,
And shall overflow the land, and all that is therein ;
The city, and those that dwell in it ;
And the men shall cry aloud,
And every inhabitant of the land shall wail.

nezzar king of Babylon, the Philistines are enumerated, chapter xxv. 20 ; and the calamities foretold in this present chapter most probably befell them during the long siege of Tyre, when Nebuchadnezzar ravaged their country, in order, as it is said, verse 4, to cut off from Tyre and Sidon all chance of assistance from that quarter. But as no history, sacred or profane, has, to my knowledge, mentioned the taking of Gaza by the king of Egypt ; there is no means of ascertaining the precise date of the delivery of this prophecy. Some have supposed the Pharaoh here spoken of to be Pharaoh-Necho, and that he subdued Gaza after the battle of Megiddo, (2 Kings xxiii. 29,) when the whole country round submitted to his victorious arms. Others have thought, that it was Pharaoh-Hophra, who, having marched out of Egypt to the relief of Jerusalem, when besieged by the Chaldeans, in the ninth or tenth year of Zedekiah, thought proper to retire again on the approach of the enemy towards him ; (chapter xxxvii. 5, 7 ; ) but on his return fell upon Gaza, and pillaged it. All this, however, is no better than mere conjecture ; and it seems at least as probable, that this event happened about the fourth year of Zedekiah, when we find the kings of the neighbouring nations of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Sidon, meditating a revolt against the king of Babylon, and sending their ambassadors to Zedekiah to engage him in their confederacy. (Chapter xxvii.) Now this, I think, they would scarcely have been hardy enough to undertake, had they not thought themselves sure of support from the king of Egypt ; who, perhaps, at this very time, having war in view, may have begun his operations by surprising the strong city of Gaza, which, from its situation, must have greatly annoyed Egypt, had it been in the hands of an enemy. Admit this, and it will not only furnish the date of this prophecy, but will afford a reasonable ground to presume, that about the same time were delivered both the latter prophecy in the preceding chapter concerning Egypt, and also those in the two following chapters concerning the several nations therein specified, none of which, excepting that concerning Elam, have any dates annexed to them. Against this it may, perhaps, be alleged, that these prophecies are all alluded to, chapter xxv. 13, where we read, "all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied concerning the nations." I grant the allusion, but without allowing the inference,—that, therefore, these prophecies must have been in being before the prophecy contained in that chapter, which is dated in the fourth year of Jehoiakim. For, indeed, if that inference were allowed, it would equally tend to antedate the prophecies concerning Elam, and concerning Babylon itself, which are equally alluded to with the rest, but are expressly assigned to the fourth year of Zedekiah. But the truth seems to be, that the words above-cited from chapter xxv. 13, were not originally a part of the prophecy there, as it

- 3 At the noise of the galloping of the hoofs of his steeds,
At the rattling of the multitude of his wheels, as he drove along,
Fathers turned not to look after children,
For slackness of hands.
- 4 Because of the day that is coming
To lay waste all the Philistines,
To cut off from Tyre and from Sidon
Every helper that remaineth ;

was first spoken by Jeremiah ; it being pretty generally agreed, that Jeremiah's prophecies were not compiled together into a book till some time after their first publication. This compilation may not have taken place till after the taking of Jerusalem, for all that we know, whether made by Jeremiah himself, or by some other under his direction ; and, therefore, if not certainly made before the time in which these prophecies are supposed to have been delivered, no argument can be drawn against the supposition from the words above-cited, which could not have been inserted until the time of such compilation, as before that time they could not be said to be written all together in a book.

Verse 3. At the noise of the galloping of the hoofs of his steeds—שַׁעֲטָה occurs no where else in the Hebrew. The LXX. render it oppon ; the Syriac and Chaldee by words that respectively denote a progressive motion. But Grotius seems to have expressed it most happily, who has rendered שַׁעֲטָה שַׁעֲטָה, a quadrupedante sono ; having in view, no doubt, that line of VIRGIL, (Æn. viii. 596,) Quadrupedante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum.

We may therefore render it, “At the galloping sound,” or, “At the sound of the galloping.” The Syriac verb שַׁעֲטָה signifies, “to swim” in water, and “to fly” in air ; and may, with equal propriety, be applied to “the galloping motion” of a horse, performed by a similar action of his feet upon the ground.

“שַׁעֲטָה—Hæc vox hic tantum extat in S. S. Nusquam in linguis cognatis, præterquam in Syriacâ, in quâ ‘natâre, volâre, repere’ notat. Affine quoad sonum est יָצַח ‘incedere.’”—SECKER.

At the rattling of the multitude of his wheels, as he drove along—The Syriac, Vulgate, and the Alexandrian edition of the LXX., together with ms. Pachom., render as if they had read וְהָמָן ; but the conjunction appears not in any of the collated mss. or editions. For my part, I consider רָכַב as the infinitive mood, expressing the act of riding or driving along ; so that לְרָכַב may signify, in equitatione, vel aurigatione ejus, or, in equitando, vel aurigando eo, “in his driving along.” This being so, הָמָן may either be governed of לְרָכַב or of מְרַעֵשׂ.

For slackness of hands—מְרַפֵּי יָדַיִם. This implies, “a dissolution” or “relaxation of bodily vigour,” from the impression made by fear on the mind, so as to incapacitate a person from exerting his strength to any efficacious purpose.

- (For JEHOVAH will lay the Philistines waste,
The remnant of the country of Caphtor)
5 Baldness is come unto Gaza ;
Ashkelon is put to silence.
O thou remnant of their valley,
How long wilt thou slash thyself?

Verse 4. The remnant of the country of Caphtor—The Caphtorim, as well as the Philistim, are said to have been descended from Mizraim, the father of the Egyptians. (Gen. x. 14.) Whether these Caphtorim were settled at first in Cappadocia, as some of the ancients have thought; or in the island of Crete, according to others; or whether they migrated immediately from some parts of Egypt, where they were straitened for room, which, considering the place they removed to, seems rather more probable; certain it is, that they expelled the Avim from that part of Philistia which is contiguous to Gaza, and fixed themselves there; (Deut. ii. 23;) on which account the country was afterwards called, “the country of Caphtor.” For the signification of אֲשֶׁל, see note on chapter ii. 10. “The remnant of the country of Caphtor” is, therefore, to be understood of the few that remained out of a great number that formerly dwelt in that part of Philistia.

Verse 5. Ashkelon is put to silence—As shaving off of the hair and cutting of the flesh have been before observed to be marks of grief and mourning, (chapter xvi. 6,) so silence is likewise expressive of great affliction. Thus Job’s friends are said to have sat with him seven days and seven nights upon the ground without addressing a word to him, because they saw his grief was very great. (Job ii. 13.) And so נִדְמָה is to be understood (Isaiah xv. 1) of Moab’s being made speechless with grief and astonishment the night that her cities were spoiled. See chapter xlviii. 2.

O thou remnant of their valley—Instead of עֵמֶק, “their valley,” the LXX. appear to have read עֲנָקִים, “of the Anakims.” And this reading may be thought to derive some countenance from what is said, Joshua xi. 22: “There was none of the Anakims left in the land of the children of Israel; only in Gaza, in Gath, and in Ashdod, there remained.” But we shall see reason to prefer the present reading of the text, if we consider the situation of Gaza and Ashkelon, about twelve miles distant from each other, near the sea, in a valley, of whose beauty and fertility an accurate traveller has given the following description:—“We passed, this day, through the most pregnant and pleasant valley that ever eye beheld. On the right hand a ridge of high mountains, whereon stands Hebron; on the left hand the Mediterranean Sea, bordered with continued hills, beset with variety of fruits. The champion between, about twenty miles over, full of flowery hills, ascending leisurely, and not much surmounting their ranker vallies; with groves of olives and other fruits dispersedly adorned.”—SANDY’S Travels, book iii. page 150. The author adds, that, in his time, “this wealthy bottom (as are all the rest) was, for the most part, uninhabited, but only for a few small and contemptible villages;”—a state of desolation owing to the oppressions of a barbarous and ill-advised government. But we may easily conceive the populousness that must have prevailed there in its better days, especially if we consider the power which the Philistines

- 6 Ho ! sword of JEHOVAH !
 How long wilt thou not be at rest ?
 Retire into thy scabbard,
 Return, and be still.
- 7 How can it be at rest,
 Since JEHOVAH hath given it a charge ?
 Against Ashkelon, and against the sea coast,
 There hath he appointed it.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1 CONCERNING MOAB.

THUS saith JEHOVAH of hosts, the God of Israel ;
 Wo unto Nebo ! for it is spoiled ;
 Kirjathaim is confounded, is taken ;
 It is confounded, the high fortress, and broken down.

once possessed, and the armies they brought into the field, although their country was scarce forty English miles in length, and much longer than it was broad.

Verse 6. Ho ! sword of JEHOVAH !—The Babylonish monarch seems to be here addressed by this title, as the Assyrian was by that of “the rod of God’s anger ;” (Isaiah x. 5 ;) such conquerors being the appointed executioners of the divine judgments. Compare Ezekiel xiv. 17 ; xxi. 3, &c.

Return—הֲרֹגְעִי. See note on chapter vi. 16.

Verse 7. How can it be at rest—It is obvious from the context, that וְהָשָׁקֵט is here improperly repeated in the second person, and that we ought to read, וְהָשָׁקֵט, in the third person, as all the ancient versions have done.

CHAP. XLVIII. Verse 1. CONCERNING MOAB—The following prophecies concerning the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, and other neighbouring nations, are supposed to have been fulfilled about the same time with that concerning the Philistines in the preceding chapter, namely, during the siege of Tyre. See USHER’s Annals, An. Mundi, 3419 ; JOSEPH. Ant. lib. x. cap. 9. edit. Hudson. With respect to the time of the delivery of these prophecies, see the prefatory note on chapter xlvii.

Many passages and expressions will be found in this chapter which Jeremiah hath borrowed from a prophecy of Isaiah, chapters xv. and xvi., concerning a like calamity which befell Moab, in all probability, when Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, seized upon their cities and fortresses, and ravaged their country, on his march through it to invade the kingdom of Israel. By comparing the parallel places, much light may be mutually thrown upon them ; and, as Bishop Lowth thinks, several mistakes in the present text of both prophets may be rectified.

The high fortress—הַמִּשְׁגָּב. Our translators have here rendered Misgab as the proper name of a city ; but we find no mention any where else of a city of Moab of that name. From the article prefixed I am induced to

- 2 Moab shall have no more glorying in Heshbon ;
 They have devised evil against her, saying,
 Come, and let us cut her off from being a nation :
 Thou also, O Madmen, shalt be put to silence ;
 A sword shall follow after thee.
- 3 A cry is heard from Horonaim,
 Desolation and great destruction.
- 4 Moab is destroyed ;
 Her diminished ones have caused a cry to be heard.

think that המשגב is an appellative, and applied to Kirjathaim, if the text stand as at present ; which, by a repetition, is said to be “confounded (high fortress though it were) and broken down,” notwithstanding the strength of its situation. In the Roman edition of the LXX. הבישה החמה is rendered, ησχυσθη αμαθ και αγαθ. What αμαθ και αγαθ can mean, I know not ; but in the Alexandrian edition we find, instead of these words, αμαθ το κραταιωμα, και ηττηθη ; in ms. Pachom. το οχυρωμα Μωαβ, και ηττηθη. And perhaps we may not unreasonably suspect a double error to have crept into the text, and that, for הבישה, we ought to read, הביש, where the ה has been added by mistake, arising from the next word beginning with ה ; and that, for וחמה, we should read, ויחמה, as the ו converse seems to require : Thus corrected, the text might be rendered, in a direct manner,

The high fortress is confounded and broken down.

“The high fortress” might mean either Kirjathaim before-mentioned, or any other high fortress of Moab, as ms. Pachom. suggests.

Verse 2. In Heshbon ; they have devised—There is a Paronomasia in these words, במשגב חשב ; a figure in which the Hebrew writers seem much to delight. Another occurs presently after in this verse, תדמי תדמי. תדמי signifies, “Thou shalt be made speechless” with grief and astonishment. See note on chapter xlvii. 5.

“There is no more the praise of Moab in Heshbon.” Or, “The glorying of Moab in Heshbon shall be no more.” —Omnes versiones habent במשגב. Fortè tamen ex præcedenti—SECKER.

Verse 3. A cry is heard from Horonaim—Literally, “The voice of a cry,” which is an Hebraism, and means what is expressed in the version. See note on chapter x. 22.

Verse 4. Her diminished ones—For צעוריה the Masoretes have substituted צעיריה, and are countenanced by nineteen mss. and three editions. The LXX. render, εὐ ζογῶσα, which leads one to think that they had found, or supposed, the reading to be צוערה, answering to צוער, Isaiah xv. 5. But I see no reason to suspect an error in the received reading of the text, צעורים, “her diminished ones ;” צעורים being the participle Pahul, from צער, and signifying persons “reduced,” or “made little,” either in number, or in circumstances ; as was the case of the Moabites, who are represented as having suffered in both, from the hostilities that had been exercised against them.

- 5 Surely at the ascent of Luhith
Weeping shall go up after weeping ;
Surely at the descent of Horonaim
Mine enemies have heard a cry of destruction.
- 6 Flee ye, save your lives,
And be like a blasted tree in the wilderness.
- 7 For because thou hast trusted in thy acquisitions, Therefore with thy treasures shalt thou thyself also be taken :
And Chemosh shall go into captivity,
His priests and his princes together.
- 8 A spoiler also shall come unto every city,
And there shall not a city escape ;
And the valley shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed,
According as JEHOVAH hath spoken.
- 9 Give wings unto Moab,
That she may fly quite away ;
And let her cities become a desolation,
That there be no inhabitant in them.
- 10 Cursed is he that executeth the work of JEHOVAH deceitfully ;
And cursed is he that keepeth back his sword from blood.

Verse 5. At the ascent of Luhith—For הלחות, sixteen mss. and one edition read with the Masora הלווחית, as Isaiah xv. 5, and eighteen mss. and three editions, הלחית. At Luhith, the hill country of Moab appears to have begun, and here the people are represented as mounting the hill successively in their flight before the enemy, weeping as they follow one after another. So that from hence the text in Isaiah may more probably be corrected by reading בוי for כוי, “Weeping shall go up after weeping.” At Horonaim they again descended into the plain ; where, it is said, “mine enemies” (God is the speaker) “have heard a cry of destruction.” God calls the Moabites his “enemies,” as bearing them a grudge for the malevolence expressed by them towards his people, the Jews, and for their insolence towards himself. See verses 26, 42 ; Ezek. xxv. 8, 9 ; Zeph. ii. 8–10. In Isaiah צרי is not found, and יעערו (perhaps a mistake for יעוררו) stands in the place of שמעו. But these variations may have been by design.

Verse 6. And be like a blasted tree—That is, a tree stripped of its foliage : A proper emblem of one robbed of all his fortune, and just able to escape with life by fleeing into the desert.

“Verse 7. במעשיך—‘In thy possessions ;’ so the word is translated, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. It means ‘fruits of labours,’ Exodus xxiii. 16.”—SECKER.

And Chemosh—For כמיש the Masora reads כמוש, as at verse 13 ; and twenty-seven mss. and five editions, with all the ancient versions, confirm the emendation. Also for יחרו the Masora reads יחרו ; which is likewise

- 11 Moab hath been at ease from his youth,
 And he hath settled upon his lees,
 And hath not been drawn off from vessel to vessel,
 Neither hath he gone into exile:
 Therefore hath his taste remained in him,
 And his flavour hath not changed.
- 12 Nevertheless, behold, the days come, saith JEHOVAH,
 That I will send unto him tilters, that shall tilt him down,
 And shall empty his vessels, and break their pitchers to pieces.

confirmed by twenty MSS. and three editions, besides five MSS. which have a letter erased at the end of יחד.

Verse 11. He hath settled upon his lees—All wines, it is said, ought to be kept for some time upon their lees, in order to preserve their strength and flavour; on which account the lees are expressed by a word that signifies “the preservers.” Wine is apt to be damaged by being drawn off too soon into other vessels. By this allegory, therefore, Moab is represented as having enjoyed singular advantages, from having constantly remained in his own country, ever since he became a people. See Bishop Lowth’s excellent note on Isaiah xxv. 6.

“Moab was an ancient nation. The youth of the Israelites was when they were in the wilderness. (Chapter ii. 2.) Isaiah had prophesied much the same things against Moab as Jeremiah doth here; and they were to be accomplished in three years, (Isaiah xvi. 14,) between which time and this was one hundred and thirty years. Besides this, Saul, David, and Jehoshaphat had wars with them. But we read not that they were at any time carried captive out of their own land, which is the point insisted on here; and ‘captivity’ is now intimated, verse 12, and expressly mentioned, verses 46, 47.”—SECKER.

Verse 12. Nevertheless—לְכֵן here may signify “nevertheless,” or it may be rendered, “after this.” See note on chapter xvi. 14.

Tilters, that shall tilt him down—Our translators have rendered זַעֲמֵם וְזַעְמָו “wanderers that shall cause him to wander;” and the same idea of “wandering” or “travelling” is elsewhere supposed to belong to זַעַם; but, I think, without any good grounds. The true signification of this verb may rather be derived from the Arabic, لَعَا, inclinavit; or from لَعَجَ, destruxit, humiliavit, solo aequavit. The former of these לע is peculiarly used to signify “the tilting,” or “lowering,” of a cask or jar, in order to draw out the contents. Accordingly the LXX. here render, κλινοντας, και κλινουσιν αυτον. The Vulgate, stratores laguncularum, et sternent eum. See note on chapter ii. 20. The allegory, therefore, begun in the preceding verse, is here continued, and by זַעֲמֵם, “tilters,” the Chaldeans are designed, who should lower the vessels of Moab, namely, the cities, and empty them, and also break to pieces their bottles or pitchers, that is, destroy the lesser towns and villages, dependent on the cities; to which the bottles or pitchers answer, being filled with the redundancy of

- 13 And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh,
As the house of Israel was ashamed of Bethel, their confidence.
- 14 How will ye say, We are mighty ones,
And men of strength for war?
- 15 A spoiler of Moab and of her cities is gone up,
And the choice of his young men are gone down to slay,
Saith the king, whose name is JEHOVAH of hosts.
- 16 The destruction of Moab is near approaching,
And his calamity hasteth on apace.
- 17 Bemoan him, all ye that are round about him;
And all ye that know his name, say,
How is the sceptre of strength broken!
The rod of beauty!
- 18 Come down from splendor, and sit in thirst,
O inhabitant daughter of Dibon;
Because the spoiler of Moab is come up against thee,
A destroyer of thy strong holds.

the larger vessels. In confirmation of the above etymology we may observe how much better a sense is supplied from thence, than that which our translators have given, in two places of Isaiah, where the word צַעַר occurs. In Isaiah li. 14, צַעַר is rendered "the captive exile;" but it seems rather to be the participle Pahul, which should be written at large צַעֲוִיר, and signifies prostratus, "the wretch depressed" by misfortunes, or by violent oppression; and thus stands opposed to הַמַּצִּיק, "the oppressor," of whom it was asked in the preceding verse, "What is become of the fury of the oppressor?" In reply to which question it follows very aptly, that, the cause being removed, the effect would cease; "the poor afflicted sufferer" should soon be released, now that the oppressor was no more. Again: Isaiah lxiii. 1, צַעַר בְּרַב כֹּחַ is rendered in our Bible, "travelling in the greatness of his strength." Would it not be much more suitable to the context, "subduing," or "humbling" his enemies "by his mighty power?"

Verse 13. Bethel—That is, the calf set up there for an object of divine worship, to which the Israelites trusted for protection. (1 Kings xii. 28, 29; Hosea x. 6.)

Verse 15. A spoiler of Moab, &c.—The conqueror of Moab is here represented as having gained an eminence above her, and from thence sending down the choice of his troops to massacre those below. If the distinction of gender in the affix pronouns be attended to, this explanation of the words will be found necessary, and will clear up every difficulty in the construction. Six MSS. read שׂוֹדֵד, as at verse 18.

"שׂוֹדֵד מוֹאָב—Perhaps, 'The spoiler of Moab is come up against her cities.'"—SECKER. We must then read בַּעֲרִיָּה for בַּעֲרִיָּה, of which I see no trace.

Verse 18. Come down from splendor, and sit in thirst—Thirst is here put in a general sense for a want of the necessaries of life. Some have supposed

- 19 Stand by the way side, and look out,
O thou inhabitress of Aroer ;
Ask of him that fleeth, and of her that is escaped,
Say, What hath been done ?
- 20 Moab is confounded, because he is broken down ;
Howl ye, and cry :
Publish in Arnon,
That Moab is spoiled.
- 21 Judgment also is come upon the plain country,
Upon Holon, and upon Jahatza, and upon Mephaath,
- 22 And upon Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-dibla-thaim,
- 23 And upon Kirjathaim, and upon Beth-gamul, and upon Beth-meon,
- 24 And upon Kerioth, and upon Botsra,
And upon all the cities of the land of Moab,
Those that are far off, and those that are near.
- 25 The horn of Moab is cut off, that צמא may signify the same as צמאון, “a dry, parched, thirsty land.” If so, as her former situation might be figured by sitting on a splendid throne, so her present misery, by sitting on the ground. See Isaiah iii. 26. But the other interpretation seems most natural. For ישבי, the Masora, and twenty, perhaps twenty-two, mss. and three editions read יושבי; which reading is confirmed by all the ancient versions.

Perhaps we might divide and render thus:—

Because a spoiler of Moab is gone up,
He hath destroyed in thee thy strong holds.

Verse 20. He is broken down—As Moab is here masculine, being the subject of הביש, and is the subject of חזה too, I am inclined to think that for חזה we should read חת, and that the ה was added at the end by mistake owing to the next word הלילו beginning with that letter. See the same again, verse 39.

Howl ye, and cry—For וועקי and הלילו, the Masora reads וועקו and הלילו. Seven mss. and one edition read הלילו; and eight, perhaps ten, mss. and three editions, הלילו. Twelve mss. and four editions read וועקו. All the ancient versions, except the LXX., express these verbs in the plural number. But the LXX. not only render both these verbs singular, but also הגידו, as if they had read הגיד.

Verse 21. Mephaath—For מופעת the Masora reads מיפעת, and so do sixteen, perhaps seventeen, mss., and three editions. The Chaldee also so expresses the name here, as both the Hebrew and Chaldee text, Joshua xxi. 37. The Chaldee is also uniform, Joshua xiii. 18. But in the Hebrew text there we find מפעת without the י; but twenty-two mss. and three editions there also read מיפעת.

And his arm is broken, saith JEHOVAH.

- 26 Make him drunken, because he hath puffed himself up against JEHOVAH ;

And clap at Moab in his vomiting,
That he also may become an object of derision.

- 27 For was not Israel the object of thy derision ?

Was he found among thieves,
That thou shouldst insult him with all the power of thy words ?

- 28 Leave the cities, and dwell in the rock,
O inhabitants of Moab, and be ye like a dove,
That maketh her nest by the sides of the pit's mouth.

“ Verse 25. Κερα and Ζωαπα are two cities of Moab in Ptolemy, to which Grotius thinks this verse alludes.”—SECKER.

Verse 26. Make him drunken—הַשְׁכִּירוֹ. This is certainly the singular number, although the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate, with our English translators, have rendered in the plural, as if they had read, הַשְׁכִּירוּ, which is indeed the reading of seven mss. and one edition. But the Chaldee has retained the singular number, and, I think, rightly, the address being made to any one indefinitely ; and וְסַפֵּךְ is also the second person singular in the imperative likewise ; the same person being commanded to clap hands at Moab, as pointing him out to scorn and ridicule in his despicable condition. This is the proper sense of סַפֵּךְ, which indeed is generally followed by a noun, expressing “the hands ;” but not always. See Job xxxiv. 37.

Verse 27. Was he found—For נִמְצָא, nine mss. and three editions, with the Masora, read נִמְצָא.

That thou shouldst insult him with all the power of thy words—Our translators have rendered תַּחְנוּן, “Thou skippedst for joy ;” but this seems quite foreign to the purpose ; and besides, the verb is in the future. תַּחְנוּן signifies properly, “according to the power,” or “sufficiency, of thy words ;” and תַּחְנוּן, “thou shalt,” or “shouldst, move” or “bestir thyself.” And the sense of all taken together is very apt and suitable : “Didst thou find Israel among thieves, coming to rob thee of thy property, that thou shouldst think thyself intitled to break out into all manner of revilings against him ?” Compare Ezek. xxv. 8 ; Zeph. ii. 8, 10. The LXX. and Syriac render תַּחְנוּן כִּי בִי תַחְנוּן, “that thou shouldst make war upon him ;” but they have omitted מִי דְבָרֶיךָ ; otherwise the sense would not differ essentially from what I have proposed. Mr. Lowth has suggested another, though, I think, a less probable translation : “For the words thou hast spoken against him thou shalt be carried captive.” This agrees with the Chaldee paraphrase.

Verse 28. By the sides of the pit's mouth—That is, on the edge of the precipice. The mouth of the pit is the same as the brink of destruction ; the pit or grave yawning wide, as it were, ready to swallow one up. And the image is peculiarly striking, when a person from the side of a steep rock looks down into a deep gulf below. The Moabites are exhorted to

- 29 We have heard of the pride of Moab ;
His haughtiness is exceedingly supereminent,
His pride also, and his arrogance, and the lifting up of his heart :
- 30 I know, saith JEHOVAH, his fierce wrath ;
But he is not alike in the extent of his ability,
He is not alike in performing.
- 31 Therefore for Moab will I wail,
Even for all Moab will I cry out ;
Unto the men of Kir-heres
Shall Jaazer make moan inarticulately through weeping.

retire for safety to such places, where the apprehensions of danger would secure them from the enemy's pursuit. That doves build in the clefts or natural hollows of a rock ; see Cant. ii. 14. DR. SHAW, in his Travels, page 162, folio, mentions a city on the African coast, called "Hamam-et," from the number of wild pigeons ("Hamam") that are bred in the cliffs of the adjacent mountains.

Verses 29, 30. There are several words in these two verses which are not to be found in the parallel passage, Isaiah xvi. 6. But in the main they agree ; and while they describe the overweening pride and insolence of Moab, and the intemperance of his rage, they intimate the small pretensions he had for such high assuming, either in respect of the extent of his power, or of his actual performance.

Verse 30. He is not alike in the extent of his ability—בְּכֹחֵו refers to גָּאָה in the preceding verse ; "he is not so," that is, alike super-eminent. בְּכֹחֵו signifies, "according to the measure" or "extent of his power." See note on chapter xxxvi. 18. The LXX., according to ms. Pachom., render it, κατα το ικανον αυτου—"he is not so," alike super-eminent, "in performing." עָשָׂו is the infinitive mood used gerundively, faciendo, or quoad faciendum.

Verse 31. Shall Jaazer make moan inarticulately through weeping—I have not the least doubt that the subject of יִהְיֶה is to be found in יַעֲזָר, which has been improperly separated from it, and, together with the preceding word מִבְּכִי, assigned to the beginning of the following verse. Nor is it difficult to perceive that the mistake has arisen from exacting a greater conformity between this passage and its parallel one, Isaiah xvi., than was ever intended. For though Jeremiah has condescended to borrow not only the sentiments, but also the words, of his predecessor, he has not tied himself down to observe the same order in their construction, as will abundantly appear from examining the two passages together. הִגָּה properly signifies, "to utter a confused imperfect sound," as those do whose voice is broken with grief and weeping : מִבְּכִי, "from," or "because of weeping," is therefore added to it emphatically. And Jaazer, one of the cities of Moab, (Numb. xxxii. 3,) is, by a beautiful fiction of poetry, represented as condoling in such a piteous moan with the citizens of Kir-heres on the misfortunes of their country. Kir-heres, or Kir-haraseth, appears to have been once the capital, or at least the strongest of the cities, of Moab. (2 Kings iii. 25.) By detaching יַעֲזָר as above, the sense of what fol-

 Thy shoots have passed beyond the sea,
 Unto Jaazer have they extended ;
 Upon thy summer fruits and upon thy vintage a spoiler hath fallen.

lows is not impaired, but the metrical division seems to be rendered more perfect. One MS. indeed, for יהנה, reads אהנה ; but it is single, and not countenanced by the ancient versions, or any other authority.

I would here beg leave to offer an observation on the corresponding passage, Isaiah xvi. 7, where we read לאשישי קיר-חרשת תהגו א-י-נבאים. The change of לאשישי into לאנשי, in conformity with the reading in Jeremiah, is probably right. But the last word נבאים, to which Bishop Lowth objects, and proposes to read נכלמו instead of it, may yet, I conceive, be allowed to hold its place. א-י-נבאים may be rendered, "verily being sore grieved," and, joined with תהגו, points out the immediate cause of that inarticulate moan implied, as above noticed, in the verb הנה, the voice being, as it were, choaked with grief ; just as מבכי is here added to יהנה, for the same purpose. "For the men of Kir-hereseth shall ye moan, verily being sore grieved."

Verse 32. Thy shoots have passed beyond the sea, &c.—As the parallel passage, Isaiah xvi. 8, 9, and this verse, tend mutually to illustrate each other, it may not be amiss to subjoin the following, which appears to me the most exact and literal, translation of the former. I do not mean to examine how far Bishop Lowth's alterations of the text in Isaiah are well or ill grounded, but simply to compare what is said, in both places, of the vine of Sibmah, which is unconcerned with those alterations.

- 8 Because the fields of Heshbon have languished,
 The vine of Sibmah the lords of the nations have broken down,
 Whose generous plants extended unto Jaazer,
 Whose shoots strayed into the wilderness,
 They diffused themselves, they passed beyond the sea.
- 9 Therefore with the weeping of Jaazer will I weep,
 O vine of Sibmah, I will water thee with my tears ;
 O Heshbon and Elealeh, because for thy summer fruits,
 And for thy harvest, the shouting hath fallen (or, failed).

Sibmah was a city of Moab, and, as we may perceive, distinguished for its excellent vine ; the shoots or plants of which were much sought after, and, of course, propagated over the neighbouring country. In Isaiah the passage is fullest ; for there it is said, these plants "extended to Jaazer, strayed into the wilderness, and passed beyond the sea." Jaazer was a city in the north border of Moab, being, as EUSEBIUS in his Onomasticon places it, ten miles to the west of Philadelphia, that is, Rabbah of the children of Ammon. "The wilderness" of Moab lay to the east of that country. (Numb. xxi. 11.) And by "the sea" no other can well be understood than the Dead Sea, or Lake of Asphaltites, which was in the south-west quarter of Moab. In the verse now before us we read, as the text stands at present, "Thy shoots have passed beyond the sea, unto the sea of Jaazer have they extended." Hence geographers have been induced to

- 33 And joy and gladness shall be taken away
From the fruitful field, even from the land of Moab ;
And wine from the presses have I caused to cease ;
The treader shall not tread,
The shouting shall be no shouting.
- 34 From the cry of Heshbon unto Elealeh,
Unto Jahatz have they sent forth their voice,
From Zoar even unto Horonaim,
Like a heifer of three years old ;
For even the waters of Nimrim shall become desolate ;
- 35 And I will cause to cease in Moab, saith JEHOVAH, Him that erecteth a high place, and that burneth incense to his gods.

suppose a lake near the city of Jaazer, and called by that name ; but, I believe, without any other authority than what is derived from this passage. But two MSS. omit ים before יעזר ; and the LXX. say nothing of the sea, but instead thereof render, πολεις Ιαζηρ. So that the existence of such a sea or lake is at least very questionable ; and I am inclined to think the text here was no other than in Isaiah, עֲרֵיעוֹר נָגַעַי ; and thus we find the shoots of this celebrated vine to have diffused themselves from the Dead Sea unto Jaazer ; that is, the whole length of the country from south to north.

Verse 33. The treader shall not tread—לֹא-יִדְרֹךְ הִידֹךְ. In these words there is a palpable mistake, which the text of Isaiah xvi. 10, enables us to rectify, where we read לֹא-יִדְרֹךְ הִדְרֹךְ ; and this correction is confirmed both by the Syriac and Chaldee. The next words, הִידֹךְ לֹא הִידֹךְ, will be found to correspond exactly in sense with what follows in the text of Isaiah, הִידֹךְ הַשְׁבֹּתִי, “I have caused the shouting (or, acclamation of the vintagers) to cease ;” or, as Bishop Lowth rather approves, הִידֹךְ הַשְׁבֹּת, “an end is put to the shouting ;” which Jeremiah thus expresses, “The shouting shall be no shouting ;” that is, it shall cease.

“Confer cum Isai xvi. 6-11, ubi eadem fere verba ; sed vel apud hunc, vel illum, vel utrumque prophetam, miserè depravata.”—SECKER.

Verse 34. מוֹעֶקֶת—Query. Whether this word may not be designed for מוֹעֶקֶת, and so signify the women crying out in Heshbon ? It may be the participle present in Pihel, which conjugation denotes action more intense and repeated.

Like a heifer of three years old—The particle of similitude כ is not here expressed, but it is often elliptically deficient. The meaning of this verse I conceive to be, that the cry of Moab, beginning at Heshbon, was continued on from city to city, till the whole country resounded as with the lowing of a young cow, that runs from place to place in search of her calf that has been taken from her : An image singularly expressive. See Isaiah xv. 4, 5.

Verse 35. מַעֲלֵה בַמָּוֶה—Perhaps we should have read מַעֲלֵה בַבַּמָּוֶה, “him that sacrificeth upon a high place ;” the preposition ב being lost in the

- 36 Therefore shall my heart sound like pipes for Moab, Even my heart unto the men of Kir-heres shall sound like pipes ;
Therefore the reserves which he had made are perished.
- 37 Surely every head is baldness,
And every beard is shorn ;
Upon all hands are cuttings,
And upon all loins sackcloth.
- 38 Upon all the house tops of Moab,
And in the streets thereof lamentation is complete ;
Because I have broken Moab as a vessel,
In which none hath pleasure, saith JEHOVAH.
- 39 How is he broken down ! have they howled ;

initial letter of the noun. The LXX., Vulgate, and Chaldee favour this emendation.

Verse 36. Therefore the reserves which he had made are perished—יִתְּרָה properly signifies a residuum or “remnant” that is left after some general loss or destruction. I conceive, therefore, that by יִתְּרָה עֲשָׂה אֲבָדוֹ, we must understand that all the “reserves” or savings, which Moab had made at first out of his shattered fortunes, were, by re-iterated blows, at length so entirely consumed as not to leave a single wreck behind. And this interpretation will be found equally suitable to the parallel place, Isaiah xv. 7, although the text is varied there ; for after יִתְּרָה עֲשָׂה, follows וּפְקֻדָּתָם, which may be rendered, “and their deposits,” or what they had carefully laid up ; after which, instead of אֲבָדוֹ, Isaiah adds, וְעַל נַחַל הָעֲרָבִים יִשְׁאָרוּ, by which Jerome and others are inclined to understand, that the Assyrians should “carry them to the valley of willows,” that is, Babylon. But to this, besides other objections, it might be said, that there was no reason to suppose the Assyrians would carry their booty to Babylon, which at that time was no conspicuous part of the Assyrian empire. I should therefore propose to render, “The Arabians shall carry them to a valley ;” meaning the Arabian freebooters, who might form a part of the Assyrian army, and carry the booty they had gotten into some one of those retired valleys in the desert, where it is still their custom to carry their plunder, and divide it. The LXX., it is evident, understood “the Arabians” to be designed ; and what is said is very consonant to the manners of that people.

Verse 37. Shorn—The mss. and printed editions are here also divided, as well as Isaiah xv. 2, on the reading of גְּדוּעָה or גְּרָעָה. The first is found in the text here, in Isaiah the latter. See Bishop Lowth’s note on Isaiah xv. 2.

Upon all hands are cuttings—See notes on chapter xvi. 6, concerning both cutting the flesh, and shaving off the hair in times of mourning.

And upon all loins—כָּל is inserted before כִּתְּנִים in nine mss. and three editions. So likewise read the LXX. and Vulgate.

Verse 38. Upon all the house tops—Compare Isaiah xv. 3.

Verse 39. Is he broken down—See note on verse 20

How hath Moab turned the back !

Moab is ashamed, and shall become an object of derision,
And a terror to all that are round about him.

40 For thus saith JEHOVAH ;

Behold, like an eagle shall one fly,

And shall spread forth his wings over Moab :

41 The cities are taken, and the strong holds are surprised ;

And the heart of the mighty men of Moab shall be in that day

As the heart of a woman in pangs.

42 And Moab shall be destroyed, so as to be no more a people,
Because he hath puffed himself up against JEHOVAH.

43 The terror, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee,
O inhabitant of Moab, saith JEHOVAH.

44 He that fleeth from before the terror, shall fall into the pit ;
And he that getteth up out of the pit, shall be taken in the snare ;

For I will bring lamentation unto Moab,

The year of their visitation, saith JEHOVAH.

“אֵיךְ חָתָה הַיְלִילִי—‘How is she broken ? howl ye.’ This is literal. But the versions read differently.”—SECKER.

Verse 40. Like an eagle shall one fly—The verb here has an indefinite, or, at least, an unexpressed, subject. But the Babylonian general, or nation, is designed ; for there is an evident allusion to Deut. xxviii. 49. Compare chapter xlix. 22.

Verse 41. The cities are taken—קִרְיֹת is used as a proper name, verse 24 ; and most of the ancient versions, as well as our English translators, have so rendered it in this place. But the context, as well as the prefixed article, seems rather to determine it otherwise. If הַקִּרְיֹת be a proper name, why not הַמְצֻרוֹת ? But where do we meet with such a city as the latter ? As for the singular verb being joined with a plural noun, it is a common Hebraism, and said to denote a distribution of the subject. See BUXTORF. Thes. Gram. lib. ii. cap. 10.

“Verse 42. מֵעַם—‘From being a people ;’ that is, for a time. See verse 47.”—SECKER.

Verses 43, 44. Compare Isaiah xxiv. 17, 18, and see Bishop Lowth’s note on those verses.

Verse 44. He that fleeth—הַנִּסֵּי, the Masora, twenty-seven mss., and four editions, read הָנִס, as in the text, Isaiah xxiv. 18.

Lamentation—For אֵלֶּה, the LXX. and Syriac seem to have read אֵלֶּה, which they render, “these things.” But if that reading were admitted, perhaps אֵלֶּה in this place might have been better translated, “a curse.” But אֵלֶּה may possibly signify the same as אֵלִיָּא in Chaldee, “lamentation, wailing,” from אָלָה “to lament ;” which verb occurs in the Hebrew, Joel i. 8. The Syriac, in like manner, from ܐܠܝܬܐ, luxit, derives ܠܡܢܢܐ, lamentum.

45 Those that fled made a stand under the shadow of Heshbon for strength ;
But a fire is gone forth out of Heshbon,
And a flame from the midst of Sihon,
And hath consumed the quarter of Moab,
And the capital seat of the sons of tumult.

Verse 45. Those that fled made a stand under the shadow of Heshbon for strength—Some interpreters join מִכָּח with נִסִּים, as if it were, “those that fled from force,” or because of the superior force of the enemy. But I am more inclined to construct it with עָמְדוּ, and to understand the words thus : “Those that fled, or were put to flight in the open field, no sooner got under the cover of Heshbon, than they found themselves strong enough to make a stand ;” “they stood for strength,” that is, the additional strength they derived from the shelter of that fortress. But now, instead of being a security to them, as formerly, Heshbon became the source of ruin to Moab.

“מִכָּח—Perhaps, ‘for want of force.’ See Lowth, and Noldius in מ.”—SECKER.

But a fire, &c.—The remainder of this verse, and the next, are borrowed from an ancient prophecy, cited, Numb. xxi. 28, 29, with some addition from Numb. xxiv. 17. From a juxta-position of these passages we shall better judge of their resemblance and variations :—

סִיחֹן	מִקְרִית	לְהֵבָה	מִחֲשִׁבֹן	יֵצֵא	כִּי-אֵשׁ	Num. xxi. 28.
סִיחֹן	מִבֵּין	וּלְהֵבָה	מִחֲשִׁבֹן	יֵצֵא	כִּי-אֵשׁ	Jer. xlviii. 45.
אֲרָנָן	בְּמוֹת	בְּעֵלִי	מוֹאָב	עַר	אֲכָלָה	Num. xxi. 28.
שִׁאֲוֹן	בְּנֵי	וּקְדָקֵד	מוֹאָב	פֶּאֶת	וְתֹאכַל	Jer. xlviii. 45.
שֶׁת	כָּל-בְּנֵי	וּקְדָקֵד	מוֹאָב	פֶּאֶתִי	וּמִחֶץ	Num. xxiv. 17.

In the first of these hemistichs, twelve mss. and six editions read יֵצֵא in Jeremiah, the same as in the text of Numbers.* In the second hemistich, מִבֵּין corresponds in sense with מִקְרִית ; but the Syriac, Theodotion, and the Arabic, represent מִקְרִית, “from the city.” One mss., for מִבֵּין, reads מִבֵּית. After the first word in the third hemistich, the remainder of the verse is evidently taken from Numb. xxiv 17. By פֶּאֶתִי מוֹאָב the LXX. understand “the princes” or “leaders of Moab,” τοὺς ἀρχηγούς Μωαβί and the Chaldee interprets פֶּאֶת in the same sense. But פֶּאֶת seems rather to denote that circumscribed spot, angle, or quarter, of the habitable earth, which was allotted for the portion of any particular people. So, Neh. ix. 22, God is said to have given his people Israel kingdoms and nations, and to have “assigned them to a certain limited spot,” or “quarter ;” וְתִהְיֶה לָהֶם וְתִהְיֶה לָהֶם וְתִהְיֶה לָהֶם. And in marking out their limits, Moses says, Numb. xxxiv. 3, “Then your quarter on the south shall be,” &c. וְהָיָה לָכֶם פֶּאֶת-יָנֹב. And again, Joshua xviii. 14, 15, פֶּאֶת is applied in like manner. So chapter ix. 26, by קְצוּצֵי פֶּאֶת, I understand those, who having an insular, or at least a peninsular, situation, had “their quarter” separated or cut off from any other by the interposition of the sea. See note on that place. וּקְדָקֵד is the reading of the Samaritan text in Numbers xxiv. 17, instead of וְקָדָקֵד. וּקְדָקֵד properly signifies “the crown” or “top of the head ;” hence it may denote

- 46 Wo unto thee, O Moab !
 Thou art undone, O people of Chemosh ;
 For they have taken thy sons captives,
 Thy daughters also captives.
- 47 But I will turn again the captivity of Moab
 In the latter days, saith JEHOVAH.—
 Thus far the judgment of Moab.

CHAPTER XLIX.

1 CONCERNING THE CHILDREN OF AMMON.

THUS saith JEHOVAH ;
 Hath Israel no sons ?

metaphorically, “the principal seat” or “head quarter” of those who are here styled “sons of tumult;” שֹׂנוֹן being substituted, probably by design, for שֵׁת, in order to mark out the Moabites by a character which had rendered them particularly obnoxious, their tumultuous and indecent proceedings against their Jewish neighbours; see verse 27. Or they might be called “sons of tumult,” as being destined to suffer by the tumultuous invasion of the Chaldeans; in like manner as we find persons called “children of disobedience,” and “children of wrath,” from having been guilty of the one, and being doomed to abide the other. (Eph. ii. 2, 3.)

Verse 46. Wo unto thee, O Moab!—The parallel passages stand thus—

אבדת עס-כמוש	אוי-לך מואב Num. xxi. 29.
אבד עס-כמוש	אוי-לך מואב Jer. xlviii. 46.
ובנתיו בשבית	בניו פליטם Num. xxi. 29.
ובנתיה בשביה	כי-לקחו בניך בשבי Jer. xlviii. 46.

For אבד, in the second hemistich, all the ancient versions, with one ms., read אבדת, as in the original prophecy. The rest seem to be variations of choice, as better suited to Jeremiah's purpose. One ms., with the Syriac and Vulgate, omit בשבי; in which case the two last lines are to be rendered thus:—

For they have taken thy sons
 And thy daughters into captivity.

“Verse 47. It appears from JOSEPHUS (Ant. lib. xiii. cap. 13, edit. Hudson.) that they did return.”—SECKER.

CHAP. XLIX. Verse 1. CONCERNING THE CHILDREN OF AMMON—Besides Jeremiah, this downfall of the Ammonites is foretold also by Ezekiel, xxv. 2-7; Amos, i. 13-15; Zephaniah, ii. 8-11. For the presumptive date of the delivery of this prophecy, see note on chapter xlvii. 1; and for the time of its completion, see note on chapter xlviii. 1.

“עמו—Ο λαος αυτων, LXX. Pro εμιν usurpatur Num. xxii. 5. Nescio, an Ammonitæ dicti sunt עם מלכם, ut Moabitæ עם כמוש, cap. xlviii. 46.”—SECKER.

Hath he not an heir ?

Why hath Milcom taken possession of Gad ?

And his people dwelt in the cities thereof ?

- 2 Therefore behold the days come, saith JEHOVAH,
That I will cause to be heard in Rabbah of the children of Ammon an alarm of war,
And she shall become a heap of desolation,
And her daughters shall be destroyed by fire :
And Israel shall take to their possessions who have taken to his,
Saith JEHOVAH.

- 3 Howl, O Heshbon, for Ai is spoiled ;

Why hath Milcom taken possession of Gad ?—It is probable from hence that when the king of Assyria carried away captives the Gadites and their brethren who dwelt beyond Jordan, (2 Kings xv. 29 ; 1 Chron. v. 26,) the Ammonites, either by the consent or connivance of the Assyrian conqueror, took possession of their vacant country, to which they had no pretensions of right, so long as any of the ancient owners, or their posterity, were in being. The prophet Amos speaks of a similar proceeding of the Ammonites, attended with a circumstance of shocking barbarity : “They ripped up,” says he, “the women with child of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border.” (Amos i. 13.) But Amos prophesied before the Gadites were dispossessed by the Assyrian, as above-mentioned, and is, therefore, supposed to have in view the time when Hazael king of Syria laid waste the same country. (2 Kings x. 33.) The LXX. here read “Gilead” for “Gad ;” which, indeed, amounts to the same thing ; for half Gilead was in the possession of the Gadites. Our translators have rendered מלכם, “their king,” but I have followed most of the ancient versions in rendering it “Milcom,” as the proper name of the chief deity of the Ammonites, who is so called, 1 Kings xi. 5. And as this interpretation of the word seems most suitable here, so at verse 3 it appears almost indispensable ; see note there. As JEHOVAH is said to have given his people Israel the lands they possessed, so the idolatrous nations considered their acquisitions as obtained by the favour of their respective idols. See Judges xi. 24.

Verse 2. And her daughters—The lesser towns dependent upon the metropolis are called “her daughters.”

And Israel shall take to their possessions—This is understood to have been fulfilled when Judas Maccabeus defeated the Ammonites, and took their towns. (1 Maccabees v. 6, &c.) Zephaniah speaks in like manner, ii. 9 : “The residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them.” But both prophets may perhaps refer to still future times, when Israel shall be finally restored to their own land, as is frequently foretold of them ; and not only recover their own ancient possessions, but succeed, likewise, to the vacant possessions of their once hostile neighbours, long before extinct and irrecoverably lost.

Verse 3. Ai is spoiled—Ai must be a different city from that taken by Joshua, chapter viii., which lay on the west side of Jordan ; for all the

- Cry, ye daughters of Rabbah ;
 Gird on sackcloth, lament,
 And run ye to and fro within the fences ;
 For Milcom shall go into captivity,
 His priests and his princes together.
- 4 Wherefore dost thou glory in vallies ?
 Though thy valley be fruitful, O perverse daughter,
 That glorieth in her treasures,
 That saith in her heart,
 Who shall come unto me ?
- 5 Behold, I will bring a terror upon thee, country of Hammon lay on the east. Grotius mentions another city, called Raa by Ptolemy ; which being near Heshbon, the destruction of it was matter of concern to the neighbouring city. Jam proximus ardet Ucalegon.

Within the fences—By גדרות are meant those “ fences ” or “ enclosures ” round the lesser towns which served to secure them against thieves and robbers, but were not dignified with the name of “ walls,” capable of resisting the attack of a regular enemy. The Psalmist distinguishes these from the fortifications of cities, Psalm lxxxix. 41 : “ Thou hast broken down all his fences ; (גדרותיו) ; thou hast brought his strong holds (מצודותיו, ‘ his walled fortresses,’ ) to ruin.” The inhabitants, therefore, of the lesser towns, “ the daughters of Rabbah,” were destined to run to and fro, like persons distracted with fear, “ within their enclosures,” not daring to step beyond them, lest they should fall in with the enemy, whose approach they dreaded.

For Milcom shall go into captivity—Here the same is said of Milcom, as was of Chemosh, chapter xlviii. 7 ; which shows that Milcom is properly used as the name of the Ammonitish idol. For יחזיו, at the end of this verse, twenty mss. and two editions read יחזיו.

Verse 4. Though thy valley be fruitful—The text runs, “ Fruitful thy valley ;” but the same mode of expression is used, Numb. xxiv. 21 : איתן : מושבך ; which our translators render, “ Strong is thy dwelling place ;” but it certainly should be, “ Let thy dwelling place be strong ;” for ושים, which follows next, is a verb in the imperative mood : “ And put thou thy nest in a rock.” The whole is spoken by way of concession : “ Be it so ; let thy dwelling place be strong, and put thy nest in a rock, if thou wilt ; nevertheless the Kenite shall be wasted,” &c. So here, “ Let thy valley be fruitful ;” or, “ Though it be so, yet glory not therein ; for, notwithstanding its fertility, it shall be no security to thee against the terror that I shall bring upon thee.”

That saith in her heart—These words are not in the text at present, but are found in one ms. of good note, and in three of the oldest editions, which read, האומרה בלבבה ; and in one ms. which reads, האומרה בלבבה. All the ancient versions express, at least, האומרה. Compare Obad. 3.

Verse 5. A terror—פחד, that is, “ an object of terror.” “ The image,” says Bishop Lowth in his note on Isaiah xxiv. 17, “ is taken from a line

Saith the Lord JEHOVAH of hosts,
From all parts round about thee ;
And ye shall be driven every one before it,
And there shall be none to rally against him that is fled.

6 But after this I will turn again the captivity
Of the children of Ammon, saith JEHOVAH.

7 CONCERNING IDUMEA.

THUS saith JEHOVAH of hosts ;
Is there no more any wisdom in Teman ?
Is counsel passed away from the prudent ?
Hath their wisdom overshot itself ?

8 Flee ye, turn your backs,
Retire deep for to dwell,
O ye inhabitants of Dedan ;
Because the calamity of Esau have I brought,
The time of his visitation upon him.

strung with feathers of all colours, which, fluttering in the air, scared and frightened the wild beasts into the toils or pit which was prepared for them."

Every one before it—That is, "before the terror."

Verse 7. CONCERNING IDUMEA—The destruction of Edom, or Idumea, is likewise foretold by Ezekiel, xxv. 12–14 ; xxxv. 2, &c ; Joel, iii. 19 ; Amos, i. 11, 12 ; and by the prophet Obadiah.

From the prudent—מִמְבִּינִים לְמִמְבִּינִים. An ellipsis of the preposition מִ may, I think, be often observed when the word begins with the same letter.

Hath their wisdom overshot itself?—סִרַּח signifies, "to be redundant," or "luxuriant," like the branches of a vine. Hence Dr. Taylor has explained this passage, "Is their wisdom become luxuriant? Doth it shoot out into proud, vain, foolish conceit?" See TAYLOR'S Concordance. Compare Obad. 7, 8.

Verse 8. Retire deep for to dwell—The meaning of this is, that they should go into those deep caverns to hide themselves from the enemy, whither the people of those parts used to retire on the like occasions. See Judges vi. 2 ; 1 Sam. xiii. 6 ; Isaiah ii. 10, 19 ; and Bishop Lowth's note on the latter of those verses.

The time of his visitation—For פְּקֻדָּתִי one ms. reads פְּקָדוֹ ; another, פְּקֻדָּתָה ; and, in a third, the two last letters are upon a rasure. The Vulgate and Chaldee countenance פְּקֻדָּתִי, which is conformable to the usual mode of expression. See chapter viii. 12 ; x. 15 ; xi. 23 ; xxiii. 12 ; xlv. 21 ; xlviii. 44 ; l. 27 ; li. 18. But besides the present instance, there are two other exceptions, chapter vi. 15 ; l. 31 : See the notes on both those places. Should, however, the true reading be פְּקֻדָּתִי, I should rather consider פְּקֻדָּתִי to be contractedly written for פְּקֻדָּוֹתִי, so as to be the noun plural in regimix, rather than the verb. The plural noun is sometimes used

- 9 If grape gatherers come unto thee,
They shall not leave any gleanings ;
If thieves by night,
They shall plunder enough to suffice them :
10 For I have laid Esau bare,
I have exposed his hiding places,
So that he cannot conceal himself ;
His seed is spoiled, and his brethren, and his neighbours,
And there is nothing of him left.
11 Shall I preserve the life of thy fatherless children ?
Or shall thy widows trust in me ?
12 Surely thus hath JEHOVAH said,
Behold, they, whose right it was not to have drunken,
Have indeed drunken of the cup ;

to denote an intense degree ; and, accordingly, פְּקֻדָּתוֹ might signify, “ his sore visitation.”

Verse 9. They shall not leave any gleanings—Our translators have placed an interrogation here, but there is no sign of it in the original. The meaning is, that when the enemy came to spoil, they should meet with no interruption, but should glean quite clean, and leave nothing behind through haste. The same thing is expressed in the two next hemistichs, where it is obvious we should read יִשְׁחִיתוּ, instead of הִשְׁחִיתוּ ; as the LXX. and Vulgate evidently did.

Verse 10. For—So כִּי should here be rendered, and not “ but ;” for the reason is here assigned for what was said in the preceding verse, that the Edomites should be totally stripped and plundered : “ Because,” says JEHOVAH, “ I have exposed them naked and defenceless to the invaders.”

Conceal himself—For יִנְחֹבֶה, twelve, perhaps fourteen, mss. and one edition read יִנְחָבֶה ; and this is, no doubt, one of the many places where the ה and נ are put by mistake for each other.

And there is nothing of him left—The sense of this and of the following verse has been sadly perplexed by a wrong combination of עֹבֶה, which now stands at the beginning of verse 11 ; but which, being divided, and עֹב, or עֹוֹב, given to the end of this verse, and the ה, as a mark of interrogation, prefixed to the next word, יִתְמִיךְ, so that the verse may begin with הִיתְמִיךְ, a very clear and consistent sense is restored ; the interrogations in verse 11 amounting to an absolute negative.

“ Verse 11. עֹוֹבֶה יִתְמִיךְ—The Chaldee thinks this spoken to the Jews. Some think it ironical, as they think Isaiah xvi. 4. The LXX. read very differently. Others make a very harsh ellipsis, translating יִשְׁחִיתוּ, verse 10, ‘ And there is none to say,’ &c.”—SECKER.

Verse 12. Whose right it was not to have drunken—This must be understood comparatively, for it cannot be said that the Jewish people did not deserve to be punished ; but, in comparison with the Edomites, and other neighbouring nations, they were, in a manner, innocent, or rather less deserving of the evil that befell them. Compare Prov. xi. 31 ; 1 Peter iv. 17, 18. Or their near relation to God might have appeared sufficient to

- And shalt thou, the very one, go altogether unpunished?
 Thou shalt not go unpunished,
 But thou shalt assuredly drink.
- 13 For by myself I have sworn, saith JEHOVAH,
 That an astonishment, a reproach, a desolation,
 And an execration, shall Botsra become;
 And all her cities shall become perpetual wastes.
- 14 I have heard a proclamation from JEHOVAH,
 And an ambassador sent among the nations, saying,
 Assemble yourselves, and come against her,
 And arise to battle.
- 15 Behold, I have made thee of small account among the nations,
 Contemptible among the men of whom thou art horribly afraid.
- 16 The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee,
 O thou that dwellest within the incirclings of the rock,
 That occupiest the height of a hill;

exempt them from such rigorous treatment. See chapter xxv. 29; Obad. 16. There is a peculiar emphasis in the pronoun הוּא which follows, and denotes that Edom was "he," "the very person," to whom the punishment was peculiarly due.

Verse 13. A reproach—The conjunction ו is placed before לחרפה in three mss. and in the LXX., and before both לחרפה and לחרב in the Syriac and Vulgate. In the editions of the LXX. לחרב is omitted; but in ms. Pachom. there is a word corresponding to it: Eis αφανισμον, και εις αβατον, και εις καταρασιν.

Verse 15. Behold—Four mss., among which is the ancient Bodleian, N<sup>o</sup>. 1, together with the LXX., omit כִּי at the beginning of this verse, where it is, at least, superfluous.

Contemptible among the men of whom thou art horribly afraid—One ms. after בּוֹי, reads אַתָּה: "Contemptible art thou," or, "shalt thou be, among men." In the book which the Jews call "Rabboth," (see KENNICOTT'S Dissert. Gen. sect. 42,) instead of בּוֹי בְּאֵדָם, this place is cited thus, בּוֹי אַתָּה, as it stands in the text, Obad. 2; but the true emendation here required is, to recall תַּפְלִצָּתָךְ from the beginning of the next verse, and to connect it with this. תַּפְלִצָּת properly signifies, "terror," or "trembling," as is evident from the use of the verb in Hithpael, Job ix. 6; so that "the men of thy terror" mean, according to a common Hebraism, "those of whom thou art greatly afraid." In further justification of this construction it may be observed, that not only the sense and metre are improved by it, but a grammatical error saved; for, according to the principles of grammar, it would be wrong to construct תַּפְלִצָּתָךְ with הוּא, on account of the difference of gender. The next verse proceeds afterwards exactly as Obad. 3.

Verse 16. Within the incirclings of the rock—בְּחֻגֵי is a word that occurs

- Though thou settest on high thy nest as an eagle,
 From thence will I bring thee down, saith JEHOVAH.
- 17 And Idumea shall become an object of astonishment,
 Every one that passeth by her shall be astonished,
 And shall hiss because of all her calamities.
- 18 According to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah,
 And of the neighbouring places thereof, saith JEHOVAH,
 There shall not a man dwell there,
 Neither shall a son of man sojourn in her.
- 19 Behold, as a lion cometh up,
 A strong one from the swelling of Jordan against a fold,
 When I throw her into disorder, I will cause him to run away from her ;

only here, in the parallel passage, Obad. 3, and Cant. ii. 14. Our translators have rendered it, "the clefts" of the rock; but for no other reason, as far as I can perceive, than because the context seemed to require such a sense; for it does not appear connected with any root in the kindred dialects that has a signification like it. It seems rather to come from חָגַג, "to encircle," and, in that case, may signify, "the windings" or "encirclings" of the rock. Whether it may have been a mistake by transposition for בְּחֻגֵי or not, I will not pretend to say; but such transpositions are often to be met with in the mss.; and, in one ms., this very word is written בְּחֻגֵי, by a still further protrusion of the Vau. Perhaps by "dwelling within the encirclings of the rock," may be intended the general situation of the cities and towns of Idumea, surrounded, for the most part, with steep rocks and mountains. But I am more inclined to think, that the circular extent or limits of the city Selah are particularly designed; which city is spoken of as belonging to the Edomites, 2 Kings xiv. 7, and there called, as it is here, הַסֵּלַע, "the rock," by way of eminence; and by the Greeks, Πέτρα, for the same reason. STRABO describes it as "built upon a plain and level surface, but fortified all round with the natural rock, being externally a steep precipice, but within having plenty of springs that supply water for other uses, and for the purposes of gardening." (Lib. xvi. p. 779.) Κεῖται γὰρ ἐπὶ χωρίῳ τ' ἀλλὰ ὁμῶς καὶ ἐπιπέδῳ, κυκλῶ δὲ πέτρα φρουρουμένου, τὰ μὲν ἐκτὸς κρημνοῦ ἀποτομον, τὰ δ' ἐντὸς πηγὰς ἀφθονοῦς ἔχοντος εἰς τὴν ὑδρεῖαν καὶ κηπεῖαν.

Verse 17. And shall hiss—See note on chapter xix. 8.

Verse 19. Behold, as a lion cometh up, &c.—It has already been observed, in a note on chapter xii. 5, that the river Jordan is subject to very rapid inundations, which force the wild beasts out of the thickets by the river side, and drive them to infest and disturb the neighbouring plains. We are here presented, by way of similitude, with the image of a lion, thus driven from his covert, and running up with great force from the water towards the sheepfolds.

When I throw her into disorder—אֶהְרִיעָהּ is considered as an adverb both in our English and in the ancient versions; but it has certainly the form of

And him that is chosen will I commission against her :
 For who is like me ? or who shall prescribe to me ?
 Or who is that shepherd, that can stand before me ?

- 20 Therefore hear ye the counsel of JEHOVAH,
 Which he hath taken against Idumea ;
 And his purposes which he hath purposed
 Against the inhabitants of Teman :
 Surely they shall be dragged away from the little ones of the flock ;
 Surely he will make their habitation astonished at them.

a verb ; and, as I have already observed, in note on chapter xxxi. 35, that רגע signifies to “ agitate ” or “ disturb,” so I see no reason why we may not render בי־ארגיעה, “ when I shall agitate,” or “ throw her into disorder.” See afterwards chapter l. 34. The similitude will hereby be rendered complete : “ When I shall occasion a like commotion in her, Idumea, as a fierce and strong lion may be supposed to do in the sheepfolds, when he falleth upon them, then will I cause him ” (namely, the son of man, of whom it was said, in the preceding verse, that he should not reside or sojourn in her) “ to run away from her, as the affrighted shepherds and their flocks from before the lion.”

And him that is chosen will I commission against her—That is, “ I will authorize him, whom I have selected for the purpose, to command the expedition against her.” Nebuchadnezzar is here designed, as the commissioned agent against Idumea ; as Cyrus is meant, chapter l. 44, against Babylon. פקדו is used in the like sense, chapter li. 27, as אפקד here.

Who shall prescribe to me?—יעד properly signifies “ to direct or fix ” authoritatively what is to be done.

Who is that shepherd—That “ leader,” or “ commander,” that can stand the brunt of an attack from me. The word רעה, “ shepherd,” is used in correspondence with the sheepfolds before mentioned.

Verse 20. Surely they shall be dragged away from the little ones of the flock—Two reasons occur with great force against rendering, with our translators, “ The least of the flock shall draw them out ; ” or as סחב properly signifies, “ shall drag them,” as dogs do dead carcasses, tearing and rending them. See chapter xv. 3. The first is, that in order to express the superlative degree we should read הוצעירי, with the article prefixed. And, secondly, it would be unnatural to speak of sheep or lambs dragging any other creatures about without violence. The text, therefore, I think, should be read thus, הוצעון מצעירי הצאן, and rendered, “ they shall be dragged, or torn away, from the little ones of the flock,” that is, from their wives and children. After having made the above remark, I found that the same division of the words was suggested by Houbigant ; but he makes מצעירי הצאן the subject of the verb ; raptabuntur parvuli gregis. Either way the sense is a good one ; which is preferable, I leave to the determination of the learned.

Their habitation—Twenty-seven mss. and five editions read נויהם in the plural. But the LXX., Syriac, and Vulgate confirm the present reading of

- 21 At the noise of their fall the earth trembleth ;
It crieth out ; at the Red sea is heard the voice thereof.
- 22 Behold he shall mount and fly like an eagle,
And shall expand his wings over Botsra ;
And the heart of the strong men of Moab shall be in that day
As the heart of a woman in pangs.

HAMATH is confounded, and Arphad,
Because they have heard evil tidings ;

the text. If by "their habitation," or "habitations," we understand by metonymy the persons dwelling in them, or "their families," it will, I think, tend to confirm the interpretation I have proposed in the preceding part of the verse, "They shall be torn away from their wives and children by force, to the great amazement of their families and domestics, who shall be witnesses of the calamity."

Verse 21. It crieth out ; at the Red sea is heard the voice thereof—For קולה thirty-three, perhaps thirty-five, mss. and four editions read קולם. But קולה certainly best suits with צעקה, which seems to be a verb agreeing with הארץ, as well as רעשה. But the LXX. evidently found no such word as either קולה or קולם in their copy. Without it the sense would be complete, considering צעקה as the infinitive mood used as a substantive with the affix, to be thus rendered:—

The cry thereof is heard at the Red Sea.

The similar passage, chapter l. 46, favours the rejection of קולה or קולם.

"Eadem, mutatis mutandis, leguntur, cap. l. 44-46, ubi pro בים-סוף legitur בגימס. Non extat סוף apud LXX. Et fortè primò בגימס depravatum in בים, deinde סוף additum."—SECKER.

Verse 22. Behold he shall mount and fly like an eagle—Compare chapter xlviii. 40, 41.

Verse 23. CONCERNING DAMASCUS—Damascus was the capital of the kingdom of Syria, and had seemingly at this time swallowed up all the other petty sovereignties of that country. Isaiah had before uttered a prophecy concerning it of a calamitous import, chapter xvii, which had been fulfilled by Tiglath-pileser's taking it, and carrying the people captives to Kir, 2 Kings xvi. 9. Amos also had foretold the same event, Amos i. 3-5. But it had recovered itself after the fall of the Assyrian empire, and is here doomed to suffer again the like calamities from the resentment of Nebuchadnezzar, probably about the same time with the other neighbouring nations. See note on chapter xlviii. 1.

Hamath is confounded, and Arphad—Hamath and Arphad are elsewhere joined together. See 2 Kings xviii. 34 ; xix. 13 ; Isaiah x. 9. Hamath was the capital of a part of Syria bearing the same name, and which formed once an independent kingdom. It was situate on the northern frontier of the land of Israel, whence we find frequent mention of "the entrance of

And trembling hath seized her,
Distress hath laid hold on her,
And pangs, as on a woman in travail.

A city of my joy !

And all the men of war ;

Hamath," Numb. xxxiv. 8, &c. The city of Hamath, JOSEPHUS tells us, was that which the Macedonians afterwards called "Epiphania." (Ant. lib. 1. cap. 6. edit. Hudson.) And JEROME, in his Commentary on Isaiah x. 9, says the same : Hemath, quam Syri usque hodie Epiphaniam vocant ; Arphad, or Arvad, is with good reason held to be the island of Aradus in the Mediterranean sea ; as those who are called הארורי, Gen. x. 18, are by the LXX. rendered Αραδιοι, and in the Vulgate, Aradii. This island was not far from the shore, and nearly opposite to Hamath.

They are melted into a sea of solicitude—This is a literal translation of the text, and appears to me preferable in sense to any of the interpretations which I have hitherto met with.

"Præ solicitudine, Vulg. ; quasi legissent כִּדְאָגָה. Præcedit ב."—SECKER.

Verse 24. Distress hath laid hold on her, and pangs—It seems clear both from the grammar and metre, that the words והבליט and אחזתה have been transposed in the text, as it stands at present. Compare chapter l. 43.

Verse 25. How have they not left her—This passage, which has occasioned much perplexity, may, I think, be rendered sufficiently clear by only supposing עוֹבָה to be written for עוֹבוּהָ, an abbreviated mode of writing which often occurs. Both the Syriac and Vulgate render the verb in the third person plural ; and four mss. have supposed a suppression of the ו, but have supplied it in the wrong place, one reading עוֹבוּהָ, and three עוֹבוּהָ. The subject of עוֹבוּהָ would be the trembling, the distress, and the pangs, which are said in the preceding verse to have seized on Damascus, and, as it follows here, had left her in such a condition, as to be no longer what she used to be, "a city of praise, a city of my joy," or one which I can behold with satisfaction and delight.

"איך לא עוֹבָה—How comes it to pass that it was not left, or spared ?"—SECKER.

"בִּמְשׁוֹעֵי is properly paragogic here, or a mark of the plural."—SECKER.

Verse 26. Her broad places—Her open areas or squares. See note on chapter v. 1.

And it shall consume the palaces of Ben-hadad.
- 28 CONCERNING KEDAR, AND CONCERNING THE KINGDOMS OF HAZOR, WHICH NEBUCHADREZZAR KING OF BABYLON SMOTE.
- Thus hath JEHOVAH said;
Arise ye, go up to Kedar,
And spoil the children of Kedem.
- 29 Their tents and their flocks let them take,
Their curtains, and all their furniture;
And their camels let them carry off for their own use;
And let them bring upon them terror from every side.
- 30 Flee ye, move off apace,

Verse 27. Ben-hadad—This seems to have been a common name for the kings of Syria; as Pharaoh was for those of Egypt.

Verse 28. CONCERNING KEDAR, AND CONCERNING THE KINGDOMS OF HAZOR—Kedar is well known to have been one of the sons of Ishmael, Gen. xxv. 13, who settled in Arabia. But of Hazor I nowhere find a satisfactory account given by the commentators. There is, indeed, a city called "Hazor," mentioned, Josh. xi. 10, and in other parts of scripture. But this was in the land of Canaan; whereas the kingdoms of "Hazor" here prophesied of were evidently in Arabia, in the neighbourhood at least of Kedar. But among the sons of Joktan, who were prior to the Ishmaelites in Arabia, and whose descendants are therefore looked on as the only genuine Arabs, we find one, whose name was Hazor-Maveth, Gen. x. 26–30. And as by Kedar all the descendants of Ishmael are probably here designed; so all the other branches of the family of Joktan may likewise be included under the general name of Hazor. And this leads me to observe it as the most probable reason, why the Arabians "that live in the desert" are called "a mingled people," or promiscuous multitude, chapter xxv. 24; that they were thus made up of people of different descents; some of them being sprung from Joktan, others from Ishmael, to whom must be added the sons of Abraham, by Keturah, who are also said to have been settled in Kedem, or the east country, Gen. xxv. 6, and perhaps other families besides. All these were divided into petty sovereignties, under chiefs, called "Emirs," and others called "Shekhs," which explains what is to be understood by "the kingdoms of Hazor."

Kedem—See note on chapter xxv. 24.

Verse 29. Their tents and their flocks—The substance of most of these Arabians, who were scenites, consisted in their tents, furniture, and cattle, with which they moved about from place to place, according as they could find pasture.

And let them bring upon them—וּקְרָאוּ. Literally, "Let them call for," or command, "their calamity" to come "upon them;" that is, occasion it. See 2 Kings viii. 1; Psalm cv. 16.

- Retire deep for to dwell,
 O ye inhabitants of Hazor, saith JEHOVAH ;
 For Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you,
 And hath devised a device against you.
- 31 Arise ye, go up against a nation at ease,
 That dwelleth securely, saith JEHOVAH ;
 Which have neither gates nor bars ;
 They dwell apart by themselves.
- 32 And their camels shall be for plunder,
 And the multitude of their cattle for spoil,
 And I will scatter them into every quarter of those that inhabit the insulated coast ;
 And from all sides thereof will I bring their calamity,
 Saith JEHOVAH.
- 33 And Hazor shall become a dwelling for dragons,
 A desolation for ever ;
 There shall not a man dwell there,
 Nor shall a son of man sojourn therein.
- 34 THE WORD OF JEHOVAH WHICH CAME TO JEREMIAH
 THE PROPHET CONCERNING ELAM, IN THE BEGINNING OF THE REIGN OF ZEDEKIAH KING OF JUDAH, SAYING,

Verse 30. Retire deep for to dwell—See note on verse 8.

Hath devised a device against you—For עליהם, which is certainly wrong, eighty mss., perhaps eighty-nine, and eight editions, read עליכם; also forty-nine mss. and four editions have it marked in the margin for a Keri. The LXX., Chaldee, and Vulgate render, “against you;” but the Syriac uniformly in both places of this verse, “against them.”

Verse 31. They dwell apart by themselves—That is, “Their habitations are isolated;” so I think בדר ישבנו must here signify. They do not live in cities, towns, or villages, where the houses are contiguous; but each family has its mansion apart from the rest, with land about it sufficient for the subsistence of their cattle. In this dispersed state they were, of course, less provided with the means of defending themselves from the incursions of an enemy.

Verse 32. Of those that inhabit the insulated coast—The peninsula of Arabia. See notes on chapter ix. 26; xxv. 23.

Verse 34. CONCERNING ELAM—Elam we find to have been an independent and even powerful kingdom in the days of Abram. (Genesis xiv. 1.) But I am not of opinion with those writers, who hold that by “Elam,” in scripture, “Persia” is always meant. There is no doubt but that when the monarchy of Persia was established under Cyrus, Elam was blended into and formed a part of it. But before that time Elam and Persia were

- 35      Thus saith JEHOVAH of hosts ;
         Behold I am about to break the bow of Elam,
         The principal part of their strength.
- 36      And I will bring against Elam four winds
         From the four extremities of the heavens,
         And I will scatter them before all those winds ;
         And there shall not be that nation,
         Whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come.

two distinct kingdoms ; of which this may be admitted for proof, that the kingdom of Persia, if Xenophon may be credited as an historian, was never subdued under the dominion of Nebuchadnezzar, but preserved its liberty in alliance with the Medes. Elam, on the contrary, is not only here prophesied of, as destined to become a part of the Babylonian conquests, but is actually spoken of, Daniel viii. 2, as a province of the Babylonish empire, over which Daniel seems to have presided, having Shushan for the seat of his government. We may, therefore, conclude Elam to have been, as the name itself would lead us to suppose, the country called, by Heathen writers, Elymais, which PLINY, in conformity with Daniel, describes as separated from Susiana by the river Eulæus, or Ulay. (Nat. Hist. lib. vi. cap. 31.) STRABO also gives it the same situation, and in two places mentions the wars it had carried on with the Susians and Babylonians. (Lib. xi. pag. 524 ; lib. xvi. pag. 744.) Shushan, or Susa, was, properly speaking, the capital of Susiana ; but it is likely, that when the Babylonians, in conjunction with the Susians, conquered Elam, they might have annexed it to the government of Susiana, and so the provinces united might have gone indifferently by the name of either Elam, or Susiana. If so, Abradates, whom Xenophon styles king of the Susians, and who, in the course of the war between the Babylonians and Medes, revolted from the former, and joined the latter with his forces, (XENOPHON. Cyropæd. lib. vi.) had Elam likewise, as well as Susiana, for his kingdom or government, conferred upon him by Nebuchadnezzar, who is said to have had an affection for him ; and his revolt from the son of his benefactor will help us to account for the forces of Elam being joined with Media in besieging Babylon, as foretold by Isaiah, xxi. 2, whilst the province or country itself may have still remained in the hands of the king of Babylon, who may have entrusted Daniel with the administration of it ; till, on the final subversion of the Babylonish monarchy, it was restored again to its former possessors, who had fought under the banners of the Medes and Persians, as is intimated, verse 39.

Verse 35. The bow of Elam, the principal part of their strength—Isaiah speaks of the Elamites in this manner, Isaiah xxii. 6, “And Elam bare the quiver.” STRABO also says that the mountainous part of Elymais bred chiefly archers ; στρατιώτας τρέφει, τοξότας τους πλείστον. (Lib. xvi. p. 744.) And LIVY speaks of Elymæi sagittarii. (Lib. xxxvii. cap. 40.) Other Heathen writers do the same.

Verse 36. Four winds—By these we are to understand enemies directing their force against them from every quarter of the heavens.

Whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come—Two obvious mistakes are

- 37 And I will cause Elam to be dismayed before the face of their enemies,
 And before the face of them that seek their life ;
 And I will bring evil upon them,
 The fierceness of mine anger, saith JEHOVAH ;
 And I will send after them the sword,
 Until I have consumed them.
- 38 And I will set my throne in Elam,
 And I will destroy from thence king and princes,
 Saith JEHOVAH.
- 39 But it shall come to pass at the end of days,
 That I will turn again the captivity of Elam,
 Saith JEHOVAH.

CHAPTER L.

- 1 THE WORD WHICH JEHOVAH SPAKE CONCERNING BABY-LON, AND CONCERNING THE LAND OF CHALDEA, BY THE MINISTRY OF JEREMIAH THE PROPHET.

found here in the text. The first is יבוא, in the singular number, to agree with נירחי, a plural subject. This, however, might be accounted for by the subject's being taken distributively. See BUNTORF. Thes. Gram. lib. ii. cap. 10. But eight mss. read יבאו, two have a letter erased at the end of יבא; and in the notes of the celebrated Mantuan edition, N°. 300, it is found יבואו. The other mistake is עולם for עולם, which is corrected by the Masora, and is found right in the text of fourteen, perhaps nineteen, mss. and three editions.

Verse 37. Until I have consumed them—In Van der Hooght's edition we read כלחי; but thirty-four mss. and fourteen editions read כלחוי, as it is also found among the various readings collected at the end of Van der Hooght's edition.

Verse 38. I will set my throne in Elam—Nebuchadnezzar acting under the commission and authority of God, the establishment of his power was in effect the setting up of the throne or dominion of his principal.

Verse 39. I will turn again the captivity of Elam—For אשוב, twenty, perhaps twenty-one, mss., and three editions, together with the Masora, read אשיב. And for שבית, the Masora reads שבות, with the concurrence of thirty-one, perhaps thirty-two, mss. and five editions. See note on chap. xxix. 14.

CHAP. L. THIS chapter and the next contain a prophecy concerning the fall of Babylon, intermixed and contrasted with predictions concerning the redemption of Israel and Judah, who were not, like their oppressors, to be finally extirpated, but to survive them, and upon their repentance and conversion to be pardoned and restored. The prophecy was delivered and sent to Babylon in the fourth year of Zedekiah's reign, as appears from chapter li. 59.

Verse 1. AND CONCERNING THE LAND OF CHALDEA—Eleven mss. and

- 2 TELL ye among the nations, and publish ;
And lift up a standard, publish, conceal not ;
Say ye, Babylon is taken,
Bel is confounded,
Merodach is broken,
Her idols are confounded,
Her abominations are broken.
- 3 For a nation is come up against her from the north,
Which shall reduce her land to desolation,
So that there shall be no inhabitant therein :
Both man and beast are fled,
They are gone in those days.
- 4 BUT at that time, saith JEHOVAH,
The children of Israel shall come, three of the oldest editions read לו; and the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, all express the copulative. In the Complutensian edition of the LXX. we also find, και επι γην Χαλδαιων εν χειρι Ιερεμιου του προφητου, although in the other editions of the LXX. all these words are omitted. The same words, exclusive of και, are in ms. Pachom.

“Verse 3. It is not only said here that Babylon should be desolate, but that the people here spoken of should make it so. Now Cyrus, strictly, did not make it so, as the Jews on their return must know. Therefore they did not understand it strictly.”—SECKER. It is true, Babylon was not totally desolated all at once ; but it was in consequence of what the Medes and Persians did to her, in subverting her empire, and removing the seat of government, that, in a course of time, בימים ההמה, this prophecy was strictly and literally fulfilled.

Verse 4. But at that time—I have detached the words בימים ההמה, from the beginning of this verse, as thinking, that, joined with בעת ההיא, they formed a very unmeaning tautology ; that the word הלכו in the preceding verse seemed to begin a new hemistich, and to require something to complete both the sense and metre ; that this was done by the addition of בימים ההמה ; and moreover, that, by rendering the particle ו in ובעת, “but,” it well expressed the contrariety of the following passage to that which went before. See again verses 19, 20. The preposition ב, prefixed to time, frequently signifies “after ;” nor does it always limit the context to an immediate succession, as is evident from the use of ביום ההוא, in Isaiah, and other prophetic writers. See in particular, Isaiah iv. 2 ; xix. 18, 19, 23, 24, &c. So that we might render בעת ההיא, “after that time.” But “at,” or “in, that time,” will in the present instance amount to just the same, and denote, “during the time of Babylon’s desolation ;” which, being designed to be perpetual, will comprehend as well the time of the general restoration of Israel and Judah in the latter days, as that of their more immediate and partial return from Babylon. Which of these is here particularly intended, I do not pretend to decide ; the terms made use of

- They, and the children of Judah together,
 They shall go, weeping as they go along,
 And shall seek JEHOVAH their God.
- 5 They shall inquire for Sion, with their faces thitherward,
 They shall come, and shall join themselves to JEHOVAH
 In an everlasting covenant, that shall not be forgotten.
- 6 Lost sheep have my people been,
 Their shepherds have caused them to stray on the mountains ;
 Turning aside from mountain to hill,
 They have gone, they have forgotten their resting place.
- 7 All that met with them devoured them,
 For their adversaries said, We shall commit no trespass,
 Because they have sinned against JEHOVAH,
 The legitimate fold and recourse of their fathers.

may, in some degree, coincide with both ; and those who admit the double sense of prophecy may be inclined to understand both ; whilst those who are of a different opinion are at liberty to choose which upon the comparison appears most satisfactory.

They shall go, weeping as they go along—Compare chapter xxxi. 9.

Verse 5. They shall come—One ms. reads יבאו, and so the Chaldee and Vulgate seem to have done. The LXX. render καὶ ἡξουσιν, by which they seem to have read יבאו.

In an everlasting covenant—We find the Jews, after their return from Babylon, in Nehemiah's time, entering into a covenant to walk in God's law, and to obey him. (Neh. ix. 38 ; x. 1, &c.) But by the "everlasting covenant," I am more inclined to understand that of the gospel.

Verse 6. Have my people been—The Masora, with seventeen, perhaps eighteen, mss. and three editions, read הוי instead of היה. Either reading is allowable.

Their shepherds have caused them to stray on the mountains—The meaning of this is, that their pastors and governors had led them to commit idolatry ; of which the mountains were a principal scene. See chapter ii. 20 ; iii. 6, 23 ; Ezekiel vi. 3, 4, 13 ; xviii. 6, &c., &c.

Turning aside from mountain to hill—For שובבים, the Masora reads שובבות, in which sixteen mss. and two editions concur. Six mss. read שבבות. But I see no objection to שובבים, which has occurred twice before. (Chapter iii. 14, 22.) If we read according to the Masoretic emendation, שובבות must be rendered, "They" (that is, their shepherds) "have caused them to turn aside," &c. But if we follow the received reading, the people themselves are said to have turned aside and gone from mountain to hill, varying the object or place of their idolatrous worship, and forgetting the sanctuary of JEHOVAH their God, where alone they ought to have set up their rest. See what follows in the latter part of the next verse.

Verse 7. The legitimate fold and recourse of their fathers—The LXX. have omitted יהיה at the end of this verse ; and, I think, rightly, as the

- 8 Remove out of the midst of Babylon,
And out of the land of Chaldea go ye forth,
And be ye like he-goats before the flock.
- 9 For, behold, I am about to raise up,
And will bring against Babylon,
An assembly of great nations from the north country;
And will array them against her, whereby she shall be taken;
Their arrows, like those of a skilful warrior,
Shall not return empty.
- 10 And Chaldea shall be for spoil,
All that spoil her shall have their fill, saith JEHOVAH.
- 11 When ye shall have rejoiced, when ye shall have triumphed,
O ye plunderers of mine inheritance;
When ye shall be grown fat like a heifer that treadeth, repetition tends only to incumber the verse, and perplex the sense, which without it is extremely clear and complete. The allegory of sheep is still kept up. מקור signifies the place, whither they were accustomed to look up, and have recourse in all cases of danger or difficulty.

Verse 8. Go ye forth—For יצאו, the Masora rightly reads צאו, which is also the reading of twenty-two mss. and two editions. Compare chapter li. 6, 45; Isaiah xlviii. 20.

Be ye like he-goats—That is, set the example for others to follow.

Verse 9. And will array them—ויערכו is construed both by our translators, and in the ancient versions, as the third person plural of the preter tense, with a sense as if it were in the conjugation Hithpael. But it seems rather to be the participle present in Kal with the affix, whose antecedent is קהל, and to be coupled by the conjunction ו prefixed with the two preceding participles, מעלה and מעיר,

Shall not return empty—That is, without doing execution. See the same expression, 2 Sam. i. 22. The verb ישוב, in the singular joined to וציו, a plural subject, distributes the subject, so as to denote that not one of their arrows should miss of their aim.

Verse 11. Ye shall have rejoiced, triumphed, be grown fat, neighed—For תשמחו, תעלו, תפשו, and ותצהלו, the Masora reads תשמחו, תעלו, תפשו, ותצהלו, which is more suitable to the context, and confirmed by all the ancient versions. Also eleven mss. and four editions read תשמחו; six mss. and three editions, תעלו; five mss. and one edition, תפשו; and ten mss. and two editions, תפשו; and fourteen mss. and two editions, ותצהלו.

Like a heifer that treadeth—Twenty-four mss. and five editions read דשה, instead of דשא; and in one ms. the א is upon a rasure. This reading seems preferable to the common one; for, by the law of Moses, the ox was not to be muzzled when he trod out the corn, but allowed to eat freely; (Deut. xxv. 4;) by which high feeding he was likely to grow fat. Heifers are spoken of as used for the same purpose, Hosea x. 11.

- And shall have neighed like steeds :
- 12 Your mother shall be greatly confounded,
She that bare you shall be ashamed ;
Behold her the last of the nations,
A desert, a land of drought, and a wilderness.
- 13 Because of the wrath of JEHOVAH she shall not be re-established,
But she shall be desolate altogether ;
Every one that passeth by Babylon shall be astonished,
And shall hiss because of all her calamities.
- 14 Order ye against Babylon round about,
All ye that bend the bow ;
Shoot at her, spare not the arrow ;
Because she hath sinned against JEHOVAH.
- 15 Shout over her round about ;
She hath surrendered herself,

Neighed like steeds—So the margin of our English Bibles. And צהל is elsewhere used for the neighing of a horse ; but no where, as I know, for the bellowing of a bull. אביריִם also is more commonly used for “war-horses, high-mettled steeds.” See chapter viii. 16 ; xlvii. 3 ; Judges v. 22. כי תשמחו—The verbs in this verse may, and, perhaps, should, be rendered in the present tense ; “Because ye rejoice, because ye triumph, because ye are grown fat, and neigh.”

Verse 13. She shall not be re-established—לֹא תִשָּׁב. I much question whether the verb יִשָּׁב in Kal will admit of being rendered passively, “to be inhabited.” It signifies, however, “to be,” or “abide, in a stable, permanent state.” (Chapter xvii. 25 ; Psalm cxxii. 5 ; cxxv. 1.) And when spoken of cities that have been ruined and overthrown, it seems to denote their “settling again” after such a state of confusion and disorder, and “being re-established” in their former condition of tranquillity and civil polity. This, I think, will appear from considering it in the following passages : verse 39 ; Isaiah xiii. 20 ; Ezekiel xxvi. 20 ; xxix. 11 ; xxxvi. 35 ; Zech. i. 11 ; ii. 4 ; vii. 7 ; ix. 5 ; xii. 6 ; xiv. 10, 11, &c., &c.

And shall hiss—See note on chapter xix. 8.
